Froissart, Jean (1333?-1404). French poet and historian, associated with the English court under the patronage of Queen Philippa, holding the position of royal historiographer. In England he became acquainted with the great figures of the day, including CHAUCER. Froissart is best known for his Chronicles, begun in 1373 when he was sent back to France, and completed about 1400. This work deals with the period in western Europe beginning in 1325 and graphically depicts the events of the Hundred Years' War. Froissart wrote the first book according to the English viewpoint, later revising it to attack the English. In the realm of poetry, he is known for his allegory, Paradis d'Amour, imitated by Chaucer, for Méliador, an Arthurian romance (see ARTHUR), and graceful lyrics in a light vein.

Frollo, Claude. The villain of Hugo's NOTRE DAME DE PARIS, an archdeacon, absorbed by a search after the philosopher's stone. He has a great reputation for sanctity, but entertains a base passion for Esmeralda, the beautiful gypsy girl. QUASIMODO flings him into the air from the top of Notre Dame and dashes him to death.

Frome, David. Pseudonym of Zenith Jones BROWN.

Fromentin, Eugène (1820-1876). French genre painter, known for his scenes of life in Algiers. Author of the successful romance Domemque.

Fronde. A political party during the ministry of Cardinal MAZARIN, in the minority of Louis XIV (1648-1653). Its members, who were opposed to the court party, were called Frondeurs from fronde, "a sling," they being likened to boys who sling stones about the streets and scamper away the moment anyone in authority approaches.

It was already true that the French government was a despotism . . . and as speeches and lampoons were launched by persons who tried to hide after they had shot their dart, some one compared them to children with a sling (fronde), who let fly a stone and run away.—C. M. Yonge, History of France, Ch. vii.

Front de Boeuf, Sir Reginald. In Scott's IVANHOE, a follower of Prince John of Anjou, and one of the knight's challengers. He tries to extort money from Isaac the Jew, and bids two slaves to chain him to the bars of a slow fire, but they are disturbed in this diabolical plot by the bugle's sound. It is in his castle of Torquilstone that Cedric and his party are confined, and Front de Boeuf dies as a result of the attack on the castle which the bugle heralds.

Frontenac, Comte de Palluau et de. Louis de Buade (1620-1698). Governor of New France, the French possessions in North America (1672-1682 and 1689-1698). Forced the British to lift the siege of Quebec (1690) and fought the Iroquois. Encouraged explorations and has been called "a sure breeder of storms in time of peace, but in time of calamity and danger a tower of strength."

Frontoni, Jacopo. Hero of Cooper's novel, THE BRAVO.

Frost, Frances (1905-). American novelist and poet. Innocent Summer (1936), etc.

Frost, Robert Lee (1875-). American poet, known for his verse dealing with New England life and characters. His style is simple, plain, and colloquial, often in the form of blank verse dramatic monologues in which Yankee people speak for themselves, concrete, everyday experiences being used to symbolize more generalized conclusions and observations. Books of his poems include A Boy's Will (1913); North of Boston (1914); Mountain Interval (1916); New Hampshire (1923), winner of the Pulitzer prize in 1924; West-Running Brook (1928); Collected Poems (1930), winner of the Pulitzer prize in 1931; A Further Range (1936), winner of the Pulitzer prize in 1937; and A Witness Tree (1942). Well-known individual poems are: BIRCHES; THE DEATH OF THE HIRED MAN; A Servant to Servants; Putting in the Seed.

Froth, Lord and Lady. A couple in Congreve's comedy, The Double Dealer (1700). He is a gentleman of fashion, she a lady of letters, who writes songs, elegies, satires, lampoons, and even plays.

Froth, Master. In Shakespeare's Measure for Measure, a foolish gentleman, too shallow for a great crime and too light for virtue.

Froude, James Anthony (1818-1894). English historian. Author of a history of England in twelve volumes. As literary executor of CARLYLE he wrote Reminiscences of Carlyle (1881) and a Life of Thomas Carlyle (1882).

Frou-Frou (Fr., of imitative origin, meaning rustling of garments). A play by Henri Meilhac and Ludovic Halévy (Fr., 1869, subsequently produced in several European languages). The nickname had been used previously for a character in Charles Yriarte's Parisian Life (La Vie Parisienne). In the drama the shallow, light-hearted coquette nicknamed Frou-Frou is Gilberte Brigard. She marries M. de Sartoris with whom her older sister Louise had secretly been in love, neglects her home and child for social gayety, and allows Louise to assume charge of the household. Finally she becomes violently jealous of Louise and goes off with a lover. The lover is killed by Sartoris and Frou-Frou, somewhat melodramatically, repents of her sins and dies.

Frowde, Henry (1841-1927). English publisher of CLARENDON PRESS books; official publisher for the University of Oxford (1882-1913).

frozen music. Architecture. So called by Friedrich von SCHLEGEL in his Philosophie der Kunst.

Fruitlands. An experimental co-operative community founded by Bronson ALCOTT at Harvard, Massachusetts, in 1842. Its plan included vegetarianism, farming, and teaching. The experiment ended in 1843. Transcendental Wild Oats, by Alcott's daughter Louisa May ALCOTT, is based on the Fruitlands community.

Frundsberg, Georg von (1473-1528). Called "father of the German LANDSKNECHT." Won distinction at battle of Pavia (1525). Great fighter in wars of that period.

Fry, Elizabeth (1780-1845). English Quaker philanthropist, noted as promoter of prison reform. Founded an order of nursing sisters. Cf. her biography by Janet Whitney.

Fry, Roger Eliot (1866-1934). English art critic and painter. For a few years curator of paintings at the Metropolitan Museum in New York. Editor of Sir Joshua Reynolds' Discourses (1905); author of monographs on Bellini (1899), Cézanne, Matisse, etc. Also Vision and Design (1920), Transformations (1926), Last Lectures (published posthumously, 1939).

Fryatt, Charles Algernon (1872-1916). British captain in the merchant marine. Captured by the Germans in World War I and shot as a "FRANC-TIREUR" (July 26, 1916) on the charge of having attempted to ram a U-boat.

Fudge Family. A family whose adventures are related in Thomas Moore's poetical Fudge Family Abroad (1818). It consists of Phil Fudge, Esq., his son Robert, his daughter Biddy, and a poor relation named Phelim Connor (an ardent Bonapartist and Irish patriot) acting as bear-leader to Bob. These four write letters to their friends in England. The skit is meant to satirize the parvenu English abroad.

Fuertes, Louis Agassiz (1874-1927). American ornithological expert and illustrator. Named for the famous naturalist AGASSIZ. His series of eight important books of bird illustrations was begun in 1897 with Song Birds and Water Fowl and concluded in 1910 with Birds of New York.

Fugitive Slave Law. Statutes passed by Congress from 1793-1850, providing for the return of slaves who escaped from one state into another or into the territories. The law of 1850 placed reclamation of slaves in the hands of the federal authorities, but resulted in political dissension culminating in the secession of 1861 and the Civil War. The law was repealed in 1864.

fugleman (Ger. Flügelmann, a file leader; literally, a wingman). Formerly, a file leader in front of a military company; hence a leader in politics, a model, example, etc.

fugue (Fr., from It. fuga; literally, "a flight"). A polyphonic musical composition, developed from one or several themes, which are enunciated in turn by the several parts and gradually built up according to strict contrapuntal rules into a complex form of distinct divisions and a marked final climax. The fugue has been called "the consummate form of the polyphonic style of composition requiring a mastery of all the devices of counterpoint and a high grade of inventive and constructive genius." The greatest masters of the fugue are BACH (1685-1750) and HANDEL (1685-1759).

Führer (Ger.) or Fuehrer. A leader, guide, etc. Hence der Führer, the Chancellor of the THIRD REICH, Adolf HITLER, as supreme leader of the National Socialist Party (and the entire German people); also the head of any subdivision or unit within the party structure.

Führer principle (Ger. Führerprinzip). The hierarchic principle of organization derived by the German National Socialists from FEUDALISM and early Teutonic history, partly in imitation of the Italian Fascist organization (see FASCISM), and applied by them to all phases of social and political life in the THIRD REICH. Under the Führer principle in its historical perfection, every member of the national hierarchy wills obedience to a trusted leader and receives obedience from faithful followers. In theory, the Führer principle is a democratic ideal; in corrupt application, it spells regimentation and dictatorship.

Fu Hsi. The first of the five legendary emperors of China (his dates given as 2953–2838 B. C.). Inventor of the Chinese system of writing and a variety of useful arts.

Fujiyama. More correctly Fuji-no-Yama (literally, sacred mountain). The highest mountain of Japan, in the province of Suruga, sixty miles west of Tokyo. Height 12,395 feet. It is a snow-capped volcano, inactive since 1707, a resort of pilgrims and prominent in Japanese art.

Fulkerson. In Howells' A HAZARD OF NEW FORTUNES, an energetic Westerner, a born promoter, responsible for the launching of the periodical, Every Other Week.

Fuller, Henry Blake (1857–1929). American novelist, known for his realistic studies of life in Chicago and his fanciful romances of Europe. In the first form, his works include THE CLIFF-DWELLERS (1893); With the Procession (1895); Under the Skylights (1901); On the Stairs (1918); Bertram Cope's Year (1919); Not on the Screen (1930). His books in the second form include: The Chevalier of Pensieri-Vani (1890); The Châtelaine of La Trinité (1892); The Last Refuge (1900); Waldo Trench and Others (1908); Gardens of This World (1929).

Fuller, Sarah Margaret (1810–1850). American author and literary critic, associated with the movement of TRANSCENDENTALISM, editor of THE DIAL from 1840 to 1842, and one of the most important Feminist leaders of her time. Her personality and keen critical sense made her one of the best-known literary figures in the U.S. She visited Europe, became an intense admirer of MAZZINI in Italy, and married one of his followers, the Marquis Angelo Ossoli. Her works include: Woman in the Nineteenth Century (1845); Summer on the Lakes (1843); Literature and Art (1869). The character of ZENOBIA in Hawthorne's BLITHEDALE ROMANCE is said to have been inspired by Margaret Fuller, as was ELSIE VENNER.

Fuller, Thomas (1608–1661). English prose-writer, a CHARACTER WRITER and didactic essayist. Among his works are: The Holy State and the Profane State (1642), a series of character sketches; History of the Holy War (1643), an account of the mediaeval Crusades; Good Thoughts in Bad Times (1645), essays on the religious conflicts of his time; The Worthies of England (1662), a collection of biographical sketches.

Fülöp-Miller, René (1891–). Hungarian author, writing in German. His father was of Alsatian Huguenot descent, his mother a Serb. Student of cultural subjects; characterized by occult leanings and an uncanny flair for the expressive and concrete detail or anecdote. Naturalized American citizen. Lenin and Gandhi (1927), Rasputin the Holy Devil (1927), The Power and Secret of the Jesuits (1929), The Saints that Moved the World (1945), a great autobiographical novel (1947), works on Bolshevism (1926), the Russian and American theater, etc., etc. The first part of his name is the Hungarian form of Philip.

Fulton's Folly. See under CLERMONT.

Fulvia (d. 40 B. C.). A Roman matron married successively to Clodius Pulcher the demagogue (so called for his beauty), Curio, and Mark Antony. When Cicero was murdered by Antony's orders, his head was brought to Fulvia who drove a needle through his tongue in revenge for the things he had said against her husband in his famous Philippics.

Fum or Fung-hwang. The PHOENIX of Chinese legend, one of the four symbolical animals presiding over the destinies of China. It originated from fire, was born in the Hill of the Sun's Halo, and has its body inscribed with the five cardinal virtues. One account says it has the forepart of a goose, the hind-quarters of a stag, the neck of a snake, the tail of a fish, the forehead of a fowl, the down of a duck, the marks of a dragon, the back of a tortoise, the face of a swallow, the beak of a cock, is about six cubits high, and perches only on the woo-tung tree. It is this curious creature that is embroidered on the dresses of certain mandarins.

functionalism. Any doctrine or practice that lays stress upon function or adaptation to practical use. In art, notably architecture, the principle that aesthetic satisfaction cannot be derived from a work or an element in it, which does not convey the idea of its indispensability. A column which has nothing to support is ugly. So is an ornament which has nothing to express. Extreme functionalism often rules out the fact that practically superfluous objects can very well have a rationally less apparent function. VOLTAIRE formulated this point strikingly: "Le superflu, chose si nécessaire."

fundamentalists. See under MODERNISTS AND FUNDAMENTALISTS.

Fung-hwang, see FUM.

Funk, Peter. A fake bidder at an auction, to whom articles are sold when the price fails to go up sufficiently, and by whom the price is often artificially boosted.

Furies, the. The Roman name (Furiae) for the Greek ERINYES, said by Hesiod to have been the daughters of Ge (the earth) and to have sprung from the blood of Uranus, and by other accounts to be daughters of night and darkness. They were three in number, Tisiphone (the Avenger of blood), Alecto (Implacable), and Megaera (Disputatious).

Furioso, see BOMBASTES FURIOSO; ORLANDO FURIOSO.

Furious Host. See under WILD HUNT.

Furness, Horace Howard (1833-1912). American Shakespearean scholar and legal writer. Edited Variorum Shakespeare (from 1871), carried to completion by his son Horace Howard Furness (1865-1930).

Furniss, Harry (1854-1925). British illustrator and caricaturist. Sylvie and Bruno by Lewis Carroll, editions of Dickens and Thackeray, etc.

Furnivall, Frederick James (1825-1910). English philologist. Founder of Early English Text Society (1864), Chaucer Society, Ballad Society (1868), New Shakespeare Society (1873), Browning Society (1881), Wyclif Society (1882), Shelley Society (1885). Editor of Six-Text Print of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales (1868-1875). Began a dictionary for the Philological Society which developed into the Oxford English Dictionary. Enthusiastic oarsman throughout his life. Built the first English narrow water boats (1845), etc.

Furor. In SPENSER'S FAËRIE QUEENE (Bk. ii) the personification of mad anger. He is son of Occasion, an old hag, and Sir Guyon binds him "with a hundred iron chains and a hundred knots."

Furuseth, Andrew (1854-1938). Norwegian-born American labor leader. President, International Seamen's Union of America (1908-1938).

Fury (plural Furies). The Furies, in Greek Erinyes or euphemistically Eumenides, were avenging spirits of retributive justice. Their names, when in course of time their number had come to be fixed as three, were Alecto, Megaera, and Tisiphone. Their task was to punish crimes not within the reach of human justice. Through Aeschylus the tradition developed that after the time when they had intervened in the case of Orestes, their functions no longer covered cases of "guiltiness" free from moral guilt. In spite of their inexorable sternness, they wept when ORPHEUS implored that EURYDICE be restored to life.

Fust. See FAUST.

fustian. A coarse twilled cotton cloth with a velvety pile, probably so called from Fustat, a suburb of Cairo. It is chiefly used now in its figurative sense meaning inflated or pompous talk, clap-trap, bombast, pretentious words.

Futrelle, Jacques (1875-1912). American writer of detective fiction. The Thinking Machine (1907), etc. Tragic death in Titanic catastrophe.

futurism. A movement in Italian painting of the period of World War I, a development of CUBISM, in which the aim was to portray dynamic movement within a two dimensional medium. A favorite device was the presentation of a moving object in successive stages of motion, as in a motion-picture film. The later "stream-lined" effects in industrial design are considered to be in part an outgrowth of futurism.

Fuzzy Wuzzy. Title and hero of one of Kipling's BARRACK-ROOM BALLADS (1892).

So 'ere's to you, Fuzzy Wuzzy, at your 'ome in the Soudan;
You're a pore benighted 'eathen but a first-class fightin' man
An' 'ere's to you, Fuzzy Wuzzy, with your 'ayrick 'ead of 'air—
You big black boundin' beggar—for you broke a British square.

fylfot. The SWASTIKA. Literally, either "four-foot" (because of its shape) or "fill-foot" (because of its ornamental use to fill the lower part of a painted window).

Fyne, Mrs. The best friend of Flora de Barrel in Conrad's CHANCE.

fyrd. In English history before the Norman Conquest, the national military land force.

fytte, also fit. A division of a poem or song; a canto or the like.

Poems sweet
Like separate souls shall fly from it,
Each to an immortal fytte.
Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Isobel's Child.

G

Gabbara. The giant who, according to Rabelais, was "the first inventor of the drinking of healths." See GEMMAGOG.

gabelle. A salt tax, as levied in France for several centuries prior to 1790 and in China up to modern times. The word is ultimately of Arabic origin.

gaberdine or gabardine. The Jewish gown or mantle of the Middle Ages. The word seems to come ultimately from German Wallfahrt, "pilgrimage."

Gabler, Hedda, see HEDDA GABLER.

Gaboriau, Émile (1835-1873). Famous French detective-story writer. Creator of Monsieur Lecoq and Père Tabaret.

Gabriel. Literally, man of God. One of the archangels of Hebrew mythology, sometimes regarded as the angel of death, the prince of fire and thunder, but more frequently as one of the Deity's chief messengers, and traditionally said to be the only angel that can speak Syriac and Chaldean. The Mohammedans call him the chief of the four favored angels, and the spirit of truth. In medieval romance he is the second of the seven spirits that stand before the throne of God (Jerusalem Delivered, Bk. i), and Milton makes him chief of the angelic guards placed over Paradise:

Betwixt these rocky pillars Gabriel sat,
Chief of the angelic guards

Paradise Lost, iv. 549.

Longfellow, in his GOLDEN LEGEND, calls him the angel of the moon, and says he brings to man the gift of hope.

In the TALMUD he appears as the destroyer of the hosts of Sennacherib, as the man who showed Joseph the way (Gen. xxxvii. 15), and as one of the angels who buried Moses (Deut. xxxiv. 6).

It was Gabriel who (we are told in the Koran) took Mahomet to heaven on AL-BORAK, and revealed to him his "prophetic lore." In the Old Testament Gabriel is said to have explained to Daniel certain visions; in the New Testament he announced to Zacharias the future birth of John the Baptist, and appeared to Mary, the mother of Jesus. (Luke i. 26, etc.) He is expected to blow the trumpet on the Day of Judgment.

Gabriel's hounds. Wild geese. According to legend they are unbaptized souls, doomed to wander until Judgment Day.

Gabriel Conroy. A novel by Bret HARTE (1876) dealing with the adventures of a party lost in the snow in the California Sierras in the early days of the settlement of California. The heroine is Grace Conroy, Gabriel's sister, and the hero Arthur Poinsett, who is traveling under the name of Philip Ashley. The professional gambler Jack HAMLIN is introduced, as are many other typical western characters.

Gabrielle, La Belle (1571-1599). Daughter of Antoine d'Estrées, grand-master of artillery, and governor of the Île de France. Henri IV, toward the close of 1590, happened to sojourn for a night at the Château de Coeuvres, and fell in love with her. To throw a flimsy veil over his intrigue, he married her to Liancourt-Damerval, created her Duchess de Beaufort, and took her to live with him at court.

Gabrilóvitch, Ossip (1878-1936). Russian pianist and orchestral director. Married Mark Twain's daughter, Clara Clemens.

gadfly. A fly that bites or annoys cattle. In Greek mythology Juno sent a gadfly to torment the white-horned cow in whose shape Jupiter tried to protect his beloved Io from his wife's jealousy.

Gadsden Purchase. A strip of land (45,535 square miles) negotiated for and purchased for $10,000,000 from Mexico (1853) by James Gadsden (1788-1858), then U.S. Minister to Mexico. It is situated in what is now New Mexico and Arizona.

Gadshill. A companion of Sir John Falstaff in Shakespeare's 1 Henry IV. This thief receives his name from a place called Gadshill, on the Kentish road, notorious for the many robberies committed there.

Gaea, see GE.

Gackwar, see RULERS, TITLES OF.

Gág, Wanda (1893-1946). American painter; author and illustrator of children's books. Milions of Cats (1928), etc. Cf. also her autobiography, Growing Pains (1940).

Gaheris. A knight of the ROUND TABLE, brother of Gawain and nephew of KING ARTHUR. He slew his mother Morgause for adultery.

Gaillard, David Du Bose (1859-1913). American army officer and engineer in charge (1908) of excavation at Culebra Cut, Panama Canal, renamed Gaillard Cut in his honor.

Gainsborough, Thomas (1727-1788). Famous English painter. Son of a wool manufacturer. One of the original 36 members of the Royal Academy. 300 pictures; 220 portraits. Eight poses of George III; several pictures known as Blue Boy, etc.

Galahad, Sir. In the Arthurian legends, the purest and noblest knight of the Round Table. He is a late addition and was invented by Walter Map in his Quest of the San Graal. He was the son of Launcelot and Elaine. At the institution of the Round Table one seat (the Siege Perilous) was left unoccupied, and could be occupied only by the knight who could succeed in the Quest, all others who attempted it being swallowed by the earth.

When Sir Galahad sat there it was discovered that it had been left for him. See Malory's MORTE D'ARTHUR; Tennyson's IDYLLS OF THE KING (The Holy Grail), etc.

There Galahad sat, with manly grace,
Yet maiden meekness in his face.

Sir W. Scott, Bridal of Triermain, ii. 13.

After divers adventures, Sir Galahad came to Sarras, where he was made king, was shown the Grail by Joseph of Arimathea, and even "took the Lord's body between his hands," and died. Then suddenly "a great multitude of angels did bear his soul up to heaven," and "sithence was never no man that could say he had seen the sangreal." See also ELAINE; GRAIL; GALEOTO.

Galapagos Islands. An archipelago of volcanic islands on the equator, west of Ecuador. Formerly noted for large tortoises (Span. galápago, "tortoise"). Investigated by Darwin during his voyage in the Beagle, later by William BEEBE.

Galatea. (1) A sea-nymph, beloved by Polypheme, but herself in love with Acis. Acis was crushed under a huge rock by the jealous giant, and Galatea threw herself into the sea, where she joined her sister nymphs. Handel has an opera entitled Acis and Galatea. (2) A statue made by Pygmalion, which became animated, caused much mischief by her want of worldly knowledge, and returned to her original state. For modern versions of this legend, see PYGMALION.

Galba (5 B.C.?–69 A.D.). Roman emperor (68–69 A.D.). Made emperor after Nero's death by the Praetorian guard. Killed after a few months when unwilling to fulfill the expectations of his followers.

Gale, Roger. The central figure of Ernest Poole's novel HIS FAMILY. His three daughters are prominent in the novel.

Gale, Zona (1874–1938). American novelist and short-story writer, at one time a reporter on the New York World, whose books deal chiefly with small-town life in the Middle West, in the local color tradition, often presented realistically. Her works include: FRIENDSHIP VILLAGE (1908), Yellow Gentians and Blue (1927), and Bridal Pond (1930), short stories; When I Was a Little Girl (1913) and Portage, Wisconsin (1928), autobiographical accounts; Miss LULU BERT (1920), in its dramatic form a winner of the Pulitzer Prize in 1921; Birth (1918), dramatized in 1924 as Mr. Pitt; Faint Perfume (1923); Preface to a Life (1926); Borgia (1929); Papa La Fleur (1933); and Magna (1939).

Galen. A very famous Greek physician and philosopher of the 2nd century A. D. For centuries he was the supreme authority in medicine; hence, any physician.

Galen says "Nay" and Hippocrates "Yea." The doctors disagree, and who is to decide? Hippocrates—a native of Cos, born 460 B. C.—was also a celebrated physician.

Galeoto or Galeotto. The Italian name of Gallehaut, one of the forms of GALAHAD, which has attached to itself a quite divergent meaning. Its modern connotations come from a passage in Dante's INFERNO telling how Paolo and Francesca read of a guilty kiss between Launcelot and Guinevere and yielded to the suggestion. Gallehaut was the knight who had brought Launcelot and the Queen together, and he performed the same office for Paolo and Francesca for "Galeoto was the book and he who wrote it. That day we read no more." Hence, though far from the character of Galahad, Galeoto has become a term for a panderer in Italy and Spain.

José Echegaray has a modern tragedy (Sp., 1881) called The Great Galeoto (El gran Galeoto), in which spiteful gossip is the "Galeoto" of the title. An adaptation by C. F. Nurdlinger was produced in America under the title, The World and His Wife. The heroine is suspected by the spying public and finally by her husband, Julian, of improper relations with his young secretary, Ernest. They are innocent, but are powerless to convince Julian, who dies from a wound received in a duel fought for his wife's honor. Ernest says—

"This woman is mine. The world has so decreed, and I accept the world's decision. It has driven her to my arms. You cast her forth. We obey you. But should anybody ask who was the go-between in this business, you should say 'Ourselves, all unwilling and the stupid chatter of gossip.'"

Galeotti, Martius. Louis XI's Italian astrologer.

"Can thy pretended skill ascertain the hour of thine own death?"

"Only by referring to the fate of another," said Galeotti.

"I understand not thine answer," said Louis.

"Know then, O king," said Martius, "that this only I can tell with certainty concerning mine own death, that it shall take place exactly twenty-four hours before your majesty's."

Scott, Quentin Durward, ch. xxix.

Thrasullus, the soothsayer to Tiberius, made the same diplomatic answer to the same question, and in each case it had the effect of making the ruler protect the life of the prophet.

Galiana. A Moorish princess, whose father, King Gadalfe of Toledo, according to Spanish tradition, built for her a palace on the Tagus so splendid that the phrase "a palace of Galiana" became proverbial in Spain.

Galignani. Name of a family of British publishers of Italian descent in Paris. Galignani's Messenger (1814) and continental reprints of British books. Stopped by copyright treaty of 1852.

Galileo Galilei. Commonly known as Galileo (1564–1642). Italian astronomer and physicist. Discovered isochronism of the pendulum (1583), hydrostatic balance (1586), Jupiter's satellites (1610), sun spots (1610), moon's libration (1637), etc. Advocated Copernican system. His doctrines were condemned by Rome (1616), and after the publication of his Dialogo ai due massimi Sistemi (Dialogue on the Two Chief Systems, 1632), he was forced by the Inquisition to recant in public. In doing so he is said to have whispered Eppur si muove (And yet it moves)! The story is not true, but it illustrates the typically modern attitude of the man of science who has faith in the final victory of truth and sees no reason why he should sacrifice himself for it in stubborn heroism.

gall. Bile; the very bitter fluid secreted by the liver; used figuratively as a symbol for anything of extreme bitterness.

gall and wormwood. Extremely disagreeable and annoying.

And I said, My strength and my hope is perished from the Lord: Remembering my affliction and my misery, the wormwood and the gall.—Lam. iii. 18, 19.

the gall of bitterness. The bitterest grief; extreme affliction. The ancients taught that grief and joy were subject to the gall as affection was to the heart, knowledge to the kidneys, and the gall of bitterness means the bitter center of bitterness, as the heart of heart means the innermost recesses of the heart or affections. In the Acts it is used to signify "the sinfulness of sin," which leads to the bitterest grief.

I perceive thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity.—Acts viii. 23.

the gall of pigeons. The story goes that pigeons have no gall, because the dove sent from the ark by Noah burst its gall out of grief, and none of the pigeon family has had a gall ever since.

For sin' the Flood of Noah
The dow she had nae ga'.
Jamieson, Popular Ballads (Lord of Rorlin's Daughter).

Gall, Franz (1758–1828). German brain anatomist. Remembered especially as the founder of phrenology, a system of character reading based on the theory that there is a relation between mental faculties and the shape of the brain and (hence) the skull. It is a typical product of an age which refused to admit the possibility of external phenomena devoid of internal significance.

Gallagher, Tommy. See TOMMY GALLAGHER'S CRUSADE.

Gallaudet, Thomas Hopkins (1787–1851). Founder of the first American institution for the instruction of the deaf and dumb at Hartford, Conn. (1817). Gallaudet College (Washington, D.C.) was named after him. His son Thomas Gallaudet (1822–1902) founded in New York a church for deaf-mutes (1859).

Gallegher. A short story by Richard Harding Davis (1891). Gallegher, the Irish-American office boy of a daily newspaper, succeeds, after exciting adventures, in bringing in the much desired "story" of a private secretary who had murdered his employer and absconded with securities.

Gallehault. The name for GALAHAD in the old French romance, Lancelot du Lac. See also GALEOTO.

galley. A large one-decked sea-going vessel, propelled by both oars and sails. In use from antiquity to the seventeenth century. The oars were manned by mercenaries, slaves, prisoners of war, and, especially in France, by convicts. Also the cookroom of a vessel.

The printers' galley is an oblong shallow tray of metal or, formerly, wood designed to hold type which has been set. A galley proof is a proof pulled from type not yet made up into pages.

galliambus. Also galliambic. A kind of Ionic verse consisting of two IAMBIC dimeters, the last of which lacks the final syllable. So called in Greek antiquity in association with the Galli (singular Gallus), the priests of Cybele, whose traditional ravings were reminiscent of the fable that the waters of the river Gallus had maddening virtues.

Gallicism. A phrase or sentence constructed after the French idiom; as, "when you shall have returned home you will find a letter on your table." Government documents are especially guilty of this fault. In Matt. xv. 32, is a Gallicism: "I have compassion on the multitude, because they continue with me now three days, and have nothing to eat." Cf. also Mark viii. 2. Intentional Gallicisms are also often used to give a literary passage the tone and feeling of the French language, as "it is to laugh" for c'est à rire.

Galli-Curci, Amelita (1889–). Operatic coloratura soprano. Joined Metropolitan Opera Company, New York, in 1920. Sang Lakmé (in Lakmé), Violetta (in La Traviata), Gilda (in Rigoletto), Juliette (in Roméo et Juliette), Lucia (in Lucia di Lammermoor), Mimi (in La Bohème), Elvira (in I Puritani), etc.

Gallieni, Joseph Simon (1849–1916). In World War I, the "Savior of Paris." As military governor of Paris he rushed 80,000 reserves in taxis and automobiles to the front (1914) thus enabling General Maunoury to repulse von KLUCK at the Marne.

Galligantus. One of the giants of nursery-lore slain by Jack the Giant Killer. Arrayed in his cap, which renders him invisible, Jack goes to the castle and reads the inscription: "Whoever can this trumpet blow, will cause the giant's overthrow." He seizes the trumpet, blows a loud blast, the castle falls down, Jack slays the giant, and is married soon after to a duke's daughter, whom he finds there and rescues.

Gallipoli. Title of a collection of prose sketches (1916) by John Masefield giving a full account of the unsuccessful Dardanelles campaign by which British and French troops under the direction of Winston Churchill attempted to break Turkish resistance and invade the citadel of the Central Powers through a backdoor.

galloglass or gallowglass. A cateran or kern, that is, an armed Irish foot-soldier.

Gallomania. A juror for everything French, generally applied to that imitation of French literature and customs which prevailed in Germany in the time of Frederick II of Prussia.

Gallup, George Horace (1901-). American statistician. Founder of the Gallup polls (1935) which endeavor to measure public interest and opinion in various matters.

Galsworthy, John (1867-1933). English novelist and dramatist, known for his portrayals of the British upper classes. His most famous work is THE FORSYTE SAGA, consisting of two series of novels written over his entire career, which deal with the fortunes of the Forsyte family. Other novels are: Jocelyn (1899) and Villa Ruben (1900), published under the pseudonym of John Sinjohn; The Island Pharisees (1904); FRATERNITY (1909); The Patrician (1911); The Dark Flower (1913); One More River (1933). His plays include: STRIFE (1909); JUSTICE (1910); The Mob (1915); The Skin Game (1920); The Family Man (1921); Loyalties (1922); Windows (1922); Old English (1924); The Show (1925); Escape (1926); The Roof (1931). Collections of short stories include: A Sheaf (1916); Another Sheaf (1919); Five Tales (1919); The Burning Spear (1923); Captures (1923); Caravan (1925). Galsworthy's work combines sentimentalism with social observation and a sense of character.

Galton, Sir Francis (1822-1911). English scientist and African traveler. Best known for his work in the study of heredity. Founder of the science of eugenics. Devised a system of fingerprint identification. Hereditary Genius (1869); Record of Family Faculties (1883); etc.

Galuppi, Baldassare (1706-1798). Italian composer of comic operas. Cf. the poem A Toccata of Galuppi's by Robert Browning.

Galvani, Luigi (1737-1798). Italian physician and physicist. Interpreted the twitchings of frogs' legs in contact with metals as due to "animal electricity," a form of energy which he hoped could be shown to be instrumental in all muscular movements. VOLTA corrected his interpretation, but the phenomenon as such proved so important in the study of direct electric currents that this entire branch of physics is justly called galvanism.

Galway jury. An independent jury, neither to be browbeaten nor led by the nose. In 1635, certain trials were held in Ireland respecting the right of the Crown to the counties of Ireland. Leitrim, Roscommon, Sligo and Mayo gave judgment in favor of the Crown, but Galway stood out, whereupon each of the jury was fined £4000.

Gama, Vasco da. One of the greatest of the early Portuguese navigators (d. 1524), the first European to round the Cape of Good Hope. He is the hero of Camoëns' LUSIAD (1572), where he is represented as sagacious, intrepid, tenderhearted, pious, fond of his country, and holding his temper in full command. He is also the hero of Meyerbeer's posthumous opera L'AFRICAIN.

Gama, captain of the venturous band,
Of bold emprise, and born for high command,
Whose martial fires, with prudence close allied,
Ensured the smiles of fortune on his side.
Camoëns, Lusiad, Bk. i.

Gambetta, Léon (1838-1882). French lawyer and statesman. Opposed to Napoleon III. Made spectacular escape from Prussian-besieged Paris by balloon (Oct. 8, 1870) in a futile attempt to organize national resistance. President, Chamber of Deputies (1879-1881); premier of France (1881-1882).

Gambrinus or Gambrivius. A hero of folklore, famed as the legendary inventor of beer or ale. The legend exists in many countries with numerous variations.

Game Chicken, the. A prize fighter in Dickens' DOMBEY AND SON. See also under CHICKEN.

Gamelin, Evariste. The hero of the historical novel THE GODS ARE ATHIRST by Anatole France.

Gamelin, Maurice Gustave (1872-). French professional soldier. Succeeded General WEYGAND as inspector general of the army and vice-president of the Higher Council of War (1935). After the defeat of the French armies in World War II (1940), he was relieved of his command. Replaced by General Weygand (May 19, 1940). Of "MAGINOT" mentality. He was one of the defendants at Riom in a trial for treason and in 1943 was put into a German prison.

Gamelyn, The Tale of. A Middle English metrical romance, found among the Chaucer

mss., and supposed to have been intended by him to form the basis of one of the unwritten CANTERBURY TALES. It was formerly attributed to Chaucer and is usually known as The Coker's [Cook's] Tale of Gamelyn. Gamelyn is a younger son to whom a large share of property had been bequeathed by the father. He is kept in servitude and tyrannically used by his elder brother until he is old enough effectually to rebel. After many adventures, during which he becomes a leader of outlaws in the woods, he comes to his own again with the help of the king, and justice is meted out to the elder brother and those who aided him. Thomas Lodge made the story into a novel—Rosalynde, or Euphues' Golden Legacie (1590)—and from this Shakespeare drew a large part of his As You Like It. The defeat of the wrestler, the loyalty of Adam Spencer, the outlaws, the free life of the greenwood, are common to the Tale and the play; and, as has been said, "The Tale of Gamelyn is As You Like It without Rosalind or Celia."

Gammer Gurton's Needle. The earliest English comedy with the exception of RALPH ROISTER DOISTER. It was first acted at Christ's College, Cambridge, in 1552, and printed in 1575. It was published as "By Mr. S. Mr. of Art," and has been assigned to Bishop Still and with more probability to William Stevenson. The comedy is coarse and vigorous; it closes with the painful but farcical discovery of Gammer Gurton's missing needle in the seat of Hodge's breeches.

Gamp, Sarah (usually called "Sairey"). A disreputable monthly nurse in Dickens' MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT, famous for her bulky umbrella and perpetual reference to Mrs. Harris, a purely imaginary person, whose opinions always confirm her own. She is fond of strong tea and other stimulants.

Hence, "a regular Gamp" came to signify a low-class, drink-sodden, uncertificated maternity nurse, and an umbrella, especially a large, badly rolled cotton one, came to be called a "gamp."

Gamut, David. A Yankee singing teacher in Cooper's LAST OF THE MOHICANS. He is an uncouth and incongruous figure, the butt of many remarks from the scornful Hawkeye, but his simple heroism as he pours out psalm-tune after psalm-tune in the midst of the massacre at Fort William Henry in the attempt to protect Cora and Alice from the Indians, wins even their respect.

Ganderclough (folly-cliff). That mysterious place where a person makes a goose of himself. Jedediah Cleishbotham, the hypothetical editor of Sir Walter Scott's TALES OF MY LANDLORD, lived at Ganderclough.

Gandhi, Mohandas Karamchand, called Mahatma (great-souled) Gandhi (1869–1948). Hindu nationalist leader. Studied law in London, practiced in India. Went to South Africa (1893), where, in support of his defense of Asiatic immigrants, he instituted his first campaign of "passive resistance." Returned to India (1914). Organized the Satyagraha (1919), a politico-religious movement of non-cooperation with the British and was imprisoned for "civil disobedience." President of Indian National Congress (1925). Attended Round Table Conference in London (1931). Urged boycott of British goods (1932) and advocated social reforms. Began his "fast unto death" (1932) in protest against the official treatment of the "untouchables" and won his point after six days. Resigned presidency of Indian National Congress (1934). From 1937 less active but again arrested (1942) for activities against Great Britain. Assassinated (shot) by a Hindu Nationalist, Nathuran Vinaak Godse, at New Delhi, Jan. 30, 1948. Among Gandhi's books are Indian Home Rule; Young India; etc. Outstanding among the numerous works on Gandhi is Romain Rolland's Mahatma Gandhi (1926).

Ganelon or Gan. One of the famous characters of Carolingian legend, a type of black-hearted treachery, figuring in Dante's Inferno and grouped by Chaucer (Nun's Priest's Tale, 407) with Judas Iscariot and "Greek Sinon, that broghtest Troye al outrely to sorwe." He was Count of Mayence, one of Charlemagne's paladins. Jealousy of Roland made him a traitor; and in order to destroy his rival, he planned with Marsilius, the Moorish king, the attack of Roncesvalles where the Christians were defeated by the Moslems. Sir Ganelon was six feet and a half in height, had large glaring eyes, and fiery red hair. He was very taciturn and morose, and the name has become a byword for a false and faithless friend.

Ganem, the Slave of Love. The hero and title of one of the ARABIAN NIGHTS tales. As a result of accidental curiosity Ganem rescues Fetnab, the caliph's favorite, who has been buried alive by order of the sultana, out of jealousy. When the caliph hears of the incident, he is extremely jealous of the young merchant, and orders him to be put to death. Ganem makes his escape in the guise of a waiter, and lies concealed till the angry fit of the caliph subsides.

Ganesh or Ganesa. The god of wisdom or prudence in Hindu mythology. He was the son of Siva and Parvati. He is propitiated at the commencement of important work, at the beginning of sacred writings, etc., and is one of the most popular of all Hindu deities. Ganesh is always represented with an elephant's head.

Ganges. The sacred river of India. Rising in the Himalayas, it flows about 1500 miles to empty into the Bay of Bengal by many mouths. According to Hindu legend its source lies at the feet of Brahma, which makes it imperative for adherents of the Hindu faith to bathe in it on certain days.

gangster. Member of a gang of roughs, hiring criminals, etc. Gangsterism is on the whole restricted to big cities. It flourished during the era of Prohibition in Chicago, New York, etc. Its history is however much older. Cf. Herbert Asbury, The Gangs of New York (1928). The term gangster is a colloquial derivative from gang on the model of teamster, etc.

Gann, Caroline. A prominent character in Thackeray's Shabby Genteel Story and its sequel PHILIP.

Gannett, Lewis (1891-). American critic and book-columnist for the New York Herald Tribune. Long a combative liberal of the Nation. Periodically goes on transcontinental auto trips; after the first of these he wrote Sweet Land (1934).

Ganor, Ganora, Geneura, Ginevra, Genievre, Guinevere, Guenevere, are different ways of spelling the name of Arthur's wife. She is called by Geoffrey of Monmouth, Guanhumara or Guanhumar, but Tennyson made GUINEVERE the popular English form.

Gant, Eugene. Hero of LOOK HOMEWARD, ANGEL and its sequel, Of Time and the River, novels by Thomas WOLFE, considered to represent the author himself. Eugene is a young man of robust energies, intense emotion, a feeling of being "different" from others, and vast, romantic yearnings toward love, adventure, personal achievement, and a semi-mystical, unknown goal which carries him on a virtual pilgrimage through the U.S. and Europe.

Oliver Gant. Eugene's father, a stone-cutter of tremendous, sensual passions and a fondness for inflated rhetoric in his speech, sprinkled with quotations from Shakespeare and Milton. He has a great influence on the character of his son.

Eliza Gant. Eugene's mother, frugal, sharp-tongued, exasperated by her husband's irresponsibility. After violent quarrels, she leaves him and goes away with the child Eugene to open a boarding-house.

Ben Gant. Eugene's elder brother, quiet, mature, and dependable, friend and confidant of the younger during their childhood and adolescence. His death is a memorable scene in the first novel.

Steve, Daisy, Helen, and Luke are other brothers and sisters of Eugene, all older than he.

Gantry, Elmer. The title hero of a novel by Sinclair LEWIS (1927). A venal evangelist, he represents a definitely American type of religious racketeer. The Rev. L. M. Birkhead of Kansas helped the author with his preparatory research; a minister in Virginia, after reading the book, invited him to visit his state and be lynched.

Ganymede. In Greek mythology, the cup-bearer of Zeus, successor to Hebe, and the type of youthful male beauty. Originally a Trojan youth, he was taken up to Olympus and made immortal. Hence, a cup-bearer generally.

the birds of Ganymede. Eagles. Ganymede rode to Olympus on an eagle's back.

Garagantua. A misspelling of GARGANTUA, originated by Pope in his edition of Shakespeare (As You Like It, iii. 2).

Garamond. Name applied to several Roman styles of type going back to that produced about 1540 by the French designer and founder Claude Garamond (died 1561) to replace the Gothic then still in general use.

García Lorca, Federico, see under LORCA.

Garcias, the soul of Pedro. Money. The story told in the Preface of Le Sage's romance Gil Blas, is that two scholars of Salamanca discovered a tombstone with this inscription: "Here lies the soul of the licentiate Pedro Garcias." On searching they found a purse with a hundred golden ducats.

Garcilaso de la Vega (1503-1536). Called "the Spanish Petrarch," poet and soldier. Killed in battle. Wrote pastorals, sonnets, canciones, elegies, and a blank verse epistle. Another Garcilaso de la Vega (1539?-1617) was a Peruvian historian writing on the conquest of Peru and the history of the Incas; hence often called el Inca.

Garda. Novel of fantasy by Rose O'NEILL.

Garda, Lago di. The largest and one of the most beautiful lakes in Italy. It borders on Tyrol, is 37 miles long, was called Lacus Benacus by the Romans, and is noted for its storms.

Gardaríke. So Russia is called in the EDDAS.

Garden City. A name given to Norwich, and to Chicago; also, as a generic name, to model suburbs and townships that have been planned with a special view to the provision of plenty of gardens, open spaces, and wide roads.

the Garden or Garden Sect. The disciples of Epicurus, who taught in his own private garden.

the Garden of Eden. See EDEN. The name as applied to Mesopotamia, with its vast sandy deserts, is nowadays somewhat ironical, but it is traditionally supposed to be its "original site."

Garden of Allah. See ALLAH.

Garden of Argentine. Tucuman.

Garden of Cymodoce. In SWINBURNE'S poem of that title, the island of Sark. See also under CYMODOCE.

Garden of England. Kent and Worcestershire are both so called.

Garden of Erin. Carlow.

Garden of Europe. (1) Italy; (2) Belgium.

Garden of France. Amboise, in the department of Indre-et-Loire; also Touraine.

Garden of India. Oude.

Garden of Ireland. Carlow.

Garden of Italy. The island of Sicily.

Garden of South Wales. The southern division of Glamorganshire.

Garden of Switzerland. Thurgau.

Garden of Spain. Andalusia.

Garden of the Gods. A region of about 500 acres near Colorado Springs, U.S., where there are many strange rock formations of red and white sandstones, is so called.

Garden of the Hesperides. See HESPERIDES.

Garden of the Sun. The East Indian or Malayan Archipelago.

Garden of the West. Illinois; Kansas ("the Garden State") is also so called.

Garden, Mary (1877-). Operatic soprano. Debut at Opéra Comique, Paris (1900), as title heroine in Louise; in New York (1907) in Thais. With Chicago Civic Opera Company (from 1910). Chief rôles beside above: Marguerite, Mélisande, Salome, Sappho, Fiora (in L'Amore dei Tre Re).

Garden Party, The. A short story by Katherine MANSFIELD, published in 1922. It describes the festive preparations of a well-to-do woman and her daughters for a garden party, and the sudden and violent intrusion of reality in the form of a death by accident which occurs in a neighboring poor family.

Garden State. New Jersey. See under STATES.

Gardner, Erle Stanley (1889-). American detective-story writer. His books have been called "top-notchers in the time-killer division of the mystery field." Most of them have titles beginning The Case of the— and feature the lawyer Perry Mason who somewhat resembles the author.

Gareth. In Malory's MORTE D'ARTHUR, the youngest son of Lot, king of Orkney and Morgawse, Arthur's half-sister. His mother, to deter him from entering Arthur's court, says jestingly, she will consent to his doing so if he conceals his name and goes as a scullion for twelve months. To this he agrees and Sir Kay, the king's steward, nicknames him "Beaumains," because his hands are unusually large. At the end of the year he is knighted, and obtains the quest of Linet (Lynette), who begs the aid of some knight to liberate her sister Liones (Lyonors) held prisoner by Sir Ironside in Castle Perilous. Linet treats Sir Gareth with great contempt, calling him a washer of dishes and a kitchen knave, but he overthrows five knights and frees the lady, whom he marries. Tennyson retells the story in Gareth and Lynette (Idylls of the King), making Gareth the son of Lot and Bellicent, and concluding with his marriage to Lynette instead of her sister:

He that told the tale in olden times
Says that Sir Gareth wedded Lyonors;
But he that told it later says Lynette.

He was the brother of Gahariet, Gawain, and AGRIVAIN, siding with the first two against Agrivain when he decided to betray Lancelot and the queen to King Arthur.

Garfield, James Abram (1831-1881). Twentieth president of the United States. Elected in 1880, inaugurated in 1881, shot by Charles J. Guiteau, a disappointed office-seeker, in the Washington railroad station (July 2, 1881).

Gargamelle. In Rabelais' satire GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, daughter of the king of the Parpaillons (butterflies), wife of Grangousier, and mother of GARGANTUA. On the day that she gives birth to him she eats sixteen quarters, two bushels, three pecks, and a pipkin of dirt, the mere remains left in the tripe which she had for supper; for, as the proverb says—

Scrape tripe as clean as e'er you can,
A tithe of filth will still remain.

She is said to be meant either for Anne of Brittany, or Catherine de Foix, queen of Navarre.

Gargantua (from Sp. garganta, "gullet"). A giant of medieval (perhaps Celtic) legend famous for his enormous appetite, adopted by Rabelais in his great satire Gargantua and Pantagruel (1532), and made the father of Pantagruel. One of his exploits is to swallow five pilgrims with their staves and all in a salad. He is the subject of a number of chapbooks, and became proverbial as a voracious and insatiable guzzler.

You must borrow me Gargantua's mouth first [before I can utter so long a word]; 'tis a word too great for any mouth of this age's size.—Shakespeare, As You Like It, iii. 2.

In some cases Rabelais seems to have been satirizing Francis I under this name. According to Rabelais, Gargantua is the son of Grangousier and Gargamelle. Immediately he is born he cries out lustily "Drink, drink!", whereupon his royal father exclaims "Que grand tu as!" which, being the first words he uttered after the birth of the child, are accepted as its name. 17,913 cows are needed to supply the babe with milk. When he goes to Paris to finish his education, he rides on a mare as big as six elephants, and takes the bells of Notre Dame to hang on his mare's neck as jingles. After being fired at on his way home he combs his hair with a comb 900 feet long, and at every "rake" seven bullets fall. Many other stories are told of him. In honor of his great victory over Picrochole at the rock Clermond he founds and endows the Abbey of THELEME.

Gargantua's mare. Attempts have been made to identify all the persons, incidents, and even many of the animals mentioned by Rabelais with historical characters, and Gargantua's "great mare" has been held to stand for Mme d'Estampes, and to depict the wilfulness and extravagance of court mistresses. Motteux, Rabelais' earliest English translator, who looks upon the romance as a satire on the Reform party, merely says, "It is some lady." Rabelais says—

"She was as big as six elephants, and had her feet cloven into fingers. She was of a burnt-sorrel hue, with a little mixture of dapple-grey; but, above all, she had a terrible tail, for it was every whit as great as the steeple pillar of St. Mark." When the beast got to Orleans, and the wasps assaulted her, she switched about her tail so furiously that she knocked down all the trees that grew in the vicinity, and Gargantua, delighted, exclaimed, "Je trouve beau ce!" wherefore the locality has been called "Beauce" ever since.

Gargantuan. Enormous, inordinate, great beyond all limits. 900 ells of Châtelleraut linen are needed to make the body of Gargantua's shirt, and 200 more for the gussets; for his shoes, 406 ells of blue and crimson velvet are required, and 1100 cow-hides for the soles. He can play 207 different games, picks his teeth with an elephant's tusk, and does everything in the same "large way."

a Gargantuan course of studies. A course including all languages, as well ancient as modern, all the sciences, all the -ologies and -onomies, with calisthenics, athletic sports, etc. etc. etc. so called from Gargantua's famous advice to his son PANTAGRUEL on educational matters.

gargoyle. A grotesquely carved water-spout of the kind projecting from roof gutters and other upper parts of Gothic buildings, especially of the thirteenth to sixteenth centuries. See NOTRE DAME DE PARIS. The word is related to "gargle."

Garibaldi, Giuseppe (1807-1882). Italian patriot. Associated with MAZZINI. Exiled for political reasons (1834), he lived in South America (1836-1848) until the short-lived Roman Republic permitted him to return. After its abolition, he went to the U.S. (1850-1854) where he became naturalized and earned his living as a candle-maker on Staten Island. In the war of Sardinia and France against Austria, he was back in Europe and organized, after its conclusion, an expedition of "Redshirts" against the Two Sicilies in order to bring about a complete union of Italy. He became dictator of Sicily, expelled Francis II from Naples, and, after the union of the Two Sicilies and Sardinia, and the proclamation (1861) of Victor Emmanuel of Sardinia as king of Italy, settled down as a farmer in Caprera. In 1862 and 1867 he undertook unsuccessful expeditions against Rome. In 1870 he commanded a French force in the war against the Prussians and was instrumental in the transfer of the Italian capital from Florence to Rome (1870). Elected deputy for Rome in Italian Parliament (1874). On his statue on the Janiculum overlooking Rome is engraved his famous cry: Roma o Morte (Rome or Death)! His son, Menotti Garibaldi (1840-1903), born in Brazil, fought with him, entered the Italian Parliament and joined the party of the extreme left. Menotti's brother, Ricciotti Garibaldi (1847-1924), born in Uruguay, organized the Garibaldi Legion to fight for France in World War I. He hailed MUSSOLINI's Black Shirts as continuing the tradition of Garibaldi's Redshirts.

Garland, Hannibal Hamlin (1860-1940). American novelist and short-story writer, known for his realistic studies of the hardships and frustrations of Middle Western farm life. His best-known books are Main-Traveled Roads (1891), and Other Main-Traveled Roads (1910), collections of short stories; and A Son of the Middle Border (1917) and A Daughter of the Middle Border (1921; winner of the Pulitzer Prize in 1922) (see MIDDLE BORDER), volumes of autobiography. His novels include: Jason Edwards: An Average Man (1892), setting forth the single-tax ideas of Henry GEORGE; A Spoil of Office (1892), exposing the corruption of politics; A Member of the Third House (1892), on railroad lobbying; A Little Norsk (1892) and Rose of Dutcher's Coolly (1895), dealing with the barren lives of farm girls; The Captain of the Gray-Horse Troop (1902), on injustice to the Indian; and Cavanagh, Forest Ranger (1910). Garland at the end of his life wrote other volumes of memoirs, rather marred by a querulous self-pity, and books on spiritualism.

Garm: A Hostage. Title of a story by Rudyard Kipling. Garm, in Norse mythology, is Hel's watchdog who, at RAGNAROK, slays, and is slain by, Tyr.

Garnett, David (1892-). English novelist. Son of Edward GARNETT. Started a bookshop in Gerrard Street, Soho, with Francis Birrell, a descendant of Augustine Birrell (1919). Garnett's Lady Into Fox (1922) won the Hawthornden Prize and the James Tait Black Memorial Prize. Other pleasant novels followed. Adviser to Francis Meynell on Nonesuch Press for ten years. Flight lieutenant R.A.F.V.R. and staff officer in Intelligence in World War II. Wrote War in the Air (1941); etc.

Garnett, Edward (1868-1937). English critic, biographer, and essayist, the best-esteemed publisher's reader in London. His wife, Constance Garnett (1862-1946), was renowned for her translations of Dostoevski and other Russian authors.

Garnett, Porter (1871-). American writer and printer. Founded the Laboratory Press at Carnegie Tech. (1923), specializing in hand-press printing.

Garnett, Richard (1835-1906). On staff of British Museum (from 1857). Keeper of Printed Books (1890-1899). Published Relics of Shelley (1862); The Twilight of the Gods (1888); History of Italian Literature (1897); and a number of biographies. His son was Edward GARNETT. His father, Richard Garnett (1789-1850), was also on the staff of the British Museum.

Garratt, the mayor of. Garratt is near Earlsfield, Wimbledon; the first "mayor" was elected in 1778. He was really merely the chairman of an association of villagers formed to put a stop to encroachments on the common, and as his election coincided with a general election, the society made it a law that a new "mayor" should be chosen at every general election. The addresses of these mayors, written by Garrick, Wilkes, and others, are satires on the corruption of electors and political squibs. The first mayor of Garratt was "Sir" John Harper, a retailer of brickdust; and the last was "Sir" Harry Dimsdale, muffinseller, in 1796. Foote has a farce entitled The Mayor of Garratt.

Garrick, David (1716-1779). English actor. Began his career as a wine merchant. Made reputation in rôle of Richard III (Oct. 19, 1741). Continued Shakespearean success. Co-manager of Drury Lane Theater (1747). Successful in large repertory. One of the circle around Dr. Samuel JOHNSON. Retired with a considerable fortune to Hampton and wrote comedies and farces and adaptations of older plays.

Garrish, Mr. An ultra-conventional character in Howells' Annie Kilburn (1889) and The Quality of Mercy (1892), who protests against the modern social ideals of the Rev. Mr. Peck, in the former book, and is in general a champion of the established order.

Garrison, William Lloyd (1805-1879). American leader of the ABOLITIONIST movement, a radical agitator for the immediate freeing of the slaves. He caused a split in the ranks of the Anti-Slavery Society and advocated secession from the Union because the Constitution upheld slavery. In 1831 he founded The Liberator, a magazine which he edited until 1865.

Garstin, Crosbie (1877-). English novelist and poet. Author of The Mud Larks (1918); The Coasts of Romance (1922), The Owl's House (1924), The Ballad of the Royal Ann (poems; 1922); etc.

Garter, the Most Noble Order of the. The highest order of knighthood in Great Britain and in the world, traditionally instituted by King Edward III about 1348, and later reconstituted in 1805 and 1831. The popular legend is that Joan, Countess of Salisbury, accidentally slipped her garter at a court ball. It was picked up by the king, who gallantly diverted the attention of the guests from the lady by binding the blue band round his own knee, saying as he did so, "Honi soit qui mal y pense." The order is limited to the Sovereign, the Prince of Wales, and other members of the Royal Family with twenty-five Knights, and such foreign royalties as may be admitted by statute. Queen Mary and Queen Alexandra were Ladies of the Garter; until, in 1912, Viscount Grey (then Sir Edward Grey) was admitted to the order, no commoner for centuries had been able to put "K.G." after his name.

Garth, Caleb. A builder in George Eliot's MIDDLEMARCH, said to have been drawn, in part at least, from the author's carpenter father.

A large amount of painful experience had not sufficed to make Caleb Garth cautious about his own affairs or distrustful of his fellow men when they had not proved themselves untrustworthy . . . He was one of those rare men who are rigid to themselves and indulgent to others. He had a certain shame about his neighbor's errors and never spoke of them willingly.—Ch. xxiii.

Mary Garth. Caleb's daughter, who marries Fred Vincy.

Advancing womanhood had tempered her plainness, which was of a good human sort, such as the mothers of our race have very commonly worn in all latitudes under a more or less becoming headgear. Rembrandt would have painted her with pleasure, and would have made her broad features look out of the canvas with intelligent honesty. For honesty, truth-telling fairness, was Mary's reigning virtue: she neither tried to create illusions, nor indulged in them for her own behoof, and when she was in a good mood, she had humor enough in her to laugh at herself.—Ch. xii.

Garth, Sir Samuel (1661-1719). English physician who wrote occasional verse, including mock-heroic The Dispensary (1699). Member of the KIT-CAT CLUB.

Gartney, Faith, see FAITH GARTNEY.

Garuda. In Hindu mythology, a supernatural being, half man and half bird, with golden body and red wings, on which VISHNU rides.

Gary Plan or System. A system of vocational education which divides the pupil's time between academic studies in school and supervised trade work in actual factories, etc., under normal working conditions; so called from the town of Gary, Ind., where it was first extensively carried out.

Gas, Charlatan. A garrulous and self-important politician in Disraeli's VIVIAN GREY.

Gascoigne, George (1525?-1577). English poet, soldier, and adventurer, one of the leading men of letters in the period before Spenser and after Wyatt and Surrey. His works include: Supposes (1566), a translation of a play by Ariosto and the first prose comedy in English; A Hundred Sundry Flowers (1573), a collection of poems; The Glass of Government (1575), a moral comedy; Certain Notes of Instruction (1575), called the earliest treatise on English prosody; The Steel Glass (1576), one of the first true satires in English; The Complaint of Philomene (1576), a narrative poem; The Grief of Joy (1577), a collection of elegies presented to Queen Elizabeth. Gascoigne was the step-father of Nicholas BRETON.

Gascoigne, Sir William (1350?-1419). Lord Chief Justice of England in the reigns of Henry IV and Henry V. Shakespeare introduces him into 2 Henry IV. There is a tradition, referred to by Shakespeare, that Prince Hal "struck the chief justice in the open court"; but it does not appear from history that any blow was given. A more likely account is the following:

One of the gay companions of the prince being committed for felony, the prince demanded his release; but sir William told him the only way of obtaining a release would be to get from the king a free pardon. Prince Henry now tried to rescue the prisoner by force, when the judge ordered him out of court. In a towering fury, the prince flew to the judgment-seat, and all thought he was about to slay the judge; but sir William said very firmly and quietly, "Syr, remember yourselfe. I kepe here the place of the kynge, your soveraigne lorde and father, to whom you owe double obedience; wherefore I charge you in his name to desyste of your wylfulnes. . . . And nowe for your contempte goe you to the prysona of the Kynge's Benche, whereunto I comytte you, and remayne ye there prisoner untill the pleasure of the kynge be further known." With which words, the prince being abashed, the noble prisoner departed and went to the King's Bench.—Sir T. Eliot, The Governour (1531).

Gasconade. Talk like that of a Gascon—absurd boasting, vainglorious braggadocio. The Dictionary of the French Academy gives us the following specimen: "A Gascon, in proof of his ancient nobility, asserted that they used in his father's house no other fuel than the bâtons of the family marshals."

Gas House McGinty. Title of a novel by James T. FARRELL (1933).

Gaskell, Elizabeth Cleghorn (1810-1865). English novelist, known for her pictures of English country life and her studies of conflicts between capital and labor in Victorian industrialism. Her works include: MARY BARTON (1848); CRANFORD (1853); Ruth (1853); Lizzie Leigh (1855); North and South (1855); Life of Charlotte Brontë (1857); Wives and Daughters (1866), left unfinished at her death. She also wrote frequently for HOUSEHOLD WORDS.

Gaspar or Caspar (the white one). One of the three MAGI or Kings of Cologne. His offering to the infant Jesus was frankincense, in token of divinity.

Gastibelza. The hero of a ballad by Victor Hugo published in his volume Les Rayons et les ombres (1840). It tells of the despair of Gastibelza, the "Madman of Toledo" over the treachery of Donna Sabine. It became enormously popular, and an opera, Gastibelza, by Maillart, with libretto by Dennery and Corman founded on the ballad, was produced in 1847.

Gaston de Foix, see FOIX, GASTON DE.

gate of horn and ivory gate. In Greek mythology, the two gates of the abode of Sleep through which dreams come forth. Those passing through the gate of horn are true.

Gate of Tears. The passage into the Red Sea. So called by the Arabs (Bab-el-mandeb) from the number of shipwrecks that took place there.

Gate of the Lions. The gate leading from the ancient Greek city of Mycenae in Argolis to the acropolis. It is about ten feet high and wide, has monolithic jambs and a huge lintel. Above the lintel is a great slab with a relief of two affronted rampant lions which account for the name. It was built in the Mycenaean era (1400-1100 B.C.).

Gates, Eleanor (1875-). American playwright. Poor Little Rich Girl (1913; play and novel); etc.

Gates, Horatio (1728?-1806). American revolutionary general. Repulsed Burgoyne's army from the North. Lost disastrous battle of Camden. Served Washington loyally.

Gath. In Dryden's ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, it means Brussels, where Charles II long resided while in exile.

Had thus old David [Charles II] . . .
Not dared, when fortune called him, to be king,
At Gath an exile he might still remain tell it not in Gath. Don't let your enemies hear it. Gath was famous as being the birth-place of the giant Goliath.

Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon, lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice, lest the daughters of the uncircumcised triumph — 2 Sam i. 20.

Gatti-Casazza, Giulio (1869-1940). Italian-born operatic manager. Director of the SCALA at Milan (1898-1908) and General Manager of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York (1908-1935). Married Frances Alda (divorced); second wife, Rosina Galli.

Gatty, Harold (1903-). With Wiley Post, flew around the world as navigator in the monoplane Winnie May (1931) in 8 days, 15 hours, 51 minutes. Wrote The Raft Book; Lore of Sea and Sky (1943); issued in envelope with folded chart and folded "date and time tape," for the benefit of flyers or others lost at sea.

Gaucho. A cowboy or herdsman of the pampas, of mixed Spanish and Indian descent. Cf. the Argentinian epic, The Departure of Martín Fierro, by José Hernández, translated by Walter Owen. The word is probably of Araucan origin.

gaudeamus ("Let us rejoice"). Title and first word of a Latin student song of German origin and popular in the U.S. Original version 1267; present version 1781.

Gaudier-Brzeska, Henri (1891-1915). French sculptor. Identified with the post-impressionist movement known as vorticism, the theory of which calls for the exploitation on the part of the artist of the aesthetic potentialities of modern machines.

Gauguin, Eugène Henri Paul (1848-1903). French painter. Cofounder of the symbolist school of Pont-Aveu. Went to Tahiti (1890) and painted brilliantly native types and scenes. Cf. The Moon and Sixpence (1919) by W. Somerset Maugham for a fictionalized version of his life.

Gaul. In classical geography, the country inhabited by the Gauls; hence, in modern use, France. Cisalpine Gaul lay south and east of the Alps, in what is now northern Italy. Transalpine Gaul was north and northwest of the Alps, and included Narbonensis, Aquitania, Lugdunensis, and Belgica. It was inhabited by Franks, Germans, Burgundians, etc., and Celts, as well as by Gauls.

Insulting Gaul has roused the world to war.
Thomson, Autumn.
Shall haughty Gaul invasion threat?—Burns.

Gaumont, Léon Ernest (1864-1946). French motion-picture inventor; introduced sound and color. Gaumont films named for him.

Gaunt, Griffith, see GRIFFITH GAUNT.

Gaunt, John of (1340-1399). Fourth son of Edward III. Soldier; patron of Chaucer.

Gauntlet, to run the. To be attacked on all sides, to be severely criticized. The word came into English at the time of the Thirty Years' War as gantlope, meaning the passage between two files of soldiers, and is the Swedish gata, a way, passage and lopp (connected with our leap), a course. The reference is to a punishment formerly common among soldiers and sailors; the company or crew, provided with rope ends, were drawn up in two rows facing each other, and the delinquent had to run between them, while every man dealt him as severe a chastisement as he could.

to throw down the gauntlet. To challenge. The custom in the Middle Ages, when one knight challenged another, was for the challenger to throw his gauntlet on the ground, and if the challenge was accepted the person to whom it was thrown picked it up.

Gauss, Christian (1878-). Dean of Princeton (1925-1945). Educational writer.

Gautama. The personal name of BUDDHA. His family name was Siddhartha, his father's name Suddhodana, and his mother's Maya. Buddha means "The Enlightened," "The One Who Knows," and he assumed this title at about the age of 36, when, after seven years of seclusion and spiritual struggle, he believed himself to have attained to perfect truth.

Gauthier, Marguerite. Heroine of the novel La Dame aux Camélias (novel 1848; play 1852) by Dumas fils, dramatized in France under the same title and in America as CAMILLE.

Gautier, Théophile (1811-1872). French poet and novelist, known for the pictorial and jewel-like effects of his later poems, and the fantasy and macabre quality of his prose tales and early poems. In the morbidity and violence of the latter he has been compared to Baudelaire, and in the sense of perfection of form in the former he has been compared to the PARNASSIANS. Gautier's poetry includes: Poésies (1830); Albertus (1832), a fantastic narrative poem; La Comédie de la Mort (1833), another long poem, dealing with the sensual and the ideal; and Emaux et Camées (1852), considered the best example of his pure, minutely chiseled style. Among his novels and tales are: Les Jeunes France (1833); Mlle. de MAUPIN (1835); La Jettatura (1856); CAPTAIN FRACASSE (1861-1863). Gautier was one of the first official exponents of the doctrine of l'art pour l'art ("ART FOR ART'S SAKE"). He studied painting early in his career and applied its methods of observation to his poetry. See also GONCOURT BROTHERS.

Gautier et Garguille. A proverbial expression in France for "all the world and his wife."

Gauvain. A character in Victor Hugo's NINETY-THREE.

Gauvaine. The French form of the name GAWAIN.

Gavarni. Pseudonym of Sulpice Guillaume Chevalier (1804-1866). French illustrator and caricaturist. Best known for his studies of social contrasts between extreme luxury and poverty of Parisian life in L'Illustration.

Gavroche. In Victor Hugo's LES MISÉRABLES, a happy-go-lucky little Parisian street Arab who gives a good account of himself in the fighting on the Day of the Barricades and goes gaily to meet his death.

Gawain. One of the most famous of the Arthurian knights, nephew of King Arthur, and probably the original hero of the Grail quest. He appears in the Welsh Triads and the MABINOGION as Gwalchmei, and in the Arthurian cycle is the center of many episodes and poems. He is known as "the Courteous" and is first represented as the flower of chivalrous knighthood, but later writers (including Malory in his Morte d'Arthur) degraded him, probably on account of his connection with the Grail and to leave the literary field clear for Percival, until Tennyson, in The Passing of Arthur, makes Sir Bedivere brand him as "light in life and light in death." The Middle English poem (about 1360), Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, is a weird romance telling how Gawain beheads the Green Knight in single combat after having promised to meet him for a return stroke twelve months later at the Green Chapel. On the appointed day Gawain is there, and so is the Green Knight: Gawain's honor is, by arrangement, severely but successfully tested by the wife of the knight, and as he has proved himself true he escapes unharmed.

Gawrey. In Pultock's PETER WILKINS, a flying woman, whose wings served the double purpose of flying and dress. Youwarkee, the heroine, is one of these strange beings.

a gay deceiver. A LOTHARIO; a libertine.

I immediately quitted the precincts of the castle, and posted myself on the high road, where the gay deceiver was sure to be intercepted on his return.—Le Sage, Gil Blas, vii, i, 3 (Smollett's translation, 1749).

the Gay Science. A translation of gai saber, the old Provençal name for the art of poetry. See also COURTLY LOVE; TROUBADORS. E. S. Dallas used it (1866) as the title for a treatise on Criticism. In explanation he says:

Why the Gay Science, however? The light-hearted minstrels of Provence insisted on the joyfulness of their art. . . . Neither need anyone be repelled if this doctrine of pleasure strike the key-note, and suggest the title of the present work, in which an attempt will be made to show that a science of criticism is possible, and that it must of necessity be the science of the laws of pleasure, the joy science, the Gay Science.—Preface.

A guild formed at Toulouse in 1323 with the object of keeping in existence the dying Provençal language and culture was called the Gai Saber. Its full title was "The Very Gay Company of the Seven Troubadors of Toulouse."

Gay, John (1688-1732). English poet and playwright, a friend of POPE, known for his sprightly satire and contemporary realism, especially in his treatments of city life. Among his works are: Rural Sports (1713), a poem dedicated to Pope; The Shepherd's Week (1714), six pastorals parodying the artificial literary pastorals of Ambrose Philips; TRIVIA, OR THE ART OF WALKING THE STREETS OF LONDON (1716), a long poem picturing life in 18th-century London; Poems on Several Occasions (1720); THE BEGGAR'S OPERA (1728), a forerunner of the 20th-century musical-comedy form and Gay's best-known work, satirizing Sir Robert Walpole, British prime minister of the time, and the court of George II; and Polly (1729), a sequel to The Beggar's Opera, suppressed because of its political satire.

Gay, Walter. In Dickens' novel DOMBEY AND SON, a member of the firm of that name, an honest, frank, ingenuous youth, who loves Florence Dombey, and comforts her in her early troubles. Walter Gay is sent in the merchantman called The Son and Heir, as junior partner, to the Barbadoes, and survives a shipwreck. After his return from the Barbadoes, he marries Florence.

Gayarré, Charles Étienne Arthur (1805-1895). New Orleans lawyer and historian of Louisiana, writing both French and English.

Gayda, Virginio (1885-1944). Italian journalist; as director of the Giornale d'Italia (1926-1944), the mouthpiece of Italian Fascism.

Gaylord, Marcia. The heroine of Howells' MODERN INSTANCE. Her father, Squire Gaylord, is a prominent character in the same novel.

Gay Lord Quex, The. A drama by PINERO (1899). The hero, Lord Quex, is about to reform and settle down with the charming heroine Muriel, but he must first lay numerous ghosts. The plot centers about the effort of Sophie Fullgarney, Muriel's foster sister, to save her from Quex. She fails, or rather is convinced of his sincerity at last.

Gay-Lussac, Joseph Louis (1778-1850). French scientist. Made first balloon ascent for scientific investigation (1804). Discovered hydrosulphuric and oxychloride acids. His name remains associated with Gay-Lussac's law which he enunciated regarding the proportions in which gases combine.

gazogene. A portable apparatus for making gases, used to carbonate liquids, etc. Cf. the stories of Sherlock Holmes, where the gasogene and tantalus are often in use.

Ge or Gaea. In Greek mythology, the personification of the Earth. She sprang from Chaos and gave birth to Uranus (Heaven) and Pontus (Sea). She is identified with the Roman Tellus.

Geb. In Egyptian religion, the father of Osiris. He is the god of the earth and is represented in human form with a goose on his head.

Geber or Jabir (Arab., Jābir ibn-Hayyān) (fl. 721-776). An Arabian alchemist, born at Thous, in Persia. He wrote several treatises on the "art of making gold," in the usual mystical jargon of the period; hence, by imitation of his name, our word gibberish (senseless jargon).

This art the Arabian Geber taught . . .
The Elixir of Perpetual Youth
Longfellow, The Golden Legend.

Gebir. A narrative poem by Walter Savage LANDOR (1797). The hero, Gebir, ruler of Iberia, has sworn to avenge ancient wrongs by conquering Egypt, but he falls madly in love with the enemy queen, Charoba. On the day of his marriage to her, he is killed by a poisoned shirt. See also Nessus. Throughout the poem the warlike Gebir is in sharp contrast with his peaceful shepherd brother Tamar.

Geddes, Norman Bel (1893-). American stage designer and architect. Remembered chiefly for his work for the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York. As an industrial designer he was largely responsible for the popularization of streamlined furniture and utensils.

Geddes, Sir Patrick (1854-1932). Scottish biologist and sociologist. Once HUXLEY's assistant. Has been called "one of the fathers of modern geography, and of much in modern psychology and biology." Lewis MUMFORD was among his students. Cf. A. D. DEFRIES, Pioneers of Science.

Geddes, Virgil (1897-). American playwright and poet. First play produced in New York, The Earth Between, by Provincetown Players (1929) with Bette Davis (her first appearance). Directed Brookfield Players. Many of his plays have caused considerable controversy, notably Native Ground (1932) with its theme of incest.

Gedye, George Eric Rowe (1890-). English journalist. Betrayal in Central Europe (1939), etc.

geese. For the legend of Rome saved by geese, see under goose.

Gehenna. The place of eternal torment. Strictly speaking, it means simply the Valley of Hinnom (Ge-Hinnom), where sacrifices to Baal and Moloch were offered (Jer. xix. 6, etc.), and where refuse of all sorts was subsequently cast, for the consumption of which fires were kept constantly burning.

And made his grove
The pleasant valley of Hinnom, Tophet thence
And black Gehenna called, the type of hell.
Milton, Paradise Lost, Bk i, 403.

Geierstein, Anne of, see ANNE OF GEIERSTEIN.

Geijerstam, Gösta af (1888-). Swedish novelist and painter. Settled in Norway (since 1906). Stories of Norwegian family life.

Geisel, Theodor Seuss. Pseudonym Dr. Seuss (1904-). American comic draughtsman and writer and illustrator of humorous children's books. The Seven Lady Godivas (1939); etc.

geisha. A Japanese professional singing and dancing girl. Hence, especially in Western misconception, a licensed prostitute.

Gelert. Llewellyn's dog. See BETH GELERT.

Gellatly, Davie. In Scott's Waverley, the idiot servant of the Baron of Bradwardine, described as "a crack-brained knave, who could execute very well any commission which jumped with his own humor, and made his folly a plea for avoiding every other."

Gemara (Aramaic, "complement"). The second part of the TALMUD, consisting of annotations, discussions, and amplifications of the Mishna, which is the first part. The Mishna is the interpretation of the written law, the Gemara the interpretation of the Mishna. There is the Babylonian Gemara and the Jerusalem Gemara. The former, which is the more complete, is by the academies of Babylon, and was completed about 500 A. D.; the latter is written by those of Palestine, completed toward the close of the 4th or during the 5th century A. D.

Gemini (the twins). CASTOR AND POLLUX; the name of a constellation.

Gemmagog. According to Rabelais in Gargantua and Pantagruel (Bk. ii, ch. i), son of the giant Oromedon, and inventor of the Poulan shoes—i.e., shoes with a spur behind, and turned-up toes fastened to the knees. These shoes were forbidden by Charles V of France in 1365, but the fashion revived again.

The same authority says giants were great inventors: Erix invented tricks of thimble-rigging; Gabara, drinking healths; Hapmouche, drying and smoking neat's tongues; Morgan "was the first in this World who played at Dice with Spectacles"; Galehaut, the inventor of flagons; etc. etc. They were all direct ancestors of Gargantua and Pantagruel.

General, Mrs. In Dickens' LITTLE DORRIT, the widow who teaches Little Dorrit, among other matters of etiquette, to say Papa, prunes and prisms. She explains—

"Father is rather vulgar, my dear. The word Papa, besides, gives a pretty form to the lips. Papa, potatoes, poultry, prunes and prism are all very good words for the lips, especially prunes and prism. You will find it serviceable in the formation of a demeanor if you sometimes say to yourself in Company—on entering a room, for instance—Papa, potatoes, poultry, prunes and prism, prunes and prisms."

General William Booth Enters Into Heaven. A poem by Vachel LINDSAY, published in 1913. It is written in the rhythm of drum-beats as sounded by a Salvation Army band and, meant to be sung to the music of Washed in the Blood of the Lamb, the Salvation Army hymn, it describes the triumphant entry of General William Booth into Paradise.

Genesee Fever. Title of a novel by Carl CARMER (1941).

Genesis. The Greek name for the first book of the Old Testament. The Jews call it "In the beginning," from the first words.

Genêt, Edmond Charles Édouard (1763–1834). French diplomat in U.S. Endeavored to draw U.S. into France's war against Great Britain and Spain. Attacked Washington for his policy of neutrality. Sought to force the President to change his attitude by popular agitation and commissioned privateers in American ports to prey upon British commerce. Superseded at Washington's request but stayed in U.S. and became naturalized American citizen. Known as "Citizen Genêt." Janet Flanner, American journalist, signs her work Genêt.

Geneva. The capital of the Swiss canton of Geneva. Situated on Lake of Geneva, or Lac Léman. Center of the Reformation under CALVIN (1536–1564). Birthplace of Jean Jacques ROUSSEAU. Seat of the LEAGUE OF NATIONS after World War I.

the Geneva Bible. See BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.
the Geneva bull. A nickname given to Stephen Marshall (d. 1655), a Presbyterian divine, and one of the authors of Smectymnuus, because he was a disciple of John Calvin of Geneva, and, when preaching, roared like a "bull of Bashan."

Geneva convention. An agreement made by the European powers at Geneva (1864; supplemented 1868), establishing humane regulations for the treatment of disabled soldiers in war. Revised and brought into accord with modern methods of warfare (1906). Now ratified by almost every country.

Geneva courage. Pot valor; the braggadocio which is the effect of having drunk too much gin, or geneva. See also DUTCH COURAGE. The word Geneva, punning on Calvinism and gin, is frequent in old allusions to drink. Thus Scott has:

"You have been reading Geneva print this morning already."

"I have been reading the Litany," said John, shaking his head with a look of drunken gravity.

Old Mortality, ch. xi.

Geneva Cross. The red cross.

Geneva doctrines. Calvinism.

Geneva gown. Loose, black gown introduced as a vestment for preaching by the Calvinists and adopted by many other protestant denominations.

Genevieve. A ballad by Coleridge and also the name of the heroine in his poem Love.

And so I won my Genevieve
My bright and beauteous bride.

Geneviève, see GENOVEFA; also under SAINTS.

Genghis Khan (1167–1227). Mongol conqueror. He plundered northern India and subdued what is now Iran, Iraq, and part of Russia. A military genius. His original name was Temujin. His surname signifies "the greatest lord." One of his descendants was TAMERLANE.

Génie du Christianisme, Le (The Genius of Christianity). A book of criticism by CHATEAUBRIAND (1802), considered to mark a revolution in critical literary taste in France, since it is unfriendly to the 18th-century tradition, chooses the Middle Ages over the Renaissance, establishes the individual "self" as the source of artistic inspiration, and exalts Christianity as the great force for developing the soul of man. This book is regarded as the origin of the "aesthetic" view of religion that dominated French literature in the later 19th century.

genii or ginn, see JINN.

Genius (pl., Genii). In Roman mythology the tutelary spirits that attended one from his cradle to his grave, and that governed his fortunes, determined his character, and so on. The Eastern genii were the JINN, entirely different from the Roman, not guardian or attendant spirits, but fallen angels, dwelling in Djinnistan, under the dominion of Eblis. The Roman were very similar to the guardian angels spoken of in Matt. xviii. 10, and in this sense Mephistopheles is spoken of as the evil genius (the "familiar" of Faust.) The Romans maintained that two genii attended every man from birth to death—one good and the other evil. Good luck was brought about by the agency of his "good genius," and ill luck by that of his "evil genius."

"Genius," The. A novel by Theodore DREISER (1915), relating the numerous love affairs of an artist, Eugene Witla, who attains some note as an illustrator and some fortune as a director of advertising art. His marriage to ANGELA is one incident in his amatory life.

Genji, The Tale of. See MURASAKI.

Gennaro. In Donizetti's opera, LUCREZIA BORGIA, the natural son of Lucrezia Borgia before her marriage with Alfonso, Duke of Ferrara.

Genovefa. The heroine of an old German folk-tale, which relates that she was the wife of a Count Palatine Siegfried of Brabant, in the time of Charles MARTEL. Being suspected of infidelity, she is driven into the forest of Ardennes, where she gives birth to a son, who is nourished by a white doe. In time, Siegfried discovers his error, and restores his wife and child to their home. The name is another form of Geneviève or Genevieve.

genre painter. A painter of domestic, rural, or village scenes, such as A Village Wedding, The Young Recruit, Blind Man's Buff, The Village Politician, etc. Wilkie, Ostade, Gerard, Dow, Pieter de Hooch, Jan Steen, Franz Hals, and, on occasion, Rembrandt and Vermeer, belonged to this class. In the drama, Victor Hugo introduced the genre system in lieu of the stilted, unnatural style of Louis XIV's era.

Genserik or Gaiseric (d. 477 A. D.) King of the VANDALS of ARIAN creed. Invaded Africa from Spain (429). Captured Carthage and made it his capital. The town of Hippo fell into his hands a few days after the death of St. Augustine. Sacked Rome (455).

Genteel Tradition, The. Term applied to a group of American writers and men of letters of the latter part of the 19th century whose literary standards were correct and conventional, tending toward the academic, and whose poetry was for the most part correct and conventional also, sentimental, and far removed from the contemporary American scene. Leading representatives of the Genteel Tradition were: Richard Henry STODDARD, Bayard TAYLOR, Edmund Clarence STEDMAN, Thomas Bailey ALDRICH, and Edward Rowland SILL.

Gentle Craft, The. A tale by Thomas DELONEY (1597), in which he celebrates shoemakers and their craft. Part I deals with St. Hugh, the patron saint of cobblers, and St. Winifred (see under SAINT). Part II tells of St. Crispin (see under SAINT) and St. Crispinian, also patron saints of cobblers. Part III, the best-known section of the story, gives an account of the life of Simon EYRE, the shoemaker Lord Mayor of London.

Gentle Gafter, The. A volume of short stories by O. HENRY.

Gentleman from Indiana, The. A novel by Booth TARKINGTON (1899). The hero is John Harkless, the young editor of a country newspaper in Indiana. His courageous struggles, particularly against the lawless White Caps, bring him enemies, and when he vanishes after an attack upon him, he is given up for dead. However, he reappears, and the novel ends with his marriage to the charming girl who has run his paper in his absence and so made possible his nomination to Congress.

Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. See BLACK ROD.

Gentleman's Magazine, The. An English periodical, founded in 1731, the first to call itself a "magazine" in the later widespread sense. Samuel JOHNSON at one time was a regular contributor. The publication was issued until 1914.

Gentlemen Prefer Blondes. A best-selling novel by Anita Loos (1925), satirizing the "FLAPPERS" and "gold-diggers" of the JAZZ AGE.

Gentle Shepherd, The. The title and chief character of a pastoral drama by Allan Ramsay (1725).

Geoffrey of Monmouth (1100?-1154). Medieval English historian, believed to have been a churchman of the Benedictine order. He is famous for his History of the Kings of Britain (Historia Regum Britanniae), an important source of the legend of King ARTHUR. He is considered to be the creator of the heroic characteristics of Arthur, and to have used his imagination liberally in his history, "Nennius," the source he acknowledges, being regarded as a fictional name.

geopolitics (from German Geopolitik). A science dealing with the significance of geographical factors for the attitude of a people in domestic and foreign policies. Crystallized by Karl Haushofer (1869-1946).

George.

let George do it. A popular phrase meaning "Let somebody else do it." The allusion is in a popular comic supplement feature of that title by the American cartoonist George McManus but it goes back as far as Louis XII.

as good as George-a-Green. Resolute-minded; one who will do his duty come what may. George-a-Green was the mythical Pinner (Pinner or Pindar) or pound-keeper of Wakefield, who resisted Robin Hood, Will Scarlett, and Little John single-handed when they attempted to commit a trespass in Wakefield.

Were ye bold as George-a-Green,
I shall make bold to turn again.

Butler, Hudibras.

Robert GREENE wrote a comedy (published 1599) called George-a-Greene, or the Pinner of Wakefield.

George, Henry (1839-1897). American writer and lecturer on political economy, known for his study of the problems of poverty and his attempts at remedy, a field in which he was one of the first leaders to arise in the U.S. His most famous theory is that of the "single tax," or a tax on land, which was the most important form of wealth in his day, set forth most persuasively in Progress and Poverty (1879). Other works are: The Irish Land Question (1881); Social Problems (1884); Protection and Free Trade (1886); Science of Political Economy (1897). The FA-BIAN SOCIETY in England and the later movements for economic reform in the U.S. were influenced by George's theories.

George, St., see under SAINTS.

George, Stefan Anton (1868-1933). German poet; the "embodiment of Roman culture on Rhenish soil." Master of all Latin tongues; associate or translator of the French symbolists in MALLARMÉ's group and the Pre-Raphaelites of England. From neo-romantic beginnings his poetry, in content and form, developed more and more toward a "rigidly exclusive, static, and statuelike classicism." In his conception the poet is the priest and prophet of his nation while of necessity his "heroic virility" removes him from all possible contact with the masses. All attempts to translate George's poems have failed. His work is extremely difficult of access and is made more so by artifices of spelling, punctuation, and typography. It has never been widely read or understood, but its influence has been tremendous due to the immediate and mediate members of his group. George has been called a "Napoleon at the court of the Muses."

George, Walter Lionel (1882-1926). English novelist, born and reared in France. Immediate success of his first novel, A Bed of Roses (1911). His work has great vitality. The Second Blooming (1914), The Strangers' Wedding (1916), etc. He has been characterized as having "wit but no humor, conscience but no taste," but was a genuine liberal.

George Dandin. A comedy by MOLIÈRE (1668). The principal character, George Dandin, is a rich French tradesman, who marries Angelique, the daughter of M. de Sotenville, and has the "privilege" of paying off the family debts, maintaining his wife's noble parents and being snubbed on all occasions to his heart's content. He constantly said to himself, in self-rebuke, "Vous l'avez voulu, vous l'avez voulu, George Dandin!" (You have no one to blame but yourself! you brought it on yourself, George Dandin!) Hence his name is used with reference to one who brings trouble upon his own head; also to one who marries above his station.

George Junior Republic. An industrial community under a form of self-government founded near Ithaca, N.Y., by the American businessman and philanthropist William Reuben George (1866-1933), designed to give delinquent and neglected children a chance to prove their worth in a wholesome environment.

Georgianna. (1) The heroine of James Lane Allen's KENTUCKY CARDINAL and its sequel Aftermath.

(2) Heroine of Hawthorne's tale THE BIRTHMARK.

Geraint. In Arthurian legend, a tributary prince of Devon, and one of the knights of the Round Table. In the MABINOGION story he is the son of Erbin, as he is in the French original, Chrestien de Troyes' Eric et Enide, from which Tennyson drew his Geraint and Enid in the Idylls of the King. In the latter, Geraint, overhearing part of Enid's words, fancied she was faithless to him and treated her for a time very harshly; but Enid nursed him so carefully when he was wounded that he saw his error, "nor did he doubt her more, but rested in her fealty, till he crowned a happy life with a fair death."

Gerald, a Portrait. By Daphne DU MAURIER (1934). A biography of her father, the noted actor Sir Gerald du Maurier (1873-1934).

Geraldine, the Fair. Lady Elizabeth Fitzgerald (d. 1589) is so called in the Earl of Surrey's poems. She was the youngest daughter of the Earl of Kildare.

Lady Geraldine's Courtship. A poem by Mrs. Browning (1844). The lady falls in love with a peasant-poet, whom she marries.

Gerard. The father of Erasmus, whose love story is told in Charles Reade's CLOISTER AND THE HEARTH.

Gerard, Brigadier. An egotistical, swash-buckling, braggart Napoleonic soldier, hero of a series of tales (1896) by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle.

Gerda, Gerdr, or Gerdhr. In Scandinavian mythology (the Skírnismál), a young giantess, wife of Frey, and daughter of the frost giant Gymer. She is so beautiful that the brightness of her naked arms illumines both air and sea. According to the myth, Frey (the god of fruitfulness) married Gerda (the frozen earth), and she became the mother of children.

Gerhardi, William Alexander (1895-). English novelist and short-story writer. Born in St. Petersburg, Russia. Military attaché at British embassy in Petrograd (1917-1918). Observed Russian Revolution and Allied Intervention at first-hand. Wrote Chekhov's biography. Has a strong vein of satire. Futility (1922); The Polyglots (1925); The Romanovs (1939).

Germ, The. A "little magazine" published by the PRE-RAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD from January to April, 1850. It contained expositions of the Brotherhood's artistic ideas, poems, and reproductions of their paintings. Its subtitle was Thoughts Towards Nature in Poetry, Literature, and Art.

Germanicus Caesar (15 B. C.-19 A. D.). Roman general; nephew and adopted son of Emperor Tiberius. Father of Emperor Caligula and, by his daughter Agrippina, grandfather of Nero. In his campaign against the Germans (11-16 A. D.) he defeated ARMINIUS but was recalled through the emperor's jealousy.

Germinal. A novel by Emile ZOLA, published in 1885. It is a study of workers in the French mines.

Germinie Lacerteux. A novel by the GONCOURT brothers, published in 1869, and considered the first representative of NATURALISM to deal with the more sordid aspects of life. It was based on the life of the Goncourts' own servant.

Gerolstein, Rudolph, Grand Duke of. In Eugene Sue's MYSTERIES OF PARIS a powerful young prince who loves to go about "playing Providence" in disguise, meting out punishment, as well as rewards where he believes they are most fitting.

Gérôme, Jean Léon (1824-1904). French historical painter in the classical manner. Student of Paul DELAROCHE. Professor at École des Beaux-Arts, Paris (1863).

Geronimo. Indian name Goyathlay, "One Who Yawns" (1829-1909). American Apache chieftain. Led sensational campaign of the Chiricahua band against the whites (1885-1886). Captured by General Cook. Escaped, was recaptured, settled at Fort Sill, and later became a member of the Dutch Reformed Church (1903). Dictated the story of his life (1906).

Géronte. (1) In Molière's Médécin Malgré Lui, the father of LUCINDE. (2) In Molière's Fourberies de Scapin, father of Léandre and Hyacinthe. See SCAPIN. The name is common in French comedy as that of a father of a family.

Gerontius, The Dream of. A poem by Cardinal NEWMAN in which Gerontius makes his last journey to God, carried by his guardian angel through a world of good and evil spirits. The Dream of Gerontius has been set to music in the form of an oratorio by Sir Edward ELGAR (1900).

Gerould, Katharine Fullerton (1879-1944). American novelist, essayist, and short-story writer, wife of G. H. Gerould. "A fictional artist of subtle power and distinguished skill" (especially in Vain Oblations), also, sometimes, accused of snobbishness.

gerrymander. So to divide a county or nation into representative districts as to give one special political party undue advantage over others. The word is derived from Elbridge Gerry, who adopted the scheme in Massachusetts when he was governor. Gilbert Stuart, the artist, looking at the map of the new distribution, with a little invention converted it into a salamander. "No, no!" said Russell, when shown it, "not a Salamander, Stuart, call it a Gerry-mander."

Hence, to gerrymander means also to hocus-pocus statistics, election results, etc., so as to make them appear to give other than their true result, or so as to affect the balance.

Gershwin, George (1898-1937). American composer, often associated with the development of Jazz, especially in symphonic orchestration. Rhapsody in Blue (1923); Piano Concerto in F (1925). His musical comedy, Of Thee I Sing (1931), was awarded the Pulitzer Prize. His brother Ira Gershwin (1896-) wrote the lyrics for many of his musical comedies. His most ambitious score was that for the folk-opera Porgy and Bess (for which Du Bose HEYWARD wrote the book based on his play Porgy).

Gerson, Jean (1363-1429). French theologian and court preacher to Charles VI, known for his sermons in French and Latin. He was one of the leading opponents of the Romance of the Rose (see under ROSE), which he condemned to be burned (1399) as a threat to morality. In 1402 he wrote an allegorical "vision," Tractatus contra Romanium de Rosa, attacking it.

Gertrude. In Shakespeare's HAMLET Hamlet's mother. In SAXO GRAMMATICUS she is called Geruth.

Gertrude of Wyoming. A poem by Thomas CAMPBELL (1809). The setting is in the wilds of the Wyoming Valley in Pennsylvania. The heroine, Gertrude, is the daughter of the patriarch Albert; the hero is Henry Waldegrave, who as a boy spends three years in the patriarch's home and later returns to marry Gertrude. The settlement is attacked by a mixed army of Indians and British and both Albert and Gertrude are shot. Henry then joins the army of Washington.

Gertrude, St. See under SAINTS.

Gerund or Gerundio, Friar. Hero of a satirical romance, Fray Gerundio de Campazas (Sp., 1758), ridiculing the wandering friars of Spain and their pretentious sermons.

Gervaise. One of the principal characters in the novels of Zola's ROUGON MACQUART series.

Geryon. In Greek mythology, a monster with three bodies and three heads, whose oxen ate human flesh, and were guarded by Orthros, a two-headed dog. Hercules slew both Geryon and the dog.

Geryoneo. In Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE (V. xi), a giant with three bodies typifying Philip II of Spain (master of three kingdoms), the Spanish rule in the Netherlands, or sometimes the Inquisition. He is the son of Geryon.

Gestas. The impenitent thief crucified with our Lord. In the apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus, he is called Gestas. The penitent thief was Dismas, Dysmas, Demas, or Dumacus.

Gessler. The tyrannical Austrian governor of the three forest cantons of Switzerland who figures in the WILLIAM TELL legend.

Gestalt psychology. The term is an adaptation of Ger. Gestaltpsychologie, which is often rendered more literally as "configuration psychology." The basic principle of Gestalt psychology, as developed by Kurt Koffka (1886-1941), Wolfgang Kohler (1887-), and others, maintains that perception and memory are always concerned with "wholes" which determine the significance of their "parts." In a naïve formula: Salt in soup is not just salt. In other words: A whole is more than the sum of its parts.

Gestapo. Abbreviated from Ger. Geheime Staatspolizei, "secret state police." Organized under the Nazi régime for operation particularly against political offenders; corresponded to the Russian CHEKA and Gay-Pay-Oo.

Gesta Romanorum. A pseudo-devotional compilation of popular tales in Latin (many from Oriental sources), each with an arbitrary "moral" attached for the use of preachers, assigned—in its collected form—to about the end of the 14th century. The name, meaning "The Acts of the Romans," is merely fanciful. It was first printed at Utrecht about 1472. Shakespeare drew the plot of PERICLES from the Gesta Romanorum, as well as the incident of the three caskets in the MERCHANT OF VENICE; and many other English poets, from CHAUCER to William Morris, have drawn material from it.

Gestas. The traditional name of the impenitent thief. See DYSMAS.

Gettysburg Address. President Lincoln's address (Nov. 19, 1863) at the dedication of the National Cemetery at Gettysburg, Pa. It has been called "the only great prose poem of classical perfection in modern English." Cf. also The Perfect Tribute (1906), a "sentimental footnote to history" by Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews.

Gjallarhorn, see GJALLARHORN.

Giamschid, see JAMSHID.

Gian ben Gian. In Arabic legend, a king of the Jinn and founder of the Pyramids. He was overthrown by Azazel or Lucifer.

giants, i.e., persons well above the average height and size, are by no means uncommon as "sports" or "freaks of nature"; but the widespread belief in pre-existing races or individual instances of giants among primitive peoples is due partly to the ingrained idea that the present generation is invariably a degeneration—

"There were giants in the earth in those days" (Gen. vi. 4)—and partly to the existence from remote antiquity of cyclopean buildings, gigantic sarcophagi, etc., and to the discovery from time to time in pre-scientific days of the bones of extinct monsters which were taken to be those of men.

The giants of Greek mythology were, for the most part, sons of TARTARUS and GE. When they attempted to storm heaven, they were hurled to earth by the aid of Hercules, and buried under Mount Etna. Those of Scandinavian mythology were evil genii, dwelling in Jotunheim (giantland), who had terrible and superhuman powers, could appear and disappear, reduce and extend their stature at will, etc. See FAFNER, FASOLT.

For the principal giants known to legend see: ADAMASTOR, ALIFANFARON, ANTAEUS, ASCAPART, ATLAS, BALAN, BLUNDERBORE, BRIAREUS, BROBDINGNAG, CACUS, ST. Giants in the Earth: A saga of the Prairie. A novel by O. E. RÖLVAAG, published in Norway in 1924-1925 and in English translation in the U.S. in 1927. It deals with the hardships, both mental and physical, of a small group of Norwegian farmers from Minnesota who set out with their families in 1873 to settle in the then unopened Dakota Territory.

giaour. Among Mohammedans, one who is not an adherent of their faith, especially a Christian; generally used with a contemptuous or insulting implication. In Byron's poem The Giaour (1813), Leilah, the beautiful concubine of the Caliph Hassan, falls in love with a Giaour, flees from the seraglio, is overtaken, put to death, and cast into the sea. The Giaour cleaves Hassan's skull, flees for his life, and becomes a monk. Six years afterwards he tells his history to his father confessor on his deathbed, and prays him to "lay his body with the humblest dead, and not even to inscribe his name on his tomb." Accordingly, he is called "the Giaour," and is known by no other name.

Gibbie, Goose. In SCOTT'S OLD MORTALITY, a half-witted lad, first entrusted to "keep the turkeys," but afterwards "advanced to the more important office of minding the cows." He is in the service of Lady Bellenden.

His work is often grim, usually strong of structure and telling. He writes simply and directly and has been called "the poet of the industrial poor." Daily Bread (1910); Borderlands and Thoroughfares (1914); Collected Poems (1926); etc.

Gide, André Paul Guillaume (1869-). French novelist and critic, known for his satire, attacks on "Puritanism," and apologies for homosexuality, chiefly in the form of autobiography and semi-autobiography. His works include: Les Cahiers d'André Walter (The Notebooks of André Walter; 1891) (see under WALTER ANDRÉ); THE IMMORALIST (L'Immoraliste) (1902); La Porte étroite (1907), translated as Strait is the Gate; Les Caves du Vatican (1914), translated as The Vatican Swindle; La Symphonie pastorale (1919); Si le Grain ne Meurt (1921), a revealing autobiography, translated as If It Die; THE COUNTERFEITERS (Les Faux-Monnayeurs; 1925); Dostoyevsky (1926); Travels in the Congo (Voyage au Congo) (1928); Geneviève (1936); Return from the U.S.S.R. (Retour de l'U.R.S.S.) (1936); Afterthoughts on the U.S.S.R. (Retouches à mon retour de l'U.R.S.S.) (1938).

Early in his career Gide was a member of the Symbolist groups (see SYMBOLISM), although he soon repudiated the movement. He later became associated with the literary periodical Nouvelle Revue Française, and was a leader of young French writers during the 1920's. For a time, he professed Socialist sympathies. He was awarded the Nobel prize for literature in 1947.

Giddings, Franklin Henry (1855-1931). American sociologist; professor at Columbia (from 1894). The Scientific Study of Human Society (1924), etc.

Gideon. In the Old Testament, one of the judges of Israel. With a company of only three hundred men, he delivered his people from the Midianites. The army was purposely reduced to three hundred by eliminating all who were afraid and all who drank from a stream instead of lapping the water from their hands. They made a great noise by breaking pitchers and blowing trumpets, to give the impression of a huge army (Judges vii. 16-20).

Gielgud, Arthur John (1904-). English actor. In The Constant Nymph, Richard of Bordeaux, Hamlet, The Importance of Being Earnest, etc.

Gilded Age, The. A novel by Mark TWAIN and Charles Dudley WARNER (1873), relating the adventures of Col. Mulberry Sellers, an incurable optimist. According to Mark Twain's own statement he was drawn from his mother's cousin James Lampton, "a pathetic and beautiful spirit." The novel was successfully dramatized in 1874. Its title came to be used as a descriptive term for the post-Civil War period in the U.S., in the last quarter of the 19th century.

Gilder, Richard Watson (1844-1909). American poet and editor of Century Magazine (1881-1909); his brother, William Henry Gilder (1838-1900), a journalist and explorer; their sister, Jeannette Leonard Gilder (1849-1916), a journalist and literary agent.

Gilderoy. A famous cattle-stealer and highwayman of Perthshire, who is said to have robbed Cardinal Richelieu in the presence of the king, picked Oliver Cromwell's pocket, and hanged a judge. He was hanged in 1636. There are ballads on him in Percy's Reliques, Ritson's collection, etc., and a modern one by Campbell. Some authorities say there were two robbers by this name, both handsome and both Scotch.

to be hung higher than Gilderoy's kite is to be punished more severely than the very worst criminal. The greater the crime, the higher the gallows, was at one time a practical legal axiom. The gallows of Montrose was 30 feet high. The ballad says:

Of Gilderoy sae fraid they were
They bound him mickle strong,
Tull Edenburrow they led him thair
And on a gallows hong;
They hong him high aboon the rest,
He was so trim a boy. . . .

Giles. A mildly humorous generic name for a farmer. From the French form of Latin Aegidius.

Giles Corey. The title of one of Longfellow's New England Tragedies and of a drama by Mary E. Wilkins Freeman. Giles Corey was an inhabitant of Salem, Massachusetts, who at the age of eighty was condemned as a wizard in the Salem witchcraft trials and pressed to death. He met his death so stoically that he was called "the Man of Iron." His ghost, according to legend, appears from time to time on the site of his death.

Giles, St. See under SAINTS.

Gilfil, Maynard. The hero of George Eliot's MR. GILFIL'S LOVE STORY.

Gilgamesh. A legendary king of the Babylonian Gilgamesh Epic. Cf. translation by William Ellery LEONARD.

Gill, Harry. See GOODY BLAKE AND HARRY GILL.

Gillray, James (1757-1815). English political caricaturist, famous for his reflections on the king, "Farmer George." He died in a state of imbecility.

Gilpatric, Guy (1896-). American novelist and short-story writer. Creator of "Muster" Colin Glencannon, chief engineer of the freighter "S.S. Inchcliffe Castle," undoubtedly "the biggest, drunkenest, fightenest blackguard in either steam or sail, on any ocean."

Gilpin, Charles Sidney (1878-1930). American Negro actor. Especially remembered as Brutus Jones in Eugene O'Neill's Emperor Jones (1920-1924). Received Drama League Award and Spingarn Medal (both 1921).

Gilpin, John, see JOHN GILPIN.

Ginevra. (1) Ginevra dei Benci. The young Italian bride who hid in a trunk with a spring-lock. The lid fell upon her, and she was not discovered till the body had become a skeleton. This legend was popularized in Rogers' poem Italy (1822).

Be the cause what it might, from his offer she shrunk, And Ginevra-like, shut herself up in a trunk.—Lowell.

(2) Ginevra degli Amieri. A Florentine heroine who was in love with Antonio Rondinelli, and, when forced to marry another, fell into a trance which was taken for death. She was buried in the family vault, but managed to make her escape to Rondinelli. She is the heroine of Shelley's Story of Ginevra (1821), Leigh Hunt's Legend of Florence (1847) and Scribe's Guido et Ginevra.

(3) In Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, Ginevra is the lady love of the absent Ariodantes, falsely accused and doomed to die unless she finds within an appointed time a champion. Rinoldo makes her cause his own, slays her accuser and restores her to her lover.

Gingerbread. Brummagem wares, showy but worthless. The allusion is to the gingerbread cakes fashioned like men, animals, etc., and profusely decorated with gold leaf or Dutch leaf, which looked like gold, commonly sold at fairs up to the middle of the 19th century.

to take the guilt off the gingerbread. To destroy the illusion; to appropriate all the fun or profit and leave the caput mortuum behind.

Gingham Dog and Calico Cat. Poem by Eugene FIELD in which each eats the other.

Ginn, Edwin (1838–1914). American publisher. Founder of the firm now known as Ginn & Co. (Boston, 1867). Especially successful with text books.

Ginnunga Gap. In Scandinavian mythology, the abyss between Niflheim (the region of fog) and Muspelheim (the region of heat). It existed before either land or sea, heaven or earth, as a chaotic whirlpool.

ginseng. A Chinese herb, valued as a medicine. Its root, often forked, explains why it corresponds in Chinese folklore to the Western MANDRAKE.

Ginx's Baby. A satiric novel by John Edward Jenkins published anonymously in London in 1871. Ginx is about to drown his baby, the thirteenth to arrive in a poverty-stricken household, when it is rescued by the Sisters of Mercy. Passed from one charitable society to another and back to Ginx, because of antagonisms, lack of funds, etc., in the organizations, the "baby" becomes a thief and finally jumps over the bridge at the same spot where his father was prevented from drowning him.

Gioconda, La. (1) A drama by Gabriele d'ANNUNZIO (1898). Gioconda is the model of the brilliant young sculptor, Lucio Settala. Although he struggles to resist the fascination she exercises over him, out of loyalty to his devoted wife Silvia, he feels that Gioconda is the real inspiration of his art. During the sculptor's illness Gioconda refuses to give up the key of the studio to anyone but Lucio, and Silvia, who goes to plead her own cause, arouses the model's fury and is horribly maimed in the act of protecting Lucio's most prized statue. Nevertheless Lucio and Gioconda go off together and Silvia is left to her misery.

(2) An opera by Ponchielli (1876) based on Victor Hugo's tragedy Angelo the Tyrant of Padua. The scene is laid in 17th-century Venice, and the complex plot deals with the loves and jealousies of the street singer, La Gioconda; Enzo Grimaldo, a nobleman beloved by Gioconda; Alvise Badoero, the inquisitor; his wife Laura, who is engaged in an affair with Enzo; and the spy Barnaba. La Gioconda saves her rival Laura and stabs herself.

(3) A famous portrait of Mona Lisa Gioconda by Leonardo da VINCI. See MONA LISA.

Giocondo. Hero of an episode in Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, better known in its French paraphrase JOCONDE.

Giono, Jean (1895–). French novelist, known for the mysticism, the love of nature, and the exaltation of simple people engaged in semi-primitive agricultural pursuits, which mark his books, the scene of most of which is laid in Provence. His works include Un des Baumurges (1929), translated as Lovers Are Never Losers; Harvest (1930; Regain); Colline (1929), translated as Hill of Destiny; Le Grand troupeau (1931); Jean le Bleu (1932), translated as Blue Boy (1946); Solitude de la pitié (1932), short stories; Song of the World (Le Chant du monde; 1934); Que ma joie demeure (1935), translated as Joy of Man's Desiring; Refus d'obéissance (1937), accounts of World War I; Lettre aux paysans sur la pauvreté et la paix (1938); Batailles dans la montagne (1937); Le Serpent d'étoiles (1938); Précisions (1939), essays on European politics. Two French motion pictures highly praised by American critics, Harvest (1937) and The Baker's Wife (1938), were based respectively on Harvest and Jean le Bleu.

At the outbreak of World War II Giono was imprisoned as a pacifist. It has been said of him that he "is a great prose poet of nature, as pagan as a faun."

Giorgione, Il. Real name, Giorgio Barbarelli (1478?–1511). Venetian painter. Pupil of Giovanni Bellini and chief master of the Venetian school of his time. Traces of his influence are said to be apparent in the works of many of his contemporaries, including Titian. His pictures of secured authenticity are rare.

Giotto. Full name Giotto di Bondone (1276?–?1337). Florentine painter, architect, and sculptor; chief Italian pre-Renaissance painter; pupil of Cimabue; friend of DANTE. Many fresco series. Designed campanile and façade of the Florence Duomo. Florence dates its supremacy in Tuscan painting from Giotto. He broke the rigid traditional forms of the Byzantine school and through his introduction of individuality of treatment on the basis of observation became the father of portraiture in the modern sense.

round as Giotto's O. Said of work that is perfect and complete, but done with little labor. The story is that the Pope, wishing for an artist to undertake some special decorations, sent to Giotto for a specimen of his work, and the artist in front of the messenger and with his unaided hand drew a circle with red paint. The messenger, in amazement, asked Giotto if that were all. Giotto replied, "Send it, and we shall see if His Holiness understands the hint."

I saw . . . that the practical teaching of the masters of Art was summed up by the O of Giotto.—Ruskin, Queen of the Air, iii.

Giovanni, Don, see DON JUAN.

Giovannitti, Arturo (1884–). Italian-American poet of hymns to labor in unrhymed verse. Socialist. Jailed after textile mill strike at Lawrence, Mass. Cf. his personal "prison-document" poem, The Walker, which has been compared with Wilde's THE BALLAD OF READING GAOL. In 1917 he wrote When the Cock Crows, a poem inspired by the lynching of the labor leader Frank Little. His principal collection of verse is Arrows in the Gale (1914).

Giraldus Cambrensis (1146?–?1220). Welsh ecclesiastic, geographer, and historian. His chief work is the Itinerarium Cambriae, a description and natural history of Wales.

Girard, Stephen (1750–1831). French-born American businessman and philanthropist. Founder of a banking house in Philadelphia. Aided in financing the War of 1812, and in establishing the Second Bank of the United States (1816). Left funds for the establishment of a college (Girard College) in Philadelphia for "poor, white, male orphans" with the explicit stipulation that "no ecclesiastic, missionary, or minister of any sect whatever" should be permitted to "hold or exercise any station or duty" in it, or even to be admitted as a visitor.

Giraud, Henri Honoré (1879–1949). French general. In World War II, escaped from Germany (1942) to unoccupied France and cooperated in Algeria with the Allies by organizing a French colonial army. Succeeded Darlan as high commissioner of French North and West Africa. Commander in chief of French forces in North Africa. Joined Free French. Co-president with General De Gaulle of the French Committee of National Liberation (1943). Had escaped from a German war-prisoners' camp once before (1914).

Giraudoux, Jean (1882–1944). French novelist and playwright, holder of several important diplomatic positions after World War I. His works include Provinciales (1909); L'École des Indifférents (1911); Campaigns and Intervals (1918), an account of experiences during World War I; Simon le Pathétique (1918); Adorable Clio (1920); Suzanne and the Pacific (Suzanne et le Pacifique) (1921); Siegfried et le Limousin (1922), translated as My Friend from Limousin; Bella (1926); Eglantine (1927); AMPHITRYON 38 (1929); Judith (1932); Intermezzo (1933), and Cantique des Cantiques (1939), plays; Choix des Elues (1939).

Girl of the Golden West, The. An opera by PUCCINI (1910) based on a drama of that title by Belasco. The scene is laid in a California mining camp of the early days, where Minnie, the titular heroine, presides over the bar room and is courted by the local sheriff, Jack Rance, and Ramarrez, an outlaw known to her as Johnson. She loves Johnson, conceals him from justice, gambles with Rance for his life, and upon his promise to reform, accompanies him to a new life in another state.

Girl Scouts. An American national organization of girls over ten, patterned after the Boy Scouts, and established by Juliette Low in Savannah, Georgia, in 1912, at first under the name of "Girl Guides." See also CAMP FIRE GIRLS.

Girondists or the Gironde. The moderate republicans in the first French Revolution (1791–1793). So called from the department of Gironde, which chose for the Legislative Assembly five men who greatly distinguished themselves for their oratory, and formed a political party. They were subsequently joined by Brissot (and were hence sometimes called the Brissotins), Condorcet, and the adherents of Roland.

Girty, Simon (1741–1818). Known as "The Great Renegade." American soldier who turned against the Americans (1778) and became a leader of British and Indian raiding expeditions. Cf. Elinor WYLIE's poem, Simon Girty. He also appears in S. V. Benét's The Devil and Daniel Webster. Subject of a biography by Thomas Born.

Giselle. One of the most famous of ballets; one of great rôles of Alicia Markova.

Gish, Lillian (1896?–). American stage and screen actress. First success in Birth of a Nation. Played, in films, The Scarlet Letter, Broken Blossoms, Orphans of the Storm, etc.; on stage, Camille, Uncle Vanya, The Star Wagon, etc. Her sister Dorothy is also well-known as an actress, and appeared with her in several pictures.

Gismonda. A drama by SARDOU, later made into an opera by Fevrier (1919). Gismonda, duchess of Athens, has agreed to marry the man who will save her small son from a tiger's pit where he has been thrown by intriguers, but when the peasant falconer, Almerio, does so, she repents of her bargain and says she will pay her debt by a visit to his cottage. He must, however, give up all other claims. At the cottage she is spied upon by Zacario, the conspirator, and kills him. Almerio assumes the blame, to protect the Duchess, but she relents and marries him.

Gissing, George Robert (1857-1903). English novelist, one of the first exponents of NATURALISM in English fiction. As a result of his poverty and unhappy experiences in London and America, and his study of the philosophy of SCHOPENHAUER in Germany, his work is marked by pessimism, realism, and introspective analysis. His books include: Workers of the Dawn (1880); Demos (1886); The Nether World (1889); NEW GRUB STREET (1891); and THE PRIVATE PAPERS OF HENRY RYECROFT (1903).

Gizelle. A girl loved by NOSTROMO in CONRAD's novel of that title.

Gjallarhorn. In Norse mythology, the horn sounded by Heimdall, the warder of Asgard, to assemble the gods and heroes for the contest of RAGNAROK, the "twilight of the gods," at Vigrid.

Gjellerup, Karl (1857-1919). Danish writer long resident in Germany. Jointly with Henrik Pontoppidan he received the Nobel prize for literature in 1917. His later works were written in German.

Glad Game, The. See POLLYANNA.

Gladkowska, Constantia. Polish singer, with whom the composer CHOPIN was vainly in love for a time in his youth.

Gladstone, William Ewart (1809-1898). British statesman. Chancellor of the exchequer (1852-1855). Leader of Liberal party (1867). Prime minister (1868-1874; 1880-1885; 1886; 1892-1894). Milestones of his career are the disestablishment of the Irish Church, the denunciation of Turkish atrocities in Bulgaria, the reform of the Irish government by a new land bill and a home-rule bill (defeated 1886 and 1893), etc. The Gladstones (earlier form, Gledstones) are an old Scottish family. The word signifies "hawk-stone."

Gladstone wine is a humorous term for any of the cheaper French wines, duties on which were reduced by W. E. Gladstone (1860).

Glanvill, Joseph (1636-1680). English clergyman and philosopher; defended pre-existence of souls and belief in witchcraft. Mentioned in Matthew Arnold's poem, The Scholar Gipsy. In one of his numerous books, The Vanity of Dogmatizing (1661), he is thought to have anticipated the electric telegraph.

Glasgow, Ellen Anderson Gholson (1874-1945). American novelist, known for her studies of social change and contrasting social classes in the South, presented both realistically and satirically. Her works include: The Descendant (1897); The Voice of the People (1900); The Battle-Ground (1902); The Deliverance (1904); The Wheel of Life (1906); The Ancient Law (1908); The Romance of a Plain Man (1909); Virginia (1913); Life and Gabriella (1916); The Builders (1919); One Man in His Time (1922); Barren Ground (1925); The Romantic Comedians (1926); They Stooped to Folly (1929); The Sheltered Life (1932); Vein of Iron (1935); In This Our Life (1941).

Glaspell, Susan (1882-1948). American playwright, one of the founders of the Provincetown Players. Her plays include: Suppressed Desires (1914); A Woman's Honor (1918); Bernice (1919); The Inheritors (1921); The Verge (1921); Alison's House (1930), winner of the Pulitzer Prize in 1931, supposedly based on the life of Emily Dickinson. She also wrote novels and short stories.

Glass, Carter (1858-1946). American statesman. U.S. secretary of the treasury (1918-1920). U.S. senator from Virginia (from 1920).

Glass, Montague Marsden (1877-1934). American fiction writer and playwright. Creator of POTASH AND PERLMUTTER (1910).

Glasse, Mrs. Hannah. The author of a cookery-book, immortalized by the saying, "First catch [skin] your hare, then cook it." Mrs. Glasse is the assumed name of Dr. John Hill (1716-1775).

Glass Houses: Those who live in glass houses should not throw stones. Those who are open to criticism should be very careful how they criticize others. This is an old proverb found in varying forms from the time of Chaucer at least. Cf. TROILUS AND CRISEYDE, Bk. ii; also Matt. vii. 1-4.

Glastonbury. An ancient town in Somerset, dating from Roman times, and famous in the Arthurian and Grail cycles as the place to which Joseph of Arimathea came and as the burial place of King Arthur (see Avalon). It was here that Joseph planted his staff—the famous Glastonbury Thorn—which took root and burst into leaf every Christmas Eve.

Glaucus. The name of a number of heroes in classical legend, including:

(1) A fisherman of Boeotia, who became a sea-god endowed with the gift of prophecy and who instructed Apollo in the art of sooth-saying.

(2) A son of Sisyphus who would not allow his horses to breed. The goddess of Love so infuriated them that they killed him. Hence, the name is given to one who is so overfond of horses that he is ruined by them.

(3) A commander of the Lycians in the War of Troy (Iliad, Bk. vi.) who was connected by ties of ancient family friendship with his enemy Diomed. When they met in battle they not only refrained from fighting but exchanged arms in token of amity. As the armor of the Lycian was of gold, and that of the Greek of brass, it was like bartering precious stones for French paste. Hence the phrase a Glaucus swap, of which the story of Moses, in Goldsmith's VICAR OF WAKEFIELD, and his bargain with the spectacle-seller is a good example.

Glaucus is also the name of the hero in Bulwer Lytton's LAST DAYS OF POMPEII.

Gleaners, The. A famous painting of women gleaning in a harvest field by Jean François MILLET.

Glee-maiden, Louise the. One of the most prominent characters in Scott's FAIR MAID OF PERTH.

Glegg, Mrs. or Aunt. In George Eliot's MILL ON THE FLOSS, an aunt of Tom and Maggie Tulliver, conspicuous for her family loyalty and her domineering methods of compelling it in others. She has "a very comely face and figure, though Tom and Maggie considered their Aunt Glegg as a type of ugliness."

Gleipnir (Old Norse, "the fetter"). In Scandinavian legend, the chain by which the wolf Fenris is bound. It is extremely light, and made of the noise made by the footfalls of a cat, the roots of the mountains, the sinews of bears, the breath of fishes, the beards of women, and the spittle of birds. When the chain breaks, the wolf will be free and the end of the world will be at hand.

Glencoe, the massacre of. The treacherous massacre of the Macdonalds of Glencoe on February 13, 1692. Pardon had been offered to all Jacobites who submitted on or before December 31, 1691. Mac-Ian, chief of the Macdonalds of Glencoe, delayed till the last minute, and, on account of the state of the roads, did not make his submission before January 6. The Master of Stair (Sir John Dalrymple) obtained the king's permission "to extirpate the set of thieves." Accordingly on February 1, 120 soldiers, led by a Captain Campbell, marched to Glencoe, told the clan they were come as friends, and lived peaceably among them for twelve days; but on the morning of the 13th, the glenmen, to the number of thirty-eight, were scandalously murdered, their huts set on fire and their flocks and herds driven off as plunder. CAMPBELL and SCOTT have written poems, Talfourd a play, and Marjorie BOWEN a romance, on the subject.

Glendinning, Edward. A prominent character in Scott's MONASTERY and its sequel THE ABBOT, in which he is called Father AMBROSE.

Glendower, Owen. In Shakespeare's 1 Henry IV, a Welsh nobleman, descended from Llewellyn (last of the Welsh kings). Sir Edmund Mortimer marries one of his daughters. Shakespeare makes him a wizard, but very highly accomplished.

Glenn, Isa (1888-). American novelist. One of her cousins was James McNeill Whistler. Married General Schindler of the U.S. Army. Wrote Heat (1926); Southern Charm (1928); Transport (1929); The Little Candle's Beam (1935); According to Mac Tavish (1938).

Glinka, Mikhail Ivanovich (1804-1857). Russian composer. A Life for The Czar (first Russian national opera; 1836); Russian and Ludmilla (after a poem by Pushkin; 1842), overtures, symphonies, orchestral suites, etc.

globaloney. A word coined by Representative Clare Boothe Luce to ridicule what she considered excessive emphasis on the global interrelation of world affairs in the days after World War II.

Globe, The. A London theater located on the Bankside, Southwark, famous for the first production of plays by Shakespeare, Jonson, Beaumont and Fletcher, etc. Built in 1599, it was burned in 1613, was immediately rebuilt and finally pulled down by the Puritans in 1644. A modern theater by the same name was built in Wych street in 1868.

Gloriana. Spenser's name in his FAËRIE QUEENE for Queen Elizabeth. She holds an annual feast for twelve days, during which adventurers appear before her to undertake whatever task she chooses to impose upon them. On one occasion twelve knights present themselves before her, and their exploits form the scheme of Spenser's allegory.

By Gloriana I mean [true] Glory in my general intention, but in my particular I conceive the most excellent and glorious person of our sovereign the queen [Elizabeth] and her kingdom is Faerye-land. —Spenser, Introduction to the Faerie Queene (1590).

gloss. An interpretation, the rendering of an obscure expression, especially in the form of a marginal or interlinear note, of the kind abounding in medieval literature where Latin, Greek, or Hebrew words had to be rendered in the vernacular Teutonic, Celtic, and Romanic tongues. These special glosses are philologically very important and represent the oldest rudiments of bi-lingual dictionaries.

Glossin, Gilbert. In Scott's GUY MANNERING, a knavish lawyer, who purchases the Ellangowan estate, and is convicted by Pleydell of kidnaping Henry Bertram, the heir. Both Glossin and Dirk Hatteraick, his accomplice, are sent to prison; and in the night Hatteraick first strangles the lawyer and then hangs himself.

Glove, The. A long poem in octosyllabic couplets by Robert BROWNING (1845), in which the French poet Pierre de RONSARD supposedly tells the story of a lady at the court of FRANCIS I of France who tests her lover's devotion by dropping her glove before a dangerous captive lion, for the lover to rescue. Cf. also Schiller's ballad Der Handschuh (The Glove). One version ends:

He threw the glove, but not with love,
Right in the lady's face.

Glover, Catherine. Heroine of Scott's FAIR MAID OF PERTH.

Glover, Richard (1712-1785). English poet, author of the ballad Hosier's Ghost, which was published in PERCY's Reliques. His chief work, Leonidas (1737; enlarged in 1770), is an epic poem which was translated into French and German and owed its success in part to the use Walpole's opponents could make of it.

Glubdubdrib. In Swift's GULLIVER'S TRAVELS, the land of sorcerers and magicians, where Gulliver is shown many of the great men of antiquity.

Gluck, Christoph Willibald (1714-1787). German composer who revolutionized opera through the dramatic intensity of his music. His major works are Orfeo ed Euridice (1762; see ORPHEUS); Iphigénie en Aulide (1774); Armide (1777); and Iphigénie en Tauride (1779). See also GLUCKISTS and PICCINI, NICCOLO.

Gluckists. A foolish rivalry excited in Paris (1774-1780) between the admirers of GLUCK and those of PICCINI—the former a German composer, and the latter an Italian. Marie Antoinette was a Gluckist, and consequently Young France favored the rival claimant. In the streets, coffee-houses, private houses, and even schools, the merits of Gluck and Piccini were canvassed, and all Paris was ranged on one side or the other. This was, in fact, a contention between the relative merits of the German and Italian schools of music.

Glumdalclitch. In Swift's GULLIVER'S

TRAVELS, a girl, nine years old, and only forty feet high, who has charge of Gulliver in Brobdignag.

Glyn, Elinor (Sutherland) (1865?-1943). Canadian-born English novelist, known for her best-selling novels dealing sentimentally, and what was considered daringly, with adultery themes. Among the best-known were: Three Weeks (1907); Six Days (1924); It (1927); Romantic Adventure: The Autobiography of Elinor Glyn (1936); The Third Eye (1940). Several of her books were used successfully as motion picture scenarios.

gnome. According to the Rosicrucian system, a misshapen elemental spirit, dwelling in the bowels of the earth, and guarding the mines and quarries. The word seems to have been first used (perhaps invented) by Paracelsus, and to be derived from Gr. ge-nomos, earth-dweller. See also SALAMANDER.

The four elements are inhabited by spirits called sylphs, gnomes, nymphs, and salamanders. The gnomes or demons of the earth, delight in mischief. —Pope, Pref. Letter to the Rape of the Lock.

Gnomic poets. Greek poets, as Theognis of Megara and Solon, the lawgiver, whose writings are gnomic or aphoristic, containing maxims.

Gnostics (Gr. gnosticos). The knowers, as opposed to believers, various sects in the first six centuries of the Christian era, which tried to accommodate Christianity to the speculations of PYTHAGORAS, PLATO, and other Greek and Oriental philosophers. They taught that knowledge, rather than mere faith, is the true key of salvation. In the Gnostic creed Christ is esteemed merely as an eon or divine attribute personified, like Mind, Truth, Logos, Church, etc., the whole of which eons made up this divine pleroma or fullness. St. Paul, in several of his epistles, speaks of this "fullness (pleroma) of God."

goat. From very early times the goat has been connected with the idea of sin (see SCAPEGOAT) and associated with devil-lore. It is an old superstition in England and Scotland that a goat is never seen during the whole of a twenty-four hours, because once every day it pays a visit to the devil to have its beard combed. Formerly the devil himself was frequently depicted as a goat; and the animal is also a type of lust and lechery.

to be the goat. To get the worst of an affair; to be given the blame for others' misdeeds. The allusion is to the Jewish SCAPEGOAT.

to get one's goat. An Americanism for annoying one, making him wild, as, "It gets my goat to see a man knocking his wife about."

to separate the sheep from the goats. To divide the worthy from the unworthy, part the good from the evil. A Biblical phrase, the allusion being to Matt. xxv. 32, 33:

And before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats.
And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left.

Gobbo, Old. In Shakespeare's MERCHANT OF VENICE, the father of Launcelot. He is stone blind.

Launcelot Gobbo. Son of Old Gobbo. He leaves the service of Shylock the Jew for that of Bassanio, a Christian. Launcelot Gobbo is one of the famous clowns of Shakespeare, and more amusing than most of them.

Gobineau, Comte Joseph Arthur de (1816-1882). French diplomat, Orientalist, and writer. His most important work, the sociological treatise Essai sur l'inégalité des races humaines (1854, 1884), advanced an early form of the theory of Nordic racial superiority. He also wrote on the Italian renaissance and Oriental religions and philosophies.

goblin. A familiar demon, dwelling, according to popular belief, in private houses and chinks of trees; in many parts miners attribute those strange noises heard in mines to them. The word is the Fr. gobelin, probably a diminutive of the surname Gobel, but perhaps connected with Gr. kobalos, an impudent rogue, a mischievous sprite, or with the Ger. Kobold. As a specimen of forced etymology, it may be mentioned that Johnson, in his Dictionary, records that this word some derive from the Gibellines, a faction in Italy; so that elfe and goblin is Guelph and Gibelline because the children of either party were terrified by their nurses with the name of the other (!)

Gobseck, Jean Esther Van. A famous old miser, titular hero of Balzac's GOBSECK (1830), and appearing in other of the novels of the COMÉDIE HUMAINE. He was a cabin boy and pirate before he devotes himself to the pursuit of wealth, and even as a miser he loves to lose himself in a game of dominoes.

Esther Van Gobseck. A courtesan prominent in Balzac's Scenes from a Courtesan's Life (Les Splendeurs et misères des courtisanes) and other novels; the great-grandniece of the old miser Gobseck. She and young Lucien de Rubempré fall in love and both are used as tools by the criminal, Jacques COLLIN, who wishes to secure a hold over the financier Nucingen, an admirer of Esther. When this scheme comes to a violent end, involving Rubempré's suicide in prison, Esther swallows poison and dies unconscious of the fact that she has inherited old Gobseck's millions.

Goddard, Henry Herbert (1866-). American psychologist. Ohio State University (from 1922). The Kallikak Family (1912), a study not unlike that of the "Jukes family" by R. L. Dugdale (1877). Feeble-Mindedness (1914), The Criminal Imbecile (1915).

Godden, Rumer, see Laurence FOSTER.

Godey, Louis Antoine (1804-1878). Founder, with Charles Alexander, of the first American periodical for women (1830). Originally named Lady's Book, it came to be known later on as Godey's Lady's Book.

Godfrey de Bouillon. The principal character of Tasso's epic poem JERUSALEM DELIVERED, which was published in 1575, and translated into English with the title Godfrey of Bullogne or Boulogne by Carew (1594) and FAIRFAX (1600). Godfrey, Duke of Lorraine, was the chosen chief of the allied Crusaders and was proclaimed king of Jerusalem at one time when the city was in their hands. He appears also in Scott's COUNT ROBERT OF PARIS.

Godiva, Lady. Patroness of Coventry. In 1040, Leofric, Earl of Mercia and Lord of Coventry, imposed certain exactions on his tenants, which his lady besought him to remove. He said he would do so if she would ride naked through the town at midday. Lady Godiva took him at his word, and the Earl faithfully kept his promise. According to legend, everyone kept indoors at the time, but a certain tailor peeped through his window to see the lady pass and was struck blind in consequence. He has ever since been called "Peeping Tom of Coventry." The incident of Lady Godiva's ride is still annually commemorated at Coventry by a procession in which Lady Godiva plays a leading part. The story is told in Tennyson's Godiva, a Tale of Coventry (1842). The American humorist, "Dr. Seuss," has written The Seven Lady Godivas (1939).

Godkin, Edwin Laurence (1831-1902). Editor and author. Founder and editor of the magazine Nation (1863) which merged into the New York Evening Post (1881) and became its weekly edition. Editor in chief of the Evening Post (1883-1900).

Gododin, The. A poem by Aneurin, the sixth-century Welsh bard, on the battle of Cattraeth (603), in which the tribe of the Gododin (Latin Otadini) was defeated by the Saxons.

Godolphin, Sidney (1645-1712). First Earl of Godolphin (from 1706). Lord high treasurer of England, and supporter of the Marlborough (1702-1710). Dismissed from office by Queen Anne at the fall of the Marlboroughs (1710), but allowed a pension for life.

gods. Legends of the principal gods of various mythologies will be found under their several names. For convenience names of the chief deities are given below.

Classical mythology. Greek and Roman gods were divided into Du Majores and Du Minores, the greater and the lesser. The Dii Majores were twelve in number:

Latin	Greek
Jupiter (King)	Zeus
Apollo (the sun)	Phoebus
Mars (war)	Ares
Mercury (messenger)	Hermes
Neptune (ocean)	Poseidon
Vulcan (smith)	Hephaestus
Juno (Queen)	Hera
Ceres (tillage)	Demeter
Diana (moon, hunting)	Artemis
Minerva (wisdom)	Athena
Venus (love and beauty)	Aphrodite
Vesta (home-life)	Hestia

Their blood was ichor, their food was ambrosia, their drink nectar.

Four other deities often referred to are:

Bacchus (wine)	Dionysus
Cupid (the lad Love)	Eros
Pluto (of the Inferno)	Pluton
Saturn (time)	Kronus

Of these, Proserpine (Latin) or Persephone (Greek) was the wife of Pluto, Cybele was the wife of Saturn and Rhea of Kronus.

In Hesiod's time, the number of gods was 30,000, and that none might be omitted, the Greeks observed a Feast of the Unknown Gods.

Scandinavian mythology. For names of the principal deities, see AESIR, VANIR.

Egyptian mythology. The chief deities are Amon (or Ammon), Osiris and his wife Isis, Anubis, Horus or Harpocrates, and Typhon.

Hindu mythology. The Hindu triad or Trimurti comprises BRAHMA the Creator, VISHNU the Preserver, and SIVA the Destroyer. Other important deities are INDRA, AGNI, YAMA, SURYA, KAMA, GANESH, KUBERA, HANUMAN and DURGA (Kali). See also AVATAR; KRISHNA.

God's acre, see under ACRE.

Gods Are Athirst, The (Les Dieux ont soif.) A historical novel by Anatole FRANCE (1912) dealing with the French Revolution. The hero is a young artist, Evariste Gamelin, who becomes a member of the Revolutionary Tribunal, but is himself a victim of the guillotine.

God Save the King. See NATIONAL ANTHEMS.

Godwin, William (1756-1836). English prose-writer, a leading radical of the 18th century, advocating a complete overthrow of the existing systems of government, religion, the family, and accumulated private property as they existed in his day. He was influenced by the ideas of J. J. ROUSSEAU and the French ENCYCLOPEDISTS, and in turn had a great influence on the English Romantics, especially WORDSWORTH, COLERIDGE, SHELLEY, and BYRON; Shelley's Preface to his Revolt of Islam is an excellent exposition of Godwin's ideas. Among Godwin's works are An Enquiry Concerning Political Justice (1793); CALEB WILLIAMS (1794), a novel; St. Leon (1799), another novel; and a History of the Commonwealth (1824-1828).

Godwin's wife was Mary Wollstonecraft, a pioneer in the movement of FEMINISM, and their daughter Mary was the second wife of SHELLEY, her unconventional arrangement with the poet enraging the professedly radical father.

Goethals, George Washington (1858-1928). American army officer (Major General) and head of consulting engineering firm (1923-1928). Completed the Panama Canal (1914).

Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von (1749-1832). German poet, dramatist, and novelist, one of the most famous of German authors and a leading figure in the movement of ROMANTICISM. He held a number of government positions in Weimar, studied painting during most of his career, and carried on scientific research, the most outstanding result of which was the formulation of a theory of light, expounded in a treatise entitled Farbenlehre (1810). Among Goethe's works are Goetz von Berlichingen (1771), a drama; The Sorrows of Werther (1774), an autobiographical novel in the form of letters (see WERTHER); IPHIGENIA (1787), a drama; EGMONT (1788); HERMANN AND DOROTHEA (1797), a narrative poem; WILHELM MEISTER, a novel; and FAUST (1790-1833). Goethe is a leading figure in the novel THE BELOVED RETURNS, by Thomas Mann, and also in Mann's studies of Sigmund FREUD, GOETHE, and Richard WAGNER. See also VULPIUS, CHRISTIANE. In a sense Goethe was the last uomo universale of Western civilization. His science pervades his poetry and vice versa. The unconsciously constant query and leitmotiv of his work are most concisely stated in the little botanical essay On the Metamorphosis of Plants. Without having recourse to the crude idea of material descent, Goethe endeavored to visualize varying forms in each other and thus to reduce their multiplicity to a limited number of type phenomena which can be seen and experienced but must be accepted without further philosophical analysis. The modern school of anthroposophism propagates a Goethean philosophy. Goethe's contribution is a universal humanism of German origin rather than a German humanism of universal impact.

Gog and Magog. In British legend, the sole survivors of a monstrous brood, the offspring of the thirty-three infamous daughters of the Emperor Diocletian, who murdered their husbands, and, being set adrift in a ship, reached Albion, where they fell in with a number of demons. Their descendants, a race of giants, were extirpated by Brutus and his companions, with the exception of Gog and Magog, who were brought in chains to London and were made to do duty as porters at the royal palace, on the site of the London Guildhall, where their effigies have been at least since the reign of Henry V. The old giants were destroyed in the Great Fire, and the present ones, fourteen feet high, were carved in 1708 by Richard Saunders.

In the Bible, Magog is spoken of as a son of Japhet (Gen. x. 2), in the Revelation Gog and Magog symbolize all future enemies of the kingdom of God; and in Ezekiel, Gog is a prince of Magog, a terrible ruler of a country in the north, probably Scythia or Armenia. By rabbinical writers of the 7th century A. D. Gog was identified with Antichrist.

Gogarty, Oliver St. John (1878-). Irish physician and author, said to be the original of Malachi ("Buck") MULLIGAN in ULYSSES by James JOYCE, an early friend of Gogarty. He was the author of several exuberant books of memoirs, including As I Was Going Down Sackville Street (1937) and I Follow St. Patrick (1939).

Gogh, Vincent van (1853-1890). Dutch painter, etcher, lithographer of postimpressionist tendencies. Committed suicide in a state of mental aberration. Some of his notable canvases are The Potato Eaters; The Restaurant on Montmartre; L'Arlésienne; Berceuse; Mairie au 14 juillet; etc.

Gogol, Nikolai Vasilievich (1809-1852). Russian novelist and playwright; best-known as the author of TARAS BULBA (1842), a historical novel telling of the Cossack struggles with Tartars and Poles in the 16th century, and DEAD SOULS (1837), a social satire. His plays include The Inspector General (1836), a biting satire on the corruption and the pettiness of Russian government officials. Gogol is considered the "father of realism" in Russian literature.

Golconda. An ancient kingdom and city in India (west of Hyderabad), famous and powerful up to the early 17th century. The name is emblematic of great wealth, particularly of diamonds. There never were diamond mines in Golconda, however, they were merely cut and polished there.

gold of Nibelungen. Unlucky wealth. See NIBELUNGENLIED.

gold of Tolosa. Ill gains, which never prosper. The reference is to Caepio, the Roman consul, who, on his march to Gallia Narbonensis, stole from Tolosa (Toulouse) the gold and silver consecrated by the Cimbrian Druids to their gods. He was utterly defeated by the Cimbrians, and some 112,000 Romans were left dead on the field of battle (106 B. C.).

Gold, Michael. Pseudonym of Irving Granich (1894-). American novelist, playwright, journalist; for many years contributor to the official Communist newspaper, the Daily Worker. His potentialities as a writer were long nearly submerged in political journalism. John Brown (1923); Jews Without Money (1930); Battle Hymn (1936; a play); etc.

Goldberg, Isaac (1887-1938). American biographer, philologist, and miscellaneous writer. A pioneer writer on Spanish-American literature. Author of The Wonder of Words (1939), and a biography of H. L. MENCKEN.

Gold Bug, The. A famous short story by Edgar Allan POE (1843). William Le Grand discovers by pure accident that the parchment which he had snatched up from the ground to catch a strange beetle, is covered with invisible writing that the heat of the fire brings to light. He unravels its mysterious directions and, with the aid of his awed Negro servant Jupiter, drops the beetle, or "gold bug," through one eye of the skull that he finds in a tree, and unearths at last a considerable treasure.

Goldemar, King. In German folklore, name of a KOBOLD who can be touched but not seen.

golden age. An age in the history of peoples of real or (more often) imaginary happiness, when everything was as it should be, or when the nation was at its summit of power, glory, and reputation; the best age, as the golden age of innocence, the golden age of literature. See also AGE; the golden ages of the various nations are usually given as follows:

Ancient Nations

Assyria. From the reign of Esarhaddon, third son of Sennacherib, to the fall of Nineveh (about 700 to 600 B. C.).

Chaldaeo-Babylonian Empire. From the reign of Nabopolassar to that of Belshazzar (about 606-538 B. C.).

China. The reign of Tae-tsong (618-626), and the era of the Tang dynasty (626-684).

Egypt. The reigns of Sethos I and Rameses II (about 1350-1273 B. C.), the XIXth Dynasty.

Media. The reign of Cyaxares (about 634-594 B. C.).

Persia. From the reign of Khosru, or Chosroes, I, to that of Khosru II (about 531-628 A. D.).

England. The reign of Elizabeth (1558-1603).

France. Part of the reigns of Louis XIV and XV (1640-1740).

Germany. The reign of Charles V (1519-1558).

Portugal. From John I to the close of Sebastian's reign (1383-1578).

Prussia. The reign of Frederick the Great (1740-1786).

Russia. The reign of Peter the Great (1672-1725).

Spain. The reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, when the crowns of Castile and Aragon were united (1474-1516).

Sweden. From Gustavus Vasa to the close of the reign of Gustavus Adolphus (1523-1632).

golden apples. See APPLE OF DISCORD; ATALANTA'S RACE; HESPERIDES.

Golden Bull. An edict by the Emperor Charles IV, issued at the Diet of Nuremberg in 1356, for the purpose of fixing how the German emperors were to be elected. It was sealed with a golden bull.

golden calf. Money. The reference is to the golden calf made by Aaron when Moses was absent on Mount Sinai (Exod. xxxii) and worshiped by the people.

Golden Fleece. The old Greek story is that Ino persuaded her husband, Athamas, that his son Phryxus was the cause of a famine which desolated the land. Phryxus was thereupon ordered to be sacrificed, but, being apprised of this, he made his escape over sea on the winged ram, Chrysomallus, which had a golden fleece. When he arrived at Colchis, he sacrificed the ram to Zeus, and gave the fleece to King Aeetes, who hung it on a sacred oak. It later formed the quest of Jason's celebrated Argonautic expedition, and was stolen by him. See ARGO; JASON.

Golden Fleece, the Order of the (Fr. l'Ordre de la toison d'or). An order of knighthood common to Spain and Austria, instituted in 1429 for the protection of the Church by Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, on his marriage with the Infanta Isabella of Portugal. Its badge is a golden sheepskin with head and feet attached, and its motto Pretium laborum non vile.

Australia has been called the Land of the Golden Fleece, because of the quantity of wool produced there.

Golden Gate. The name given by Sir Francis Drake to the strait connecting San Francisco Bay with the Pacific. San Francisco is hence called the City of the Golden Gate.

Golden Horn. The inlet of the Bosphorus on which Constantinople stands; so called from its shape and beauty.

Golden Legend. See below.

golden mean. "Nothing to excess."

to keep the golden mean. To practice moderation in all things. The wise saw of Cleobulus, king of Rhodes (about 630-559 B. C.).

Distant alike from each, to neither lean,
But ever keep the happy Golden Mean.
Rowe, The Golden Verses.

golden number. The number of the year in the Metonic Cycle. As this consists of nineteen years it may be any number from 1 to 19, and in the ancient Roman and Alexandria calendars this number was marked in gold, hence the name. The rule for finding the golden number is:

Add one to the number of years and divide by nineteen; the quotient gives the number of cycles since 1 B. C. and the remainder the golden number, 19 being the golden number when there is no remainder.

It is used in determining the Epact and the date of Easter.

Golden Rule. "Do as you would be done by."

Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets.—Matt. vii. 12.

Golden State. California. See STATES.

golden wedding. The fiftieth anniversary of one's wedding, husband and wife being both alive.

Golden, John (1874-). American playwright and producer of plays and musical comedies. Also composer of songs.

Golden Ass, The. A common alternative title of the Metamorphoses, a satirical romance by APULEIUS, written in the 2nd century A. D., and called golden because of its excellency. It tells the adventures of Lucian, a young man who, being accidentally metamorphosed into an ass while sojourning in Thessaly, falls into the hands of robbers, eunuchs, magistrates, and so on, by whom he is ill-treated, but ultimately he recovers his human form. Boccaccio borrowed largely from it, as also did LE SAGE, for GIL BLAS, and others. It also contains the story of Cupid and Psyche, the latest-born of the myths.

Golden Bough, The. A famous work on comparative folk-lore, mythology, and religion by Sir James G. FRAZER in 12 volumes, the first being published in 1890 and the last in 1915. The title refers to the branch broken from a sacred tree by AENEAS before descending to the underworld. (Cf. Aeneid, vi, 136.) This work was an outstanding influence in the conception of FINNEGANS WAKE by James Joyce.

Golden Bowl, The. A novel by Henry JAMES (1904). The heroine, Maggie Verver, an American millionaire's daughter, marries a poverty-stricken Italian prince, and then, to keep her adored father from being lonely, brings about his marriage to her old school friend Charlotte. She is unaware of the fact that Charlotte and the prince had previously been in love. The two couples live in close intimacy until eventually Adam Verver discovers the truth and solves the problem by giving up his companionship with Maggie and taking his wife far away.

Golden Horde. A body of Mongol Tartars that overran eastern Europe in the 13th centure. So called from the magnificent tent of Batu Kahn, grandson of GENGHIS KHAN. The kingdom of the Golden Horde at its height reached from the Dniester to central Asia. It was overthrown by Ivan III of Russia (1480), and broke up into a number of smaller khanats with that of Astrakhan representing the Golden Horde.

Golden Legend, The (Lat. Legenda Aurea). A collection of so-called lives of the saints made by Jacobus de Voragine in the 13th century. It is valuable for the picture it gives of medieval manners, customs, and thought. Jortin says that the "lives" were written by young students of religious houses to exercise their talents by accommodating the narratives of heathen writers to Christian saints.

Longfellow has a dramatic poem entitled The Golden Legend (1851). It is based on a story by Hartmann von der Aue, a German minnesinger of the 12th century. See HEINRICH VON AUE.

Golden Mount. The Janiculum in Rome; formerly so called for its yellow sand. The name survives in that of the church on its summit, S. Pietro in Montorio.

Golden Multitudes. Full-length history of best sellers from Colonial times to the present, by Frank Luther Mott (1947).

Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics, The. A celebrated anthology by Francis Turner PALGRAVE. The first edition was published in 1861, a second series in 1897.

Golden Yardarm. The three stars in the belt of Orion; called also Ell and Yard; Yard and Ell; Jacob's Staff; etc.

Goldilocks. The heroine of the well-known nursery tale concerning the Three Bears of varying size, who had three bowls of porridge, three chairs and three beds. Goldilocks, who tried them all on a day when the Bears were not at home, found them to be of varying degrees of satisfaction. The middle-sized bowl and chair and bed were, however, "just right" and when the Bears came home, they found their visitor fast asleep on the middle-sized bed, which belonged to the Mother Bear.

Goldman, Emma (1869-1940). Famous Russian-born American anarchist. Delegate to two anarchist congresses. Wrote Anarchism and Other Essays (1910) and the autobiography Living my Life (1931).

Goldoni, Carlo (1707-1793). Italian dramatist. Started out with unsuccessful tragedies. Wrote more than 120 comedies through which he became the creator of the modern Italian character comedy in the style of MOLIÈRE, superseding the conventional COMMEDIA DELL'ARTE.

Goldsmith, Oliver (1728-1774). Irish-born English poet and man of letters, of light-hearted and irresponsible behavior and character. His work is marked by humor, whimsy, neo-Classical forms, and occasional sentimentality. His works include: THE CITIZEN OF THE WORLD (1762), a series of satirical essays; The Traveler (1764), a philosophical poem, praised by Samuel JOHNSON; THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD (1766), a novel; The Good-Natured Man (1768), a comedy; THE DESERTED VILLAGE (1770); SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER (1773); and Retaliation (1774), a series of caricatures of contemporaries. Goldsmith was always heavily in debt and for a long time did hackwork to support himself.

Goldy. The pet name given by Dr. Johnson to Oliver GOLDSMITH. Garrick said of him, "He wrote like an angel and talked like poor Poll."

Golgotha (the place of a skull). The place of Jesus' crucifixion. A small elevated spot northwest of Jerusalem, where criminals used to be executed. In modern poetry it stands for a battle-field or place of great slaughter.

Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
Or memorize another Golgotha.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, act. i. sc. 2.

Golias, Bishop. Mythical patron of the Latin student poets of the Middle Ages, celebrated in their gay and often licentious verse for his intemperance and immorality. From his name, these poets came to be called Goliards, and their poetry Goliardic. See also ARCHPOET; CONFESSION OF GOLIAS, THE.

Goliath. The Philistine giant, slain by the stripling David with a small stone hurled from a sling. (1 Sam. xvii, 23-54.)

golliwog. A grotesque person reminding one of the "golliwog dolls" created by the portrait painter and illustrator Florence Upton (-1922) in The Golliwog Series (1895). The word is a free invention, possibly suggested by polliwog.

Gollomb, Joseph (1881-). Russian-American novelist and writer on criminology, politics, etc. While teaching school (1902-1912) he wrote a number of books for boys.

Gómez, Máximo (1826-1905). Cuban patriot and general. Served in the Spanish Army; joined the Cuban insurrection (1868); rose from private to general and became a prominent leader in the war of 1895-1898. Aided in reconstruction of Cuba. Wrote several books.

Gómez de la Serna, Ramón (1891-). Spanish writer, known as Ramón. Throughout his career a literary rebel. In 1910, he launched a "futurist" manifesto. He dealt with the breakup of society, especially in his "new genre" of greguerías, metaphoric maxims and aphorisms in prose and verse which, as Christopher Morley says, are worthy to stand beside Chekhov's Notebook. His fantasy, La Viuda Bianco y Negro (1917), has been highly praised. In sympathy with Republican Spain, he went to live in Buenos Aires, a voluntary exile.

Gompers, Samuel (1850-1924). British-born American labor leader. President, A.F. of L. (1886-1924, except 1895). Member, Council of National Defense (1917); member, Commission on International Labor Legislation at Peace Conference after World War I (1919).

Goncourt, Edmond (1822-1896) and Jules de (1830-1870). French novelists, brothers, early leaders in the movement of NATURALISM, who lived together and devoted their lives to their writing. See also BALZAC, DAUDET, FLAUBERT. Their work is marked by accuracy of detail and documentation, studies of pathological and "low-life" subjects, impersonality of treatment, a preference for separate scenes rather than a formal plot construction, and a hypersensitive, impressionistic style ("l'écriture artiste"). Germinie Lacerteux (1869), a novel on which both brothers collaborated, dealing with the life of a servant-girl, is regarded as the first example of naturalism of the sort associated later with ZOLA. Manette Salomon (1867) and Madame Gervaisais (1869) are also novels written in collaboration. Works by Edmond alone include La Fille Elisa (1877) which deals with prostitution. Their Journal presents vivid contemporary portraits.

The Goncourt brothers often used their own experiences or those of their friends in their novels, studied hospitals first-hand in search of "material," and applied the methods of painting, which they studied early in their careers (see GAUTIER), to their fiction. They wrote several studies of 18th-century society, costumes, art, furniture, and the like, and are believed to have introduced Japanese art into France. Their work was known to only a few people. See DINERS MAGNY; also PRIX GONCOURT.

Goneril. In Shakespeare's tragedy, KING LEAR, eldest daughter of King Lear, and wife of the Duke of Albany. Her name is proverbial for filial ingratitude. She treated her aged father with such scant courtesy that he could not live under her roof, and she induced her sister Regan to follow her example.

Gone With the Wind. A best-selling novel by Margaret Mitchell (Am., 1936), awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1937 and later dramatized as a record-breaking motion-picture spectacle. It deals with the adventures of Scarlett O'Hara, a beautiful, selfish, headstrong, fiery-tempered Southern belle, during the Civil War, especially her establishment of a successful business in war-ruined Atlanta and her tempestuous marriage to Rhett Butler, whose character matches her own. This was one of the first of the oversized, "escapist" historical novels popular in the U.S. during the 1930's and the 1940's.

Gongorism. Extremely stilted, artificial preciosity in the poetry of Spain in the 16th century; named from the Spanish poet Luis de Góngora y Argote (1561-1627). It was paralleled in Italy by MARINISM, in France by the précieux movement, and in England by Euphuism (see EUPHUES), and in its later forms was called Cultism.

Gonne, Maud (1866-). A beautiful Irish revolutionist, loved by W. B. YEATS and the subject of a number of his poems. See Life and the Dream, by Mary COLUM.

Gonzalo. In Shakespeare's TEMPEST, an honest old counsellor of Alonso, King of Naples.

Goodbye, Mr. Chips. A best-selling novel-ette by James HILTON, published in 1934 and later dramatized (1938) as a successful motion picture. It deals sentimentally with the life of a popular teacher in an English public school who has been known to several generations of boys as "Mr. Chips."

Good Earth, The. A best-selling novel by Pearl BUCK, published in 1931, awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1932, and later dramatized as a play and a motion picture. It describes the rise of Wang Lung, a Chinese peasant, from poverty to the position of a rich landowner, helped by his patient wife O-lan. Their vigor, fortitude, persistence, and enduring love of the soil are emphasized throughout.

Goodenough, Dr. A physician who attends Pen in Thackeray's PENDENNIS and is the friend of Caroline Brandon in The Adventures of PHILIP. He is also mentioned in THE NEWCOMES.

Good Friday. The Friday preceding Easter Day, held as the anniversary of the Crucifixion. "Good" here means holy; Christmas, as well as Shrove Tuesday, used to be called "the good tide." John MASEFIELD has a poem so called.

born on Good Friday. According to old superstition, those born on Christmas Day or Good Friday have the power of seeing and commanding spirits.

Goodhue, Bertram Grosvenor (1869-1924). American architect. Designed buildings at U.S. Military Academy, West Point; St. Thomas' and St. Bartholomew's Churches, New York City; Academy of Sciences, Washington, D.C.; etc.

Goodman, James or, in the original French, Jacques Bonhomme. A peasant nickname implying slight contempt. From it is derived the term jacquerie, originally the French peasant revolt of 1358 and later any similar uprising.

Good-natured Man, The. A comedy by Oliver GOLDSMITH (1768). See also CROAKER.

Good Parliament. See under PARLIAMENTS.

Good Queen Anne. Anne of Bohemia (1366-1394), wife of Richard II of England.

Good Queen Bess. Queen ELIZABETH of England.

Goodrich, Arthur Frederick (1878-1941). American playwright. Awarded Theatre Club Gold Medal for the best play of the year for Caponsacchi (1926), made from Browning's masterpiece, The Ring and The Book. Also author of the libretto for the grand opera Tragedy in Arezzo (1932), later renamed Caponsacchi.

Goodrich, Hannibal and Minnie. The chief characters in William McFee's novel, CASUALS OF THE SEA.

I carry all my goods with me (Omnia mea mecum porto). Said by Bias, one of the SEVEN SAGES, when Priene was besieged and the inhabitants were preparing for flight.

that fellow's the goods. He's all right, just the man for the job.

to deliver the goods. To fulfill promises or come up to expectations.

Good Samaritan, see SAMARITAN.

Goodwin, Nat. Full name Nathaniel Carll Goodwin (1857-1919). Popular American actor. Married Maxine Elliott, and several other women.

Goody Blake and Harry Gill. A poem by WORDSWORTH (1798). Harry Gill is a farmer, who forbids old Goody Blake to carry home a few sticks, which she has picked up from his land, to light a wee fire to warm herself by. Old Goody Blake curses him for his meanness, saying he would never from that moment cease from shivering with cold, and from that hour, a-bed or up, summer or winter, at home or abroad, his teeth go "chatter, chatter, chatter still."

Goodyear, Charles (1800-1860). American inventor. Patented vulcanization process, the basic patent of the rubber manufacturing industry. One of his sons, William Henry Goodyear (1846-1923), was an art-museum curator and historian.

Goody Two-shoes. This nursery tale first appeared in 1765. It was written for Newbery, as it is said, by Oliver GOLDSMITH. Goody Two-shoes is a very poor child, whose delight at having a pair of shoes is so unbounded that she cannot forbear telling everyone she meets that she has "two shoes"; whence her name. She acquires knowledge and becomes wealthy. The title-page states that the tale is for the benefit of those—

Who from a state of rags and care,
And having shoes but half a pair,
Their fortune and their fame should fix,
And gallop in a coach and six.

Googe, Barnabe (1540-1594). English poet and translator, best known for his volume of Eclogues, Epitaphs, and Sonnets (1563), regarded as containing some of the earliest examples of pastoral poetry in English. His work is considered to be typical of the type of English poetry between the period of WYATT and SURREY and that of SPENSER. It is particularly marked by alliteration and the use of the "FOURTEENER."

Google, Barney, see BARNEY GOOGLE.

Gookin, Daniel (1612-1687). American Puritan author, holder of public offices in Massachusetts and known for his humanitarian interest in the Indians. He wrote Historical Collection of the Indians in New England (1792) and An Historical Account of the Doings and Sufferings of the Christian Indians (1836), both posthumously published.

goon. Probably a PORTMANTEAU word from gorilla and baboon, introduced by E. C. Segar (1894-1938) for certain subhuman creatures in one of his comic strips. Hence, in slang, a slugger, bomber, incendiary, etc., hired by racketeers for purposes of terrorization.

Goops. A strange set of beings invented by Gelett BURGESS for the edification and delight of juvenile readers. Their unmannerly pranks form the subject of Goops and How to be Them (1900), More Goops and How Not to be Them (1903), Goop Tales (1904), The Goop Directory (1913), The Goop Encyclopedia (1916).

the Goose Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

goose fair. A fair formerly held in many English towns about the time of MICHAELMAS, when geese were plentiful. That at Nottingham, still held, was the most important.

the goose step. A step formerly de rigueur in the Prussian army for ceremonial purposes, "marching past," and so on. At each pace the thigh had to be brought to a right-angle with the erect body. It was supposed to look extremely dignified when carried out by a well drilled body of men, but it was unmercifully ridiculed by the Allies during World War I.

Also, balancing on one foot and moving the other back and forwards; preliminary exercise for recruits.

he killed the goose to get the eggs. He grasped at what was more than his due, and lost an excellent customer. The Greek fable says a countryman had a goose that laid golden eggs; thinking to make himself rich, he killed the goose to get the whole stock of eggs at once, but lost everything.

he steals a goose and gives the gublets in alms. He amasses wealth by overreaching, and salves his conscience by giving small sums in charity.

I'll cook your goose for you. I'll pay you out. It is said that Eric, king of Sweden, coming to a certain town with very few soldiers, the enemy, in mockery, hung out a goose for him to shoot at. Finding, however, that the king meant business, and that it would be no laughing matter for them, they sent heralds to ask him what he wanted. "To cook your goose for you," he facetiously replied.

Michaelmas goose. See MICHAELMAS.

the old woman is plucking her goose. A children's way of saying, it is snowing.

the older the goose, the harder to pluck. Old men are unwilling to part with their money.

the Royal Game of Goose. The game referred to by GOLDSMITH (Deserted Village, 232) as being present in the ale-house—

The pictures placed for ornament and use,
The twelve good rules, the royal game of goose—was a game of compartments through which the player progressed according to the cast of the dice. At certain divisions a goose was depicted, and if the player fell into one of these he doubled the number of his last throw and moved forward accordingly.

what's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

geese save the capitol. The tradition is that when the Gauls invaded Rome a detachment in single file clambered up the hill of the capitol so silently that the foremost man reached the top without being challenged; but when he was striding over the rampart, some sacred geese, disturbed by the noise, began to cackle, and awoke the garrison. Marcus Manlius rushed to the wall and hurled the fellow over the precipice. To commemorate this event (390 B.C.) the Romans carried a golden goose in procession to the capitol every year.

Those consecrated geese in orders,
That to the capitol were warders,
And being then upon patrol,
With noise alone beat off the Gaul.

Butler, Hudibras, ii 3.

Goose, Mother. A mythical character famous as giving the name to Mother Goose's Nursery Rhymes, which seems to have been first used in Songs for the Nursery, Or Mother Goose's Melodies for Children, published by T. Fleet in Boston, Mass., in 1719. The story goes that Fleet married Elizabeth Goose, whose mother used to sing the rhymes to her grandson, but this explanation of the name is discounted by the fact that Perrault's Contes de ma mère l'oye (Tales of my Mother Goose) had appeared in 1697.

the big gooseberry season. In England, the dull time in journalism when Parliament is not sitting, the Law Courts are up, and "nobody" is in town, when the old-fashioned editor will publish accounts of giant gooseberries, sea-serpents, vegetable marrows, sweet peas, just to fill up; the "silly season."

to play gooseberry. To act as chaperon: to go about with two lovers for appearance' sake. The person "who plays propriety" is expected to hear, see, and say nothing. A chaperon was perhaps so called because one performing this duty would turn to anything convenient, such as gooseberry picking, to give the young people a chance.

Gopher Prairie. The small town in Minnesota which is the scene of Sinclair Lewis' novel, MAIN STREET. It quickly became a synonym for a small town of petty, self-centered interests, and prejudices.

Gopher State. Minnesota. See under STATES.

gorblimey. From God blind me. A British vulgarity expressing surprise.

Gorboduc. The first historical play and first tragedy in the English language (1562), by Thomas SACKVILLE and Thomas NORTON. Gorboduc is a mythical British king, who has two sons, FERREX and PORREX. Ferrex is driven by his brother out of the kingdom, and on attempting to return with a large army, is defeated by him and slain. Soon afterwards, Porrex himself is murdered in his bed by his own mother, who loved Ferrex the better.

Gordian knot. A great difficulty. Gordius, a peasant, being chosen king of Phrygia, dedicated his wagon to Jupiter, and fastened the yoke to a beam with a rope of bark so ingeniously that no one could untie it. Alexander was told that "whoever undid the knot would reign over the whole East." "Well then," said the conqueror, "it is thus I perform the task," and, so saying, he cut the knot in twain with his sword. Hence, to cut the Gordian knot is to get out of a difficult or awkward position by one decisive step, to solve a problem by a single brilliant stroke.

Gordon, Caroline (1895–). American novelist. Wife of the poet Allen TATE. Once a reporter on the Chattanooga News. Ford Madox Ford hailed her work as "a classical phenomenon." Her first and best-known novel is Penhally (1931). •

Gordon, Charles George (1833–1885). Known as Chinese Gordon or Gordon Pasha. English soldier. Commander of a Chinese force, called the Ever Victorious Army, against the Taiping rebels (1863). In the service of the Khedive of Egypt (1874-1876). As governor of the Sudan and the Equatorial Provinces (1877-1879), he suppressed the slave trade. Sent by the British government (1884) to rescue Egyptian garrisons in their struggle against the Mahdi, he evacuated 2500 women, children, and wounded from Khartoum, held the place for ten months and was killed when it was forced to surrender.

Gordon, Charles William (1860-1937). Pseudonym Ralph Connor. Canadian Presbyterian clergyman and novelist; best-known for Black Rock (1898), The Sky Pilot (1899), and Glengarry School Days (1902).

Gordon or No-Popery Riots. Riots in 1780, headed by Lord George Gordon, to compel the House of Commons to repeal the bill passed in 1778 for the relief of Roman Catholics. Gordon was of unsound mind, and he died in 1793, a proselyte to Judaism. Dickens has given a very vivid description of the Gordon riots in BARNABY RUDGE.

Gorgas, William Crawford (1854-1920). American army surgeon; freed Havana of yellow fever. Chief sanitary officer, Panama Canal Commission (1904-1913). Brigadier general as surgeon general, U.S. Army (1914). See REED, WALTER.

Gorgibus. (1) In Molière's PRÉCIEUSES RIDICULES, an honest, simple-minded citizen of middle life, father of Madelon and uncle of Cathos. (2) Father of Célie in Molière's SGANARELLE.

Gorgon. Anything unusually hideous, particularly a hideous or terrifying woman. In classical mythology, there were three Gorgons, with serpents on their heads instead of hair. MEDUSA was the chief, and the only one that was mortal, but so hideous was her face that whoever set eyes on it was instantly turned to stone. She was slain by Perseus, and her head placed on the shield of Minerva.

What was that snaky-headed Gorgon shield
That wise Minerva wore, unconquered virgin.
Wherewith she freezed her foes to congealed stone,
But rigid looks of chaste austerity,
And noble grace, that dashed brute violence
With sudden adoration and blank awe?

Milton, Comus, 458.

Goriot, Father. The titular hero of BALZAC's novel Father Goriot (Le Père Goriot; 1835), an old man whose consuming passion it is to deprive himself of everything, self-respect included, for the sake of his two ungrateful daughters, Mme de Nucingen and Mme de Restaud (Delphine and Anastasie). The two sisters are married to wealthy men of position, but both, though ashamed and intolerant of the bourgeois manners of the ex-vermicelli-manufacturer, expect him to extricate them from financial difficulties. Goriot allows himself to be shamefully abused, lives in a state of utter shabbiness and poverty in a cheap boarding house, and after he has sacrificed his last silver plate, dies of apoplexy. The two daughters send empty carriages to the funeral.

Gorki, Maxim. Pseudonym of Alexey Maximovich Peshkov (1868-1936). Russian short-story writer and dramatist, associated with LENIN in the Russian revolution of 1917 and widely honored in the U.S.S.R. He is best known for his early short stories dealing with underworld characters, vagabonds, and social outcasts. Among his works are Foma Gordeyev (1901); Orloff and His Wife (1901), tales; Twenty-six and One (1902); The Outcasts, And Other Stories (1905); A Night's Lodging (1905); Mother (1907); Creatures That Once Were Men (1906); The Spy (1908); THE LOWER DEPTHS (1912), his most famous play; Submerged (1915), a play; The Confession (1916); My Childhood (1915), In the World (1923), and My University Days (1923), autobiography; Stories of the Steppe (1918); The Judge (1924), a play; Days with Lenin (1932).

Gorlois. In Arthurian legend, Duke of Cornwall and husband of YGERNE. On the night that he is slain through the enchantments of Merlin, Uther Pendragon comes to Ygerne in the likeness of Gorlois and makes her the mother of King Arthur. Before the child is born Uther Pendragon marries her.

Gorman, Herbert Sherman (1893-). American writer. Notations for a Chimæra (poems; 1926); The Place Called Dagon (novel; 1927); The Incredible Marquis (biography; 1929); James Joyce: a Biography (1940), etc.

Gosling, Giles. In SCOTT's KENILWORTH, landlord of the Black Bear Inn, near Cumnor Place.

Cicely Gosling. Daughter of Giles.

Gosnold, Bartholomew (d. 1607). English navigator. Second in command of expedition carrying settlers to Jamestown, Va. (1606-1607).

Gosse, Sir Edmund William (1849-1928). English poet, critic, essayist, and biographer. Noted for introducing Scandinavian literature to English readers. Also keenly interested in French literature. His autobiographical Father and Son (1907) is a fine human document. A friend of many English authors of note, especially R. L. STEVENSON. His somewhat feline disposition, notable in his Letters, also made him some enemies.

Gossips, Prince of, see PRINCE.

Gösta Berling, The Story of. A novel of Swedish life by Selma LAGERLÖF (1894), for which she was awarded the Nobel Prize in 1909. It relates the adventures of the impulsive and temperamental young hero, whose magnetic personality inevitably draws people, particularly women, to him, and whose turbulent passions just as inevitably involve him and them in misfortune. Eventually he marries the Countess Elizabeth, whose husband, Hendrik Dohna, has divorced her, and through Elizabeth's influence and his own effort enters upon a life that more nearly approximates his own ideals.

Goth. One of an ancient tribe of Teutons which swept down upon and devastated large portions of southern Europe in the 3rd to 5th centuries, establishing kingdoms in Italy, southern France, and Spain. They were looked on by the civilized Romans as merely destroying barbarians; hence the name came to be applied to any rude, uncultured, destructive people.

The Goths were divided by the Dnieper into East Goths (Ostrogoths), and West Goths (Visigoths), and were the most cultured of the German peoples.—Baring-Gould, Story of Germany, p. 37.

the last of the Goths. See RODERICK.

Gotham, wise men of. Fools, wisecracks. The legend is that King John, on his way to Lynn Regis, intended to pass through Gotham, in Nottinghamshire, with his army, and sent heralds to prepare his way. The men of Gotham were resolved, if possible, to prevent this expense and depredation, so they resolved to play the fool. Some raked the moon out of the pond, some made a ring to hedge in a bird, some did other equally foolish things. The king then abandoned his intention, and the "wise men" of the village cunningly remarked, "We ween there are more fools pass through Gotham than remain in it." A collection of popular tales of stupidity was published in the reign of Henry VIII as Merie Tales of the Mad Men of Gotham, gathered together by A. B. of Phisike, Doctour, and since that date many other tales have been attached to the inhabitants of Gotham. The old nursery rhyme is well known—

Three wise men of Gotham
Went to sea in a bowl;
If the bowl had been stronger
My story had been longer.

The name Gotham was given to New York City by Washington Irving in his satirical Salmagundi Papers (1807) and has remained in current use.

Gothic. An adjective used often in reference to the Middle Ages, especially during the neo-Classical period of the 18th century, when it meant wild, uncivilized, unrestrained, and had a derogatory connotation.

Gothic architecture. A style of medieval architecture of northern and western Europe (about 1150 to 1500). It developed from the Romanesque. Examples of it are stone-vaulted churches with three to five aisles, the middle aisle being loftier than the others. Its decoration is allegorical and symbolic, often with grotesque carvings of birds, beasts, GARGOYLES, human figures. It used the pointed arch which allowed for larger windows. Such cathedrals as those at Chartres, Paris, Rheims, Cologne, York, Glasgow and Westminster Abbey are examples.

Gothic novel. A type of novel popular in England in the latter half of the 18th century, later spreading to the U.S. and Europe, especially Germany. It is characterized by horror, terror, supernatural effects, murder, violence, and taste for the medieval, usually set against a background of Gothic architecture, especially a gloomy and isolated castle. Horace Walpole's CASTLE OF OTRANTO (1764), Beckford's Vathek (1786), Lewis's THE MONK (1795), and Mrs. Radcliffe's THE MYSTERIES OF UDOLPHO (1795) are the outstanding English representatives of the Gothic novel. American authors of novels in the Gothic tradition were Charles Brockden Brown, Nathaniel Hawthorne, and Edgar Allan Poe. The movement of SURREALISM claimed the Gothic novel as one of its forerunners, and the 20th-century "mystery story" featured in lending-libraries and drug-stores was a descendant of this genre.

Gothland, The Queen of. A poem by Herbert Trench.

Gottfried von Strassburg (fl. 13th century). Medieval German poet, best known for his treatments in Middle High German of the Parzival and Tristan legends. See GRAIL; PARZIVAL; PARZIFAL.

Gottlieb, Max. In Sinclair Lewis' ARROWSMITH, a kindly German doctor who teaches young Martin Arrowsmith the qualities required of a scientist.

Götz von Berlichingen. A romantic drama (1773) by GOETHE, based on the autobiography of the sixteenth-century knight of that name.

gouache. A method of painting with water colors made opaque by the addition of white and mixed with a gum preparation. Also a picture so painted, or the pigment used.

Goudy, Frederic William (1865-1947). American printer and type designer. Produced over ninety type faces. Established the Village Press, now near Marlborough, N.Y.

Goujon, Jean (1510?-?1568). The greatest sculptor of the French Renaissance. With Pierre Lescot restored the church of St. Germain l'Auxerrois in Paris. Assisted Lescot in work on the Louvre, notably the musician's gallery. According to tradition he was shot on his scaffold in the court of the Louvre during the massacre of St. Bartholomew (1572).

Gould, Charles. In Conrad's NOSTROMO, the head of the Gould silver mines.

Dona Emilia Gould. Gould's gentle and beautiful wife.

Gould, Jay (1836–1892). American financier. With James Fisk and Daniel Drew ruined Erie Railroad and looted its treasury (1868). Attempted to corner gold, causing panic of Black Friday (Sept. 24, 1869). His son, George Jay Gould (1864–1923), inherited vast railroad interests which he lost to Kuhn, Loeb and Co., and E. H. Harriman.

Gounod, Charles François (1818–1893). French composer. His best-known operas are Faust (1859) and Roméo et Juliette (1867). He at first wrote sacred music; among his songs is the famous Ave Maria based on Bach's first prelude of the Well Tempered Clavichord. At one time he had thought of entering the Church.

gourmand and gourmet (Fr.). The gourmand is one whose chief pleasure is eating; but a gourmet is a connoisseur of food and wines. The gourmand regards quantity more than quality; the gourmet, quality more than quantity. See APICIUS.

In former times [in France] gourmand meant a judge of eating, and gourmet a judge of wine. . . . Gourmet is now universally understood to refer to eating, and not to drinking.—Hamerton, French and English, Pt. v, ch. iv.

the gourmand's prayer. "O Philoxenos, Philoxenos, why were you not Prometheus?" Prometheus was the mythological creator of man, and Philoxenos was a great epicure, whose great and constant wish was to have the neck of a crane, that he might enjoy the taste of his food longer before it was swallowed into his stomach. (Aristotle, Ethics, iii. 10.)

Gourmont, Rémy de (1858–1915). French critic, novelist, and poet, whose work is marked by fantasy, irony, and an emphasis on sensuality, in his early career associated with the Symbolist (see SYMBOLISM) group. Among his works of fiction, short stories, letters, and the like, are: Sixtine (1890); Histoires Magiques (1894); Les Chevaux de Diomède (The Horses of Diomedes; 1897); Le Songe d'une Femme (1899); A Night at the Luxembourg (Une Nuit au Luxembourg; 1906); The Virgin Heart (Un Coeur Virginal; 1907); Couleurs (1908); Lettres à l'Amazone (1914); Lettres Intime à l'Amazone (1927). His essays and critical prose include: The Book of Masques (Le Livre des Masques; 1896–1898); L'Esthétique de la Langue Française (1899); Le Problème du Style (1902); Physiology of Love (Physique de l'Amour; 1903); Promenades Littéraires (1904–1913).

During a large part of his life, Gourmont's face was disfigured by an unsightly growth. He lived in seclusion in stuffy, dusty rooms, dressed in the robes of a Trappist monk. A number of his articles were written under the pseudonym of Richard de Bury. See studies by Aldington and Jacobs.

Gower, John (1330?–1408). English poet, a friend and contemporary of CHAUCER, author of moral and didactic allegorical poems of the type popular at the time. His best-known works are: Miroir de l'Homme (Speculum Meditantis; ca. 1382), written in Norman French; Vox Clamantis (ca. 1382), written in Latin; and CONFESSIO AMANTIS (1390?) in Middle English.

Go West, Young Man! Horace GREELEY's recipe for success.

Gowk-thrapple, Maister. In Scott's WAVERLEY, a covenanting preacher.

A man of coarse, mechanical, perhaps rather intrinsically feeble intellect, with the vehemence of some pulpit-drumming Gowk-thrapple.—Carlyle.

gown and town row. In university towns, a scrimmage between the students of different colleges and the townsmen. These feuds go back at least to the reign of King John, when 3,000 students left Oxford for Reading, owing to a quarrel with the men of the town.

Goya y Lucientes, Francisco José de (1746–1828). Spanish master painter, etcher, and lithographer. He designed cartoons for tapestries for the Prado in Madrid, and was the chief painter to the Spanish King. He is widely known for his ferocious depiction of the stark realities of war, and for his realistic portrayal of contemporary life in Spain, Spanish customs, bullfights, etc. He died in voluntary political exile in Bordeaux, France. The best modern book about Goya is In the Blazing Light by Max White, a novel concerning the lusty life of the painter.

Gozzoli, Benozzo (1420–1498). Florentine painter and goldsmith; helped Ghiberti on one of the bronze doors of the Florence baptistery; chiefly known for his narrational murals in the Campo Santo, Pisa.

Gracæ. In Greek mythology, sentinels for the Gorgons, daughters of the sea deity Phorcus. They were Deino, Enyo, and Phephredo.

Gracchi, mother of the. CORNELIA.

Grace Abounding to the Chief of Sinners. An autobiography of John BUNYAN (1666), written in prison and describing his religious experiences and the development of his spiritual convictions.

grace. In music, an embellishment which is not a necessary part of the melody or harmony; an appoggiatura, a trill, a turn, etc. The execution and allocation of graces, especially in the eighteenth century, was often left to the discretion of the performer.

Graces, the three. In classical mythology, the goddesses who bestowed beauty and charm and were themselves the embodiment of both. They were the sisters Aglaia, Thalia, and Euphrosyne.

They are the daughters of sky-ruling Jove,
By him begot of faire Eurynome, . . .
The first of them hight mylde Euphrosyne,
Next faire Aglaia, last Thalia merry;
Sweete Goddesses all three, which me in mirth do cherry

Spenser, Faerie Queene, VI, x, 22.

Andrea Appiani (1754-1817), the Italian fresco artist, was known as the Painter of the Graces.

Gracioso. The interlocutor, a stock character in the Spanish drame romantique. He thrusts himself forward on all occasions, ever and anon directing his gibes to the audience.

Gradgrind, Thomas. A character in Dickens' HARD TIMES, typical of a man who measures everything with rule and compass, allows nothing for the weakness of human nature, and deals with men and women as a mathematician with his figures. Everything about him is square; his forehead is square, and so is his forefinger, with which he emphasizes all he says. Formerly he was in the wholesale hardware line. In his greatness he becomes M.P. for Coketown, and he lives at Stone Lodge, a mile or so from town. He prides himself on being eminently practical, and, though not a bad man at heart, he blights his children by his hard, practical way of bringing them up.

Gradus. Short for Gradus ad Parnassum, literally, "steps to Parnassus." A dictionary of prosody, poetical phrases, etc., of the kind once used in English schools as an aid to Latin versification. Also the title of a Latin work on counterpoint by Johann Joseph Fux (1725) and a name used for similar works on the other arts.

Graeme, Roland. In Scott's ABBOT the foundling heir of Avenel. He first appears as page to the Lady of Avenel, then as page to Mary, Queen of Scots.

Graemes, the. A clan of freebooters who inhabited the DEBATABLE LAND, and were transported to Ireland at the beginning of the 17th century.

graffiti, sing. graffito. In archeology, rude scribbings found on rocks, walls, vases, etc. Valuable to archaeologists and historians for information concerning the habits and modes of thought of the ancients.

Graham, Stephen (1884-). English writer and authority on Russian literature and history. Tramped the American Far West with Vachel LINDSAY (1921). Traveled extensively and regularly wrote books of competent journalism.

Grahame, Kenneth (1859-1932). British author. Wrote a masterpiece of fantasy, The Wind in the Willows (1908), for his son Alastair (who died in an accident at twenty). The Golden Age (1895) and Dream Days (1898) are permanent literature, written about children, "the only really living people."

Grahame-White, Claude (1879-). English aviator and aeronautical engineer. Founded at Pau in France the first British school of aviation (1909). First flight by night. Won Gordon Bennett trophy. Established Grahame-White Aviation Co.

Graham of Claverhouse, John. 1st Viscount Dundee. Known as Bloody Claverse or Bonny Dundee (1649?-1689). Scottish Royalist and Jacobite. Under Marquis of Montrose employed in repression of conventicles in favor of episcopacy in Scotland. Persecuted the Covenanters. In 1689 raised a body of Highlanders to fight for James II, won the battle of Killiecrankie but was mortally wounded.

Grail, Holy Grail, or Sangreal (Sangraal). The cup or chalice traditionally used by Christ at the Last Supper, and the center round which a huge corpus of medieval legend, romance, and allegory revolves.

According to one account, Joseph of Arimathea preserved the Grail, and received into it some of the blood of the Savior at the Crucifixion. He brought it to England, but it disappeared. According to others, it was brought by angels from heaven and entrusted to a body of knights who guarded it on top of a mountain. When approached by anyone not of perfect purity, it disappeared from sight, and its quest became the source of most of the adventures of the Knights of the Round Table. See also ARTHUR.

The mass of literature concerning the Grail cycle, both ancient and modern, is enormous. The chief sources of the principal groups of legends are: the Peredur (Welsh, given in the MABINOGION), which is one of the most archaic forms of the Quest story; the unfinished Conte del Graal by CHRÉTIEN DE TROYES, in which the Grail is a hollow dish, accompanied in a procession by a bleeding spear; Wolfram von Eschenbach's PARSIFAL (ca. 1210), the best example of the story as transformed by ecclesiastical influence; a chivalric version by Gottfried von Strassburg; the 13th-century French PERCEVAL LE GALLOIS (founded on earlier English and Celtic legends which had no connection with the Grail), showing Percival in his later rôle as an ascetic hero, translated by Dr. Sebastian Evans (1893), as The High History of the Holy Grail; and the Quête du St. Graal, which, in its English dress, forms Bks. 13-18 of Malory's MORTE D'ARTHUR. See GALAHAD. It was the French poet, Robert de Boron (fl. ca. 1215), who, in his Joseph d'Arimathie or Le Saint Graal, first definitely attached the history of the Grail to the Arthurian cycle and first mentioned the Grail as a container for the Host. The framework of Tennyson's Holy Grail, IDYLLS OF THE KING, is taken from Malory.

A second conception of the Grail is that it was not a cup, but the dish out of which Christ and his disciples ate the Paschal lamb at the Last Supper. The following passages from the Morte d'Arthur are illustrative of Malory's treatment of the Grail legend:

Then anon they heard cracking and crying of thunder. . . . In the midst of the blast entered a sunbeam more clear by seven times than the day, and all they were alighted of the grace of the Holy Ghost. . . . Then there entered into the hall the Holy Grail covered with white samite, but there was none that could see it, nor who bare it, but the whole hall was full filled with good odours, and every knight had such meat and drink as he best loved in the world, and when the Holy Grail had been borne through the hall, then the holy vessel departed suddenly, and they wist not where it became.—Ch. 35.

Then looked they and saw a man come out of the holy vessel, that had all the signs of the passion of Christ, and he said . . . "This is the holy dish wherein I ate the lamb on Sher-Thursday, and now hast thou woken it . . . yet hast thou not seen it so openly as thou shalt see it in the city of Sarras . . . therefore thou must go hence and bear with thee this holy vessel, for this night it shall depart from the realm of Logris . . . and take with thee . . . sir Percivale and sir Bors."—Ch. 101.

So departed sir Galahad, and sir Percivale and sir Bors with him. And so they rode three days, and came to a river, and found a ship . . . and when on board, they found in the midst the table of silver and the Sangreall covered with white samite. . . . Then sir Galahad laid him down and slept . . . and when he woke . . . he saw the city of Sarras (Ch. 103). . . . At the year's end, . . . he saw before him the holy vessel, and a man kneeling upon his knees in the likeness of the bishop, which had about him a great fellowship of angels, as it had been Christ Himself . . . and when he came to the saking of the Mass, and had done, anon he called sir Galahad, and said unto him, "Come forth, . . . and thou shalt see that which thou hast much desired to see" . . . and he beheld spiritual things . . .—Ch. 104.

It is also believed by some that the Grail was originally, in pre-Christian times, a female sexual symbol which, with the bleeding spear appearing in Chrétien de Troyes' early account, was used in fertility rites. For a further discussion of this interesting theory, cf. From Ritual to Romance, by Jessica L. Weston, a source used by T. S. Eliot in his poem THE WASTE LAND, where the Grail theme occurs in a similarly symbolic form.

Grainne. A heroine of ancient Irish legend, a daughter of King Cormac and beloved by Finn. See under FINGAL. She was, however, in love with Finn's nephew Diarmuid or Dermot, and the two eloped, pursued at length and through many adventures by Finn, until Diarmuid was at last killed. See also DEIRDRE. Diarmuid and Grainne are among the Irish legendary characters invoked by James Joyce in his novel FINNEGANS WAKE.

Gram. In the Volsunga Saga, the sword which Odin thrusts into a tree. It is pulled out by Siegmund, father of Siegfried. In the Nibelungenlied, it is Siegfried's sword, called BALMUNG.

Grammarian's Funeral, A. A poem (1855) by Robert BROWNING.

Gramont, Comte Philibert de (1621?-1707). A French nobleman at Louis XIV's court until 1662 when he was banished because of an affair with one of the king's mistresses and settled at the court of Charles II of England. The Mémoires du Comte de Gramont were written by his brother-in-law Anthony Hamilton.

le Grand Pan. Voltaire (1694-1778).

Monsieur le Grand. The Grand Equerry of France in the reign of Louis XIV.

Grand Army of the Republic. A secret association organized in 1866 of veterans who had served in the Union Army or Navy during the Civil War. Abbreviation G.A.R. Its first "post" was organized at Decatur, Illinois. The annual meetings were called encampments.

Grand Canal. The chief water thoroughfare of Venice, Italy. It is shaped like an S and runs from the railroad station to Santa Maria del Salute.

Grandcourt, Henleigh. In George Eliot's DANIEL DERONDA a wealthy man of middle age who married GWENDOLYN HARLETH.

Grandet, Félix. One of BALZAC's well known characters, a type of greed and domestic tyranny. When his daughter Eugénie, who loves her cousin Charles Grandet, opposes the miser in his schemes to cheat Charles of his inheritance, he locks her up and becomes so violent that he alarms the town. But in general his greed is of the cold, methodical variety.

Eugénie Grandet. Daughter of Félix Grandet and heroine of Balzac's novel called by her name. Her cousin Charles, with whom she is in love, goes to India and returns with a wife who has both wealth and title. Eugénie then marries the elderly Cruchot de Bonfons, who has long been her suitor. Upon his death, she devotes herself to charity.

Grandfather's Chair, The Whole History of. A volume of children's stories by HAWTHORNE (1840-1842). The tales include episodes in early American history, chiefly stories of persons who might have sat in the chair given to Lady Arabella Johnson by her father, the Earl of Lincoln.

Grandgent, Charles Hall (1862-1939). American educator. Head of Department of Romance languages at Harvard (1899-1911). Author of many textbooks and an authority on Dante.

Grand Guignol. A small theater in the Rue Chaptal, Montmartre, Paris, specializing in brief horror plays. From guignol, a puppet or puppet show, after Guignol, the town "character" of Lyon where a theater of the kind later named after him was established in 1795.

Grandison, Mrs. Caroline. In Meredith's RICHARD FEVEREL, a "colorless lady of an unequivocal character, living upon drugs and governing her husband and the world from her sofa."

Grandison, Sir Charles, see SIR CHARLES GRANDISON.

Grandissimes, The. A novel by G. W. CABLE (1880). The setting is New Orleans in the period of the Louisiana Purchase. The central plot of the book has to do with the enmity of two powerful families, the Grandissimes and the De Grapions, and their final reconciliation through a pair of lovers. A powerful character in the novel is the African king Bras Coupé, who allows himself to be tortured to death rather than be a slave. See also NANCANOU.

Grand Pré. The scene of much of Longfellow's EVANGELINE, a village of Acadia (now Nova Scotia), inhabited by a colony from Normandy, of very primitive manners, preserving the very costume of their old Norman forefathers. They had no locks to their doors nor bolts to their windows. There "the richest man was poor, and the poorest lived in abundance."

Grand Prix de Rome. French Government Prize to French artists, giving the most successful competitor in painting, sculpture, engraving, architecture, or music a four-year stipend at the French Academy of Fine Arts at Rome (founded by Louis XIV in 1666) and exemption from military service for the period of attendance.

Grand Remonstrance. In English history, the protest passed by the House of Commons against the tyrannical acts of King Charles I (November, 1641).

grangerize. Chiefly a British expression, meaning to "extra-illustrate" a book; to supplement it by the addition of illustrations, portraits, autograph letters, caricatures, prints, broadsheets, biographical sketches, anecdotes, scandals, press notices, parallel passages, and any other sort of matter directly or indirectly bearing on the subject. So called from James Granger (1723-1776) who, in 1769, started the craze by publishing a Biographical History of England with blank pages for the insertion of extra illustrations, etc.

Grangousier. In Rabelais' satire, GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, a king of Utopia, who marries, in "the vigor of his old age," Gargamelle, daughter of the King of the Parpailons, and becomes the father of Gargantua. Some say he is meant for Louis XII, but Moteux thinks the "academy figure" of this old Priam was John d'Albret, King of Navarre.

Grani. In old Norse hero legends, the gray charger of Siegfried or Sigurd, whose swiftness exceeded that of the winds. Gunnar borrowed him from Siegfried and fruitlessly attempted to ride him through the flames to rescue Brunhild, but as soon as Siegfried himself mounted, Grani recognized his master's spur and dashed through the fire.

Granite City or Capital. Aberdeen. See under CITY.

Granite State. New Hampshire. See STATES.

Granjon, Robert. A sixteenth-century French type founder, engraver, and printer in Paris (1551) and Lyon (1558). His caractères de civilité were based on French handwriting. Modifications of his italic and roman types are still in use. In musical notation his name is associated with the introduction of round notes.

Grant, Gordon (1875-). American painter and illustrator. Made a name for himself especially through his pictures of ships.

Grant, Percy Stickney (1860-1927). American Protestant Episcopal minister, pastor of Church of the Ascension in New York City (till resignation, 1924). Advocate of socialism and founder of a forum on social problems. Involved in a dispute with Bishop Manning on questions of church doctrine.

Grant, Robert (1852-1940). American lawyer, essayist, novelist. Advocated more liberal divorce laws in the 1920's. He was a member of Governor Fuller's Advisory Committee which sealed the death sentence of Sacco and Vanzetti (1927). His best-known novel is Unleavened Bread (1900).

Grant, Ulysses Simpson (1822-1885). U.S. Civil War General. Carried command under Lincoln of all armies of U.S. Eighteenth (Republican) President of the United States (elected 1868; re-elected 1872). Though personally honest, major scandals (as the Crédit Mobilier, the Whisky Ring, the attempt of speculators to corner the gold market, etc.) discredited his administration. His Memoirs were published in two volumes (1885-1886). His tomb in New York City suffers as a monument in his honor through the comparison with that of Napoleon which it invites.

Grantly, Archdeacon. In Trollope's Chronicles of Barsetshire (see BARSETSHIRE) an archdeacon, one of the best known of Trollope's clerical characters.

Grantorto (great wrong). In Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE (V. xi. xii), a giant who withholds the inheritance of Irena (Ireland). He typifies rebellion. He is slain by Sir Artegal.

Granville-Barker, Harley Granville (1877-1946). English actor, manager, playwright. Wrote The Voysey Inheritance (1905), The Madras House (1910), and made adaptations of SCHNITZLER, GUITRY, and ROMAINS; etc.

the grapes are sour. You disparage it because it is beyond your reach. The allusion is to Aesop's well known fable of the fox, which tried in vain to get at some grapes, and, when he found they were beyond his reach, went away saying, "I see they are sour."

There, economy was always "elegant," and money-spending always "vulgar" and ostentatious—a sort of sour grapeism, which made us very peaceful and satisfied.—Mrs. Gaskell, Cranford, ch. i.

Grapes of Wrath, The. A best-selling novel of the proletarian type by John STEINBECK, published in 1939, awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1940, and soon afterwards dramatized as a successful motion picture. It tells of the hardships of the Joad family, farmers who are leaving the Oklahoma Dust Bowl region where it is no longer possible to raise crops to drive to California in search of work as migrant fruit-pickers. The grandparents die on the way, and on arrival the others are beset by the police, starvation, and strike conflicts, during one of which Tom, the Joad son, kills a man. At the conclusion of the novel, throughout which descriptive and philosophical passages alternate with narrative portions, the family is defeated but still resolute. See also PROLETARIAN LITERATURE.

graphology. The science and practice of character reading based on a person's handwriting. The axiom of graphology is that a person's handwriting is a form of behavior and, just as any other human product or action, must bear the imprint of his personality. The difficulties of practical application of this axiom have brought graphology into disrepute and opened the doors wide to all sorts of charlatanism.

Gratiano. In Shakespeare's MERCHANT OF VENICE, one of Antonio's friends. He "talked an infinite deal of nothing, more than any man in all Venice." Gratiano marries Nerissa, the waiting-gentlewoman of Portia.

Grattan, Henry (1746-1820). Irish orator and statesman. Persistent advocate of Irish independence and Catholic emancipation. Cf. Memoirs of the Life and Times of Henry Grattan, by his son Henry Grattan (1839-1846).

Grau, Maurice (1849-1907). Austrian-born operatic manager. Managed Salvini, Irving, Terry, Réjane, Bernhardt. Business manager Metropolitan Opera House, N.Y. Head of Maurice Grau Opera Company.

Graustark. An imaginary petty kingdom of Europe, the scene of George Barr McCutcheon's adventure tales, Graustark (Am., 1901) and Beverly of Graustark. It is frequently referred to in literary criticism as typical of impossibly melodramatic fiction.

Graves, Alfred Perceval (1846-1931). Irish man of letters and poet. Leader in Irish literary renaissance. Songs of Killarney (1872); Irish Songs and Ballads (1879). Father of Robert GRAVES.

Graves, Clotilde Inez Mary (1863-1932). Pseudonym Richard Dehan. Irish novelist. The Dop Doctor (1910), etc. Also playwright.

Graves, Robert (1895-). English poet and novelist, first known for his poetry protesting against the horrors of World War I. His collections of verse include: Over the Brazier (1916); Goliath and David (1916); Fairies and Fusiliers (1917); The Treasure Box (1919); Country Sentiment (1920); The Pier Glass (1921); Whipperginny (1923); The Feather Bed (1923); Mock Beggar Hall (1924); Welshman's Hose (1925); The Marmosite's Miscellany (1925), this being published under the pseudonym of John Doyle. Among his later works, chiefly scholarly and critical, are: The Meaning of Dreams (1924); My Head! My Head! (1925); John Skelton (1927); Mrs. Fisher (1928); The Shout (1929); The Real David Copperfield (1933); Antigua Penny Puce (1936); T. E. Lawrence to his Biographer (1937). Goodbye to All That (1929) is an autobiography, dealing chiefly with the author's experiences during the war; I Claudius (1934) and Claudius the God (1934) are unusual historical novels with a psychological approach to their subject.

graveyard school. A pre-Romantic movement in English poetry of the 18th century, composed chiefly of followers and imitators of Edward Young and so named because of the meditative, melancholy tone of the characteristic verse of the school, the scene of much of which was laid in graveyards and cemeteries.

Gray, Alice. The heroine of Barrie's ALICE-SIT-BY-THE-FIRE.

Gray, Asa (1810-1888). Leading American botanist of his time. Author of Flora of North America (1838-1843) etc., etc. Professor of Natural History at Harvard. Member of Hall of Fame.

Great Cham of Literature. So Smollett calls Dr. Johnson (1709-1784).

Great Commoner. William Pitt, the Elder (Earl of Chatham) (1708-1778).

Great Dauphin. See GRAND.

Great Elector. Frederick William, Elector of Brandenburg (1620, 1640-1688).

Great Galeoto. See GALEOTO.

Great Magician or the Great Magician of the North. Sir Walter Scott. So called first by Professor John Wilson (1771-1832).

Great Mogul. The title of the chief of the Mogul Empire; hence any self-important person.

Great Unknown. Sir Walter Scott (1771-1832), who published his WAVERLEY NOVELS anonymously.

Great Unwashed. The artisan class. Burke first used the compound, but Sir Walter Scott popularized it.

Great Awakening, The. A religious revivalist movement which swept through the American colonies (1739-1740) and was marked by violent and sensational public repentance and conversion. It began in Massachusetts under the influence of the preaching of Jonathan EDWARDS and of the English evangelist George Whitefield. Controversies arose because of it, between Edwards and Charles CHAUNCEY, and Edwards eventually came to lose his popularity in his own congregation. Unitarianism grew up out of the liberal faction under Chauncey.

Great Dictator, The. See CHAPLIN, CHARLES SPENCER.

Great Divide, The. A drama by William Vaughn Moody (1906). The New England heroine, Ruth Jordan, alone on an Arizona ranch and suddenly menaced by three men, promises to marry Stephen Ghent, a Westerner, if he will save her. The interest lies in the subsequent effort of the two principal characters to bridge the gap between the ideals and standards of New England and the West.

Great Expectations. A novel by DICKENS (1860) in the form of an autobiography. A fine moving-picture version was made in England (1946). The hero is Pip, who is reared by his sister and her husband, Joe Gargery, the blacksmith. Later he is informed that he is to be reared as a gentleman of "great expectations," as an unknown person has provided money for his education and expects to make him his heir. This patron is Magwitch, a runaway convict to whom the boy Pip had once been of great assistance. Magwitch has made a fortune in New South Wales, but when he secretly returns to England, he is arrested as a returned convict and all his money is confiscated. Pip's love affair is a similar "great expectation." He falls in love with Estella, the adopted daughter of the rich Miss Havisham, but Estella marries Bentley Drummle.

Great Gatsby, The. A novel by F. Scott FITZGERALD, published in 1925 and later dramatized on the stage and screen. It deals with sexual intrigue between Jay Gatsby, wealthy through bootlegging and racketeering, and Daisy Buchanan, wife of a wealthy boor who keeps as a mistress the wife of a local garageman. The latter woman is accidentally run over by Daisy, whose husband seeks revenge upon Gatsby by telling the garageman that it was Gatsby who killed the woman. The garageman thereupon shoots Gatsby. This novel is considered to typify the life of the boom period of the 1920's. See also BIG MONEY, THE.

Great God Brown, The. A play by Eugene O'NEILL, produced in 1926, in which masks are used to symbolize the varying personalities of the characters as they are and as they appear to other people. "The Great God Brown" is a wealthy man, devoid of inner character or spiritual resources, who takes the mask of Dion Anthony, a frustrated artist who dies, and wearing it, is accepted as Dion by Dion's wife, for she has known and loved only her husband's mask, not his true self.

Great Meadow, The. A novel by Elizabeth Madox ROBERTS (1930), dealing with the settlement of Kentucky by Virginia pioneers in the 18th century and their hardships in protecting themselves against the raiding Indians.

Great Mother. Nature goddess of ancient Anatolia. Her names and appellations include Cybele, Earth Mother, Mountain Mother, Idaean Mother, etc. In Greek mythology, the goddess Demeter is called the Great Mother.

great Scott or Scot! An exclamation of surprise, wonder, admiration, indignation, etc. It seems to have originated in America about the late 1860's perhaps in memory of Gen. Winfield Scott (d. 1866), an unsuccessful candidate for the Presidency in 1852, or, more likely perhaps, as a euphemism for Great God (like by gosh for by God, etc.), the initial letter of the Ger. Gott being changed into Sc.

Great Stone Face, The. A story by Nathaniel HAWTHORNE. The title refers to the "Old Man of the Mountain," also known as the "Profile," a natural rock formation on Profile Mountain in the Franconia Range, N.H., which, looked at from a certain direction, bears a striking resemblance to a human face.

Great White Father, The. A title of honor sometimes given to the President of the U.S. by the Indians.

Great White Way. That part of Broadway in New York City which centers about Times Square and is brightly illuminated due to a concentration there of theaters and other places of entertainment.

all Greek to me. Quite unintelligible; an unknown tongue or language. Casca says, "For mine own part, it was all Greek to me." (Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, i. 2.)

last of the Greeks. Philopoemen, of Megalopolis, whose great object was to infuse into the Achaeans a military spirit, and establish their independence (252–183 B. C.).

to play the Greek. To indulge in one's cups. The Greeks were considered a luxurious race, fond of creature comforts.

when Greek meets Greek, then is the tug of war. When two men or armies of undoubted courage fight, the contest will be very severe. The line is slightly altered from a 17th-century play, and the reference is to the obstinate resistance of the Greek cities to Philip and Alexander, the Macedonian kings.

When Greeks joined Greeks, then was the tug of war.
Nathaniel Lee, The Rival Queens, IV, ii.

Greek calends. Never. See CALENDs.

Greek fire. A combustible composition used for setting fire to an enemy's ships, fortifications, etc., of niter, sulphur, and naphtha. Tow steeped in the mixture was hurled in a blazing state through tubes, or tied to arrows. The invention is ascribed to Callinicos, of Heliopolis, 668 A. D., and it was first used by the Greeks at Constantinople.

Greek gift. A treacherous gift. The reference is to the Wooden Horse said to be a gift or offering to the gods for a safe return from Troy, but in reality a ruse for the destruction of the city.

"Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes."
Virgil, Aeneid, ii. 49.

Greek trust. "Graeca fides" was with the Romans no faith at all.

Greek Anthology, The. A collection of several thousand poems, songs, gravestone inscriptions, epigrams, epitaphs, and the like, by numerous Greek writers, known and anonymous, from the 5th century B. C. to the 6th century A. D. Its original form was a collection called the Garland of Meleager (ca. 60 B. C.), to which continuous additions were made. A number of the poems in the Greek Anthology have become very famous. The Elizabethan poetic "miscellany" (see TOTTEL'S MISCELLANY) was a spiritual descendant of the Greek Anthology.

Greeley, Horace (1811-1872). American journalist, author, politician. Founder of the successful and influential New York Tribune (1841). Promoter of antislavery sentiment and, after the Civil War, of the principles of universal amnesty and universal suffrage. Greely, Adolphus Washington (1844-1935). American major general. Commanded U.S. arctic expedition of 1881, attained the most northerly point reached up to that time, 83° 24' N., and discovered new land north of Greenland. In charge of relief operations in San Francisco fire and earthquake (1906). Wrote books on polar expeditions. Three years of Arctic Service (1885); etc.

green. Young, fresh, as green cheese, cream cheese, which is eaten fresh; a green old age, an old age in which the faculties are not impaired and the spirits are still youthful; green goose, a young or midsummer goose.

If you would fat green geese, shut them up when they are about a month old—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Immature in age or judgment, inexperienced, young.

My salad days
When I was green in judgment!
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, i, 5.
The text is old, the orator too green.
Shakespeare, Venus and Adonis, 806.

Simple, raw, easily imposed upon; the characteristic greenhorn.

"He is so jolly green," said Charley.—Dickens, Oliver Twist, ch. iv.

Jealous. See GREEN-EYED MONSTER below. See also COLORS for its symbolism.

green room. The common waiting-room beyond the stage at a theater for the performers; so called because at one time the walls were colored green to relieve the eyes affected by the glare of the stage lights.

green-eyed monster. So Shakespeare called jealousy:

Iago. O! beware, my lord, of jealousy;
It is the green-eyed monster which doth mock
The meat it feeds on.

Othello, iii, 3.

A greenish complexion was formerly held to be indicative of jealousy; and as cats, lions, tigers, and all the green-eyed tribe "mock the meat they feed on," so jealousy mocks its victim by loving and loathing it at the same time.

Gauvain and the Green Knight. See GAUWAIN.

The Wearing of the Green. An Irish patriotic and revolutionary song, dating from 1798. Green was the emblematic color adopted by Irish Nationalists.

They're hanging men and women for the wearing of the green.

Green, Anna Katharine (1846-1935). American writer of detective fiction, beginning with The Leavenworth Case (1878).

Green, Anne (1899-) and Julian (1900-). Brother and sister, novelists of American parentage, resident for most of their lives in Paris, which is the scene of most of their books. Anne Green is known chiefly as the author of witty, satirical stories and character studies, including The Selbys (1930); Reader, I Married Him (1931); Fools Rush In (1934); 16 Rue Cortambert (1937); The Silent Duchess (1939); and The Delamer Curse (1940). Julian Green is best known for his psychological studies, written in French and then translated into English, of people who are the prey of suppressed emotions. Among these are: The Pilgrim on the Earth (1929); The Dark Journey (1929); The Strange River (1932); The Dreamer (1934); Midnight (1936); Then Shall the Dust Return (1941).

Green, Paul Eliot (1894-). American playwright, best known for his dramas dealing with the southern Negroes, many being one act in length and written in Negro dialect. His full-length plays include: In Abraham's Bosom (1924 and 1927), awarded the Pulitzer Prize; The Field God (1927), concerning poor whites; The House of Connelly (1932), dealing with the decadence of an old Southern family; Roll, Sweet Chariot (1934); Johnny Johnson (1937), a musical satire on war; and The Lost Colony (1937), an historical pageant dealing with the first settlement on Roanoke Island.

Green, Verdant, see VERDANT GREEN.

Greenaway, Catherine (1846-1901). English illustrator and painter. Renowned for children's books among which Under the Window (1879) was outstanding and is still in print. Kate Greenaway, as she is generally called, and Randolph CALDECOTT, partly thanks to their common publisher, Edmund Evans, mark a turning point in the history of children's books, which, in the words of Robert Lawson, "here for the first time were given a true dignity and importance. Here, for the first time, children were regarded as real, intelligent human beings, worthy of the very best of draughtsmanship, imagination and publishing integrity. With these three, children's books began their career gloriously."

greenback. A popular name for a U.S. note with devices on back printed in green, a form of fiat paper currency issued in 1862 to aid in financing the Civil War.

The Greenback party was a minor party in elections from 1876 to 1884 demanding the continued issuance of fiat money as one of the points of its program.

Greenberg Manuscripts. A collection of poems marked by strange imagery and frequent flights of intense imagination, together with a neglect of form and technical polish, by Samuel D. Greenberg, a young Jewish-American poet of poverty-bound background, who died of tuberculosis in 1917. Hart CRANE "discovered" Greenberg's work and enthusiastically regarded the dead youth as a genius. Much of Crane's own poetry is believed to have been influenced by Greenberg's, and even whole passages to have been incorporated in his poems with little alteration. A selection from the Greenberg Manuscripts was published in 1939 under that title.

Green Carnation, The. A novel by Robert S. HICHENS (1894) satirizing the decadence of the period at the end of the 19th century, and intended as a lampoon on Oscar WILDE. The "green carnation" of the title is "the arsenic flower of an exquisite life." The hero, Lord Reginald Hastings, "too modern to be reticent" is put in his place by a heroine who, when he complains that she is almost ordinary, replies that she is glad of it and flatly refuses to marry him.

Greene, Graham (1904-). English writer of novels of action dealing with peculiarities of sinister psychology. A master of suspense. This Gun for Hire (1936), successfully filmed. Brighton Rock (1938); The Power and the Glory (in America: The Labyrinthine Ways; 1940), Hawthornden Prize. Has also been filmed.

Greene, Robert (1560?-1592). English dramatist, poet, and prose-writer, known for his wild and dissolute Bohemian life as scholar, vagabond, and "university wit," holder of the M.A. degree from both Oxford and Cambridge. He wrote heroic and historical plays, artificial romances in the manner of John LYLY, and realistic prose pamphlets denouncing the roguery of London and revealing conditions in the contemporary underworld of the city. His plays include: Orlando Furioso (1588?), taken from Ariosto's work of the same title; Alphonsus, King of Aragon (1588), suggested by Christopher Marlowe's TAMBURLAINE; Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay (1589), said to have been suggested by Marlowe's Dr. Faustus (see FAUST); and James IV. Among his romances are: Euphues' Censure to Philautus (1587); Pandosto (1588), used in part by Shakespeare as the basis for THE WINTER'S TALE; and Menaphon (1589). These contain several well-known lyrics, such as "Weep Not, My Wanton" in the last named. Greene's "rogue" pamphlets, many of them autobiographical and serving as personal documents of repentance and confession, include: The Mourning Garment (1590); A Groatworth of Wit Bought with a Million of Repentance (1592); The Repentance of Robert Greene (1592); A Quip for an Upstart Courtier (1592); and his various "cony-catching" pamphlets (1591-1592), among the best-known of which are A Defense of Cony-Catching, Disputation between a He-Cony-Catcher and a She-Cony-Catcher, and The Black Book's Messenger.

Green Hat, The. A novel, published in 1924, by Michael ARLEN. Phenomenally successful, it was one of the many best-selling books of the 1920's dealing sentimentally with license among the wealthy. Its heroine, Iris MARCH, was portrayed on the stage by Katharine CORNELL and in the films by Greta Garbo.

Green Mansions. A romance of the South American tropics by W. H. HUDSON (1916). The hero, Mr. Abel, tells the tragic story of his love for Rima, the "bird girl" who understands the language of nature.

Green Mountain Boys, The. A novel by Daniel Pierce Thompson (1839), with the Vermont hero Ethan Allen as its central figure. It gives a vivid picture of pre-Revolutionary and Revolutionary times in Vermont. The book went through fifty editions before the Civil War, and remains a favorite with boys.

There was also a popular comedy entitled The Green Mountain Boy by J. S. Jones (Am., 1833), famed chiefly because of the character of Jedediah Homebred, a Yankee man-of-all-work.

Green Mountain State. Vermont. See under STATES.

Green Pastures, The. A play by Marc CONNELLY, produced in 1930 and a winner of the Pulitzer Prize. It was based on Ol' Man Adam an' His Chillun, a book of sketches by Roark BRADFORD. It presents humorous versions of Old Testament stories as they are told by an old Southern Negro preacher in terms of the lives of his congregation.

Greenwich Village or the Village. A section of New York City west of Washington Square, noted during the early 20th century and the years immediately preceding and following World War I as being the haunt of Bohemian artists, writers and radicals, who originally chose it as a place to live because of its cheapness. In former days it was a quaint, small village reached from the city in lower Manhattan by stage coach.

By the time of the 1930's, Greenwich Village was chiefly a residential district for young business and professional couples, who could pay higher rents than their predecessors the Bohemians, and the artists and writers had moved to Brooklyn or to the Connecticut suburbs. Among the well-known personalities who lived and worked in Greenwich Village at one time or another are: Floyd DELL, Gelett BURGESS, Max EASTMAN, Emma GOLDMAN, William Vaughn MOODY, Eugene O'NEILL, Edna St. Vincent MILLAY; among the "little magazines" published there were THE LITTLE REVIEW, THE MASSES, and THE SEVEN ARTS. Several novels by Floyd Dell deal with life in Greenwich Village in its heyday.

Gregorian. Of or pertaining to any of the Popes named Gregory and their various periods.

Gregorian calendar, see CALENDAR.

Gregorian chant. The ritual plain song, or cantus firmus, a kind of unisonorous music in the eight church modes, a collection of which, edited by Pope Gregory I, has come down to us. It is still used in the services of the Roman Catholic Church and Greek Catholic Church.

Gregorian epoch. The epoch or day on which the Gregorian calendar commenced—March, 1582.

Gregorian year. The civil year, according to the correction introduced by Pope Gregory XIII in 1582. See CALENDAR. The equinox, which occurred on March 25 in the time of Julius Caesar, fell on March 11 in the year 1582. This was because the Julian calculation of 365¼ days to a year was 11 min. 10 sec. too much. Gregory suppressed ten days, so as to make the equinox fall on March 21, as it did at the Council of Nice, and, by some simple arrangements, prevented the recurrence in future of a similar error.

The New Style, as it was called, was adopted in England in 1752, when Wednesday, September 2, was followed by Thursday, September 14.

This has given rise to a double computation, as Lady Day, March 25, Old Lady Day, April 6; Midsummer Day, June 24, Old Midsummer Day, July 6; Michaelmas Day, September 29, Old Michaelmas Day, October 11; Christmas Day, December 25, Old Christmas Day, January 6.

Gregory. The pretended Dmitri in Mousorgsky's opera BORIS GODOUNOFF.

Gregory I, called Gregory the Great (540?-604). Benedictine monk on the Papal throne (590-604). Reformed monastic discipline; enforced celibacy; sent missionaries to Britain. Through him the Roman patriarchate assumed supremacy over all others and was transformed into the papal system which has endured to the present. His name is associated (possibly incorrectly) with the arrangement of the so-called Gregorian mode or chant.

Gregory VII. Original name Hildebrand (1020?-1085). Pope (1073-1085). Aimed to establish supremacy of papacy within the church and of the church over the state. Excommunicated Emperor Henry IV in the famous struggle over lay investitures, but received him in penance at Canossa (1077) where the emperor had to wait outside the castle for three days and three nights, barefoot and dressed in nothing but a thin shirt. Gregory again excommunicated Henry, was driven from Rome and displaced by Guibert as Clement III. He died in exile.

Gregory, Horace Victor (1898-). American poet and literary critic, associated with the school of American poets of Marxist convictions in the 1930's. Much of his poetry criticizes middle-class life and presents dramatic monologues or character studies of petty racketeers and gangsters and people of the city slums. His books of poems include: Chelsea Rooming House (1930); The Poems of Catullus (1931), translations from the Latin;

No Retreat (1933); Chorus for Survival (1935); Poems: 1930-1940 (1941). Pilgrim of the Apocalypse (1933) is a study of D. H. LAWRENCE. In 1925 Gregory married Marya ZATURENSKA, with whom he wrote A History of American Poetry, 1900-1940.

Gregory, Lady Augusta, née Isabella Augusta Persse (1852-1932). Irish playwright and producer, associated with W. B. YEATS in founding and managing the Abbey Theater. See IRISH RENAISSANCE. She is known for her studies of Irish folk-lore, her collections and translations of old Irish legends, and her plays dealing with the life and people of the Irish countryside. Her works include: Cuchulain of Muirthemne (1902); Gods and Fighting Men (1904); Seven Short Plays (1909); Visions and Beliefs in the West of Ireland (1920); Irish Folk-History Plays (1922); The Image, And Other Plays (1922); The Story Brought by Brigit (1924). Her best-known one act plays are The Rising of the Moon, Spreading the News, The Workhouse Ward, published with others in the volume entitled Seven Short Plays.

Gremio. In Shakespeare's TAMING OF THE SHREW, an old man who wishes to marry Bianca, but the lady prefers Lucentio, a young man.

Grendel. In the Anglo-Saxon epic BEOWULF, the monster from which Beowulf delivers Hrothgar, king of Denmark. It is half monster, half man, a beast whose haunt is the marshes among "a monster race." Night after night it creeps stealthily into the palace called Heorot, and slays sometimes as many as thirty of the inmates. At length both Grendel and Grendel's mother, another murdering monster, are slain by Beowulf.

Grenville, Sir Richard. The commander of the Revenge, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth and the hero of Tennyson's poem The Revenge which celebrates his gallant fight with the Spanish against overwhelming odds.

Gresham, Frank. The hero of Trollope's novel Doctor Thorne (1858), a pleasant young man in love with Mary Thorne but urged by his mother, Lady Arabella Gresham, to marry for money. He remains true in spite of insidious pressure.

Gresham's law. Also Gresham's theorem. Popularly formulated: "Bad money drives out good." That is, when two coins of equal debt-paying power but of unequal intrinsic value are simultaneously in circulation, the coin of superior intrinsic value will be hoarded leaving the field to the intrinsically less valuable coin. The "law" is named after Sir Thomas Gresham (1519?-1579), English financier and adviser to Henry VIII and Elizabeth, but it had been known centuries before by Dutch bankers.

Gretchen. A German diminutive of Margaret; the heroine of Goethe's FAUST. See MARGARET. The name has come to typify blond and blue-eyed innocence.

Gretel. See HÄNSEL AND GRETEL.

Gretna Green marriages. Runaway matches. In Scotland, all that was required of contracting parties was a mutual declaration before witnesses of their willingness to marry, so that elopers reaching Gretna, a hamlet near the village of Springfield, Dumfriesshire, 8 miles N.W. of Carlisle, and just across the border, could (up to 1856), get legally married without either license, banns, or priest. The declaration was generally made to a blacksmith.

CRABBE has a metrical tale called Gretna Green, and a Gretna Green marriage has formed the motive, or an incident, of countless romances, stories, and ballads.

Grettir the Strong. The titular hero of one of the English translations of a series of Icelandic sagas written and published (from 1890) by William MORRIS.

Greuze, Jean-Baptiste (1725-1805). French portrait and genre painter of typical rococo charm. Amassed a fortune under the ancien régime but died in misery.

Greville, Sir Fulke. 1st Baron Brooke (1554-1628). English courtier and author, known as the friend of Sir Philip SIDNEY. He wrote a large number of poems, chiefly philosophical, and a Life of Sir Philip Sidney, first published in 1652.

Grew, Joseph Clark (1880-). American diplomat. Ambassador to Turkey (1927-1932), and Japan (1932-1941). Author of Report from Tokyo (1942) and Ten Years in Japan (1944).

Grey, Sir Edward. Viscount Grey of Falldon (1862-1933). British statesman. Consolidated the Triple Entente of Great Britain, France, and Russia as secretary of state for foreign affairs (1905-1916); British Ambassador to U.S. (1919); Chancellor of Oxford (1928). In 1914, he made an historic speech in the House of Commons, after which, looking at night from his room in the Foreign Office, he is quoted as saying to a friend, "The lamps are going out all over Europe; we shall not see them lit again in our life-time."

Grey, Lady Jane (1537-1554). A great-granddaughter of Henry VII of England. At fifteen she was proficient in Greek, Latin, Italian, French, German. At sixteen she was married against her will to Lord Guildford Dudley as part of a plot to change the succession of the crown from the Tudors to the Dudleys.

After the death of Edward VI, she was proclaimed queen; nine days later, after the defeat of her father-in-law's troops, she was imprisoned. When her father participated in Wyatt's Rebellion, she and her husband were executed on Tower Hill. She is the subject of tragedies by Rowe (1715), Laplace (1745), Madame de Staël (1800), Tennyson (1876) and many others.

Grey, Vivian, see VIVIAN GREY.

Grey, Zane (1875-1939). Writer of American stories of adventure in the West. Riders of the Purple Sage (1912), and many other best-sellers. Began his career as a dentist in New York. Wrote also extensively on his hobby, fishing.

Grey Friars. FRANCISCANS. Black Friars are Dominicans, and White Friars Carmelites.

Gridley, Professor. In O. W. Holmes' GUARDIAN ANGEL, the "guardian angel" of the heroine, Myrtle Hazard.

Grieg, Edvard (1843-1907). Norwegian composer. Humoresken (for piano), Peer Gynt suites, a very popular piano concerto, operas, choral works, dances, folksongs, etc.

Grierson, Francis (1848-1927). Author's name of Benjamin Henry Jesse Francis Shepard, American musician and essayist. After a fabulously successful career as a pianist under the name of Francis Shepard, he began writing (ca. 1880) under the name of Francis Grierson lest his literary efforts be considered a mere musician's whim. Modern Mysticism (1899); The Celtic Temperament and Other Essays (1901); The Valley of Shadows (1909; reissued by the History Book Club, 1948).

Grioux, le Chevalier des. Hero of Provoost's MANON LESCAUT.

Grieve, Christopher Murray, see MCDIARMID, HUGH.

griffin. A mythical monster, also called griffon, gryphon, etc., fabled to be the offspring of the lion and eagle. Its legs and all from the shoulder to the head are like an eagle, the rest of the body is that of a lion. This creature was sacred to the sun, and kept guard over hidden treasures. The griffins were in perpetual strife with the Arimaspians, a people of Scythia, who rifled the gold mines for the adornment of their hair.

As when a gryphon thro' the wilderness,
With winged course, o'er hill or moory dale,
Pursues the Arimaspians, who, by stealth,
Had from his wakeful custody purloined
The guarded gold.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 943, etc.

[The griffin is] an Emblem of valour and magnanimity, as being compounded of the Eagle and Lion, the noblest Animals in their kinds; and so is it applicable unto Princes, Presidents, Generals, and all heroic Commanders; and so is it also born in the Coat-arms of many noble Families of Europe.—Sir Thos. Browne, Pseudodoxia Epidemica, III, xi.

Among Anglo-Indians a newcomer, a GREENHORN, is called a griffin. The residue of a contract feast, taken away by the contractor, half the buyer's and half the seller's, is known in the trade as griffins.

Griffin, Vielé, see VIELÉ-GRIFFIN.

Griffith, Arthur (1872-1922). Irish political leader, printer by trade. Founded SINN FEIN (about 1905). While in prison, elected vice president of the "Irish Republic" (1918). Was acting head while DE VALERA was in U.S. (1919-1920). Elected president of the DAIL EIREANN (1922).

Griffith, David Lewelyn Wark (1875-1948). American motion-picture producer. The Birth of a Nation, Intolerance, Hearts of the World, Broken Blossoms, etc.

Griffith Davenport, The Rev. Title and hero of a Civil War drama by James A. Herne (Am., 1898). Griffith Davenport is a southern circuit rider to whom the war brings conflicting duties.

Griffith Gaunt. A novel by Charles READE (1867), later dramatized under the title Jealousy. The titular hero, jealous of his wife's spiritual adviser, is found dead near the house after a terrible scene. She is accused of his murder, but the murdered man turns out to be a half-brother and physical double whom he had impersonated in a false marriage with another woman.

Griffiths, Clyde. Hero of Theodore Dreiser's novel, AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY.

Grig, merry as a. A grig is a cricket, or grasshopper, but it is by no means certain that the animal is referred to in this phrase, which is at least as old as the mid-sixteenth century. Gng here may be a corruption of GREEK, as in "merry as a Greek," which dates from about the same time. Shakespeare has: "Then she's a merry Greek"; and again, "Cressid 'mongst the merry Greeks" (Troilus and Cressida, i. 2; iv. 4). Among the Romans, graccari signified "to play the reveller."

Grillparzer, Franz (1791-1872). Austrian writer, outstanding as a dramatist. Has been called a "classicist of romantic training in an age of realism." His most important work is the trilogy Das goldene Vlies (1822), including Der Gastfreund, Die Argonauten, and Medea. Embittered by lack of tangible success during the era of Metternich censorship. Considerable influence in France, also through his critical and aesthetic writings.

Grim, Giant. In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, a huge giant who tries to stop pilgrims on their way to the Celestial City. He is slain by Mr. Greatheart.

Grimald, Nicholas (1519-1562). English poet, scholar, and clergyman, best known for forty poems of his which were published (1557) in the first edition of TOTTEL'S MISCELLANY. He also wrote two Latin plays and translated Cicero's De Officiis.

Grimaldi, Joseph (1779-1837). English comic actor, pantomimist, clown. It is through him that the term Joey came to signify "circus clown" in slang.

Grimaldo, Enzo. A nobleman in Ponchielli's opera, LA GIOCONDA.

Grimalkin. A cat, the spirit of a witch. Any witch was permitted to assume the body of a cat nine times. When the "first Witch" in Shakespeare's MACBETH hears a cat mew, she says, "I come, Grimalkin."

Grimm, Jacob Ludwig Carl (1785-1863) and Wilhelm Carl (1786-1859). Brothers, German philologists and scholars of folk-lore, best known for their collections of Marchen, or fairy tales, published 1812-1815 as Kinder- und Hausmarchen, and their investigations into the origins of other examples of myth and legend.

Grimm's law. The law of the permutation of consonants in the principal Aryan languages, first formulated by Jacob GRIMM in his Deutsche Grammatik (1822). Thus, what is p in Greek, Latin, or Sanskrit, becomes f in Gothic, and b or f in the Old High German; what is t in Greek, Latin, or Sanskrit becomes th in Gothic, and d in Old High German; etc. For example, changing p into f, and t into th, "pater" becomes "father."

gringo. Among Spanish Americans, a foreigner, especially one speaking English. Chiefly contemptuous. The word means gibberish and is probably a corruption of griego, "Greek." Cf. our expression, "That's all Greek to me."

Grip. The clever raven of Barnaby RUDGE in Dickens' novel of that name. During the Gordon riots it learns the cry of "No Popery!" Other of its phrases are "I'm a devil!", "Never say die!" and "Polly, put the kettle on!", etc.

Grisaille. A method of decorative painting in gray monochrome of various shades designed to attain representation of objects as if in relief. In English the term is generally used with reference to stained-glass windows.

grisetette. A French girl of the working class of lively and free manners. The term is derived from gris, "gray," and stood originally for a kind of coarse woollen fabric often worn by the "grisettes."

Grisi, Giuditta (1805-1840) and her sister, Giulia (1811?-1869). Italian opera singers.

Grisilda or Griselda. The model of enduring patience and obedience, often spoken of as "Patient Grisel or Grizel." She is the heroine of the last tale in BOCCACCIO'S DECAMERON, obtained by him from an old French story, Parlement des Femmes. It was translated from Boccaccio by Petrarch, and thence used by Chaucer for his Clerk's Tale in the Canterbury Tales.

Grisilda is the daughter of a charcoal-burner, but becomes the wife of Walter, Marquis of Saluzzo. Her husband tries her, as God tried Job. He takes away her two children and tells her they are murdered, and finally divorces her and sends her home, saying he is about to marry another. Finally, however, her patience has its full reward. The trials to which the flinty-hearted marquis subjects his innocent wife are almost as unbelievable as the fortitude with which she is credited to have borne them, and perhaps it is just as well that, as Chaucer says in his own "Envoy" to the Clerk's Tale:—

Grisilde is dead, and eke her pacience,
And both at once buried in Italie.

Grizel. A variant—like Grissel—of GRISILDA. Octavia, wife of Mark Antony and sister of Augustus Caesar, is called the "patient Grizel" of Roman story. Also an appealing character in Sentimental Tommy and Tommy and Grizel, by J. M. BARRIE.

Grizzly Bear State. California. See STATES.

Groatworth of Wit Bought with a Million of Repentance. A posthumous tract by Robert GREENE (1592). In part a confession. It attacks MARLOWE and PEELE and is thought to refer to SHAKESPEARE as an "upstart crow."

grog. A strong drink, originally a mixture of spirit and water (two-water grog, three-water grog, etc.) served to British sailors in compliance with an order issued in 1740 by Admiral Edward Vernon. The word is taken from the admiral's nickname. He was called Old Grog because he wore "a grogram cloak in foul weather." Grogram (French gros grain) is a coarse fabric.

Grogan, Tom, see TOM GROGAN.

Grolier de Servières, Jean (1479-1565). French bibliophile; treasurer general of France under Francis I. His passion for fine books regarded alike subject, binding, printing, paper. Designed many of his ornaments himself. The Grolier Club of New York (founded in 1884, incorporated in 1888) was named after him. Its object is "the encouragement and promotion of bookmaking as an art, and the occasional publication of works designed to advance and illustrate that art."

Groote, Gerard (1340-1384). Dutch reformer and founder of the society of BRETHREN OF THE COMMON LIFE.

Gropius, Walter (1883-). German architect, founder of the famous BAUHAUS art school, of which he was director (1919-1928). Later he came to the U.S. and taught at Harvard University.

Grosseteste, Robert. Nicknamed Greathead (?-1253). English divine and scholar. Chancellor of Oxford. Bishop of Lincoln (1235-1253). Vigorously defended his rights and privileges against the Pope and King Henry III. Had the courage to refuse (1253), on the ground of unfitness, the induction into a canonry of the Pope's nephew Frederick di Lavagna; etc. "A man of spotless orthodoxy" and a voluminous writer.

Grossmith, George (1847-1912). English comedian; singer in many Gilbert and Sullivan operas. His son, George Grossmith (1874-1935), is said to have introduced the revue in England; successful in moving pictures (from 1932).

Grosz, George (1893-). German painter of radical views in art and politics. Hater of bourgeoisie and capitalism. Protagonist of Neue Sachlichkeit (New Objectivity). Voluntary exile (since 1932) in U.S. Studio near New York.

Grote, George (1794-1871). English historian, banker by profession. History of Greece (8 vols., 1846-1856), etc.

Grotius, Hugo. Latinized form of Huig de Groot (1583-1645). Dutch jurist and statesman. His De Jure Belli et Pacis (1625) written after his escape to France as leader of Remonstrants, is regarded as the real beginning of the science of international law. His voluminous writings include a number of tragedies.

ground-hog day. February 2. On that day, according to popular legend, the groundhog emerges from his hole, but if he sees his shadow, goes back for six weeks more of winter sleep. See CANDLEMAS DAY.

Ground We Stand On, The. A book of biographical sketches and essays on democracy and the early leaders in democratic thought, by John Dos Passos (1941). The biographical narrative method in this book is a development of that used in the celebrated biographical sections of U.S.A.

Grove, Sir George (1820-1900). British editor of the standard Dictionary of Music and Musicians (1879-1886). Engineer by profession. Built the first iron lighthouse at Jamaica (1841); etc. Director of the Royal College of Music, Kensington (1882-1894).

Growth of the Soil. A novel by Knut Hamsun, the story of an elemental existence in the rough open country of Norway. Isak and Inger, the man and woman of the novel, are individuals, yet have a simple, hardy vitality that makes them types of pioneer life. Hamsun was awarded the Nobel Prize in 1920 for this novel.

Grub Street. The former name of a London street (now Milton Street), which, says

Dr. Johnson, was "Much inhabited by writers of small histories, dictionaries, and temporary poems; whence any mean production is called grubstreet." The word is used allusively for needy authors, literary hacks, and their work. George Gissing has a novel entitled NEW GRUB STREET.

gruel, to give him his. To give him severe punishment; properly, to kill him. The allusion is to the practice in 16th-century France of giving poisoned possets—an art brought to perfection by Catherine de Medici and her Italian advisers.

Grumbo. A giant in the nursery tale of TOM THUMB. A raven drops Tom at the giant's castle; he creeps up Grumbo's sleeve, and the giant shakes him into the sea, where a fish swallows him. The fish, having been caught and brought to Arthur's table, is the means of introducing Tom to the British king, by whom he is knighted.

Grumio. One of the servants of Petruchio in Shakespeare's TAMING OF THE SHREW.

Grundy, Mrs. What will Mrs. Grundy say? What will our very proper and strait-laced neighbors say? The phrase is from Tom Morton's Speed the Plough (1798). In the first scene Mrs. Ashfield shows herself very jealous of neighbor Grundy, and farmer Ashfield says to her: "Be quiet, wull ye? Always ding, ding, Dame Grundy into my ears. What will Mrs. Grundy say? What will Mrs. Grundy think? . . ."

They eat, and drink, and scheme, and plod,
They go to church on Sunday;
And many are afraid of God,
And more of Mrs. Grundy.
Locker Lampson, London Lyrics.

One story has it that the original Mrs. Grundy was the wife of the Hon. Felix Grundy, of Tennessee, who ruled aristocratic society in Washington with a rod of iron. Her edicts were law, her presence was essential to the success of a fashionable gathering, and such an authority she became on social topics that the phrase, "Mrs. Grundy says so-and-so," long outlived her.

Grünwald, Matthias (fl. 1500-1530). German painter. Climax of the Gothic tradition mastered by means of an amazingly modern technique. His altar of Isenheim (now in Colmar) is the painted counterpart of Dante's Divine Comedy.

Gryll. Let Gryll be Gryll, and have his hoggish mind (Spenser, Faerie Queene, II, xii, 87). Don't attempt to wash a blackamoor white; the leopard will never change his spots. Gryll is the Gr. grullos, a hog. When Sir Guyon disenchant the forms in the BOWER OF BLISS some are exceedingly angry, and Gryll, who had been metamorphosed by Acrasia into a hog, abuses him most roundly.

Gryll Grange. A novel (1860) by Thomas Love PEACOCK.

guano. A substance found on some coasts and islands, chiefly in Peruvian waters, frequented by seafowl. It consists chiefly of their partially decomposed excrement and is found in layers from 50 to 60 feet thick. It is rich in phosphate, nitrogen, etc., and is used for fertilizer (since 1841).

Guardian Angel, The. A novel by O. W. HOLMES (1867). The heroine is Myrtle Hazard, and the novel deals with her struggle to make some peaceful adjustment between the different racial strains in her blood. She was born in India and finds life difficult in the New England village where she lives with her aunt from the age of fifteen on. Through her "Guardian Angel," Professor Gridley, and her life as a nurse in the Civil War, she finds herself at last. She marries Clement Lindsay, a young sculptor who rescued her from drowning on one occasion when, disguised as a boy, she ran away from home.

Guarinos. One of Charlemagne's paladins, taken captive at Roncesvalles. Refusing to become a Moslem, he was cast into a dungeon, where he lay for seven years. A joust was then held, and Guarinos was allowed to try his hand at a target. He knelt before the Moor, stabbed him to the heart, and then vaulted on his gray horse Trebozond, and escaped to France.

Guarnieri. Family of Italian violin makers, including Andrea Guarnieri (1626-1698) born in Cremona, his sons, a grandson, and a nephew.

Guatamozin. In THE FAIR GOD, a historical romance by Lew Wallace, the leader of the Aztec forces against Cortez.

Gudrun. (1) The heroine of the great popular German epic poem, Gudrun, or Kudrun, written about 1210. She was the daughter of Hetel, king of Ireland, and was betrothed to Herwig of Seeland, but Hartmut, the king of Norway, carried her off captive. As she would not marry him he put her to all sorts of menial work, such as washing the dirty linen. Thirteen years later her brother and lover appeared on the scene with an army; they laid waste the country, razed the castle, released the prisoners, carried Hartmut off captive, and Gudrun and Herwig were married—to live happy ever after. Gudrun is the German type of wifely loyalty and love.

(2) In the Scandinavian VÖLSUNGA SAGA, the sister of Gunther, who marries first Sigurd (the Siegfried of Teutonic legend) and, after his death, King Atli. She plays a prominent part in the old legends, but is better known as the Kriemhild of the NIBELUNGENLIED or the Guttrune of the operas of Wagner's NIBELUNGEN RING.

(3) Heroine of the Icelandic LAXDALE SAGA, a selfish, independent, forceful woman, married successively to Thorwald, Thord, and Bolli, and in love with Kjartan, whose death she causes.

(4) One of the two leading women characters in D. H. Lawrence's novel Women in Love. She is believed to have been based on Katherine MANSFIELD.

Gudule, St., see under SAINTS.

Guebres or Ghebers. Followers of the ancient Persian religion, reformed by Zoroaster; fire-worshippers; Parsees. The name, which was bestowed upon them by their Arabian conquerors, is now applied to fire-worshippers generally.

Guedalla, Philip (1889-1944). English historian and essayist. "A liberal, a sceptic, a Zionist, and the fine quintessence of Balliol." Shared with Lytton Strachey the reputation of revivifying the writing of history and biography. The Second Empire (1922); Wellington (1931); The Hundred Days (1934); The Hundredth Year (1940); Mr. Churchill (1941); etc.

Guelphs and Ghibellines. Two great parties whose conflicts made much of the history of Italy and Germany in the 12th, 13th, and 14th centuries. The Guelphs were the papal and popular party in Italy; their name is the Italian form of Welfe, as Ghibelline is that of Waiblingen, and the origin of these two words is this: At the battle of Weinsburg, in Suabia (1140), Conrad, Duke of Franconia, rallied his followers with the war-cry Hie Waiblingen (his family estate), while Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony, used the cry of Hie Welfe (the family name). The Ghibellines supported in Italy the side of the German emperors; the Guelphs opposed it, and supported the cause of the Pope. See also BIANCHI.

Guendoloena. According to GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH, daughter of Corineus and wife of Locrine, son of Brute, the legendary king of Britain. She was divorced, and Locrine married Estrildis, by whom he already had a daughter named Sabrina. Guendoloena, greatly indignant, got together a large army, and near the river Stour a battle was fought, in which Locrine was slain. Guendoloena now assumed the government, and one of her first acts was to throw both Estrildis and Sabrina into the river Severn.

Guenever, see GUINEVERE.

Guenn. A novel by Blanche Willis Howard (Teufel) (1884) telling of an American painter's life in a Breton village. Guenn, the heroine, is a fisher girl whom the artist secures as a model. She breaks her heart in futile love for him.

Guérard, Albert Léon (1880-). Franco-American historian and critic. Various studies of French civilization. Professor of General Literature at Stanford University. Staunch supporter of the principle of an auxiliary world language.

Guérin, Georges Maurice de (1810-1839). French poet. His Le Centaur was published posthumously by George Sand in Revue des Deux Mondes (1840). His sister Eugénie Guérin (1805-1848) is famous for her Journal, a posthumously published diary.

Guerin, Jules (1866-1946). American painter; best-known for his murals. Lincoln Memorial Building, Washington, D.C.; Pennsylvania Railroad Station, New York; Civic Opera Building, Chicago; etc.

Guermites, de. In Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST a French noble family of ancient lineage, the leading representatives of the aristocratic class in the novel. They are portrayed with merciless thoroughness, shown to be devoid of culture or vital intelligence, preoccupied solely with maintaining their position as members of an ancient aristocracy, although they know little of the actual history and traditions of their own family. Leading representatives of the de Guermites family in the novel are:

Duc de Guermites (Basin). Courteous and socially affable, although underneath his agreeable veneer he is contemptuous of all who are not of the de Guermites clan.

Duchesse de Guermites (Oriane). Wife of Basin, a beautiful woman who is the object of distant and romantic adoration by the narrator Marcel during his adolescence.

Prince de Guermites. Cousin of the Duc and Duchesse de Guermites, a man of cold and arrogant manner who takes no pains to conceal his contempt for non-aristocrats.

Princesse de Guermites. His wife.

Baron de Charlus. Brother of the Prince and cousin of the Duc de Guermites. See CHARLUS.

Robert Saint-Loup. Nephew of the de Guermites. See SAINT-LOUP.

See also entry below.

Guermites Way, The (Le Coté de Guermites). Book III of REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST by Marcel Proust, published 1920-1927. It deals exhaustively with personalities, places, balls, dinners, and entertainments, gossip and conversation, family history, jealousies and animosities, social and political intrigue, duplicity, adultery, and sexual inversion in the aristocratic circle of the de GUERMITES family. The subject matter is continued in CITIES OF THE PLAIN. The title, The Guermites Way, refers to one of the two paths usually taken by the narrator Marcel during childhood walks at COMBRAY—the one which led past the Guermites property. See also SWANN'S WAY.

Guernsey. One of the Channel Islands. Jersey, Alderney, and Sark are the other important ones. The name signifies "green isle." Famous for its cows and as the residence (1855-1870) of the French poet Victor Hugo.

Guest, Lady Charlotte Elizabeth (1812-1895). Welsh writer. Published Mabinogion (1838-1849) from old Welsh manuscripts with translations. Cf. Bulfinch's Mythology.

Guest, Edgar Albert (1881-). English-born author of homely, sentimental, and moralistic doggerel verse, extremely popular and widely syndicated in newspapers of the U.S. A Heap o' Livin' (1916), Just Folks (1917), and Life's Highway (1933) are collections of it.

Guggenheim. A family dominating copper industry in U.S. Philanthropy on a large scale. The Daniel and Florence Guggenheim Foundation for the promotion of "the well-being of mankind" (1924); the School of Aeronautics at N.Y. University (1925); the Daniel Guggenheim Foundation for the Promotion of Aeronautics (1926-1930); the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation for the provision of annual fellowships to scientists, artists, writers, and musicians.

Guicciardini, Francesco (1483-1540). Florentine historian and statesman in pontifical and Medicean service. Author of Storia d'Italia, principal historical work of the 16th century (20 books, 1561-1564).

Guiccioli, Teresa, Countess. Young wife of an old Italian nobleman, with whom Lord BYRON had an officially recognized liaison and under whose steadying influence the poet's writing increased in skill and facility during the years he was in Italy.

Guiderius. The elder son of CYMBELINE, a legendary king of Britain during the reign of Augustus Caesar. In Shakespeare's CYMBELINE Guiderius and his brother Arviragus are stolen in infancy by Belarius, a banished nobleman, out of revenge, and are brought up by him in a cave.

GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH says that Guiderius succeeded his father, and was slain by Hamo.

Guido, surnamed the Savage. In ORLANDO FURIOSO, son of Constantia and Amon, therefore younger brother of Rinaldo. He is also Astolpho's kinsman. Being wrecked on the coast of the Amazons, he is doomed to fight their ten male champions. He slays them all, and is then compelled to marry ten of the Amazons. He makes his escape with Aleria, his favorite wife, and joins the army of Charlemagne.

Guido d'Arezzo or Guido Aretino. Also known as Fra Guittone (995?–?1050). Italian Benedictine monk and reformer of musical notation and vocal instruction. He introduced the staff of four lines and added new lines above or below to do away with all uncertainty of pitch. It is probable that he invented the system of solmization. Other reforms ascribed to him are more doubtful.

Guido delle Colonne (fl. ca. 1285). Italian writer, known for his Historia Troiana (ca. 1285), a Latin work embodying in it the Troilus story, adapted from the Roman de Troie of BENOÎT DE SAINTE-MAURE. Guido is considered to have been the source of Boccaccio's IL FILOSTRATO. He was one of the poets of the Sicilian School (see COURTLY LOVE) and visited England in the retinue of Edward I when the latter returned from the Crusades.

Guido Franceschini. The nobleman in Browning's RING AND THE BOOK who tries to repair his fortune by marrying Pompilia, the putative child of Pietro and Violante.

Guido Reni, see RENI.

Guignol. The principal character in a popular French puppet-show similar to "Punch and Judy" dating from the 18th century. As the performance comprised macabre and gruesome incidents, the name came to be attached to short plays of this nature; hence GRAND GUIGNOL, a series of such plays, or the theater in which they are performed, in Paris and other places, as London.

Guildenstern. In Shakespeare's HAMLET, one of Hamlet's companions, employed by the King and Queen to divert him, if possible, from his strange and wayward ways.

Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are favourite samples of the thorough-paced time-serving court knave . . . ticketed and to be hired for any hard or dirty work.—Crowden Clarke.

Guillaume de Lorris (fl. ca. 1230). French poet, author of the first part of the Romance of the Rose, which he is believed to have written between 1225 and 1230. The sections of the poem of his authorship emphasize the psychology of COURTLY LOVE from the aristocratic standpoint. See also JEAN DE MEUN.

Guillaume de Machaut (ca. 1300–1377). French poet, the founder of the 14th-century French school of lyric poetry which includes Eustache Deschamps and Jean Froissart. He is best known for his compositions in the forms of the ballade, rondel, chant royal, and the lai, and for his alliance of poetry and music. Chauguillotine. A machine for beheading persons, much used in the French revolution. Joseph Ignace Guillotin (1738–1814), a French physician, first proposed its use in 1789, recommending it reputedly because of the "voluptuously pleasant sensation" produced by the contact of its blade with the neck.

Guinevere (Geoffrey of Monmouth's Guanhumara, the Welsh Gwenhwyvar, meaning "the white ghost"). In the Arthurian legends, the wife of King Arthur. According to Malory (who spells the name Guenever), she was the daughter of Leodegrance, king of the land of Cameliard. She entertains a guilty passion for Sir Launcelot of the Lake, one of the knights of the Round Table, but during the absence of King Arthur in his expedition against Leo, king of the Romans, she is seduced by Modred, her husband's nephew, who has usurped the kingdom. Arthur hastens back, Guinevere flees, and a desperate battle is fought, in which Modred is slain and Arthur mortally wounded. Guinevere takes the veil at Almesbury, where later she dies. She is buried at Glastonbury, and has left her name as a synonym for a beautiful, faithless, but repentant wife. Tennyson, in his INLYLS OF THE KING makes Guinevere guilty only in her passion for Launcelot, and not a party to Modred's treachery.

James Branch Cabell introduces Guinevere into his JURGEN as the heroine of a love episode with Jurgen.

For variant spellings of Guinevere, see GANOR.

Guiney, Louise Imogen (1861–1920). American Catholic poet and essayist whose later life was spent in England. A generous and romantic nature steeped in the past. "Only at ease," said Sir Edmund Gosse, "in a chivalrous and antique dreamland." Songs at the Start (1884); Patrim (essays), 1897; Happy Ending (1909); etc.

Guinicelli or Guinizelli, Guido (fl. ca. 1274). Italian medieval poet, considered the greatest Italian poet before Dante, who praises him in various of his works, including his DIVINE COMEDY. Guinicelli wrote in the tradition of COURTLY LOVE, and his Canzone Of the Gentle Heart (Al Cor Gentil), found as an influence throughout Dante's VITA NUOVA is regarded as the inauguration of "the sweet new style" (IL DOLCE STIL NUOVO).

Guiscard, Robert (1015?–1085). Norman leader. Founder of the state of the Two Sicilies. He is the hero of a powerful dramatic fragment left by Heinrich von Kleist (1777–1811).

Guiscardo. The son of AYMON and squire of Tancred of Salerno. In Dryden's Sigis- monda and Guiscardo, translated from Boccaccio, he secretly marries Tancred's daughter and is strangled.

Guise's motto. "À chacun son tour," on the standards of the Duc de Guise, who put himself at the head of the Catholic League in the 16th century, meant, "My turn will come."

Guiterman, Arthur (1871-1943). American poet and light versifier born in Vienna of American parents. Initiated Rhymed Reviews in the magazine Life. Adopted Molière's L'Ecole des maris in English rhymed verse, successfully produced by Theatre Guild (1933). Wrote libretto and lyrics for The Man Without a Country by Walter Damrosch, produced by the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York (1937).

Guity, Sacha (1885-). French actor and dramatist; writer and producer of moving pictures. The "quintessence of Gallicism." His father, the actor Lucien Germain Guity (1860-1925), appeared in a number of his plays.

Guizot, François Pierre Guillaume (1787-1874). French historian and statesman. Minister in various capacities throughout the reign of citizen king Louis Philippe (1830-1848). His voluminous writings include beside his major historical works a number of Shakespeare translations.

Gulbeyas. The sultana in Byron's DON JUAN. Having seen Juan amongst Lambro's captives, "passing on his way to sale," she causes him to be purchased, and introduces him into the harem in female attire. On discovering that he prefers Dudu, one of the attendant beauties, to herself, she commands both to be stitched up in a sack and cast into the Bosphorus. They contrive, however, to make their escape.

Gulbranssen, Trygve (1894-). Norwegian novelist. Chronicles of an aristocratic Norwegian family living on their huge hill estates. Has been compared with both Knut HAMSUM and Sigrid UNDET.

Gulf Stream. The great, warm ocean current which flows out of the Gulf of Mexico (whence its name) and, passing by the eastern coasts of the United States, is, near the banks of Newfoundland, deflected across the Atlantic to modify the climate of Western Europe as far north as Spitzbergen and Nova Zembla. It washes the shores of the British Isles.

Gulf States, see STATES.

Gulistan (Pers., "the garden of roses"). The famous recueil of moral sentences by Sadi (ca. 1190-1291), the most celebrated of Persian poets except, perhaps, Omar Khayyam. It consists of sections on kings, dervishes, contentment, love, youth, old age, social duties, etc., with many stories and philosophical sayings.

Gullah. One of a group of Negroes, descendants of West African slaves, occupying the sea islands and coast districts of South Carolina, Georgia, and a section of north-eastern Florida. Also their dialect, the modern form of which is a corruption of English. For its use in literature, cf. Porgy by DuBose HEWARD.

Gulliver, Lemuel. The hero of the famous Travels into Several Remote Nations of the World, by Lemuel Gulliver, first a Surgeon, and then a Captain of several ships, written by Jonathan SWIFT (1726). Gulliver first gets wrecked on the coast of Lilliput, a country of pygmies. Subsequently he is thrown among the people of Brobdingnag, giants of tremendous size. In his next voyage he is driven to Laputa, an empire of quack pretenders to science and knavish projectors; and in his fourth voyage he visits the Houyhnhnms, where horses are the dominant powers.

Gulliver's Travels, frequently looked upon as a mere children's book, is in reality a biting social and political satire.

Whether we read it, as children do, for the story or as historians, for the political allusions, or as men of the world, for the satire and philosophy, we have to acknowledge that it is one of the wonderful and unique books of the world's literature.—Edmund Gosse, History of English Literature.

Gull's Hornbook, The. A prose satire by Thomas DEKKER (1609), in the form of a mock "hornbook," or primer, for the guidance of wealthy young gallants, called "gulls," who came to London for adventure and experience. It tells them how to behave at the theater, the tavern, the gambling-house, and so on.

Gulnare. In Byron's CORSAIR, queen of the harem, and the most beautiful of all the slaves of Seyd. She is rescued by Conrad the corsair from the flames of the palace, and, when Conrad is imprisoned, she goes to his dungeon, confesses her love, and proposes that he murder the sultan and flee. As Conrad refuses to assassinate Seyd, she herself does it, and then flees with Conrad to the "Pirate's Isle." The rest of the tale is continued in LARA, in which Gulnare assumes the name of Kaled, and appears as a page.

Gummere, Francis Barton (1855-1919). American university professor and authority on popular ballads. Old English Ballads (1894); Democracy and Poetry (1911); etc. His theory of the origin of English and Scottish ballads in group dancing is indebted to HERDER and GRIMM. It is presented in some detail in The Popular Ballad (1907).

Gummidge, Mrs. In Dickens' DAVID COPPERFIELD the widow of Dan'el Peggotty's partner. She keeps house for Dan'el, who is a bachelor. Old Mrs. Gummidge has a deep-rooted conviction that she is neglected and uncared for, a waif in the wide world, of no use to anyone. She is always talking of herself as "a poor lone lorn cretur."

Gump, Andy and Min. Two popular characters of the American comic supplement in the 1920's, created by the cartoonist Sidney Smith. Andy Gump is a long, chinless individual, full of foibles, particularly a habit of bragging that always ends in trouble and a frantic call for his faithful wife Min. In the election of 1924 Andy Gump ran for Congress and was even unofficially nominated for president.

Gundy, Solomon, see SWAP, SOLOMON.

Gunga Din. One of Kipling's Barrack-Room Ballads (1892) in praise of a Hindu water carrier for a British regiment.

An' for all 'is dirty 'ide
'E was white, clear white, inside
When 'e went to tend the wounded under fire!
It was "Din, Din, Din!"
With the bullets kickin' dust-spots on the green
When the cartridges ran out
You could hear the front-ranks shout,
"Hi! ammunition-mules an' Gunga Din!"

Gunnar. In the Icelandic saga of BURNT NJAL, friend of Njal and husband of the trouble-making HALLGERDA. Because of her quarrels and misadventures, and the feud caused between the two men through her vengefulness, Gunnar is declared an outlaw. He refuses to leave Iceland, which makes it possible for his enemies to kill him without payment of the WERGELD.

Gunnarsson, Gunnar (1889-). Icelandic novelist. His four-volume "Borg" series covers three generations of an Icelandic farm family. Among his books available in English are Guest the One-Eyed (1930); Seven Days' Darkness (1930); The Good Shepherd (1940); etc.

Gunpowder Plot. The project of a few Roman Catholics to destroy James I with the Lords and Commons assembled in the Houses of Parliament, on November 5, 1605. It was to be done by means of gunpowder when the king went in person to open Parliament. Robert Catesby originated the plot, and Guy Fawkes undertook to fire the gunpowder. The plot was betrayed, and Guy Fawkes was arrested the night before it was to have been put into execution. November 5 is still celebrated in England and parts of the Empire as Guy Fawkes Day.

Please to remember the fifth of November
The gunpowder treason and plot.

See also GUY.

Gunther. In the NIBELUNGENLIED, a Burgundian king, brother of Kriemhild, the wife of Siegfried. He resolved to wed the martial queen BRUNHILD, who had made a vow to marry only the man who could ride through the flames that encircled her castle. Gunther failed (see GRANI), but Siegfried did so in his likeness and remained with the Queen for three nights, his sword being between them all the time. Gunther then married Brunhild, but when Kriemhild later told Brunhild that it was Siegfried who had ridden through the fire, jealousy sprang up between the families. Gunther, with unpardonable ingratitude, was privy to the murder of his friend and brother-in-law, and was himself slain in the dungeon of Etzel's palace by his sister Kriemhild. Gundacarius, a Burgundian king who, with his whole tribe, perished at the sword of the Huns in 437, is supposed to be the historical character round whom these legends collected. In the Völsunga Saga, the Scandinavian version of the same legend, Gunther figures prominently, as also in the operas of Wagner's NIBELUNGEN RING.

Gunther, John (1901-). American newspaper correspondent, known for his accounts of European and Asiatic affairs during the period from 1926 to 1939. He is the author of best-selling books of informal contemporary history and prediction, extremely popular during the period of crisis immediately preceding World War II: Inside Europe (1936); Inside Asia (1939); Inside Latin America (1941); Inside U.S.A. (1947). See also DURANTY, WALTER; SHEEAN, VINCENT.

Guppy, William. In Dickens's Bleak House, a vulgar young law clerk, hopelessly in love with Esther Summerson.

Gurth. In Scott's IVANHOE, the swineherd and thrall of Cedric of Rotherwood.

Gurton, Gammer, see GAMMER GURTON.

Gustavus II. Known as Gustavus Adolphus (1594-1632). King of Sweden. Called "Lion of the North," also "Snow King." Supported Protestant cause in Thirty Years' War (1630-1632). Won the great battle of Lutzen against Wallenstein, but was mortally wounded. One of the greatest generals of all times. Saved Protestantism in Germany. His death left Sweden under a regency with his six-year-old daughter CHRISTINA as nominal queen.

Gutenberg's Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Guthrie, Thomas Anstey, pseudonym F. Anstey (1856-1934). English humorist, fantasist and playwright. Vice-Versâ or a Lesson to Fathers (1882); The Tinted Venus (1885), adapted by Ogden NASH as One Touch of Venus, popular musical comedy (1944); Baboo Jabberjee, B.A. (1897); The Brass Bottle (1900); etc. Did adaptations from Molière. Long on the staff of Punch.

Gutrune. In Götterdämmerung, the last of the four operas of Wagner's NIBELUNGEN RING, the sister of Gunther, courted and won by Siegfried. She is the GUDRUN of the VOLSUNGA SAGA and the KRIEMHILD of the NIBELUNGENLIED.

guy. An effigy of a man, stuffed with combustibles and supposed to represent Guy FAWKES, carried round in procession and finally burned on November 5, in memory of GUNPOWDER PLOT; hence, any dowdy, fantastic figure, a "fright." In America the word, as applied to a person, has a wide significance, and can mean almost anyone. "A good guy" is a term of approval.

Guy Mannering. A novel by Sir Walter Scott (1815), a tale of the period of George III. Because of the antagonism which his magistrate father had aroused among the gypsies, Harry Bertram, the hero, heir to the Ellengowan estate, is kidnapped by a lawyer named Glossin, who secures the estate. Harry's sister Lucy, who is forced to leave her home, is hospitably entertained by Guy Mannering and his daughter Julia. The gypsy, Meg Merrilies, befriends Harry Bertram, aids his escape and afterwards tells him he is the rightful heir of the Ellengowan estate. Glossin is then sent to prison, where he enters the cell of Dirk Hatteraick, a Dutch smuggler, and is strangled by him. Eventually Harry Bertram marries Julia Mannering. The book is noted not so much for its plot as for the famous characters of Dandie DINMONT, PLEYDELL, HATTERAICK, DOMINIE SAMPSON and Meg MERRILIES.

Guy of Warwick. An English hero of legend and romance, whose exploits were first written down by some Anglo-Norman poet of the 12th century and were, by the 14th century, accepted as quite authentic history.

To obtain Phelis (Felice) as his wife he undertook many knightly deeds. He rescued the daughter of the Emperor of Germany, and went to fight against the Saracens, slaying the doughty Coldran, Elmaye King of Tyre, and the soldan himself. Then he returned and wedded Phelis, but in forty days went back to the Holy Land, where he slew the giant Amaranth, and many others. Having achieved all this and numerous other adventures, he now became a hermit near Warwick. Daily he went in disguise to his own castle and begged bread of his wife Phelis; but on his death-bed he sent her a ring, by which she recognized her lord, and went to close his dying eyes.

Guyon, Sir (from Sp. guía, "a guide"). The knightly hero of Spenser's FAÉRIE QUEENE, Bk. II, typical of Temperance or Self-government. He destroys the witch Acrasia, and her BOWER OF BLISS. The Palmer, typifying Prudence and Sobriety, is his companion, and Brigador ("bridle of gold") his horse.

Guy Rivers. A novel by William Gilmore SIMMS (1834). The scene is laid in Georgia, and the hero and a romantic border bandit contend for the heroine.

Guzmán de Alfarache, The Life and Adventures of. A famous picaresque romance by Mateo Alemán in two parts (Sp., pt. I, 1599; pt. II, 1604).

Guzmán, Leonora de, see LEONORA.

Gwalchmei. The name under which GAWAIN appears in the Welsh Mabinogion.

Gwyn, Nell (1652-1687). An actress, and one of the mistresses of Charles II. She was a great favorite with the public. Scott mentions her in PEVERIL OF THE PEAK.

Gwynplaine. The hero of Victor Hugo's romance THE MAN WHO LAUGHS (L'Homme qui rit).

Gyas and Cloanthus. In Virgil's AENEID, two companions of Aeneas, generally mentioned together as "fortis Gyas fortisque Cloanthus." The phrase has become proverbial for two very similar characters.

Gyges. A king of Lydia of the 7th century B.C., who founded a new dynasty, warred against Asurbanipal of Assyria, and is memorable in legend for his ring and his prodigious wealth.

According to Plato, Gyges descended into a chasm of the earth, where he found a brazen horse. Opening the sides of the animal, he found the carcass of a man, from whose finger he drew off a brazen ring which rendered him invisible.

Why, did you think that you had Gyges ring,
Or the herb that gives invisibility [fern-seed]?
Beaumont and Fletcher, Fair Maid of the Inn, I, 1.

It was by the aid of the ring that he obtained possession of the wife of CANDUALES and, through her, of his kingdom.

gymkhana. A word of Anglo-Indian origin, the first syllable being from English gymnastics. A meeting for athletic contests, as racing, swimming, etc.

Gynt, Peer, see PEER GYNT.

Gypsy. A member of a dark-skinned nomadic race which first appeared in England about the beginning of the 16th century, and, as they were thought to have come from Egypt, were named Egyptians, which soon became corrupted to Gypcians, and so to its present form. They call themselves Romany (from Gypsy rom, a man, husband), which is also the name of their language—a debased Hindu dialect with large additions of words from Persian, Armenian, and many European languages.

The name of the largest group of European gypsies is Atzigan; this, in Turkey and Greece, became Tshingian, in the Balkans and Roumania Tsigan, in Hungary Czigany, in Germany Zigeuner, in Italy Zingari, in Portugal Cigano, and in Spain Gitano. The original name is said to mean "dark man." See also BOHEMIAN.

There is a legend that the gypsies are waifs and strays on the earth because they refused to shelter the Virgin and her child in their flight to Egypt.

H

Habakkuk. A Hebrew prophet whose book of prophecies (3 chapters) holds the eighth place among the minor prophets of the Old Testament. Nothing is known about his life, and he has become the subject of many legends. Both his dialogue with Jehovah and his hymn on promised deliverance exhibit poetical genius of high order.

habeas corpus (Lat., "that you have the body"). The Habeas Corpus Act was passed in 1679, and defined a provision of similar character in the Magna Charta, to which also it added certain details. Its chief purpose was to prohibit any judge, under severe penalties, from refusing to issue to a prisoner a writ of habeas corpus by which the jailer was obliged to produce the prisoner in court in person and to certify the cause of imprisonment, thus preventing people's being imprisoned on mere suspicion, and making it illegal for one to be left in prison an indefinite time without trial.

It further provides that every accused person shall have the question of his guilt decided by a jury of twelve, and not by a Government agent or nominee; that no prisoner can be tried a second time on the same charge; that every prisoner may insist on being examined within twenty days of his arrest, and tried at the next session; and that no one may be sent to prison beyond the seas, either within or without the British dominions.

The Habeas Corpus Act has been suspended in times of political and social disturbance, and its provisions have been more than once amended and extended.

Habington, William (1605-1654). English poet; author of the lyrical collection Castara (1634).

Hachette, Louis Christophe François (1800-1864). French publisher, founder of the Paris firm of Hachette et Cie. (1826.)

hack. Originally, short for "hackney." A horse let out for hire; hence, one who hires himself out for literary work. LOWELL wrote: "Dryden, like Lessing, was a hack writer . . ."

Hacker, Louis Morton (1899-). American historian, following in the tradition of the great historical sociologists, Marx, Sombart, Weber, etc. The Triumph of American Capitalism (1940); etc.

Hackett, Francis (1883-). Irish-American critic, biographer, and novelist. Henry the Eighth: A Personal History (1929); Francis the First (1934); Queen Anne Boleyn (1938), a novel.

Hades. In HOMER, the name of the god (Pluto) who reigns over the dead; in later classical mythology, the abode of the departed spirits, a place of gloom but not necessarily like the Christian Hell, a place of punishment and torture. As the state or abode of the dead it corresponds to the Hebrew Sheol, a word which, in the authorized version, has frequently been translated by the misleading Hell. Hence Hades is sometimes vulgarly used as a euphemism for Hell.

Hadith (Arab., hadith, "a saying or tradition"). The traditions about the prophet Mahomet's sayings and doings. This compilation, which was made in the 10th century by the Moslem jurists Moshin and Bokhari, forms a supplement to the Koran as the Talmud to the Jewish Scriptures. Like the Jewish Gemara, the Hadith was not allowed originally to be committed to writing, but the danger of the traditions being perverted or forgotten led to their being placed on record.

hadji. A pilgrim; specifically, a Moslem having completed the required pilgrimage or HADJ to Mecca. The word is often prefixed to a name as an epithet of honor. A delightful instance is that of Hadji Halef Omar ben Hadji Abbul Abbas ibn Hadji David al Gos-sarah in Karl May's stories. Here ben stands for "son of," and ibn for "grandson of."

Hadley, Arthur Twining (1856-1930). American economist. President of Yale University (1899-1921).

Hadleyburg, The Man that Corrupted. See MAN THAT CORRUPTED HADLEYBURG.

Hadrian. Latin Publius Aelius Hadrianus (76-138 A.D.). Roman emperor (117-138). Established the Euphrates as the eastern boundary of the Roman empire as part of his policy of consolidation and of renouncing conquest. Caused construction in Britain of Hadrian's Wall (120-123) from Solway Firth to mouth of Tyne as a protection against the Picts and Scots.

Haeckel, Ernst Heinrich (1834-1919). Well-known German biologist and monistic philosopher. Supposed to have carried the logic of pure positivistic science to the sarcastic conclusion: "God is invisible; man is an image of God. Ergo, God is a gaseous mammal." Formulated the basic law of biogenetics: "The development of the individual recapitulates the evolution of the species." His best-known popular work is Riddles of the Universe (Welträtsel, 1899).

Hafed. In The Fire-Worshippers, the third tale in Moore's LALLA ROOKH, a Gheber, or fire-worshiper, in love with Hinda, the emir's daughter. He is the leader of a band sworn to free their country or die in the attempt. His rendezvous is betrayed, but when the Moslem comes to arrest him, he throws himself into the sacred fire and is burnt to death.

Hafiz. Real name Shams ud-din Moham-med (fl. 14th century). The great Persian poet and one of the greatest poets of the world. His ghazels (i.e., songs, odes) tell of love and wine, nightingales, flowers, the instability of all things human, of Allah and the Prophet, etc. His tomb at Shiraz is still the resort of pilgrims. The name Hafiz is Arabic for "one who knows the KORAN and HADITH by heart."

Hagan or Hagen. In the NIBELUNGENLIED and the old Norse sagas (where he is called Hogni), a prominent character, son of a mortal and a sea-goblin. In the Nibelungenlied, Hagan kills Siegfried, then seizes the Nibelung hoard, and buries it in the Rhine, intending to appropriate it. Kriemhild, after her marriage with Etzel, king of the Huns, invites him to the court of her husband, and cuts off his head. He is described as "well grown, strongly built, with long sinewy legs, deep broad chest, hair slightly grey, of terrible visage, and of lordly gait." There are other versions of the story, many of them quite contradictory, and the rough and treacherous Hagan appears in many legends. He is a prominent character in Gotterdammerung (The Dusk of the Gods), the last of the four operas of Wagner's NIBELUNGEN RING.

Hagar. In the Old Testament, the servant of Abraham's wife Sarai, who became the mother of ISHMAEL. After the birth of Isaac, Hagar and Ishmael were cast out into the wilderness at the instigation of Sarai. On one occasion, when they were perishing of thirst, an angel spoke to Hagar and showed her a well of water.

Hagedorn, Hermann (1882-). American poet. Great friend of Theodore ROOSEVELT. Biographer of Edwin Arlington ROBINSON.

Hagenbeck, Karl (1844-1913). German wild-animal dealer. Established animal park near Hamburg (1907), famous for its successful reproduction of natural habitats.

Haggadah. The portion of the MIDRASH which contains rabbinical interpretations of the historical and legendary, ethical, parabolic, and speculative parts of the Hebrew Scriptures; the portion devoted to law, practice, and doctrine is called the Halachah. They were commenced in the 2nd century A. D. and completed by the 11th.

Haggard, Sir Henry Rider (1856-1925). English romancer. Author of King Solomon's Mines (1885); She (1887); Allan Quatermain (1887); Ayesha (1905), etc.

Author of Seductio ad Absurdum (1927); Congo Solo (1933); The Soong Sisters (1941); China to Me (1945); Raffles of Singapore (1946), and numerous short stories about her life in China mostly appearing in the New Yorker. Cf. the collection Mr. Pan (1942).

Haidee. In Byron's DON JUAN (ii-iv) the beautiful Greek girl who finds Don Juan when he is cast ashore and restores him to animation. "Her hair was auburn, and her eyes were black as death." Her mother, a Moor, is dead, and her father, Lambro, a rich Greek pirate, is living on one of the Cyclades. She and Juan fall in love with each other during the absence of Lambro from the island. On his return Juan is sent from the island; Haidee goes mad and, after a lingering illness, dies. There is also a Haidee who figures in Dumas' COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO.

haikai. A kind of brief Japanese composition cultivated in later feudal ages. The HOKKU is its poetic variety.

Hail and Farewell. An autobiography by the Irish author, George MOORE, in three volumes: Ave, Salve and Vale (1911-1914).

Hail Columbia. An American national hymn by Joseph Hopkinson (1798), beginning:

Hail, Columbia! happy land!
Hail, ye heroes! heaven-born band
Who fought and bled in Freedom's cause.

Haile Selassie (1891-). Name assumed upon coronation by Ras Tafari, emperor of Ethiopia (1930). Called the "Lion of Judah." Driven from Ethiopia by Italian conquest (1936-1941). Restored to his throne in 1941.

Hairy Ape, The. An expressionistic (see EXPRESSIONISM) drama by Eugene O'NEILL (1922). The hero, Yank, is a great, crude stoker on a huge ocean liner. He is sustained by his feeling that the man who works somehow "belongs," until he suddenly becomes wild with fury at the look on the face of a society girl who inspects him at his task.

Hajar-al-Aswad. The famous black stone in the northeast corner of the KAABA. It is an irregular oval, about 7 inches in breadth, and is surrounded with a circle of gold. The legend is that when Abraham wished to build the Kaaba, the stones came to him of their own accord, and the patriarch commanded all the faithful to kiss this one.

The stone is probably an aerolite, and it was worshiped long before Mahomet's day, for in the 2nd century A. D. Maximus Tyrius spoke of the Arabians paying homage to it, and Persian legend states that it was an emblem of Saturn.

Ibn Abbas reports that the Prophet said that when it came from Paradise it was whiter than milk, and that it had become black through the sins of the millions that had kissed it. On the Day of the Resurrection it is to have two eyes, by which it will recognize all those who have kissed it, and a tongue with which it will bear witness to Allah.

Hajji Baba of Ispahan, The Adventures of. A picaresque romance by James MORIER (1824), dealing with life in Persia. The hero is a sort of Persian Gil Blas whose roguery takes him into all spheres of Persian society. In a sequel, Hajji Baba in England (1828), he visits England as a government official.

Hakim, Adonbec el. In Scott's TALISMAN, Saladin in the disguise of a physician. He visits Richard Coeur de Lion in sickness, and gives him a medicine in which the "talisman" has been dipped, and the sick king recovers from his fever.

Hajji Khalfah. Original name Mustafa ibn-Abdallah (1600?-1658). Turkish historian and bibliographer. Compiled a bibliographical lexicon, with memoirs of the authors, of over 25,000 books in Arabic, Turkish, and Persian.

Halachah. The division of the MIDRASH that deals with the interpretation of the law, points of doctrine, etc. See also HAGGADAH; GEMARA; MISHNA.

The halachah . . . had even greater authority than the Scriptures of the Old Testament, since it explained and applied them.—Edersheim, Life of Jesus the Messiah, vol. 1, bk. 1, ch. 1.

halcyon days. A time of happiness and prosperity. Halcyon is the Greek for a kingfisher, compounded of hals, "the sea," and kyo, "to brood on." The ancient Sicilians believed that the kingfisher laid its eggs and incubated for fourteen days, before the winter solstice, on the surface of the sea, during which time the waves of the sea were always unruffled.

"Amidst our arms as quiet you shall be
As halcyon brooding on a winter's sea."
Dryden.

Haldane, John Burdon Sanderson (1892-). English biologist, whose forebears were philosophers, scientists, and statesmen. Worked in fields of human physiology and genetics. In 1933, disgusted with the Chamberlain policy in England, he entered the political field. Became a Marxist. A "burly, tweedy, shaggy man." Many academic distinctions. Research in genetics. Halifax.

Halifax Law. By this law, whoever committed theft in the liberty of Halifax was to be executed on the Halifax gibbet, a kind of guillotine. Hence the expression go to Halifax.

At Hallifax the law so sharpe doth deale,
That whoso more than thirteen pence dothe steale.
They have a jyn that wondrous quick and well
Sends thieves all headless into heaven or hell
Taylor (the Water Poet), Works ii. (1630).

Hull, Hell, and Halifax. An old beggars' and vagabonds' "prayer," as quoted by Taylor, the Water Poet (early 17th century), was:

From Hull, Hell, and Halifax,
Good Lord, deliver us.

"Hell" was probably the least feared as being farthest from them; "Hull" was to be avoided because it was so well governed that beggars had little chance of getting anything without doing hard labor for it; and "Halifax," because anyone caught stealing cloth in that town was beheaded without intermediate proceedings.

Halifax, John, see JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN.

Hall, Catherine. The heroine of Thackeray's satiric romance CATHERINE. After marriage she becomes Catherine Hayes.

Hall, Granville Stanley (1844-1924). American psychologist and educator. President Clark University (1889-1919). A leader in the "new" psychology. Adolescence (1904).

She became an intimate friend of Queen Maria Carolina of Naples and played an important part in Anglo-Neapolitan political intrigues. Mother of Nelson's daughter Horatia (1801). Arrested for debt in 1813 but released in 1814. Painted by ROMNEY. Cf. The Divine Lady (1924), by "E. Barrington" (L. Adams Beck).

Hamlet. A tragedy by Shakespeare (ca. 1600). Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, learns to his horror that Claudius, his uncle, and Gertrude, his mother, now reigning together as king and queen, have been responsible for the death of his royal father. Although he is in love with the fair Ophelia, he puts her roughly aside and pretends madness in order to devote himself to revenge. But he cannot bring himself to the point of taking action. While he is vacillating, Laertes, the brother of Ophelia, who has gone mad and drowned herself, challenges him to a supposedly friendly duel, but, encouraged by the King, uses a poisoned sword. The swords are exchanged by accident and both Hamlet and Laertes receive their death wounds. On learning of the treachery, the dying Hamlet at last kills the King.

The play is based on a crude story told by the 13th-century Saxo Grammaticus, a Danish chronicler, in his Historia Danica (first printed 1514), which found a place in Pierre de Belleforest's Histoires Tragiques (1570), a French miscellany of translated legend and romance.

"The whole play," says SCHLEGEL, "is intended to show that calculating consideration exhausts . . . the power of action." GOETHE is of the same opinion, and says that "Hamlet is a noble nature, without the strength of nerve which forms a hero. He sinks beneath a burden which he cannot bear, and cannot cast aside."

As a result of the literary criticism of the romantic period, Hamlet came to be regarded as the prototype of the modern introspective man, the first outstanding representative of this psychological phenomenon in a development which culminated in the 19th-century DECADENTS.

it's Hamlet without the Prince. Said when the person who was to have taken the principal place at some function is absent.

Handy Andy. A novel by Samuel Lover (1842). The Irish hero Andy Rooney "had the most singularly ingenious knack of doing everything the wrong way." Despite his blunders Handy Andy finally wins his cousin, Oonah, and is declared heir to Lord Scatterbrain's title and wealth.

Hanfstaengl, Franz (1804-1877). German lithographer and photographer; founded a printing establishment for art reproductions in Munich. Copied in lithographs canvases of Dresden gallery (till 1852). Ernst Frank Sedgwick Hanfstaengl, known as "Putzi," was a piano-playing crony of HITLER.

Hanging Gardens of Babylon. A square garden (according to Diodorus Siculus), 400 ft. each way, rising in a series of terraces from the river in the northern part of Babylon, and provided with earth to a sufficient depth to accommodate trees of a great size. These famous gardens were one of the Seven Wonders of the World, and according to tradition were constructed by Nebuchadnezzar to gratify his wife Amytis, who felt weary of the flat plains of Babylon, and longed for something to remind her of her native Median hills.

Hanks, Nancy (1783-1818). Mother of Abraham Lincoln. Married Thomas Lincoln (1806).

Hanna, Marcus Alonzo, known as Mark Hanna (1837-1904). American businessman and politician. Influential presidential adviser to McKINLEY. Cf. Hanna by Thomas BEER.

Hannah. In the Old Testament, the mother of SAMUEL, because of whose vow he was given to the service of the temple as a child.

Hannah Thurston. A novel by Bayard TAYLOR (1864), dealing with life in a small town. The heroine is a Quaker and an advocate of woman's rights. She finally gives up her independence to marry Maxwell Woodberry.

Hannibal (249-183 B.C.). Carthaginian general, son of HAMILCAR BARCA. Swore eternal enmity to Rome. Invaded Italy from Spain, crossing the Alps with elephants by way of the Little St. Bernard, and plunged Rome into immediate danger through his victory at Cannae (216). Hence the proverbial rallying cry in the face of desperate danger, Hannibal ante portas, "Hannibal at the gates." Defeated by Scipio Africanus and recalled to Africa. Escaped extradition to Rome by committing suicide.

Hanno. Carthaginian navigator who led a colonizing expedition down the west coast of Africa (5th century B.C.).

Hanno the Great. Carthaginian politician of 3rd century B.C. Favored peaceful relations with Rome in opposition to HAMILCAR BARCA and HANNIBAL.

Han of Iceland (Han d'Islande). A romance by Victor Hugo (1823). The hero is a wild and blood-thirsty individual boasting descent from the monster, Ingulph the Exterminator. His career is a long succession of crimes and horrors. After the loss of his son, he becomes even more venomous but at last gives himself up to justice, being "tired of life since it cannot be a lesson and an example to a successor."

Hanotaux, Gabriel (1853-1944). French historian and statesman. Histoire illustrée de la guerre de 1914 (17 vols., 1915-1926); etc.

Hanover, House of. Electoral house of Germany descended from the Welf (GUELPH) family, which gave the four Georges to England as kings of England. The House of Hanover was succeeded by royal houses of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, and Windsor (George V).

Hansards. Official reports of parliamentary proceedings in England, named after the printer of the House of Commons journals (from 1774), Luke Hansard (1752-1828).

Hans Brinker or The Silver Skates. A well-known story for children by Mary Mapes Dodge (Am., 1865). The hero is a Dutch boy, and the book gives an interesting picture of life in Holland.

Hanseatic League. The confederacy, first established in 1239, between certain cities of northern Germany for their mutual prosperity and protection. The diet which used to be held every three years was called the Hansa (Old High German for Association), and the members of it Hansards. The league in its prosperity comprised eighty-five towns; it declined rapidly in the Thirty Years War; in 1669 only six cities were represented; and the last three members of the league (Hamburg, Lübeck, and Bremen) joined the German Customs Union in 1889.

Hänsel and Gretel. A light opera by HUMPERDINCK (1893) based on the well-known fairy tale by the Brothers GRIMM. It portrays the adventures of Hansel and Gretel, the broom-maker's children, with the Sand Man, the Dew Man and the terrible Crunch Witch.

Happy Valley, the. The home of the Prince of Abyssinia in Dr. Johnson's tale of RASSELAS. It is placed in the kingdom of Amhara, and is inaccessible except in one spot through a cave in a rock. It is a Garden of Peace, completely isolated from the world, and replete with every luxury, but life there is so monotonous that the philosopher, Imlac, and the prince, Rasselas, are glad to escape. Afterwards they idealize it and after many experiences in less pleasant places, make their way back at last.

Happy Warrior, The Character of the. Famous poem (1807) by William WORDSWORTH.

Hapsburg. A princely German family whose name is derived from the Habsburg (Hawk's Castle) in what is now Switzerland. Counts of Hapsburg, known as early as the hara-kiri (Jap. hara, "the belly," kiri, "to cut"). A method of suicide by disemboweling practiced by Japanese military officials, daimios, etc., when in serious disgrace or liable to be sentenced to death. The first recorded instance of hara-kiri, or Happy Dispatch, as it is also called, is that of Tametomo, brother of Sutoku, an ex-Emperor in the 12th century, after a defeat at which most of his followers were slain.

Harbor, The. A novel of New York City by Ernest POOLE (Am., 1915). The hero, who tells the story, has by nature the would-be author's tendency to see life from the artist's point of view, and his Manhattan boyhood, his college life and his Bohemian days in Paris all encourage this disposition, but his wife's father, Dillon, a scientific engineer, and his college friend, Joe Kramer, who becomes a radical labor leader, introduce him to other attitudes toward life, reflected always, to his imaginative mind, in the changing perspectives of the Harbor.

Hard Cash. A novel by Charles READE (1863), written to expose abuses in private lunatic asylums. See DODD.

Hardcastle, Squire. In Goldsmith's comedy, SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER, a jovial, prosy, but hospitable country gentleman of the old school. He loves to tell his long-winded stories about Prince Eugene and the Duke of Marlborough. He says, "I love everything that's old—old friends, old times, old manners, old books, old wine."

Mrs. Hardcastle. A very "genteel" lady indeed. Mr. Hardcastle is her second husband, and Tony LUMPKIN her son by her former husband. She is fond of "genteel" society, and the latest fashions.

Miss Hardcastle. The pretty, bright-eyed, lively daughter of Squire Hardcastle. She is in love with young Marlow, and "stoops" to a pardonable deceit "to conquer" his bashfulness and win him.

Harden, Maximilian Felix Ernst. Real surname Witkowski (1861-1927). German journalist and brother of the historian of literature Georg Witkowski (1863-1939). During World War I, Harden often attacked German government policies. Wrote, among other books Deutschland, Frankreich, England (1923).

Harding, Rev. Septimus. One of the clergymen in Trollope's Chronicles of Barsetshire (see BARSETSHIRE), described as "a good man without guile, believing humbly in the religion he has striven to teach and guided by the precepts which he has striven to learn."

Harding, Warren Gamaliel (1865-1923). Twenty-ninth president of the United States (1921-1923), whose administration was the most corrupt in American history. Cf. the novel Revelry (1926) by Samuel Hopkins Adams.

Hardmuth, Frank. The assistant district attorney in THE WITCHING HOUR, a play by Augustus THOMAS.

Hardouin, Jean (1646-1729). A learned Jesuit, chronologer, and numismatist, and librarian to Louis le Grand. He was so skeptical that he doubted the truth of all received history, denied the authenticity of the Aeneid of Virgil, the Odes of Horace, etc., placed little faith in deductions drawn from medals and coins, regarded all councils before that of Trent as chimerical, etc. Thus he became typical of the doubting philosopher.

Even Père Hardouin would not enter his protest against such a collection — Dr. A. Clarke, Essay.

hardshell. A term used in American politics for an "out-and-outer," one prepared, and anxious, to "go the whole hog." It was originally applied to a very strict and rigid sect of Baptists, their somewhat weaker brethren being known as softshells.

Hard Times. A novel by DICKENS (1854), dramatized in 1867, and called Under the Earth, or The Sons of Toil. Josiah Bounderby, a street Arab who has raised himself to banker and cotton prince, proposes marriage to Louisa, daughter of Thomas Gradgrind, Esq., and is accepted. One night the bank is robbed of £150, and Bounderby believes Stephen Blackpool to be the thief, because he dismissed him, as obnoxious to the mill hands; but the culprit is Tom Gradgrind, the banker's brother-in-law, who lies in hiding for a while, and then escapes out of the country.

Hardwick, Nan. The heroine of Masefield's TRAGEDY OF NAN.

Hardy, Thomas (1840-1928). English novelist, short-story writer, and poet, known for the pessimism of his ideas, the bareness and strength of his style, and his powerful, realistic studies of life in the bleak English countryside, in which individuals are defeated in their struggle against their physical and social environment and the caprices of chance. Hardy divided his prose work into three groups: novels of character and environment; romances and fantasies; and novels of ingenuity, stressing turns of plot. In the first group are UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE (1872); FAR FROM THE MADDING CROWD (1874); THE RETURN OF THE NATIVE (1878); THE MAYOR OF CASTERBRIDGE (1886); THE WOODLANDERS (1887); TESS OF THE D'URBERVILLES (1891); JUDE THE OBSCURE (1896). The second group includes: A PAIR OF BLUE EYES (1873); The Trumpet-Major (1880); TWO ON A TOWER (1882); The Well Beloved (1897). Those of the last group are Desperate Remedies (1871); THE HAND OF ETHELBERTA (1876); A LAODICEAN (1882). See also WESSEX. Hardy's outstanding work in poetry is THE DYNASTS (1903, 1906, 1908). Other poetry includes: Wessex Poems, And Other Verses (1898); Poems of the Past and the Present (1902); Time's Laughingstocks, And Other Verses (1909); Satires of Circumstance (1911-1914). The Queen of Cornwall, a play, was produced in 1923. Thomas Hardy is considered one of the most important figures in the English revolt at the end of the 19th century against the Victorian tradition.

hare. It is unlucky for a hare to cross your path, because witches were said to transform themselves into hares.

A witch is a kind of hare
And marks the weather
As the hare doth.
Ben Jonson, Sad Shepherd, ii, 2.

According to medieval "science," the hare was a most melancholy beast, and ate wild succory in the hope of curing itself; its flesh, of course, was supposed to generate melancholy in any who partook of it.

Another superstition was that hares are sexless, or that they change their sex every year. And among the Hindus the hare is sacred to the moon because, as they affirm, the outline of a hare is distinctly visible in the full disk.

first catch your hare. See under CATCH.

mad as a March hare. Hares are unusually shy and wild in March, which is their rutting season.

Erasmus says "Mad as a marsh hare," and adds, "hares are wilder in marshes from the absence of hedges and cover."

the hare and the tortoise. Everyone knows the fable of the race between the hare and the tortoise, won by the latter, and the moral, "Slow and steady wins the race." The French equivalent is Pas à pas le boeuf prend le lièvre.

Of or pertaining to Robert Harley (1661-1724) and his son Edward (1689-1741) or their celebrated collections of books, pamphlets, etc. The Harleian manuscripts were acquired by the British government for the British Museum. A selection of Harleian pamphlets was published as The Harleian Miscellany (1744-1746).

Harlem. A section of New York City inhabited largely by Negroes and Latin Americans, popular among intellectuals and "society" people of the 1920's because of its cabarets and SPEAKEASIES and its jazz. During the latter 1930's it also became a center of attraction for devotees of "swing" and "boogie-woogie" music. Harlem is the scene of Naked on Roller Skates, by Maxwell BODENHEIM, All God's Chillun Got Wings, by Eugene O'NEILL, and Nigger Heaven, by Carl VAN VECHTEN. The character of its residents is depicted in the works of such Negro writers as Countée CULLEN, Langston HUGHES, W. E. DuBois, and Ann Petry (author of The Street [1946]).

Harlequin. In the British pantomime, a sprite supposed to be invisible to all eyes but those of his faithful COLUMBINE. His office is to dance through the world and frustrate all the knavish tricks of the Clown, who is supposed to be in love with Columbine. He derives from Arlecchino, a stock character of Italian comedy (like Pantaloon and Scaramouch), whose name was in origin probably that of a sprite or hobgoblin. See also PIERROT.

Harlequin. So Charles Quint (1500-1558) was called by François I of France.

Harleth, Gwendolyn. The self-centered heroine whose gradual regeneration is depicted in George Eliot's Daniel Deronda.

Harley. The titular hero of Mackenzie's Man of Feeling.

The principal object of Mackenzie is . . . to reach and sustain a tone of moral pathos by representing the effect of incidents . . . upon the human mind . . . especially those which are just, honourable, and intelligent—Sir W. Scott.

Harley Street. A street in London. There are many specialist physicians' and surgeons' offices on Harley Street.

Harlowe, Clarissa, see CLARISSA HARLOWE.

Harmachis. The supposed narrator of Rider Haggard's romance Cleopatra (1889), a priest and magician who plots to seize the throne from Cleopatra but is prevented by his love for her. She encourages him for her own ends until Antony appears on the scene. The Queen's favorite, Charmian, is desperately in love with Harmachis.

Harman, Sir Isaac. One of the principals in Wells' novel, The Wife of Sir Isaac Harman.

Harmon, John, alias John Rokesmith. In Dickens' novel, Our Mutual Friend, Mr. Boffin's secretary. He lodges with the Wilfers, and ultimately marries Bella Wilfer. He is described as "a dark gentleman, thirty at the utmost, with an expressive, one might say, a handsome face."

Harmonia's Necklace. An unlucky possession, something that brings evil to all who possess it. In classic mythology, Harmonia was the daughter of Mars and Venus. On her marriage with King Cadmus, she received a necklace which proved fatal to all who possessed it.

On the same occasion Vulcan, to avenge the infidelity of her mother, made the bride a present of a robe dyed in all sorts of crimes, which infused wickedness and impiety into all her offspring. See NESSUS. Both Harmonia and Cadmus, after having suffered many misfortunes, and seen their children a sorrow to them, were changed into serpents.

Harmonious Blacksmith, The. A well-known air written by HANDEL, or, rather, based by him on an earlier air. The grave of the blacksmith, the ringing of whose hammer set Handel to work on it, is still to be seen in the little churchyard at Whitchurch—where Handel was organist—near Edgware, Middlesex.

Harmsworth. Family of British publishers and politicians including several brothers, notably Alfred Charles William Harmsworth (1865-1922), later Viscount Northcliffe, and his brother Harold Sidney Harmsworth (1868-1940), later Viscount Rothermere, who set up together a general publishing business in London (1887). The older Harmsworth founded the Daily Mail, a half-penny morning newspaper for busy men (1896), and the Daily Mirror (1903), an illustrated morning paper.

Harold (1022-1066). He is the hero of Bulwer Lytton's romance, Harold, the Last of the Saxons (1848), containing an account of the battle of Hastings, where this last of the Saxon Kings was slain, and William the Norman succeeded to the crown of England. Tennyson wrote a dramatic poem on the same subject (1876).

Harold, Childe, see CHILDE HAROLD.

Haroot and Maroot. Angels in medieval angelology, who, in consequence of their want of compassion to man, were susceptible to human passions, and were sent upon earth to be tempted. They were kings of Babel, and teachers of magic and the black arts.

Harpagon. A miser; from the miser of that name in Molière's L'Avare (1668). He is the father of Cléante and Elise. Both Harpagon and his son desire to marry Mariane; but the father, having lost a casket of money, is asked which he prefers—his casket or Mariane. As the miser prefers the money, Cléante marries the lady. Harpagon imagines that everyone is going to rob him, and when he loses his casket, seizes his own arm in the frenzy of passion. He proposes to give his daughter in marriage to an old man named Anselme, because no dot will be required. When Valère, who is Elise's lover, urges reason after reason against the unnatural alliance, the miser makes but one reply, "sans dot." Harpagon, at another time, solicits Jacques to tell him what folks say of him; but when told that he is called a miser and a skinflint, he towers with rage, and beats Jacques in his uncontrolled passion.

Harpagus. A Median general of the sixth century B. C. According to legend, the Median king Astyages chose him to expose the infant Cyrus. He gave the task to a herdsman who kept the infant alive. Astyages punished Harpagus by serving to him at a banquet the flesh of his own son. Harpagus afterwards became Cyrus's most trusted general. Cf. the poem by Thomas Lovell Beddoes.

Harpers Ferry. A town in West Virginia. The arsenal of Harpers Ferry was raided Oct. 16, 1859, by John Brown, the abolitionist. Lee took it from a large Union force Sept. 15, 1862.

Harper's Magazine. American magazine, founded in 1850 as Harper's New Monthly Magazine, called Harper's Monthly Magazine after 1900 and Harper's Magazine after 1925. During the 19th century it was devoted to literature, but later expanded to include articles on politics and current problems. William Dean Howells, E. S. Martin, and Bernard De Voto have conducted the department of comment known as the Editor's Easy Chair.

Harpocrates. The Greek form of the Egyptian Heru-P-Khart (Horus the Child), who is represented as a youth, and, as he has one finger pointing to his mouth, was adopted by them as the god of silence.

harpsichord. A musical instrument, immediate precursor of the piano, in vogue during the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries. The harpsichord has all the essential characteristics of the piano except one: it is a plucking instrument without hammers and has a tinkling sound which cannot be modulated.

harpy. In classical mythology, a winged monster with the head and breasts of a woman, very fierce, starved-looking, and loathsome, living in an atmosphere of filth and stench, and contaminating everything which she came near. Homer mentions but one harpy. Hesiod gives two, and later writers three. Their names, Ocypeta (rapid), Celeno (blackness), and Aello (storm), indicate that these monsters were personifications of whirlwinds and storms.

he is a regular harpy. One who wants to appropriate everything; one who sponges on another without mercy.

Harraden, Beatrice (1864-1936). English novelist whose greatest success was Ships That Pass in the Night (1893) which sold over a million copies. The setting of the story is a winter resort for consumptive patients. Thomas Mann later used a similar setting in The Magic Mountain. Miss Harraden was a leader in the Woman Suffrage movement in England.

Harriman, Edward Henry (1848-1909). American railroad magnate and "Robber Baron." Lost in the struggle with James J. Hill for control of the Northern Pacific which precipitated the stock market panic of May 9, 1901.

Harrington. A novel by Maria Edgeworth (1811). The titular hero is a Jew, and the novel was one of the first deliberate attempts to portray a Jew in fiction in a favorable light. As such it is worthy of note, but the character of Harrington is generally dismissed as wooden and over-sentimentalized.

Harrington, Evan. Titular hero of Meredith's novel Evan Harrington.

Harris, Frank (1856-1931). Irish-born American short-story writer and literary biographer; a naturalized citizen of the U.S. but later a resident of England and the European continent. He is known for the frankness of his revelations of intimate, scandalous (and often apocryphal) secrets in the lives of the subjects of his biographical studies. Among these are: The Man Shakespeare (1909); The Women of Shakespeare (1911); Contemporary Portraits (1915-1923); Oscar Wilde (1916); Latest Contemporary Portraits (1927). Elder Conklin (1894), Unpath'd Waters (1913), The Veil of Isis (1915), and A Mad Love (1920), are collections of short stories. Great Days (1914) and Love in Youth (1916) are novels; My Reminiscences as a Cowboy (1930), memoirs. My Life and Loves is scarious autobiography.

Harris, Joel Chandler (1848-1908). American journalist and author, best known for his humorous adaptations of native Negro folk-legends in his Uncle Remus stories, marked by authentic approximations of Negro dialect. Among the collections of these tales, dealing chiefly with animals and directed toward an audience of children, are Uncle Remus: His Songs and His Sayings (1880); Nights with Uncle Remus (1883); Mr. Rabbit at Home (1895); The Tar-Baby, And Other Rhymes of Uncle Remus (1904); Uncle Remus and Br'er Rabbit (1906). Harris also wrote local-color stories of the South, including Mingo, And Other Sketches in Black and White (1884); Free Joe, And Other Georgian Sketches (1887); Tales of the Home Folks in Peace and War (1898); and Gabriel Tolliver: A Story of Reconstruction (1902), a novel.

Harris, Mrs. In Dickens' MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT, a purely imaginary character, existing only in the brain of Mrs. Sarah GAMP, and brought forth on all occasions to corroborate the opinions and trumpet the praises of Mrs. Gamp, the monthly nurse.

"'Mrs Harris,' I says to her, . . . 'if I could afford to lay out all my fellow-creeturs for nothink, I would gladly do it; sich is the love I bears 'em.'" Again: "What!" said Mrs. Gamp, "you bage creetur! Have I know'd Mrs. Harris five and thirty year, to be told at last that there an't no sich a person livin'? Have I stood her friend in all her troubles, great and small, for it to come to sich a end as this, with her own sweet picter hanging up afore you all the time, to shame your Bragian words? Go along with you!" —Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, xlix. (1843.)

Harum, David, see DAVID HARUM.

Harun-al-Rashid or Haroun-al-Raschid, that is, Aaron the Upright (764?-809). Fifth Abbasside Caliph of Arabia (785-809). He entertained friendly relations with Charlemagne. The two great rulers were not unlike each other in their patronage of the arts and learning, and it is curious to note that both were idealized in popular tradition: the one in the legends of the cycle of Charlemagne, the other as the splendid caliph of the ARABIAN NIGHTS, in which everything curious, romantic, and wonderful is associated with his name and his reign.

Harvard, John (1607-1638). English clergyman, son of a butcher. He settled at Charlestown, Mass., and became the first benefactor of the college at "New Towne," bequeathing to it his library of 300 volumes and half his estate, valued at £800. The college was renamed Harvard College in his honor in the year of his death, the third year of its existence.

Harvard Classics, The. A set of books, known also from its physical make-up as the "Five-Foot Shelf," which contains such selections from the literature of the world as to constitute "the essentials of a liberal education." The contents, which were chosen by Dr. Charles W. Eliot, President Emeritus of Harvard University, comprise 418 masterpieces.

Harvard Workshop. A name popularly given to the course in drama construction taught at Harvard University by Prof. George P. BAKER (resigned from Harvard, 1925). The course is also widely known by its catalogue number "English 47" and as the "47 Workshop" or "Harvard 47." A number of successful productions were the work of playwrights who studied at the Harvard Workshop, notably Edward SHELDON, Josephine Preston PEABODY, Eugene O'NEILL, Philip BARRY, S. N. BEHRMAN, Sidney HOWARD, etc.

Harvey. A long-run (1944-), fantastic play about an invisible rabbit or Pooka by Mary Coyle Chase. Won Pulitzer prize.

Harvey, Gabriel (1545?-1630). English scholar and author, a friend of Edmund SPENSER, whom he influenced. He wrote satires against the court and such contemporary literary men as Robert GREENE and Thomas NASHE, was the author of a Latin treatise on rhetoric, and tried to introduce the meters of classical poetry into English. See also HOBBI-NOL.

Harvey, George Brinton McClellan (1864-1928). American journalist. Owner and editor North American Review (1899-1926). President, Harper and Brothers (1900-1915); Editor Harper's Weekly (1901-1913), Harvey's Weekly (1918-1921). Supported Wilson's nomination (1912). Helped select Harding as Republican candidate (1920). U.S. ambassador to Great Britain (1921-1923).

Harvey, William (1578-1657). English physician, physiologist, and anatomist. Discoverer of the circulation of the blood. Exercitatio de motu cordis et sanguinis (Essay on the Motion of the Heart and the Blood, 1628).

Hašek, Jaroslav (1883-1923). Czech novelist and short-story writer. His major work, The Good Soldier: Schweik (English translation, 1930), is a satire in four volumes (planned as six), which has been compared with the creations of Rabelais and Cervantes.

Hashimura Togo. Name of a fictional Japanese schoolboy created by Wallace IRWIN.

Hassam, Childe (1859-1935). American painter and etcher. One of the foremost exponents of impressionism in America.

Hassan. A play (1922) by James Elroy FLECKER.

Hastings, Battle of. Oct. 14, 1066, at Senlac Hill, Sussex, England. William the Norman (William I of England, William the Conqueror) defeated the English army under Harold who was killed. This was the only battle in the Norman conquest. It is listed as one of the "Fifteen Decisive BATTLES OF THE WORLD."

Hastings, Lord Reginald. The hero of Hichens' GREEN CARNATION.

Hastings, Warren (1732-1818). English statesman in the East India service. Impeached (1788) for corruption and cruelty chiefly in his conduct in reference to Chait Singh (the zamindar of Benares, deposed by him) and the begum of Oudh (part of whose treasures he had confiscated). He was prosecuted among others by Burke and Sheridan, but the trial resulted in an acquittal (1795).

Hasty Pudding. A mock-heroic poem by the American poet and diplomat Joel BARLOW (1792), describing the making and eating of the celebrated New England dish. It was one of the most popular of Barlow's works.

hatchet, bury the. Let bygones be bygones. The "Great Spirit" commanded the North American Indians, when they smoked the calumet, or peacepipe, to bury their hatchets, scalping-knives, and war-clubs, that all thought of hostility might be put out of sight.

Buried was the bloody hatchet;
Buried was the dreadful war-club;
Buried were all warlike weapons,
And the war-cry was forgotten;
Then was peace among the nations.
Longfellow, Hiawatha, xiii.

Hatchway, Lieutenant Jack. In Smollett's PEREGRINE PICKLE (1751), a retired naval officer on half-pay, living with Commodore Trunnion as a companion.

Hathaway, Anne. The wife of William SHAKESPEARE, by unauthenticated tradition considered to have been a shrew who made life difficult for the poet.

Hathor. In Egyptian mythology, the goddess of love, mirth, and social joy, corresponding to the Greek Aphrodite and related through many common epithets to Isis.

Hatim, generous as. An Arabian expression. Hatim was a Bedouin chief famous for his warlike deeds and boundless generosity. His son was contemporary with Mahomet.

Hatshepsut. Egyptian queen of the XVIIIth dynasty. Sister and wife of Thutmose

III. Built magnificent temple near Thebes with representations of an expedition to the land of Punt; erected two obelisks at Karnak; and generally preferred the arts of peace to war and conquest.

Hatteraick, Dirk, alias Jans Janson. In Scott's GUY MANNERING, a Dutch smuggler-captain, the accomplice of Glossin in kidnapping Harry Bertram. He hangs himself in prison.

Hatto. A 10th-century archbishop of Mainz, a noted statesman and councillor of Otho the Great, proverbial for his perfidy, who, according to tradition (preserved in the Magdeburg Centuries), was devoured by mice. The story says that in 970 there was a great famine in Germany, and Hatto, that there might be better store for the rich, assembled the poor in a barn, and burnt them to death, saying: "They are like mice, only good to devour the corn." By and by an army of mice came against the archbishop, who, to escape the plague, removed to a tower on the Rhine. But hither came the mouse-army by hundreds and thousands, and ate him up. The tower is still called MOUSE-TOWER.

And in at the windows and in at the door,
And through the walls by thousands they pour,
And down through the ceiling, and up through the floor
From the right and the left, from behind and before,
From within and without, from above and below.
And all at once to the bishop they go.
They have whetted their teeth against the stones.
And now they are picking the bishop's bones,
They gnawed the flesh from every limb,
For they were sent to do judgment on him.
Southey, Bishop Hatto.

Hatton, Sir Christopher (1540-1591), see DANCING CHANCELLOR.

Hauksbee, Mrs. Lucy. A clever little woman who appears in many of KIPLING's stories, notably in Three and—an Extra. She is essentially good-hearted, but so full of schemes and intrigues and so happy in feeling her power that she invariably makes trouble.

Hauptmann, Gerhart Johann (1862-1946). German dramatist, at first a sculptor, known for his plays of social protest, dealing realistically with conditions of the working class. Among these, which aroused great criticism at the time of their first presentation, are Before Dawn (Vor Sonnenaufgang; 1889); The Weavers (Die Weber; 1892), the most famous of his works; Der Biberpelz (The Beaver Cape; 1893); Der Rote Hahn (The Red Cock; 1901); Rose Bernd (1903); Die Ratten (The Rats; 1910). Hanneles Himmelfahrt (1893), THE SUNKEN BELL (Die Versunkene Glocke; 1896), and Der Arme Heinrich (see under HEINRICH VON AUE; 1902), are romantic examples of poetic mysticism in the drama. Later plays of Hauptmann are Veland (1925); Dorothea Angermann (1926); and Vor Sonnen- untergang (Before Sunset; 1932), a symbolic counterpart of Vor Sonnenaufgang. He won the Nobel prize for literature in 1912.

Having developed from naturalistic beginnings through a stage of symbolic mysticism, Hauptmann slowly but surely became "the patriarch of modern German literature." He was tolerated or courted by, and to a degree was a mouthpiece of, the various phases of Germany's subsequent history. Shortly before his death he accepted a Soviet invitation to go to Berlin. This versatility of his has been condemned as opportunism, explained as aloofness, or praised as evidence of the ever-progressing contemporaneity of his work.

Haus Berghof. In THE MAGIC MOUNTAIN by Thomas Mann, a luxurious mountain sanatorium for tuberculosis patients, located in Davos, Switzerland. It is considered to be in the novel a symbol of isolated and sterile aestheticism.

Hauser, Heinrich (1901–). German traveler, journalist, and novelist. Awarded Gerhart Hauptmann prize (1929) for his novel Brackwasser (1928; Bitter Waters, 1929). Settled in U.S. during World War II. His political testament, The German Talks Back (1945), showed him as a man of passionate convictions and no mellow wisdom.

Hauser, Kaspar (1812?–1833). German foundling who appeared as a youth of about sixteen in Nuremberg. He showed no signs of ever having been in contact with other humans but displayed normal intelligence. His case gave rise to many popular stories. He is the subject of the novel Caspar Hauser (1909) by Jakob Wassermann.

Hausmann, Baron Georges Eugène (1809–1891). French prefect of the Seine (1853–1870) who carried through huge municipal works for the sanitation and embellishment of Paris, including the creation of new wide boulevards, one of which is named in his honor.

havelock. After Sir Henry Havelock (1795–1857), English general in the Sepoy mutiny, 1857. A light cloth cap-cover hanging over the neck, worn by soldiers when exposed to the sun in hot climates.

Havelok the Dane. A hero of medieval romance. He is the orphan son of Birkabegn, King of Denmark and is exposed at sea through the treachery of his guardians. The raft drifts to the coast of Lincolnshire. Here a fisherman named Grim finds the young prince, and brings him up as his own son. In time it so happens that an English princess stands in the way of certain ambitious nobles, who resolve to degrade her by uniting her to a peasant, and select the young foundling for the purpose; but Havelok, having learned the story of his birth, obtains the aid of an army of Danes to recover his wife's possessions. In due time he becomes King of Denmark and part of England.

Havergal, Frances Ridley (1836–1879). English author of hymns and other religious verse. The Ministry of Song (1870); etc.

Havergal, Luke, see LUKE HAVERGAL.

Haveth Childers Everywhere. A fragment of James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE, published separately in 1933. The title is one of the many forms by which the name of the hero of the novel, Humphrey Chimpden EAWICKER, is disguised.

Havisham, Miss. In Dickens' GREAT EXPECTATIONS, an old spinster who lives in Satis House, the daughter of a rich brewer. She was engaged to be married to a man named Compeyson, who threw her over on the wedding morn. From this moment she has always worn her wedding-dress, with a lace veil from head to foot, white satin shoes, bridal flowers in her hair, jewels round her neck and on her fingers. She adopts a little girl, three years old, who eventually marries and leaves her. She somehow sets fire to herself, and, though Pip succeeds in saving her, she soon dies from the shock. Satis House was pulled down.

Estella Havisham. The adopted child of Miss Havisham, by whom she is brought up. She is proud, handsome, and self-possessed. Pip loves her, and probably she reciprocates his love, but she marries Bentley Drummle, who ill-treats her, and dies, leaving her a young widow. The tale ends with these words—

I [Pip] took her hand in mine, and we went out of the ruined place. As the morning mists had risen . . . when I first left the forge, so the evening were rising now; and . . . I saw no shadow of another parting from her.—Dickens, Great Expectations.

Haward, Marmaduke. The hero of Mary Johnston's Audrey.

Hawes, Stephen (d. ca. 1523). English poet in the tradition of CHAUCER, author of Pastime of Pleasure (1509) and Example of Virtue (1512), poetic allegories, both of which were printed by Wynkyn de Worde. See also SCOTTISH CHAUCERIANS.

Haw Haw, Lord. Nickname for William Joyce, British traitor claiming American birth, prosecuted for broadcasting Nazi propaganda during the Second World War. Executed January, 1946.

Hawk, Sir Mulberry. In Dickens' NICHOLAS NICKLEBY, the bear-leader of Lord Frederick Verisopht. He is a most unprincipled roué, who sponges on his lordship, snubs him, and despises him. "Sir Mulberry was remarkable for his tact in ruining young gentlemen of fortune."

Hawke, Edward. 1st Baron Hawke (1705–1781). Famous English admiral. Defeated the French off Belle-Île (1747) and at Quiberon Bay (1759).

Hawkeye. The name under which Natty Bumppo or LEATHERSTOCKING appears in THE LAST OF THE MOHICANS, one of Cooper's Leatherstocking series.

Hawk Eye State. Iowa. See STATES.

Hawkins, Sir Anthony Hope. Pseudonym Anthony Hope (1863-1933). English romantic novelist. In 1894 he published The Dolly Dialogues (light and humorous, admired by George Meredith) and The Prisoner of Zenda (concerning a mythical kingdom) which was a huge success. Both The Prisoner of Zenda and its sequel, Rupert of Hentzau (1898), made long-run plays, and the former was filmed with Ronald Colman in the lead.

Hawkins, Sir John (1532-1595). Elizabethan naval hero. Engaged in West Indian slave trade in violation of Spanish laws. Attacked and defeated by a Spanish fleet in the harbor of Vera Cruz (1568). Rear admiral who helped defeat the Spanish Armada (1588). Died while second in command under Drake on an expedition to the West Indies (1595).

Hawley-Smoot Tariff. The tariff law of June 17, 1930. It established the highest rates in American PROTECTIVE-TARIFF history, tempered only by the principle of tariff flexibility which authorized the President to initiate reductions for reciprocal trade agreements and the like. Sponsored by U.S. Representative Willis Chatman Hawley (1864-1941) and U.S. Senator Reed Smoot (1862-1941).

Hawthorne, Julian (1846-1934). American novelist. Only son of Nathaniel Hawthorne. Wrote also on his father. His daughter, Hildegard Hawthorne (Oskisson), wrote children's books.

Hawthorne, Nathaniel (1804-1864). American novelist and short-story writer, considered one of the greatest American literary figures of the 19th century. His work is marked by the use of symbolism and allegory, frequent supernatural themes, a rhetorical style compared to that of the 18th century, psychological insight, pessimism and introspection, a preoccupation with moral issues, and an outlook composed of both Puritan and Romantic elements. He is noted for his portrayals of New England Puritanism. Hawthorne's works include: FANSHAWE (1828), published anonymously; TWICE-TOLD TALES (1837, 1842); MOSES FROM AN OLD MANSE (1846); THE SCARLET LETTER (1850); THE HOUSE OF THE SEVEN GABLES (1851); THE BLITHEDALE ROMANCE (1852); The Snow-Image, And Other Twice-Told Tales (1852); A WONDER BOOK (1852); TANGLEWOOD TALES (1853); THE MARBLE FAUN (1860). Septimius Felton (1871), The Dolliver Romance (1876), Dr. Grimshawe's Secret (1883), and The Ancestral Footstep (1883) are posthumously published fragments of unfinished romances. Famous single tales are: The Maypole of Merry Mount; The Minister's Black Veil; Young Goodman Brown; THE BIRTHMARK; The Snow-Image; and ETHAN BRAND.

Hawthorne was solitary in his habits, sensitive, and retiring. He worked as Surveyor of the Port of Salem, was associated with the BROOK FARM experiment, and was in the consular service in England. Henry JAMES is considered to have been strongly influenced by Hawthorne, especially in his supernatural themes. For a study of Hawthorne and his works, cf. American Renaissance, by F. O. Matthiessen.

hay. A rustic dance. The word, of uncertain origin, has nothing to do with cut and dried grass. Cf. Antic Hay (1923), title of a novel by Ian HUXLEY.

Hay, Ian, see BEITH, JOHN HAY.

Hay, John Milton (1838-1905). American statesman and author, assistant secretary to Abraham Lincoln, Assistant Secretary of State under President Hayes, ambassador to Great Britain under McKinley, and Secretary of State under McKinley and Theodore Roosevelt. He is known for his Pike County Ballads (see PIKE; JIM BLUSO) (1871), frontier poems in dialect, and THE BREADWINNERS (1884), a novel published anonymously. Hay was instrumental in establishing the Open Door policy in China and in bringing about the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty (1901), which made the Panama Canal possible.

Hay, Sara Henderson (1906-). American poet and critic. Wife of Raymond HOLDEN. Field of Honor (1933); This My Letter (1939).

Haydn, Joseph (1732-1809). Austrian composer. Kapellmeister of the Esterhazy family at Eisenstadt in Hungary (1760-1790), where he wrote some of his greatest music, operas, masses, piano sonatas, symphonies, an oratorio, etc. In England (1791-1792; 1794-1795) he wrote and conducted twelve symphonies. In Vienna (from 1795), he wrote his last eight masses, his finest chamber music, the Austrian national anthem and the two great oratorios, The Creation and The Seasons. His friendship with Mozart helped him to attain complete mastery of orchestral effects in his later symphonies.

Haydon, Benjamin Robert (1786-1846). A noted English historical painter. Lectures on Painting and Design (1844-1846). Died by his own hand. Wordsworth and Keats addressed sonnets to him.

Hayes, Catherine. The married name of the heroine of Thackeray's CATHERINE.

Hayes, Helen (1900-). American actress. Married (1928) the playwright Charles MacARTHUR. Starred in many plays and motion pictures. Victoria Regina, Mary of Scotland, etc.

Hay Fever. A comedy by Noel COWARD (1925).

Haymarket. A street in London between Pall Mall and Piccadilly Circus. Like New York's Broadway, famous as a theater center.

Hayne, Paul Hamilton (1830-1886). American lyric poet of the South, a friend of Henry TIMROD and associated with Timrod and W. G. SIMMS in the CHARLESTON SCHOOL. His volumes of verse include: Avolio: A Legend of the Island of Cos (1860); Legends and Lyrics (1872); and The Mountain of Lovers (1875).

Hays, Will H. (1879-). American politician. Chairman, Republican National Committee (1918-1921). Postmaster General (1921-1922). President, Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America (1922-1945). The "Hays office" (taken over by Eric Johnston) censored moving pictures for the trade.

Hayston, Frank. In Scott's novel THE BRIDE OF LAMMERMOOR, the laird of Bucklaw to whom Lucy Ashton is unwillingly betrothed. In the opera, LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR, based on the novel, he is known as Arthur Bucklaw.

Hazard, Caroline (1856-1945). American educator. President, Wellesley College (1899-1910). Wrote poetry and essays.

Hazard, Myrtle. The heroine of O. W. HOLMES' GUARDIAN ANGEL. She is one of the first characters in fiction analyzed from the standpoint of a mixed racial inheritance.

Hazard of New Fortunes, A. A novel by W. D. HOWELLS (1890), in which Howells' old favorites, Mr. and Mrs. MARCH, are brought to New York, he to become the editor of Every Other Week, a journal published by a Pennsylvania Dutch capitalist named Dryfoos. Dryfoos' daughters, who are battering at the doors of New York society, inherit his vulgarity, but his son Conrad is a gentler, more intellectual type, a radical whose sympathies with labor bring about his death by a chance shot during a strike. The old German socialist Lindau is a prominent character.

Hazel Kirke. A drama by Steele MacKaye (Am., 1879). The rather complicated plot turns on parental plans for having each of the two lovers pay an old debt by marrying without love, but the chief appeal of the play lies in the rôle of Dunstan Kirke, Hazel's old father, who turns her out when she marries against his wishes, but cannot be happy without her. Eventually all turns out well and Hazel and her father are reconciled.

Hazlitt, Henry (1894-). American financial writer, editor, critic, author. The Anatomy of Criticism (1933); etc.

Hazlitt, William (1778-1830). English essayist and literary critic, at first dedicated to a career as a philosopher and a painter. He became known for his studies and lectures on the Elizabethan playwrights (see COLERIDGE, HUNT, LAMB, DE QUINCEY), and for his radical political ideas, which caused him to receive harsh treatment at the hands of the reviewers. His works include: Essay on Principles of Human Action (1807); The Characters of Shakespeare's Plays (1817); Table Talk (1821); The Spirit of the Age (1825); Life of Napoleon (1828-1830). He was associated with Leigh HUNT, serving as a contributor to The Examiner.

HCE, see EARWICKER, HUMPHREY CHIMPDEN.

H. D., i.e., Hilda Doolittle (1886-). American poet, resident for most of her life abroad, considered by some critics the most accomplished of the Imagist poets. See IMAGISM. Her work shows the influence of the Greek classics and is marked by simple, clear, and precise visualizations of scenes, images, and objects, chiefly on Greek subjects. Her books of poetry are: Sea Garden (1916); Hymen (1921); Heliodora, And Other Poems (1924); and Hippolytus Temporizes (1927). Palimpsest (1926), Hedylus (1928), and The Hedgehog (1936) are books of fiction; in 1937 she made a translation of the Ion of Euripides. She married Richard ALDINGTON, English Imagist poet and novelist (now divorced).

Headlong Hall. A novel by T. L. PEACOCK (1816). There is little plot; the interest lies chiefly in the pleasant, witty conversation of the guests of the Squire of Headlong Hall. See also CROTCHET CASTLE.

Headrigg, Cuddie. In Scott's OLD MORTALITY, a ploughman in Lady Bellenden's service described as a blending of "apparent dulness with occasional sparkles which indicated the craft so often found in the clouted shoe."

Heard, Gerald (full name, Henry Fitzgerald) (1889-). English writer, now living in California. The Ascent of Humanity (1929) was given the Henrietta Hertz award by the British Academy. Popular science commentator for British Broadcasting Corporation. His contributions to the mystery field as H. F. Heard have been A Taste for Honey (1941), and Reply Paid (1942), both resurrecting

SHERLOCK HOLMES. His mystical philosophy has greatly influenced Aldous HUXLEY.

Hearn, Lafcadio (1850–1904). American journalist and author, of Greek and English-Irish parentage, born in the Ionian Islands. He is known for his exotic and fantastic tales, many dealing with New Orleans and the West Indies, his poetic prose style, and his sketches and studies of Japan, of which he became a citizen in 1893 under the name of Koizumi Yakumo and where he taught English literature in the Imperial University of Tokyo from 1894 to 1903. His works include: One of Cleopatra's Nights (1882), translations of stories by Théophile GAUTIER; Stray Leaves from Strange Literatures (1884); Gombo Zhèbes (1885), proverbs in Negro-French dialect; Some Chinese Ghosts (1887); Chita (1887), a novel; Two Years in the French West Indies (1890); Youma (1890), a novel of Martinique; Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan (1894); Out of the East (1895); Kokoro (1896); In Ghostly Japan (1899); Kotto (1902); Japanese Fairy Tales (1903); Japan: An Attempt at Interpretation (1904); Creole Sketches (1904).

American newspaper publisher, owning a chain of newspapers including the San Francisco Examiner, the Chicago American, the Boston American, the New York American, the New York Mirror, and of magazines, including Cosmopolitan, Good Housekeeping, Harper's Bazaar, etc. The term "Hearst paper" is often used with the implied connotation of yellow journalism. Cf. the moving picture by Orson Welles, Citizen Kane.

Heartbreak House. A play by George Bernard SHAW (1917), the scene of which is laid during World War I, dealing with the problems, weaknesses, and failures of 20th-century civilization by means of a representative group of characters. It is considered among the greatest of 20th-century dramas. See also CHERRY ORCHARD, THE.

Heart of England. A name given to Warwickshire from its central position.

Heart of Midlothian, The. A novel by Sir Walter Scott (1817). The allusion of the title is to the old jail of Edinburgh. The plot is briefly as follows. Effie Deans, the daughter of the Scotch cow-feeder affectionately known to his friends as Doucie Davie, is seduced by George Staunton, son of the rector of Willingham, and is brought to trial and sentenced to death for child murder. Her loyal and plucky half sister, Jeanie Deans, determines to go to London to ask George II for a pardon and in spite of all the obstacles in her way, actually accomplishes her task. Effie and Staunton marry, but shortly afterwards he is shot by a gipsy boy who is in reality his illegitimate son. Jeanie Deans marries Reuben Butler, the Presbyterian minister. The novel is based on fact.

Heath, Charles. The hero of De Morgan's ALICE-FOR-SHORT.

Heathcliff. The fierce and brooding hero of Emily Brontë's novel, WUTHERING HEIGHTS.

Heathen Chinee, The. A humorous poem by Bret HARTE (1870) first published under the title Plain Language from Truthful James. It later furnished the germ for a play by Bret Harte and Mark Twain in which the Heathen Chinee was known as Ah Sin. The poem begins:

Which I wish to remark,
And my language is plain,
That for ways that are dark,
And for tricks that are vain,
The heathen Chinee is peculiar.
Which the same I would rise to explain.

heaven (A.S. heofon). The word properly denotes the abode of the Deity and His angels—"heaven is My throne" (Is. lxvi. 1, and Matt. v. 34)—but it is also used in the Bible and elsewhere for the air, the upper heights as "the fowls of heaven," "the dew of heaven," "the clouds of heaven"; "the cities are walled up to heaven" (Deut. i. 28); and a tower whose top should "reach unto heaven" (Gen. xi. 4); the starry firmament, as, "Let there be lights in the firmament of heaven" (Gen. i. 14).

In the Ptolemaic system the heavens were the successive spheres of space enclosing the central earth at different distances and revolving round it at different speeds. The first seven were those of the so-called Planets, viz., the Moon, Mercury, Venus, the Sun, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn; the eighth was the firmament of heaven containing all the fixed stars; the ninth was the crystalline sphere, invented by Hipparchus (2nd cent. B.C.), to account for the precession of the equinoxes. These were known as The Nine Heavens (see Nine Spheres); the tenth—added much later—was the primum mobile.

Hoole, Orlando Furioso, Bk. xiii.

The Seven Heavens of the Mohammedans: The first heaven is of pure silver, and here the stars, each with its angel warder, are hung out like lamps on golden chains. It is the abode of Adam and Eve.

The second heaven is of pure gold and is the domain of John the Baptist and Jesus.

The third heaven is of pearl, and is allotted to Joseph. Here Azrael, the angel of death, is stationed, and is for ever writing in a large book or blotting words out. The former are the names of persons born, the latter those of the newly dead.

The fourth heaven is of white gold, and is Enoch's. Here dwells the Angel of Tears, whose height is "500 days' journey," and he sheds ceaseless tears for the sins of man.

The fifth heaven is of silver and is Aaron's. Here dwells the Avenging Angel, who presides over elemental fire.

The sixth heaven is composed of ruby and garnet, and is presided over by Moses. Here dwells the Guardian Angel of heaven and earth, half-snow and half-fire.

The seventh heaven is formed of divine light beyond the power of tongue to describe, and is ruled by Abraham. Each inhabitant is bigger than the whole earth, and has 70,000 heads, each head 70,000 mouths, each mouth 70,000 tongues and each tongue speaks 70,000 languages, all for ever employed in chanting the praises of the Most High.

to be in the seventh heaven. Supremely happy. The Cabbalists maintained that there are seven heavens, each rising in happiness above the other, the seventh being the abode of God and the highest class of angels. See also PARADISE.

Heaven and Earth, A Mystery. A dramatic poem by Lord BYRON (1822), founded on the text—

And it came to pass . . . that the sons of God saw the daughters of men, that they were fair; and they took them wives of all whom they chose.—Gen. vi. 2.

Hebraism and Hellenism. A well-known essay by Matthew ARNOLD, appearing in the collection Culture and Anarchy (1869). It analyzes and contrasts the Hebraic and the Hellenic cultures, the most influential upon British culture, and asserts the "uppermost idea" of Hellenism is "to see things as they really are," while that of Hebraism is "conduct and obedience."

Hecate. One of the Titans of Greek mythology, and the only one that retained her power under the rule of Zeus. She was the daughter of Perses and Asteria, and became a deity of the lower world after taking part in the search for Persephone. She taught witchcraft and sorcery, and was a goddess of the dead, and as she combined the attributes of, and became identified with, Selene, Artemis, and Persephone, she was represented as a triple goddess and was sometimes described as having three heads—one of a horse, one of a dog, and one of a lion. Her offerings consisted of dogs, honey, and black lambs, which were sacrificed to her at cross-roads. Shakespeare, in his tragedy of MACBETH, calls her queen of the witches.

Hecht, Ben (1894–). American novelist, short-story writer, and playwright, early in his career a member of the CHICAGO GROUP and known for his eroticism, iconoclasm, and flamboyant Bohemianism, variously influenced by GAUTIER, HUYSMANS, and DOSTOYEVSKY. His novels include: Erik Dorn (1921); Fantazius Mallare (1922); The Florentine Dagger (1923); Humpty Dumpty (1924); The Kingdom of Evil (1924); Count Bruga (1926); and A Jew in Love (1931). Collections of short stories are: Gargoyles (1922); 1001 Afternoons in Chicago (1922); Tales of Chicago Streets (1924); Broken Necks (1924); The Champion from Far Away (1931); and A Book of Miracles (1939). At this time he was a friend of Maxwell BODENHEIM, with whom he wrote several plays. Later Hecht became famous for his successful Broadway plays and motion-picture scripts written with Charles MacArthur, including: The Front Page (1928); 20th Century (1932); and Ladies and Gentlemen (1939). Passionate defender of Jews in Palestine.

Hector. Eldest son of Priam, the noblest and most magnanimous of all the Trojan chieftains in Homer's ILIAD. After holding out for ten years, he was slain by Achilles, who lashed him to his chariot, and dragged the dead body in triumph thrice round the walls of Troy. The Iliad concludes with the funeral obsequies of Hector and Patroclus.

In modern times his name has somewhat deteriorated, for it is used today for a swaggering bully, and "to hector" means to browbeat, bully, bluster.

the Hector of Germany. Joachim II, Elector of Brandenburg (1514–1571).

you wear Hector's cloak. You are paid off for trying to deceive another. You are paid in your own coin. When Thomas Percy, Earl of Northumberland, in 1569, was routed, he hid himself in the house of Hector Armstrong, of Harlaw. This villain betrayed his guest for the reward offered, but never after did anything go well with him; he went down, down, down, till at last he died a beggar in rags on the roadside.

Hecuba. In Homer's ILIAD, second wife of Priam, and mother of nineteen children, including Hector. When Troy was taken by the Greeks she fell to the lot of Ulysses. She was afterwards metamorphosed into a dog, and threw herself into the sea. Her story has furnished the material for a host of Greek tragedies.

on to Hecuba. To the main point.

Hedda Gabler. A drama by Henrik IBSEN (1890). Hedda has married a professor who bores her. A former lover, Løvborg, is now tutor to the step-children of Thea Elvsted, and under Thea's steadying influence reforms and writes a book that wins him fame. In a jealous determination to show her power, Hedda lures him back to dissipation, and when by accident she gets possession of the manuscript of a second book, she burns it secretly, gives Løvborg a pistol and urges him to "die beautifully." He does die, in a brawl, and Hedda, who is threatened with exposure by a man who recognizes the pistol, shoots herself.

Hedin, Sven Anders (1865-). Swedish geographer and explorer in Asia. The Silk Road (1936); Chiang Kai-shek, Marshal of China (1940), etc. Also wrote in German Germany and World Peace (1937).

hedonism (Gr. hedone, "pleasure"). The doctrine of Aristippus that pleasure or happiness is the chief good and end of man.

Hedwig. The heroine of Ibsen's WILD DUCK.

Heep, Uriah. In Dickens' DAVID COPPERFIELD, a detestable sneak, who is everlastingly forcing on one's attention that he is 'umble. Uriah is Mr. Wickfield's clerk, and, with all his ostentatious 'umility, is most designing and malignant. His infamy is dragged to light by Mr. Micawber.

"I am well aware that I am the 'umblest person going, let the other be who he may. My mother is likewise a very 'umble person. We live in an 'umble abode, Master Copperfield, but have much to be thankful for. My father's former calling was 'umble—he was a sexton."—Dickens, David Copperfield, xvi.

Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich (1770-1831). German philosopher. Hegelianism is a philosophy of the absolute and was the leading system of metaphysics throughout the second quarter of the nineteenth century. It is an attempt to harmonize Greek ontology with Kantian psychology. It is Hegel who developed the dialectic method of progression from thesis and antithesis to synthesis which proved so important for Marxism. Hegel's system as a whole is hard to understand. It has been said that all the books dealing with the secret of Hegel have managed to keep it.

hejira (Arab. hejira, the departure). The epoch of the flight of Mahomet from Mecca to Medina when he was expelled by the magistrates, July 15, 622. The Mohammedan calendar starts from this event.

Heggen, Thomas Orlo (1919-1949). An editor of READER'S DIGEST. Author of Mr. Roberts (1946), a successful play.

Heidegger, Martin (1889-). German philosopher. Most important inspiration of the French EXISTENTIALISTS.

Heidenstam, Verner von (1859-1940). Swedish poet and novelist. Began as a painter. The publication of his Nya Dikter (1915; New Poems) gave him the reputation of being the greatest of Sweden's contemporary lyricists. His work won him the Nobel Prize for Literature (1916).

Heidi. A children's story of life in the Swiss Alps by Johanna Spyri (Swiss, d. 1891).

Heifetz, Jascha (1901-). Russian Jewish violinist, born at Vilna. Studied under Leopold Auer. Gave his first concert at the age of nine, but continued his career as a distinguished violinist instead of becoming a child prodigy. Made New York debut October 27, 1917. Considered the outstanding violinist of this century.

Heil dir im Siegerkranz. The Prussian national anthem. Originally written by Heinrich Harries (1790) to the tune of "God save Great George the King" as a birthday song for King Christian VII of Denmark. Arranged for Prussia (1793) by B. G. Schumacher.

Heimdall. One of the gods of Scandinavian mythology, son of the nine virgins, daughters of Aegir, and in many attributes identical with Tiw. He was called the "White God with the Golden Teeth," and, as the watchman or sentinel of ASGARD, dwelt on the edge of heaven, guarded the bridge Bifrost (the rainbow), and possessed a mighty horn whose blast could be heard throughout the universe. He could see for a hundred miles by day or night, slept less than a bird, and heard the grass grow, and even the wool on a lamb's back. At Baldur's obsequies he appears on his horse Gulltopp, and when RAGNAROK, the twilight of the gods, comes, he will sound his Gjallarhorn to assemble the gods and heroes.

Heimskringla. An important collection of sixteen sagas containing an account of the history of Norway—sketched through the medium of biography—and a compendium of ancient Scandinavian mythology and poetry. It is probably by Snorri Sturluson (d. 1241). See EDDA.

Heine, Heinrich (1797-1856). German poet, famous for his lyrics and his wit and irony. He was born of Jewish parentage but was baptized a Christian in 1825 and lived in Paris after 1830. Politically he was a radical and hoped to see a liberal government established in Germany, although his hopes were not realized. His works include: Das Buch der Lieder (The Book of Songs) (1827), a collection of poems; Reisebilder (Travel Sketches) (1826-1831), notes on his travels; Philosophie und Literatur in Deutschland (Philosophy and Literature in Germany) (1834) and Die Romantische Schule (The Romantic School) (1836), criticism; Atta Troll (1847); Romancero (1851); Neueste Gedichte (Latest Poems) (1853-1854). Heine wrote frequently in French as well as in German and was much interested in philosophy. Cf. Louis Untermeyer's Heinrich Heine.

Heinemann, William (1863-1920). British publisher of German descent. His firm (established 1890) came to be regarded as one of the most distinguished publishing houses in England.

Heinrich. The hero of Hauptmann's drama THE SUNKEN BELL.

Heinrich von Aue. The hero of a medieval romance Poor Heinrich (Der Arme Heinrich) told, ostensibly from family records, by the Minnesinger Hartmann von der Aue (Ger., 1210). Heinrich is a rich nobleman, who is afflicted with leprosy, and is told he will not recover till a virgin of spotless purity is willing to die on his behalf. As Heinrich neither hopes nor even wishes for such a sacrifice, he gives the main part of his possessions to the poor, and goes to live with a poor tenant farmer, who is one of his vassals. The daughter of this farmer hears by accident on what the cure of the leper depends, and goes to Salerno to offer herself as the victim. No sooner is the offer made than the lord is cured, and the damsel becomes his wife. This tale forms the subject of Longfellow's Golden Legend (1851). Heinrich is there called Prince Henry of Hohen-eck. Gerhart HAUPTMANN also used this legend as the basis for his drama Der arme Heinrich (1902).

Heinrich von Ofterdingen. One of the German MINNESINGERS of the 13th century. In legend, he appears as one of the contestants at the Battle of WARTBURG. Failing in one contest, he returned for another with the magician Klingsor who saved him from defeat, but was not able to wrest victory from his rival WOLFRAM VON ESCHENBACH.

Heinsius, Daniel (1580-1655). Dutch classical philologist and poet.

Heir at Law, The. A comedy by George Colman the younger (1797; printed 1808). Prominent characters in it are Dr. PANGLOSS, a satire on the mercenary private tutors of the period, and Zekiel and Cicely HOMESPUN, among the earliest "country jakes" appearing on the English stage.

Heiser, Victor George (1873-). American physician and public health authority. An American Doctor's Odyssey (1936); etc.

Hel or Hela. The name, in late Scandinavian mythology, of the queen of the dead; also, of her place of abode, which was the home of the spirits of those who had died in their beds, as distinguished from Valhalla, the abode of heroes slain in battle. She dwelt beneath the roots of the sacred ash (Yggdrasil), and was the daughter of LOKI.

Down the yawning steep he rode
That led to Hela's drear abode
Gray, Descent of Odin.

Held, John (1889-). American cartoonist, illustrator, and writer. Created a type of boy and girl in the Jazz Age. Author of Grim Youth (1930); A Bowl of Cherries (1933); etc.

Heldar, Dick. The hero of Kipling's LIGHT THAT FAILED.

Heldenbuch. Ger., Book of Heroes. Name of several collections of medieval epics. (1) Dresdner Heldenbuch, manuscript of 1472; (2) a printed collection of 1477; (3) Ambraser Heldenbuch, compiled early in the 16th century at the request of Emperor Maximilian; (4) (5) two 19th-century translations by Simrock; Das grosse Heldenbuch, Das kleine Heldenbuch; (6) Deutsches Heldenbuch, a scholarly edition by Prof. Müllenhof and others, 1866ff.

Helen. (1) The title of two poems by Edgar Allan Poe. The first, a short lyric written at the age of fourteen and published in 1831, was addressed to Mrs. Jane Stanard. It contains the frequently quoted lines:

To the glory that was Greece
And the grandeur that was Rome.

The second poem is in blank verse and is addressed to the poetess, Sarah Helen Whitman.

(2) Heroine of a ballad by D. G. Rossetti called Sister Helen (1870), a tale of a forsaken maiden who makes use of sorcery for a terrible, relentless revenge on the body and soul of her lover.

See also following entries.

Helen Burd. In Scotch legend, a sister of CHILDE ROWLAND rescued by him from the fairies who had shut her up in a castle in Elf-land.

Helen of Kirconnell. A famous Scotch ballad. The story is that Helen, a Scotch lady, is the lady-love of Adam Flemming. One day, while they are standing on the banks of a river, a rival suitor points his gun at Adam. Helen throws herself before him and is shot.

The two rivals then fight, and the murderer falls and is slain. Wordsworth embodies the same story in his Ellen Irwin.

Helen of Troy. The immortal type of the beautiful woman. In Greek legend she was the daughter of Zeus and Leda, and wife of Menelaus, king of Sparta. She eloped with Paris, and thus brought about the siege and destruction of Troy which forms the subject of Homer's ILIAD and the first books of Virgil's AENEID.

After the Trojan War, Helen returned to Menelaus. Later legends (given by Herodotus, Stesichorus, etc.) state that Helen did not accompany Paris all the way to Troy, but was detained in Egypt (see PALINODE); thus Euripides in his Helena makes the real Helen stay in Egypt, while a ghostly Helen lives through the Trojan War in Troy. According to one account, she marries Achilles after the death of Menelaus.

Centuries later, Helen of Troy came to play a prominent part in the legend of FAUST. According to the generally accepted tale, embodied in both Marlowe's Dr. Faustus and Goethe's Faust, she was called up from the world of spirits by Faust, to whom she bore a son. Marlowe's apostrophe to her is famous:

Was this the face that launched a thousand ships
And burnt the topless towers of Ilium?
Sweet Helen, make me immortal with a kiss;
Her lips suck forth my soul, see where it flies!
Marlowe, Dr. Faustus V, iii.

For which men all the life they here enjoy
Still fight, as for the Helena of their Troy.
Lord Brooke, Treatise of Humane Learning.
She moves a goddess and she looks a queen.
Pope, Homer's Iliad, iii.

Sara TEASDALE published a volume called Helen of Troy, And Other Poems (1911). In his satiric romance, JURGEN (1919) James Branch Cabell introduces Helen of Troy as the immortal wife of Achilles, living in Pseudopolis, a country at war with Philistia. A best-selling novel, The Private Life of Helen of Troy, by John Erskine (1925), shows Helen at home with Menelaus, after the Trojan Wars.

Helena. (1) In Shakespeare's MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, a young Athenian lady in love with Demetrius.

(2) One of the chief characters of Shakespeare's ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

(3) The name under which HELEN OF TROY appears in Goethe's Faust.

Helenus. In Virgil's Aeneid, the prophet, the only son of Priam who survives the fall of Troy. He falls to the share of Pyrrhus when the captives are awarded. Because he saved the life of the young Grecian, he is allowed to marry Andromache, his brother Hector's widow. In some versions of the legend he is said to have deserted the Trojan cause for the Greek.

Helice. A Cretan nymph, one of the nurses of the infant Zeus.

Helicon. The home of the Muses, a part of the Parnassus, a mountain range in Greece. It contained the fountains of Aganippe and Hippocrene, connected by "Helicon's harmonious stream." The name is used allusively of poetic inspiration.

Heliogabalus. Original name Varius Avitus Bassianus (204-222). Roman emperor (218-222). Began as priest in temple of sun god Elagabalus (hence his name as emperor). Put forward as son of Caracalla and proclaimed emperor by soldiers. Gave himself up to infamous debauchery, leaving affairs of state to his mother. Killed by PRAETORIANS. Title of a play by H. L. MENCKEN and George Jean NATHAN.

Helios. The Greek sun-god, who rode to his palace in Colchis every night in a golden boat furnished with wings. He is called Hyperion by Homer, and, in later times, Apollo.

heliotrope (Gr., "turn-to-sun"). Apollo loved CLYTIE, but forsook her for her sister Leucothoe. On discovering this, Clytie pined away; and Apollo changed her at death to a flower, which, always turning towards the sun, is called "heliotrope."

The bloodstone, a greenish quartz with veins and spots of red, used to be called "heliotrope," the story being that if thrown into a bucket of water it turned the rays of the sun to blood-color. This stone also had the power of rendering its bearer invisible.

No hope had they of crevice where to hide,
Or heliotrope to charm them out of view.
Dante, Inferno, xxiv.

The other stone is heliotrope, which renders those who have it invisible.—Boccaccio, The Decameron, Novel iii, Eighth day.

Hell. See GEHENNA, HADES, INFERNO, NARAKA, NASTROND, TARTARUS.

Helle. See under HELLESPOINT.

Hellen. In Greek legend, a king of Phthia, EPONYM of the Hellenic race.

Hellespont. The "sea of Helle" so called because Helle, the sister of Phryxus, was drowned there. She was fleeing with her brother through the air to Colchis on the golden ram to escape from Ino, her mother-in-law, who most cruelly oppressed her, but turning giddy, she fell into the sea. It is the ancient name of the Dardanelles. Leander used to swim across the Hellespont to visit HERO, a priestess of Sestos. Lord Byron was proud of having repeated the feat.

He could, perhaps, have passed the Hellespont,
As once (a feat on which ourselves we prided)
Leander, Mr. Ekenhead, and I did.
Byron, Don Juan, ii. 105 (1819).

Hell Gate. A dangerous passage between Great Barn Island and Long Island, N.Y. The Dutch settlers of New York called it Hoellgat (whirling-gut), corrupted into Hell Gate.

Hellman, Lillian (1905-). American writer of plays and scenarios for moving pictures. Author of The Children's Hour (1934); The Little Foxes (1939); Watch on the Rhine (1941) which was granted the award of the New York Drama Critics Circle, etc.

Hell's Kitchen. A district on the lower west side of Manhattan. So called because it was formerly notorious for gunmen and thieves.

Hellzapoppin. Long-run (1404 performances) American musical revue by Olsen and Johnson.

Helmer, Nora. The heroine of Ibsen's DOLL'S HOUSE.

Helmholtz, Hermann Ludwig Ferdinand von (1821-1894). German physicist, anatomist, and physiologist. One of the founders of the principle of the conservation of energy (1847). Many other investigations and contributions to science, as the invention of the ophthalmoscope (1850), the development of a theory of color vision, etc. Helmholtz was born with internal hydrocephalus and after an operation developed into a prodigy and genius of science.

Héloïse. Niece of the medieval Canon Fulbert of Notre Dame Cathedral, a beautiful and learned woman famous as the beloved of the philosopher Pierre ABÉLARD, who served as her tutor. They were married secretly after she gave birth to a son, although she begged that the marriage not take place, in order that his career might not be ruined. The outcome of the affair was tragic, with Héloïse entering a nunnery and Abélard emasculated by the enraged Fulbert. After the death of both lovers, their bodies were laid in the same tomb. The tender and passionate love-letters written by Héloïse to Abélard while she was a nun and he a monk are famous. It is said by some that Héloïse is one of the three outstanding women of the Middle Ages, the other two being ROSWITHA and MARIE DE FRANCE.

Helot. One of the lowest class of the people of ancient Sparta. They were serfs, bound to the soil, but owned by the state and not to be sold. They were possibly descendants of the original population conquered by the Dorian Spartiates.

Helvetia. Switzerland. So called from the Helvetii, a powerful Celtic people who dwelt thereabouts.

Hemingway, Ernest Miller (1898-). American novelist and short-story writer, early in his career a newspaperman and foreign correspondent. He first attracted attention as an American expatriate writer in Paris, a representative member of the "LOST GENERATION" in the circle of Gertrude STEIN. His books expressed the disillusionment that was widespread after World War I—in which he had volunteered and served with the Italian army—and dealt with drinking, physical sensation, sexual promiscuity, frequent sentimental broodings on the past, and violent death. He became famous for his style—clipped and staccato, colloquial, with short sentences and monosyllabic words, often repeated in a free-verse effect, and an extremely simple, detached, "hard-boiled" narrative technique, in which he is considered to have been influenced by Miss Stein. For awhile Hemingway, regarded as one of the novelists best portraying the spirit of the post-war JAZZ AGE, devoted himself to writing essays celebrating sports involving danger and physical violence. In the 1930's he became interested in the radical social and political reform movements of the time and went to Spain as a war correspondent during the Spanish Civil War, in which his sympathies were with the Loyalist government and with which his writings then began to deal. Hemingway's works include: Three Stories and Ten Poems (1923), In Our Time (1924), Men Without Women (1927), Winner Take Nothing (1933), and The Fifth Column and the First Forty-Nine Stories (1938), collections of short stories; The Torrents of Spring (1926); THE SUN ALSO RISES (1926); FAREWELL TO ARMS (1929), his best-known novel; Death in the Afternoon (1932), essays glorifying bullfighting; The Green Hills of Africa (1935), a book on big-game hunting; TO HAVE AND HAVE NOT (1937); FOR WHOM THE BELL TOLLS (1940), his most successful novel. Among his short stories, THE KILLERS is the most famous. See also FIFTH COLUMN. He also edited an anthology, Men at War (1942).

Hémon, Louis (1880-1913). French novelist, best-known for Maria Chapdelaine (1916), a novel of farm life in the Canadian province of Quebec, which he was inspired to write by his stay on the farm of a French-Canadian named Samuel Bédard, and which became very popular after its posthumous publication. Other books by Hémon are: Blind Man's Buff (1925) and Monsieur Ripois and Nemesis (1925), novels; My Fair Lady (1923), short stories; and The Journal of Louis Hémon (1924). The author died penniless, killed by a train while he was walking along a railroad track in Canada on his way to a new locality in search of work.

hemophilia. A morbid condition, usually hereditary, characterized by a tendency to bleed profusely and uncontrollably from the slightest wounds. Some royal families are prone to it, especially the former Spanish royal house. It is often latent in women and always acute in men.

Henchard, Michael. Titular hero of Hardy's MAYOR OF CASTERBRIDGE.

hendecasyllable. A metrical line of eleven syllables.

O you chorus of indolent reviewers.

Tennyson.

Henderson, Alice Corbin (1881-). American poet. Associate Editor of Poetry: A Magazine of Verse (1912-1916) with Harriet Monroe. Compiler (with Miss Monroe) of the The New Poetry, an Anthology (1917).

Henderson, Archibald (1877-). American educator. Head of mathematics department (from 1920) of University of North Carolina. Author of George Bernard Shaw, His Life and Works (1911); etc. Official biographer of Shaw.

Henderson, Arthur (1863-1935). British Labor party leader and statesman. Awarded Nobel peace prize (1934).

Henderson, Leon (1895-). American economist. Member, National Industrial Recovery Board (1934-1935); administrator, Office of Price Administration; holder of several other important government posts in World War II.

Henderson, William James (1855-1937). American music critic and author. His books on singers and the art of singing are authoritative works in the field. Author of The Story of Music (1889); Richard Wagner (1901); Early History of Singing (1921); etc. Associate editor, The Standard Dictionary (1892-1894).

hendiadys. The use of a pair of nouns joined by "and" where one has the force of an adjective, as Tennyson's "waving to him white hands and courtesy," i.e., courteous white hands.

Hendrick, Burton Jesse (1871-). American magazine and newspaper writer. Co-author (with William S. Sims) of The Victory at Sea (Pulitzer Prize for history, 1920); author of The Training of an American (Pulitzer Prize for biography, 1928); etc.

Hengist and Horsa. The semi-legendary leaders of the Jutes, who landed in England at Ebbsfleet, Kent, in 449. Horsa is said to have been slain at the battle of Aylesford, about 455, and Hengist to have ruled in Kent till his death in 488.

Henley. The Henley Regatta, an annual event (since 1839) at Henley-on-Thames, in Oxfordshire, 36 miles west of London, England.

Henley, William Ernest (1849-1903). English poet and editor, a friend of Robert Louis STEVENSON. He was an advocate of individuality and novelty, and is known for the vigor of his verse and the vividness of some of his impressionistic sketches. The most outstanding of the latter are found in the volume called In Hospital (1888), a collection of poems written while Henley was a tubercular patient in the Edinburgh Infirmary; his best-known poem, INVICTUS, is contained therein. Other books of poetry are: A Book of Verse (1888); The Song of the Sword (1893), later known as London Voluntaries; Poems (1898); Hawthorn and Lavender (1901). He wrote several plays, three in collaboration with Stevenson. As editor of the magazine National Observer in Edinburgh he advocated imperialistic policies for Britain (see IMPERIALISM), publishing the Barrack-Room Ballads of Rudyard KIP-LING.

Hennepin, Father Louis (1640-?1701). Flemish Roman Catholic friar of the order of Récollets of St. Francis and explorer in America. Accompanied La Salle through Great Lakes (1679); with exploring party in upper Mississippi region (1680). Published Description de la Louisiane (1683); etc. While a captive of the Sioux (1680), he discovered the Falls of St. Anthony. His claim to have descended to the mouth of the Mississippi has been shown to be false.

Hennessey, Mr. The friend and crony of Mr. DOOLEY.

Henriade, The. A historical poem in ten chants, by VOLTAIRE (1724). The subject is the struggle of Henri IV of France (1553-1610) with the Holy League.

Henrietta Anne, Duchesse d'Orléans (1644-1670). Fifth daughter of Charles I of England. Popular at Charles II's Court; married brother of Louis XIV, and was the latter's intermediary with Charles II. Died of poisoning (?). Cf. Royal Flush: The Story of Minette by Margaret Irwin.

Henrietta Maria (1609-1669). Queen consort (1625-1649) of Charles I of England. Daughter of Henry IV of France. Roman Catholic. Forced to flee to France (1644). Permitted to return to England after the Restoration. Mother of Charles II, JAMES II, HENRIETTA ANNE, etc.

Henriette. In Molière's comedy LES FEMMES SAVANTES, daughter of Chrysale and Philaminte. She is in love with Clitandre, and ultimately becomes his wife. Her mother and sister believe that Henriette ought to devote her life to science and philosophy; but Hen-riette loves woman's work far better, and thinks that her natural province is domestic life, with wifely and motherly duties. The French call Henriette "the type of a perfect woman."

Henriot, Émile. Pseudonym of Émile Maigrot (1889-). French poet and novelist. Awarded Grand Prix of French Academy (1924) for Aricie Brun.

Henriques, Robert David Quixano (1905-). English novelist. No Arms No Armour (1939); The Voice of the Trumpet (1942), etc. As a soldier in World War II, he organized British commandos.

Henry II (1133-1189). King of England. He is introduced by Walter Scott in both The Betrothed and The Talisman.

Henry IV. Also called Henry of Navarre and Henry the Great (1553-1610). King of France (1589-1610). Brought up as a Calvinist. Sided with Huguenots. Married Margaret of Valois, sister of Charles IX (1572). Escaped massacre of St. Bartholomew. Became king at death of Henry III. Formally renounced Protestantism (1593). Signed Edict of Nantes (1598). His final years were a period of recovery from wars and of prosperity for France. Assassinated by the Roman Catholic fanatic Ravalliac. See also THE HENRIADE by Voltaire. When Henry was crowned King of France, he made his famous promise (reminiscent of Herbert Hoover): "Je veux que le dimanche chaque paysan ait sa poule au pot."

Henry IV (1366-1413). King of England, hero of Shakespeare's 1 and 2 Henry IV. He appears as Bolingbroke in Richard II, which deals with the period previous to his reign. 1 Henry IV treats of English history from the deposition of Richard II to the defeat and death of Henry Percy (Hotspur) at the battle of Shrewsbury, July 23, 1403. 2 Henry IV continues the history from the battle of Shrewsbury to the death of the King. The two plays date from about 1598. Much of their interest depends on the famous comic character, Sir John FALSTAFF.

Henry V (1387-1422). King of England and the central figure in Shakespeare's Henry V. The action covers the period from the opening of Parliament in 1414 to the preparation for Henry's marriage with Katherine in 1420.

Henry VI (1421-1471). King of England and hero of Shakespeare's 1, 2 and 3 Henry VI. 1 Henry VI covers the twenty-three-year period from the accession of Henry VI to his marriage with Margaret of Anjou. It opens with the funeral procession of Henry V. This part contains the victories of Joan of Arc, the restitution of France to Charles, the Dauphin (nominally the viceroy of Henry VI, but really an independent king), and the loss of France to the English scepter by right of conquest.

2 Henry VI begins with the marriage of the king to Margaret of Anjou, and terminates with the battle of St. Albans, in May, 1455, in which Richard, duke of York, took the King prisoner. This part contains the commencement of the wars of the White and Red Roses, the death of the good Duke Humphrey, and the rebellion of Jack Cade.

3 Henry VI. This part ends with the accession of Edward IV, who sends Margaret of Anjou, the queen consort of Henry VI, back to France.

Henry VIII (1491-1547). The last of the English Tudor kings, hero of the historical play Henry VIII attributed to Shakespeare. The play treats of the divorce of Katharine, marriage of the King to Anne Boleyn, and birth of Elizabeth.

Henry, Frederic. An American ambulance driver in Italy during World War I, hero of Ernest Hemingway's A FAREWELL TO ARMS.

Henry, John. Negro hero of a cycle of American BALLADS and tall tales, originating in the last quarter of the 19th century. John Henry is a man of prodigious strength who sometimes appears as a railroad steel-driller and others as a roustabout on Mississippi River boats. In one well-known version of the tales he dies from over-exertion after taking part in a contest of drilling against a steam-drill and winning out over the machine. Roark BRADFORD wrote a synthesis of the various tales in John Henry (1931). See also Bunyan, Paul.

Henry, Joseph (1797-1878). American physicist. While a teacher at the Albany Academy (1827) made first demonstration before the Albany Institute of a magnet with doubled lift due to insulation. As a professor of natural philosophy at Princeton, he established induction theories that were of great use to Samuel F. B. MORSE in inventing the telegraph. He became the first secretary of the Smithsonian Institution (1846). The name henry was adopted in his honor for the unit of inductance by the International Electrical Congress at Chicago (1893).

Henry, O. Pen name of William Sydney Porter (1862-1910). American short-story writer, noted for his extremely popular stories dealing chiefly with the lives of modest people in great cities, marked by sentimentality, semi-realism, and a surprise ending which came to be known as the "O. Henry ending" and was widely imitated in commercial fiction. Collections of his stories include: Cabbages and Kings (1904); THE FOUR MILLION (1906); The Trimmed Lamp (1907); The Heart of the West (1907); The Voice of the City (1908);

The Gentle Gaffer (1908); Roads of Destiny (1909); Strictly Business (1910); Sixes and Sevens (1911); Rolling Stones (1913); Waifs and Strays (1917). The Gift of the Magi is his most famous single story. O. Henry had a contract with the New York World to produce a story a week at the rate of $100 a story—a contract which the author fulfilled. In his early career he was a newspaperman and bank-clerk, and served a prison term in Ohio (1898–1901) for embezzlement, although it is said that inefficient methods in use by the bank were responsible for the shortages of funds for which he was blamed.

O. Henry Memorial Award Prize Stories. A collection of American short stories published annually by Doubleday & Company and edited by Herschel Brickell.

Henry, Patrick (1736–1799). American statesman and orator. Revolutionary leader from Virginia. As member of the Virginia House of Burgesses, he offered a series of resolutions declaring the Stamp Act unconstitutional. Prominent member of the Continental Congress (1774). Governor of Virginia (1776–1779; 1784–1786). Famous passages from his speeches include:

I am not a Virginian, but an American (Continental Congress, Sept. 5, 1774).

I have but one lamp by which my feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience (Virginia House of Delegates, March 23, 1775).

It is natural to man to indulge in the illusions of hope. We are apt to shut our eyes against a painful truth, and listen to the song of that siren, till she transforms us into beasts (ditto).

Is life so dear or peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take; but as for me, give me liberty, or give me death! (ditto).

I know of no way of judging the future but by the past (Virginia Convention, March, 1775).

Caesar had his Brutus; Charles the First, his Cromwell; and George the Third—may profit by their example. If this be treason, make the most of it (Virginia Convention, 1765).

Henry Esmond, The History of. A historical novel by THACKERAY (1852) written in the first person, supposedly by Henry Esmond. He is brought up by Francis Esmond, heir to the Castlewood estate with Francis' own children, Beatrix and Frank, and grows up in the belief that he is the illegitimate son of Thomas Esmond, the deceased viscount of Castlewood. On his deathbed Francis confesses to Harry that he is the lawful heir, but Harry keeps the information secret. He and Frank Esmond are ardent supporters of James the Pretender, who, however, falls in love with Beatrix and ruins his chances for the throne. Beatrix joins the Prince abroad, and Harry, who has been in love with her, renounces the Pretender, marries her mother Rachel, Lady Castlewood, instead, and takes her to America.

Henry Ryecroft, The Private Papers of, see under PRIVATE.

Henryson, Robert (1430?–1506). Scotch poet, one of the group of SCOTTISH CHAUCERIANS. His works include: Tale of Orpheus (1508); Testament of Cressid (1593), a treatment of the TROILUS legend, attributed to Chaucer until the 18th century; Moral Fables of Aesop the Phrygian (1621).

Henty, George Alfred (1832–1902). English writer of many books for boys laid in various historical periods.

Hepburn. Family name of the earls of BOTHWELL.

Hepburn, Katharine (1909–). American actress on stage and screen. Received award of Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences (1934) for her performance in Morning Glory. Success in Philip Barry's The Philadelphia Story (1939).

Hephaestus. The Greek name for VULCAN.

Hepplewhite, George (d. 1786). English cabinetmaker. Famous for light and elegant design of furniture, not basically different from SHERATON.

Heptameron, The (Greek, hepta, "seven," hemera, "day"). A collection of Italian and medieval stories, many of them of a somewhat licentious nature, written by—or at any rate ascribed to—Marguerite of Angoulême, Queen of Navarre (1492–1549), and published posthumously in 1558. They were supposed to have been related in seven days, hence the title. See also DECAMERON.

heptarchy (Gr., "seven governments"). A government consisting of seven persons, or a group of seven countries or districts each under its own ruler, but allied and friendly toward each other.

Anglo-Saxon heptarchy. The division of England into seven parts, Kent, Sussex, Wessex, Essex, East Anglia, Mercia, and Northumbria. Their alliance flourished in various periods from the 6th to the 9th centuries under a BRETWALDA, but it seldom consisted of exactly seven members, and the names and divisions were constantly changing.

Hera (Gr., "the chosen one," from haereo, "I choose"). The Greek JUNO, the wife of Zeus.

Heraclitus (ca. 540–475 B.C.). Greek philosopher in Ephesus, known as "The Weeping Philosopher." One of the earliest metaphysicians.

Herald. A New York newspaper, founded as a penny daily by James Gordon BENNETT. Before the Civil War it was a Tammany organ of reaction, but during the Civil War it was strongly pro-Union. In 1872 the younger James Gordon Bennett succeeded his father as editor. It was he who founded in France the Paris Herald (1887). The news coverage of the Herald was its main feature. Frank Munsey purchased it in 1920 and merged it temporarily with the Sun. Ogden Reid bought it in 1924 and combined it with the New York Tribune. As the Herald Tribune it became a Republican daily morning paper, its chief columnist being Walter Lippmann.

heraldry. The herald (O.Fr. heralt, heraut) was an officer whose duty it was to proclaim war or peace, carry challenges to battle, and messages between sovereigns, etc. Nowadays war or peace is still proclaimed by the heralds, but their chief duty as court functionaries is to superintend state ceremonies such as coronations, installations, etc., and also to grant arms, trace genealogies, attend to matters of precedence, honors, etc.

There are nine points on the shield or escutcheon, distinguished by the first nine letters of the alphabet: three at top, A, B, C; three down the middle, D, E, F; and three at the bottom, G, H, I. The first three are chiefs; the middle three are the collar point, fess point, and nombrel or navel point; the bottom three are the base points.

The colors, or tinctures, used in heraldry are:

Or , gold.	Sable , black.
Argent , silver.	Vert , green.
Gules , red.	Purpure , purple.
Azure , blue.

Besides these there are the different furs, as ermine, vair, and their arrangements as ermineois, erminites, pean, potent, verry, etc.

In blazoning the arms of royalties the old heralds frequently used the names of the planets for the tinctures, and in noblemen's arms the names of precious stones, the equivalents being:

Sol —topaz— or .
Luna —pearl— argent .
Saturn —diamond— sable .
Mars —ruby— gules .
Jupiter —sapphire— azure .
Venus —emerald— vert .
Mercury —amethyst— purpure .

The heraldic terms denoting the positions of beasts shown in coats of arms, as crests, etc., are:

couchant, lying down (emblematic of sovereignty);
counter-passant, moving in opposite directions;
coward or coué, with tail hanging between the legs;
dormant, sleeping;
gardant, full-faced;
hauriant, standing on its tail (of fishes);
issuant, rising from the top or bottom of an ordinary;
loaged, reposing (of stags, etc.);

naiant, swimming (of fishes);
nascent, rising out of the middle of an ordinary;
passant, walking, the face in profile (emblematic of resolution);
passant gardant, walking, with full face (emblematic of resolution and prudence);
passant regardant, walking and looking behind;
rampant, rearing, with face in profile (emblematic of magnanimity); rampant gardant, erect on the hind legs; full face (emblematic of prudence); rampant regardant, erect on the hind legs; side face looking behind (emblematic of circumspection);
regardant, looking back (emblematic of circumspection);
salient, springing (emblematic of valor).
sejant, seated (emblematic of counsel);
statant, standing still;
truppant, running (of stags, etc.);
volant, flying.

Herbert, Alan Patrick (1890–). English journalist and writer. Wounded at Gallipoli in World War I. Regular contributor to Punch. His novel The Water Gipsies (1930) served to footnote his fight for freedom of the Thames to non-commercial craft. Also secured, as an M.P., passage of the Matrimonial Causes Bill (1937), modifying the outmoded English divorce laws. (His novel, Holy Deadlock [1934] was helpful here). A great after-dinner speaker. Has written much light verse and some successful comic operas.

Herbert, George (1593–1633). English poet of the Metaphysical school. See METAPHYSICAL POETS. A clergyman and one-time Public Orator of Cambridge University, he wrote poetry marked by religious piety, striking, colloquial rhythms, simple diction, and the use of symbols and arresting images from ecclesiastical ritual, farming, the trades, science, and everyday household pursuits; the poems themselves were often arranged on the page in strange shapes, such as altars, crosses, and the like. His best-known group of poems are those contained in The Temple (1633).

Edward, Lord Herbert of Cherbury (1583–1648), his brother, was a well-known courtier, adventurer, and philosopher, in the last capacity arguing for rationalism in religion and attacking the clergy. He also wrote poetry in the Metaphysical vein which is reputed to have been too obscure and complex for the members of the Metaphysical school themselves.

Herbert, Victor (1859–1924). Irish-American conductor and composer. Wrote light operas, The Wizard of the Nile (1893); Babes in Toyland (1903); Mlle. Modiste (1905);

The Red Mill (1906); Naughty Marietta (1910); etc. Also two grand operas and musical scores for the Ziegfeld Follies.

Herbst, Josephine Frey (1897-). American novelist. Three of her novels—Pity is not Enough (1933); The Executioner Waits (1934); Rope of Gold (1939)—were designed as a trilogy to portray the decay of capitalistic society and "the upthrust of a new group society."

Hercules. A hero of ancient Greek myth, who was possessed of superhuman physical strength and vigor. He is represented as brawny, muscular, short-necked, and of huge proportions. The Pythian told him if he would serve Eurystheus for twelve years he should become immortal; accordingly he bound himself to the Argive king, who imposed upon him twelve tasks of great difficulty and danger known as the Labors of Hercules:

- (1) To slay the Nemean lion.
- (2) To kill the Lernean hydra.
- (3) To catch and retain the Arcadian stag.
- (4) To destroy the Erymanthian boar.
- (5) To cleanse the stables of King Augeas.
- (6) To destroy the cannibal birds of the Lake Stymphalis.
- (7) To take captive the Cretan bull.
- (8) To catch the horses of the Thracian Diomedes.
- (9) To get possession of the girdle of Hippolyta, Queen of the Amazons.
- (10) To take captive the oxen of the monster Geryon.
- (11) To get possession of the apples of the Hesperides.
- (12) To bring up from the infernal regions the three-headed dog Cerberus.

For the story of Hercules' madness and death, see Nessus. He is the hero of a tragedy, Hercules Furens, by Euripides, and another by Seneca.

After death Hercules took his place in the heavens as a constellation, and is still to be seen between Lyra and Corona Borealis.

Hercules' choice. Immortality, the reward of toil in preference to pleasure.

Hercules' labor. Very great toil.

Hercules' Pillars, see PILLARS.

the Attic Hercules. Theseus, who went about like Hercules, destroying robbers and achieving wondrous exploits.

the Jewish Hercules. SAMSON.

the Hercules of the North American Indians. KWASIND.

the Persian Hercules. RUSTUM.

the Hercules of Music. Christoph Willibald von Gluck (1714-1787).

Hercules Secundus. Commodus, the Roman emperor (b. 161, reigned 180-192) gave himself this title.

Herculean knot. A snaky complication on the rod, or caduceus, of Mercury, adopted by the Grecian brides as the fastening of their woollen girdles, which only the bridegroom was allowed to untie. As he did so he invoked Juno to render his marriage as fruitful as that of Hercules, whose numerous wives all had families, amongst them being the fifty daughters of Thestius, each of whom conceived in one night.

herd. See under COVEY.

Herder, Johann Gottfried (1744-1803). German poet and literary critic, of wide influence during the romantic period in Germany, interested in classic Greece, German folk-lore, and philosophy. See ROMANTICISM; STURM UND DRANG.

Heredia, José María de (1842-1905). Cuban-born French poet of the group called PARNASSIANS, a pupil of Leconte de Lisle and known for the richness of his imagery, the sonority, cadence, and rhythm of his language, and the evocative character of his historical impressions. His one book is Les Trophées (1893), consisting chiefly of sonnets and dealing with conquest through the ages, especially in Greece, Rome, the Middle Ages, the Renaissance, and the Orient.

heretoga. Among the Anglo-Saxons, the leader or commander of an army. The word survives in German as Herzog and was translated by the Romans as dux. HENGIST AND Horsa were two "heretogas."

Hereward. An important character in SCOTT'S COUNT ROBERT OF PARIS.

Hereward the Wake. A historical novel by Charles KINGSLEY (1865). The titular hero is a reckless young Saxon who for a time successfully opposes the Norman conquest. He plunders and burns the abbey of Peterborough, establishes his camp in the Isle of Ely where he is joined by Earl Morcar, is blockaded for three months by William I, but makes his escape with some of his followers.

Herford, Oliver (1863-1935). Writer and illustrator. Drew for Life, Harper's Weekly, and other magazines. Wrote and illustrated about fifty books of artistic nonsense. Some of his work comes close to greatness.

The bubble winked at me, and said,
"You'll miss me, brother, when you're dead."

Hergesheimer, Joseph (1880-). American novelist and short-story writer, author of popular studies of upper-class American families and picturesque romances in colorful settings. His books include: The Lay Anthony (1914); THE THREE BLACK PENNYNS (1917); JAVA HEAD (1919); The Happy End (1919), short stories, among them his best known story, Tol'able David, which was dramatized as a popular motion picture; LINDA CONDON (1919); Cytherea (1922); The Bright Shawl (1922); Tampico (1926); Swords and Roses (1929); The Limestone Tree (1931); The Foolscap Rose (1934).

Heriot, George (1563-1624). Scottish goldsmith. Jeweler to James VI (James I of England); founder of Heriot's Hospital at Edinburgh (1659). As Geordie he is a prominent figure in Scott's Fortunes of Nigel.

Hermann and Dorothea. A narrative pastoral poem by GOETHE (1797). The hero, Hermann, son of a well-to-do German farmer, falls in love with one of a band of refugees from the horrors of the French Revolution, Dorothea by name. For a time she becomes a servant in his father's household. Eventually, after certain painful misunderstandings have been cleared away, the lovers are betrothed.

hermaphrodite. A human body having both sexes; a vehicle combining the structure of a wagon and cart; a flower containing both the male and female organs of reproduction. The word is derived from the fable of Hermaphroditus, son of Hermes and Aphrodite as told in Ovid's Metamorphoses. The nymph Salmacis became enamored of him, and prayed that she might be so closely united that "the twain might become one flesh." Her prayer being heard, the nymph and boy became one body.

Hermes. The same as MERCURY, applied both to the god and to the metal.

Hermia. In Shakespeare's MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, daughter of Egeus of Athens, and promised by him in marriage to Demetrius but herself in love with Lysander.

Hermione. (1) In Greek legend, only daughter of Menelaus and Helen. She became the wife of Pyrrhus or Neoptolemus, son of Achilles; but Orestes assassinated Pyrrhus and married Hermione, who had already been betrothed to him.

(2) The heroine of Shakespeare's WINTER'S TALE, wife of King Leontes of Sicily.

(3) The self-important heroine of Don Marquis' humorous volume Hermione and Her Little Group of Serious Thinkers (Am., 1916). Hermione made her first appearance in the columns of the New York Evening Sun. She is devoted to a number of "causes" of the day, which prove too much for her feeble intellect, though she is quite unaware of the fact, and give ample opportunity for contemporary satire.

Hermit, The. A ballad by Oliver GOLD-SMITH (1766). The hero and heroine are EDWIN AND ANGELINA. It contains the well-known lines—

Man wants but little here below,
Nor wants that little long.

Hermit Nation or Hermit Kingdom. Korea, so called because of its seclusion before it came under Japanese influence.

Hermod or Hermodr. In Scandinavian mythology, the son of Odin who journeyed to HEL and made the unsuccessful attempt to recall Balder to the Upper World. It is he who, with Bragi, receives and welcomes to VAL-HALLA all heroes who fall in battle.

Hernani. The title and hero of a tragedy by Victor Hugo (1830). As the first drama of note to be produced by the romantic school, it attracted great attention and had much the same effect on the French theater that The Sorrows of Werther had on German fiction. See WERTHER. Hernani is a bandit, in love with Donna Sol, the betrothed of Don Ruy Gomez, an old Spanish grandee who is her guardian. Don Carlos (Charles V) also falls in love with the lady, complicating the situation greatly, for one or another of these romantic gentlemen is time after time forced by the rites of chivalry to protect his rival from the third suitor. Thus Carlos saves Hernani from Ruy Gomez, Hernani returns the compliment by saving the King, and still later Carlos is thwarted in his hot pursuit of the bandit by Ruy Gomez' interposed protection. In return for this generous assistance, Hernani now presents Ruy Gomez with a horn, saying that when the horn sounds, he will forfeit his life. Just as he is about to marry Donna Sol in the last act, Ruy Gomez blows the horn, the lovers take poison and Ruy Gomez stabs himself. Verdi has an opera, Ernani (1844), founded on the drama.

Herndon, William Henry (1818-1891). American lawyer. Entered into law partnership with Abraham Lincoln (1843), which continued in form until the latter's death. Author, with Jesse W. Weik, of Herndon's Lincoln: The True Story of a Great Life (3 vols., 1889). His letters and papers relating to Lincoln were edited by Emmanuel Hertz as The Hidden Lincoln (1938).

Hero. In Shakespeare's MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING, the greatly maligned daughter of Leonato, governor of Messina. She is of a quiet, serious disposition, and forms a good contrast to the gay, witty, rattle-pate Beatrice, her cousin.

Hero and Leander. The old Greek tale is that Hero, a priestess of Venus, fell in love with Leander who swam across the Hellespont every night to visit her. One night he was drowned, and heartbroken Hero drowned herself in the same sea. The story is told in one of the poems of Musaeus, and in Marlowe's Hero and Leander (1598), left unfinished at Marlowe's death and completed by George CHAPMAN.

Lord Byron and Lieutenant Ekenhead repeated the experiment of Leander and accomplished it in 1 hour 10 minutes. (See also HALIBURTON, RICHARD.) The distance, allowing for drifting, would be about four miles. In DON JUAN, Byron says of his hero:

A better swimmer you could scarce see ever,
He could, perhaps, have pass'd the Hellespont,
As once (a feat on which ourselves we prided)
Leander, Mr. Ekenhead, and I did.

Canto, II. cv.

Herod. There are two rulers of this name famed in history and legend.

(1) Herod the Great (73?-4 B.C.). Ruler over Judea under the Roman régime. For the tragic story of Herod and his wife Mariamne, and its use in dramatic literature, see MARIAMNE.

The birth of Christ took place in the last year of this Herod's reign (4 B.C.—an error in chronology first assigned it to 1 A.D.) and it was he who ordered the MASSACRE OF THE INNOCENTS.

to out-herod Herod. To outdo in wickedness, violence, or rant, the worst of tyrants. The Herod who destroyed the babes of Bethlehem (Matt. ii. 16), was made (in the ancient mysteries) a ranting, roaring tyrant, the extravagance of his rant being the measure of his bloody-mindedness. See also PILATE.

Oh, it offends me to the soul to hear a robustious, periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings . . . it out-herods Herod.—Shakespeare, Hamlet iii. 2.

(2) Herod Antipater. Son of Herod the Great and tetrarch of Galilee from 4 B.C. to 39 A.D. It was this Herod who married his brother's wife Herodias and at the request of his step-daughter SALOME presented her with the head of John the Baptist on a platter.

Hérodiade. A dramatic poem by Stéphane MALLARMÉ in which the heroine, a woman of white and ice-like beauty, soliloquizes upon the deliberate isolation and sterility of her life. She is interpreted as a symbol of the aesthetic coldness and sterility celebrated in another poem of Mallarmé's, THE SWAN.

Herodias (1) (14? B.C.—after 40 A.D.). Daughter of Aristobulus and sister of Herod Agrippa I; married her uncle Herod Philip, whom she left to marry his brother, Herod Antipas as his second wife; mother of Salome (Matt. xiv. 3-12; Mark iv. 17-29).

(2) In Sue's WANDERING JEW the half-sister of Abasuerus, like him condemned to eternal wandering.

Herodotus (484-432 B.C.). Famous Greek historian. Known as "The Halicarnassian" after his birthplace Halicarnassus. His great work, a history of the Greco-Persian wars from 500 to 479 B.C., brought him the surname of "Father of History." It consists of nine books, named after the nine Muses, and was first printed in Greek by Aldus Manutius (1502).

Heroes and Hero Worship. A famous series of lectures by Thomas CARLYLE (1840).

heroic verse. That verse in which epic poetry is generally written, so called because it is employed to celebrate heroic exploits. In Greek and Latin it is hexameter verse; in English it is ten-syllable iambic verse, either in rhymes or not; in Italian it is the ottava rima.

The English heroic verse becomes the heroic couplet (see under COUPLET) when used in rhymed pairs of lines. The 18th-century poets, particularly Dryden and Pope, brought its use to a high degree of perfection.

Herostatus, see EROSTRATUS.

Herrera, Fernando de. Called el Divino (1534?-1597). Head of Sevillian school of lyric poetry; friend of Cervantes; disciple of GARCILASO DE LA VEGA. Known particularly for his classicistic poems in Italian style. Also wrote a life of Thomas More, Vida y Muerte de Tomas Moro (1592).

Herrick, Robert. A brilliant degenerate in Stevenson's romance, EBB TIDE (1894).

Herrick, Robert (1591-1674). English poet, one of the "Sons of Ben," or poets who followed in the tradition of Ben Jonson. Herrick's poetry is graceful, lyrical, and charming, marked by delicate, pictorial imagery culled from nature, rustic scenes, and court life, broadly influenced by the Latin classic poets. He was a country vicar in Devonshire until 1647, when he was ejected by the Puritans for his royalist principles. Hesperides, or the Works both Human and Divine of Robert Herrick, Esq. (1648).

Herrick, Robert (1868-1938). American novelist and teacher. The center of his activity was Chicago, "the characteristic American metropolis." He desired his novels to contribute to an understanding of modern American life. A writer of careful prose and a pioneer realist. The Common Lot (1904); The Master of the Inn (1908); Together (1908); Clark's Field (1914); The End of Desire (1931); etc.

Herries Novels. By Hugh WALPOLE, a series of chronicles of English social history: Rogue Herries (1930); Judith Paris (1931); The Fortress (1932); Vanessa (1933); The Bright Pavilions (1940); Katherine Christian (1943).

herring-pond, the. A name humorously given to various dividing seas, especially to the Atlantic, which separates America from the British Isles. The English Channel, the North Sea, and the seas between Australasia and the United Kingdom are also so called.

Herrings, Battle of. See under BATTLE.

Herriot, Édouard (1872–). French statesman. Radical Socialist leader; premier of France (1924–1925; 1932); minister of state; president, Chamber of Deputies; under arrest after the fall of France.

Herschel, Sir William. Originally Friedrich Wilhelm Herschel (1738–1822). English astronomer, born in Hanover. Discovered a new planet (1781) which he called Georgium Sidus in honor of King George III. It is now known as Uranus. Also discovered moons of Saturn and Uranus. In his earlier years he attained considerable success as a violinist and organist. The Dictionary of National Biography writes: "In nearly every branch of modern physical astronomy he was a pioneer. He was the virtual founder of sidereal science. As an explorer of the heavens he had but one rival—his son." Cf. the poem by Alfred Noyes, "Sir William Herschel Conducts," in The Watchers of the Skies (1937). His studies were continued by his son Sir John Frederick William Herschel (1792–1871). Also two of his grandsons achieved renown as astronomers.

Herse. A Greek deity of the fertilizing dew. According to legend, she and her sister Aglauros opened a box given them by Athena. In it was a snake, and Herse and Aglauros hurled themselves from the Acropolis.

Hertha, see NERTHUS.

Hertz, Emanuel (1870–1940). Lawyer and writer on Abraham Lincoln. Made special study of Lincoln's life. See also under HERNDON.

Hertz, Heinrich Rudolph (1857–1894). German physicist. Demonstrated the existence of electric or electromagnetic waves, called also "hertzian waves." His further investigations of them led to the development of wireless telegraphy.

Hervé Riel. A Breton sailor, who saved the French squadron when beaten at Cape la Hogue and flying before the English, by piloting it into the harbor of St. Malo (May 31, 1692). He was so unconscious of the service he had rendered that, when desired to name his reward, he begged for a whole day's holiday to see his wife. Browning has a poem called Hervé Riel (1867).

Hervey, John. Baron Hervey of Ickworth (1696–1743). English politician. Lord Privy Seal (1740–1742). Author of Memoirs of the Court of George II. Attacked by Alexander Pope, because of his effeminacy, as "Lord Fanny."

Herzog, Émile Salomon Wilhelm. See MAUROIS, ANDRÉ.

Hesiod. Greek poet of 8th century B.C. "Father of Greek didactic poetry." The most important works ascribed to him are Works and Days and Theogony. The one consists of moral maxims and rural precepts. The other is an account of the origin of the world and the gods.

Hesione. In Greek legend, daughter of Laomedon, king of Troy, and sister to Priam. Her father exposed her to a sea-monster in order to appease the wrath of Apollo and Poseidon, but she was rescued by Hercules, who made the stipulation that he should receive a certain reward. Laomedon did not keep his promise, so Hercules slew him, took Troy, and gave Hesione to Telamon, by whom she became the mother of Teucer. The refusal of the Greeks to give her up to Priam is given as one of the causes of the Trojan War.

Hesperia. From Greek hesperos, "evening." Italy was so called by the Greeks, because it was to them the land of the setting sun and the evening star. The Romans, for a similar reason, transferred the name to Spain.

Hesperides. Three sisters who guarded the golden apples which Hera received as a marriage gift. They were assisted by the dragon Ladon. Hercules, as the last of his "twelve labors," slew the dragon and carried some of the apples to Eurystheus. Many poets call the place where these golden apples grew the garden of the Hesperides.

Hesperus. (1) The evening star.

(2) Longfellow wrote a poem of a shipwreck called The Wreck of the Hesperus (1842).

Hess, Rudolf (1894–). German politician. Born in Alexandria, hence nicknamed the "Egyptian." Intimate friend of HITLER (since 1921). Took down and influenced dictation of Mein Kampf. Third deputy Fuhrer, after Goring (1939). Created world sensation by solo flight (May, 1941) to Scotland. Held as prisoner of war. One of the German leaders tried as war criminals in Nuremberg, where he was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Hesse, Hermann (1877–). German novelist, poet and essayist, resident of Switzerland. Cultivated writer little known in America. Also noteworthy as an aquarellist.

Hessian. One whose services in politics or war can be easily bought; so called from the Hessian mercenaries who fought for England in the American Revolution.

Hestia. A Greek goddess, later identified with VESTA, the Roman goddess of the hearth.

Hesychasts (from Gr. hesychos, "still, calm"). A sect of mystics or quietists in the Eastern Church, who lived on Mount Athos in the 14th century. They aimed to attain by contemplating their navel perfect serenity and supernatural insight which enabled them to feel, diffused through them, an uncreated but communicable divine light, the same which shone on Mt. Tabor at the transfiguration of Christ.

hetaera. Literally, a female companion or comrade. In ancient Greece, a mistress of the better class. Some hetaeras were freed women or even women of free birth. LAIS and PHRYNE are the most famous ones.

Hetman (Ger. hauptmann, "chief man"). A general or commander-in-chief. The chief of the Cossacks of the Don used to be so called. He was elected by the people, and the mode of choice was thus: The voters threw their fur caps at the candidate they voted for, and he who had the largest number of caps at his feet was the successful candidate. The last elected Hetman was Count Platoff (1812-1814). See MAZEPPA.

After the peace, all Europe hailed their hetman, Platoff, as the hero of the war.—J. S. Mosby, War Reminiscences, ch. vi.

Hewlett, Maurice (1861-1923). English novelist. His best-known novels are historical; they include THE FOREST LOVERS (1898), RICHARD YEA-AND-NAY (1900), The Queen's Quair (1904), and Bendish (1913). See also MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS.

Hexam, Lizzie. The heroine of DICKENS' novel Our Mutual Friend. She is the daughter of Jesse ("Gaffer") Hexam, a Thames waterman, and finally marries Eugene Wrayburn.

hexameron. Six days taken as one continuous period; especially the six days of the Creation.

hexameter. In prosody, a six-foot line. The word is, however, usually reserved for dactylic hexameter, consisting of dactyls and spondees. This is the meter in which the Greek and Latin epics were written, and has been more or less imitated in English in such poems as Longfellow's Evangeline, Clough's Bothe, Kingsley's Andromeda.

The line consists, says Professor Saintsbury (Manual of English Prosody, iv, 1):

of six feet, dactyls or spondees at choice for the first four, but normally always a dactyl in the fifth and always a spondee in the sixth—the latter foot being by special license sometimes allowed in the fifth also (in which case the line is called spondaic), but never a dactyl in the sixth. To this metre, and to the attempts to imitate it in English, the term should be strictly confined, and never applied to the Alexandrine or iambic trimeter.

Verse consisting of alternate hexameters and PENTAMETERS is known as ELEGIAC. Coleridge illustrates this in his:

In the hexameter rises the fountain's silvery column;
In the pentameter aye falling in melody back.

The Authorized Version of the Bible furnishes a number of examples of "accidental" hexameter lines; the following are well known:

How art thou fallen from Heaven, O Lucifer son of the Morning.
Why do the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing?
God is gone up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of the trumpet.

Hexapla (Gr., "sixfold"). The collection of Old Testament texts collated by Origen (3rd century A. D.), and containing in parallel columns the Hebrew text in Hebrew and in Greek characters, the Septuagint (with emendations), and the versions of Aquila, Theodotion, and Symmachus.

Hexateuch. The first six books of the Old Testament, that is, the PENTATEUCH plus Joshua, relating the final settlement of the Jews in the promised land.

Heyse, Paul (1830-1914). German poet and novelist. Nobel Prize for Literature (1910). Especially celebrated for his NOVELLEN.

Heyst, Axel. The hero of Conrad's Victory.

Heyward, Du Bose (1885-1940). American novelist and dramatist, and poet. Best known for Porgy (1925) and Mamba's Daughters (1929) both made into successful plays and the former also into an opera. See GERSHWIN. His widow, Dorothy Hartzell née Kuhns is also a playwright and novelist.

Heywood, John (1497?-?1580). English poet, a friend of Sir Thomas MORE and a court musician and entertainer under Henry VIII, Edward VI, and Queen Mary. He made popular the court interludes (see INTERLUDE) that later became an important part of entertainment for royalty and the nobility in Elizabethan and Jacobean times. He also wrote epigrams and a satirical allegory on religion, The Spider and the Fly (1556). See also FOUR P's, THE, a typical interlude of Heywood's. He was possibly author of The Pardoner and the Frere.

Heywood, Thomas (d. 1650?). English dramatist and poet, connected with the Lord Admiral's company of actors and the queen's company, and attached to the Earl of Southampton's retinue. His plays include: A Woman Killed with Kindness (1603); The Four Prentices of London (ca. 1600), considered to be the object of satire in Beaumont's and Fletcher's KNIGHT OF THE BURNING PESTLE; Edward IV (1604 and 1605); The Rape of Lucrece (1608); The Captives (1624); The Fair Maid of the West (1631). He is said to have written a total of 220 plays, as well as masques and pageants. He also wrote several compilations and translations, such as Pleasant Dialogues and Dramas (1637); Troia Britannica (1609), an historical poem; and The Hierarchy of Blessed Angels (1635), a didactic poem.

Hezekiah. In the Old Testament, one of the kings of Judah, noted for his efforts to abolish idolatry and establish the worship of Jehovah. The famous destruction of the Assyrian army under SENNACHERIB took place during his reign.

Hiawatha. The Iroquois name of a hero of miraculous birth who came (under a variety of names) among the North American Indian tribes to bring peace and goodwill to man. In Longfellow's poem of that title (1855) he is an Ojibway, son of Mudjekeewis (the west wind) and Wenonah. His mother dies in his infancy, and Hiawatha is brought up by his grandmother, Nokomis, daughter of the Moon. He represents the progress of civilization among the American Indians. He first wrestles with Mondamin (Indian maize), whom he subdues and gives to man bread-corn. He then teaches man navigation; then he subdues the Mishe-Nahma or sturgeon, and tells the people to "bring all their pots and kettles and make oil for winter." His next adventure is against Megissogwon, the magician, "who sent the fiery fever on man; sent the white fog from the fen-lands; sent disease and death among us"; he slays the terrible monster, and teaches man the science of medicine. He next marries Minnehaha (Laughing Water), setting the people an example to follow. Lastly, he teaches the people picture-writing. When the white man lands and teaches the Indians the faith of Jesus, Hiawatha exhorts them to receive the words of wisdom, to reverence the missionaries who have come so far to see them, and departs "to the kingdom of Ponemah, the land of the Hereafter."

Hiawatha's mittens. "Magic mittens made of deer-skin; when upon his hands he wore them, he could smite the rocks asunder."

Hiawatha's moccasins. Enchanted shoes made of deer-skin. "When he bound them round his ankles, at each stride a mile he measured."

Hibben, Paxton Pattison (1880-1928). American diplomat and journalist. During his army career (from 1917) he became twice the subject of investigation by a U.S. military tribunal because of his sympathies with the Russian revolution.

Hichens, Robert Smythe (1864-). English popular novelist. Chiefly known as the author of The Garden of Allah (1905) of which 800,000 copies have been sold. His other works include Bella Donna (1909); The Paradise Case (1933); A New Way of Life (1942); etc. He also collaborated on a number of plays, among them an adaptation of his masterpiece.

The Green Carnation (1894), a novel, satirizes Oscar Wilde.

hic jacets. Tombstones, so called from the first two words of their inscriptions; "Here lies . . ."

By the cold Hic Jacets of the dead.
Tennyson, Idylls of the King (Vivien).

Hickok, James Butler. Known as Wild Bill Hickok (1837-1876). American scout and U.S. marshal. On tour with Buffalo Bill (1872-1873). Murdered.

Old Hickory. General Andrew Jackson (1767-1845), President of the United States, 1829-1837. He was first called "tough," from his great powers of endurance, then "tough as hickory," and lastly, "Old Hickory."

Young Hickory. Martin Van Buren (1782-1862), President of the United States, was so called from his relation to Jackson, whose policies he carried on.

Hicks, Granville (1901-). American author and literary critic, best known for his criticisms and interpretations of literature and social problems during the 1930's from a Marxian standpoint. See MARXISM IN LITERATURE. His works from this period are: The Great Tradition (1933), on American literature; John Reed (1936), a biography; I Like America (1938); and Figures of Transition (1939), on late 19th-century British literature. In 1939, after the pact of friendship between the U.S.S.R. and the National Socialist government of Germany, Hicks resigned from the Communist party. The First to Awaken (1940) written in collaboration with R. M. Bennett is a Utopian romance similar to LOOKING BACKWARD of Edward Bellamy, and Only One Storm (1942) is a novel celebrating the practices of democracy in a New England small town. Small Town (1947) is a sociological study.

hieratic. Consecrated to sacred uses, as, hieratic chants, etc. The Greeks applied the term to a cursive form of hieroglyphic writing which, though originally used for all literature, came to be reserved for religious texts when DEMOTIC writing was adopted for secular use.

Hieronimo. The chief character of Thomas Kyd's drama in two parts, the first part being called Hieronimo, and the second part, The Spanish Tragedy, or Hieronimo is Mad Again (1588). In the latter play, Horatio, only son of Hieronimo, sitting with Belimperia in an alcove, is murdered by his rival Balthazar and the lady's brother Lorenzo. The murderers hang the dead body on a tree in the garden, and Hieronimo, aroused by the screams of Belimperia, rushing into the garden, sees the dead body of his son, and goes raving mad.

Higginson, Thomas Wentworth Storrow (1823-1911). American author. Prominent as an opponent of slavery. In Unitarian ministry (1847-1881). Colonel of the first colored regiment of the Civil War (1862-1864). Biographer. Friend of Emily Dickinson.

High Church. The High Church party in the Church of England is distinguished by its maintenance of sacerdotal claims, by the very great and preponderating efficacy with which it endows the sacraments, and by the apparent importance which it attaches to ritual and outward forms and ceremonies.

high days. Festivals. On high days and holidays. Here "high" means grand or great; as, un grand jour.

high hand: with a high hand. Arrogantly. To carry things with a high hand in French would be: Faire une chose haut la main.

High Heels and Low Heels. The names of two factions in Swift's tale of Lilliput (Gulliver's Travels), satirizing the High and Low Church parties.

high places, in Scripture language, means elevated spots where sacrifices were offered. Idolatrous worship was much carried on in high places. Some were evidently artificial mounds, for the faithful are frequently ordered to remove or destroy them. Hezekiah removed the high places (2 Kings xviii. 4), so did Asa (2 Chron. xiv. 3), Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. xvii. 6), Josiah, and others. On the other hand, Jehoram and Ahaz made high places for idolatrous worship.

high seas. All the sea which is not the property of a particular country. The sea three miles out from the coast belongs to the country, and is called "territorial waters." High seas, like high-ways, means for the public use. In both cases the word high means "chief," "principal." (Lat. altum, "the main sea"; altus, "high.") high tea. A meal served about the usual teatime which includes, besides tea, fish, cold meats, pastry, etc.

A well understood "high tea" should have cold roast beef at the top of the table, a cold Yorkshire pie at the bottom, a mighty ham in the middle. The side dishes will comprise soused mackerel, pickled salmon (in due season), sausages and potatoes, etc., etc. Rivers of tea, coffee, and ale, with dry and buttered toast, sally-lunns, scones, muffins and crumpets, jams and marmalade.—Daily Telegraph May 9, 1893.

high words. Angry words.

high-brow. A superior person, especially one who, in his own estimation at least, is intellectually superior; one who takes an academic view of things; also, in general, a term popularly applied to intellectual interests and pursuits, or to people of intellectual interests and pursuits, by non-intellectuals. The expression is of American origin. Its opposite, low-brow, is also in use.

higher criticism. The name given to modern textual criticism of the Bible with regard to problems of dates of composition, authorship, authenticity, etc. By those who accept the doctrine of the literal inspiration of the Bible it is used with a derogatory connotation. The first use of the phrase was in 1787 in Eichhorn's Einleitung in das Alte Testament. See also ELOHISTIC AND JEHOVISTIC SCRIPTURES.

Higher Pantheism, The. A poem by TENNYSON, written in 1869, in which the poet urges a belief that God not only is found in the world (pantheism) but also that He transcends it. A. C. SWINBURNE wrote a parody of this in The Higher Pantheism in a Nutshell.

Highgate. A North London suburb, so called from a gate set up there about 400 years ago to receive tolls for the bishop of London, when the old miry road from Gray's Inn Lane to Barnet was turned through the bishop's park. The village being perched on a hill explains the first part of the name.

sworn at Highgate. A custom anciently prevailed at the public-houses in Highgate to administer a ludicrous oath to all travelers who stopped there. The party was sworn on a pair of horns fastened to a stick—

(1) Never to kiss the maid when he can kiss the mistress.

(2) Never to eat brown bread when he can get white.

(3) Never to drink small beer when he can get strong—unless he prefers it.

Highland Mary. The most shadowy of Robert BURNS' sweethearts, but the one to whom he addressed some of his finest poetry, including My Highland Lassie, O, Highland Mary (Ye banks and braes and streams around the castle o' Montgomery), Thou Ling'ring Star and—perhaps—Will ye go to the Indies, my Mary? She is believed to have been Mary CAMPBELL.

Hilary, St. Bishop of Arles (429-449).

Hilda. A New England art student in Rome, one of the leading characters of Hawthorne's MARBLE FAUN.

Hilda, St. See under SAINTS.

Hilda Lessways. A novel by Arnold Bennett. See CLAYHANGER.

Hildebrand. (1) The Nestor of German romance. His story is told in the Hildebrandslied, an Old High German poem, and he also appears in the Nibelungenlied, Dietrich von Bern, etc. Like Murgis among the heroes of Charlemagne, he was a magician as well as champion.

(2) Pope GREGORY VII. Hence a Hildebrand, one resembling Gregory VII noted for subjugating the power of the German emperors, and specially detested by the early reformers for his ultra-pontifical views.

Hildesheim. Legend relates that a monk of Hildesheim, an old city of Hanover, doubting how with God a thousand years could be as one day, listened to the singing of a bird in a wood, as he thought for three minutes, but found the time had been three hundred years. Longfellow introduced this tale in his GOLDEN LEGEND, calling the monk Felix.

Hill, Frank Ernest (1888–). American poet. The Westward Star (1934); etc. Collaborator with Joseph AUSLANDER on The Winged Horse, an anthology of poetry (1927).

Hilton, James (1900–). English novelist, best known for his widely popular and extremely successful novelette GOODBYE, MR. CHIPS (1935). Other books by the same author, marked by sentimental or adventurous appeal, are: And Now Goodbye (1931); Rage in Heaven (1932); Lost Horizon (1933); Contango (1934); Catherine Herself (1935); Knight Without Armour (1935); We Are Not Alone (1937). Goodbye, Mr. Chips, Lost Horizon, and We Are Not Alone and others were dramatized as motion pictures. See also SHANGRI-LA.

himation. In Greek antiquity, a garment for both sexes consisting of a rectangular cloth about five feet wide and ten feet long, draped about the body in various ways according to the taste of the wearer. It was often lavishly embroidered and could be worn over the tunic or as the sole garment.

Himmler, Heinrich (1900–1945). German Nazi leader. Party member since 1925. As Reich director of propaganda (1926–1930), predecessor of Goebbels. Leader of the Schutzstaffel (250,000 strong). As chief of the GESTAPO (from 1936) responsible to Hitler alone. After the collapse of the Nazi regime, committed suicide in prison by swallowing poison hidden in a vial in his mouth.

hinc illae lacrymae (Lat. "hence those tears"). (Terence, Andria, I. i. 99.) This was the real offense; this was the true secret of the annoyance; this, entre nous, was the real source of the vexation.

Hind and Panther, The. A poem by DRYDEN (1687) in defense of the Catholic religion. The hind is the Latin Church, and the panther is the Church of England. James II is the lion which protects the hind from the bear (Independents), the wolf (Presbyterians), the hare (Quakers), the ape (Freethinkers), the boar (Anabaptists), and the fox (Arians).

Hindemith, Paul (1895–). German violist and composer. Associated with the "Musikalische JUGENDBEWEGUNG." Identified with the modern ideal of "Gebrauchsmusik" (functional everyday music). Wir bauen eine Stadt (We are building a town; children's opera, 1930); Der Ploner Musiktag (a work written while studied by the performing group); etc. In most of his work a representative of the ultramodern school of composition. Attacked in Third Reich as "cultural bolshevik." In U.S. (since 1933).

Hindenburg, Paul von (1847–1934). German general and elected Reich President (1925; re-elected, 1932). Remembered as victor over the Russians at Tannenberg (1914) and as having yielded to Nazi pressure by appointing Hitler as chancellor (1933). Memoirs, Aus meinem Leben (1920). Buried in the National War Memorial at Tannenberg.

Hindenburg line. In World War I, a strong line of defense established by the Germans under General von HINDENBURG (1916) across northeastern France from Lille through St.

Gobain to Rethel, later to Vougiers and Metz. It was set up after von Falkenhayn's failure at Verdun when Hindenburg took his place as chief of general staff of German army.

Hind Horn. An English ballad dealing with an incident from the medieval romance KING HORN—the return of Horn, disguised as a palmer, to Rymenhild. This is considered to be a ballad written by a minstrel, rather than a genuine folk-ballad. See also BALLAD.

Hindu calendar. The year is divided into twelve months. An intercalary month occurs after every month in which there are two new moons, which is once in every three years. This inserted month takes the name of the month preceding it. The months, the first of which begins about April 11, are Baisakh, Jeth, Asarh, Sawan, Bhadon, Asn (Kuar), Katik, Aghan, Pus, Magh, Phagun (Phalgun), and Chait.

Hinduism. The religious and social system of India. Hinduism stresses birth and conduct, and has no founder or creed. On the social side it involves matters of caste. Belief in karma or the principle of cause as affecting a future existence, in samsara, or transmigration of souls, and in nirvana, or an ultimate state of salvation, is combined with image-worship, pilgrimage, yoga, ascetic practices, and respect for some especial religious teacher or guru. Hinduism has a great number of sects, and their monistic or pantheistic philosophy is derived from the Vedanta or Upanishads which were organized by the philosopher Shankara. See VEDA.

Hindus, Maurice Gerschon (1891–). Russian-American writer. Author of The Russian Peasant and the Revolution (1920); Humanity Uprooted (1929); Red Bread (1931); Green Worlds (autobiography; 1938); Hitler Cannot Conquer Russia (1941); etc. In 1922 Hindus spent some time among the Dukhobors of Canada and wrote several articles about them.

Hinkle, Beatrice (1874–). First woman physician to hold a public health position. Opened in New York first psychotherapeutic clinic in America (1908). Author of Re-creating the Individual.

Hinkson, Mrs. Katherine, see TYNAN, K.

Hippe, Pribislav. In THE MAGIC MOUNTAIN by Thomas MANN, a boy of exotic appearance from whom the hero Hans CASTORP once borrowed a pencil in his schooldays and by whom he was oddly fascinated. When Castorp first encounters Clavdia CHAUCHAT, he is strangely reminded of Pribislav.

hippocampus. In Greek mythology, a fabulous sea horse; head and forequarters of a horse and tail of a dolphin. Represented as attached to chariots of Neptune and the tritons. Paintings of hippocampi were found in Pompeii.

hippocras. A highly spiced cordial much in favor in Europe during the Middle Ages. So called because it was strained through a linen bag known as HIPPOCRATES' sleeve.

Hippocrates (460?–377 B.C.). Greek physician born on the island of Cos; known as "Father of Medicine." According to tradition, devised a code of medical ethics which imposed on his disciples the oath still administered to men about to enter medical practice and known as the HIPPOCRATIC OATH. Eighty-seven treatises are attributed to him. Some of his most famous aphorisms are:

Life is short and the art is long.

By opposites opposites are cured.

Everything in excess is opposed to nature.

Hippocratic oath. An oath of allegiance to ethical professional standards administered to M.D. candidates at each commencement at Columbia, Cornell, and other universities. Its original version is attributed to HIPPOCRATES. The form now commonly used is:

I do solemnly swear by that which I hold most sacred.

That I will be loyal to the profession of medicine and just and generous to its members;

That I will lead my life and practise my art in uprightness and honor;

That into whatsoever house I shall enter, it shall be for the good of the sick to the utmost of my power, I holding myself aloof from wrong, from corruption, and from the temptation of others to vice;

That I will exercise my art solely for the cure of my patients, and will give no drug, perform no operation for a criminal purpose, even if solicited, far less suggest it.

That whatsoever I shall see or hear of the lives of men which is not fitting to be spoken, I will keep inviolably secret.

These things I do promise, and in proportion as I am faithful to this my oath may happiness and good repute be ever mine—the opposite if I shall be forsworn.

Hippocrene (Gr. hippos, horse; krene, fountain). The fountain of the Muses on Mount Helicon, produced by a stroke of the hoof of Pegasus; hence, poetic inspiration.

Hippodamia. In classical mythology, is a daughter of Oenomaus and wife of Pelops. Pelops won her in a chariot race against Oenomaus, she having bribed a charioteer to remove a spoke from her father's chariot.

Hippogriff (Gr. hippos, "a horse"; gryphos, "a griffin"). The winged horse, whose father was a griffin and mother a filly. He is described in Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, where he carries Rogero away from his beloved Bradamant and into many strange adventures.

So saying, he caught him up, and without wing
Of hippogriff, bore through the air sublime,

Over the wilderness and o'er the plain.

Milton, Paradise Regained, iv, 541–3.

Hippolyta. In classic legend, Queen of the Amazons, and daughter of Mars. She was famous for a girdle given her by the war-god, which Hercules had to obtain possession of, as one of his twelve labors. Shakespeare has introduced Hippolyta in his MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, and betroths her to THESEUS, Duke of Athens; but according to most versions of the classic fable, it was her sister Aniope who married Theseus.

Hippolytus. In Greek myth, a son of Theseus. He provoked the anger of Venus by disregarding her love, and Venus, in revenge, made PHAEDRA, his step-mother, fall in love with him. When Hippolytus repulsed her advances she accused him to her husband of seeking to dishonor her. Theseus prayed Neptune to punish the young man, and the sea-god, while the young man was driving in his chariot, scared the horses with sea-calves. Hippolytus was thrown from the chariot and killed. This legend is the subject of tragedies by Euripides, Seneca and Racine, as well as by a number of lesser dramatists.

Hippomenes. In Greek legend, a prince who outstripped ATALANTA in a foot race, by dropping three golden apples, which she stopped to pick up. By this conquest he won Atalanta to wife.

Hiren. A strumpet. She was a character in Greene's lost play The Turkish Mahomet and Hyren the Fair Greek (ca. 1594), and is frequently referred to by Elizabethan dramatists.

Hirohito. Reign name Showa (1901-). Emperor of Japan (1926-), 124th in direct lineage. During his reign, the influence of the military became supreme and precipitated war with the United States.

Hiroshige, Ando (1797-1858). Japanese landscape painter; influenced Whistler in his moonlight scenes.

Hiroshima. Japanese city destroyed (1945) by first atomic bomb used in warfare. Title of book by John Hersey.

His Family. A novel by Ernest Poole (Am., 1916), a story of Roger Gale, a man of fifty odd and his three daughters of diverse temperaments. The scene is laid in New York City. This novel was awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1918.

(1938); Rebecca (1940); Saboteur (1942); Lifeboat (1943); etc., etc. A master of suspense, shock, and tension, who established a school of superior screen melodrama.

Hitchcock, Curtice (1892-1946). One of the most liberal and best liked of American publishers. Formerly with Macmillan and the Century Company, he formed with Eugene Reynal, in 1933, his own firm of Reynal and Hitchcock. This firm has published many outstanding books among which are the books of Saint-Exupéry, The Century of the Common Man by Henry A. Wallace, the poetry of Karl Shapiro, and Strange Fruit by Lillian Smith. Mr. Hitchcock believed in book publication being the testing ground for ideas.

Hitler, Adolf (1889-1945). German chancellor and FUHRER (1933-1945). Veteran of World War I. Founder of National Socialist German Workers party. Editor, Der Volkische Beobachter (1922). Unsuccessful Beer Hall Putsch (1923). Sentenced to five years' imprisonment. Wrote Mein Kampf at the fortress of Landau. Released after nine months. By 1933 his party was strong enough to force President von Hindenburg to appoint him chancellor. After von Hindenburg's death he combined the president's and the chancellor's powers in his own person with the title of Fuhrer. His anti-Semitism and aggressive policies (designed to undo the treaty of Versailles) precipitated World War II. The data regarding his suicide at the time of the collapse of the Reich are not absolutely clear. His demonic power over his followers tallies with myth-forming elements in his career as also with his own superstitious nature. He was born in Braunau, married Eva Braun, chose brown as the color of his party, etc., etc.

Hit the Deck. A musical comedy (1927) by Herbert Fields, lyrics by Leo Robin and Clifford Guy, music by Vincent Youmans. Based on Shore Leave by Hubert Osborne.

H.M.S. His or Her Majesty's service or ship, as H.M.S. Wellington.

Hoare, Sir Samuel John Gurney (1880-). English statesman. Secretary of state for home affairs (1937-1939), Lord Privy Seal (1939-1940); ambassador to Spain (1940-1944).

Hobart, George Vere (1867-1926). Humorous writer on Baltimore American. Wrote "Dinkelspiel" papers; The John Henry Books, fifteen volumes of humorous stories; etc.

Hobbema, Meindert (1638-1709). Dutch landscape painter. Influenced by Ruisdael. The figures in some of his pictures are not by him. The Hermitage, St. Petersburg (1663) is in the collection of the New York Historical Society. Avenue of Trees, Middleharnis, is a popular painting.

Hobbes, Thomas (1588–1679). English philosopher. Friend of Harvey, Ben Jonson, Cowley, Sidney Godolphin, Selden, etc. His best-known work is Leviathan, or the Matter, Form, and Power of a Commonwealth, Ecclesiastical and Civil (1651), which contains his famous social contract theory. Hobbes was a forerunner of associational psychology and a leader of modern rationalism, insisting upon complete separation of philosophy and theology.

Hobbididance. In Shakespeare's tragedy KING LEAR, the prince of dumbness, and one of the five fiends that possessed "poor Tom." See Modo.

This name is taken from Harsnett's Declaration of Egregious Popish Impostures (1561–1631).

Hobbinol. The shepherd in Spenser's SHEPHERD'S CALENDAR who sings in praise of Eliza, queen of shepherds (Queen Elizabeth). He typifies Spenser's friend and correspondent, Gabriel HARVEY.

hobbyhorse. In medieval revels, notably the MORRIS DANCE, a person with a light frame-work suggesting the shape of a horse, so fixed around him that he appeared to be riding.

hobgoblin. An impish, ugly, and mischievous sprite, particularly Puck or ROBIN GOOD-FELLOW. The word is a variant of Rob-Goblin—i.e., the goblin Robin, just as Hodge is the nickname of Roger.

Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Puck,
You do their work, and they shall have good luck.
Shakespeare, Midsummer Night's Dream, ii, 1.

Hobhouse, John Cam. Baron Broughton de Gyfford (1786–1869). British administrator and writer. Byron's friend and executor, who advised destruction of his Memoirs (1824). Wrote Bonapartist account of the Hundred Days (1816); etc. In 1819 he was arrested for an anonymous pamphlet, A Trifling Mistake in Thomas, Lord Erskine's recent Preface . . ., in which the House of Commons saw a breach of privilege.

Hobson, Richmond Pearson (1870–1937). American naval officer who sank the collier Merrimac in Santiago harbor in an attempt to bottle up the Spanish fleet (1898). Resigned from Navy and entered House of Representatives. Congressional Medal of Honor (1933).

Hobson's choice. This or none; "take it or leave it." Tobias Hobson was a carrier and innkeeper at Cambridge in the 17th century, who erected the handsome conduit there, and settled "seven lays" of pasture ground towards its maintenance. "He kept a stable of forty good cattle, always ready and fit for travelling; but when a man came for a horse he was led into the stable, where there was great choice, but he obliged him to take the horse which stood nearest to the stable door; so that every customer was alike well served, according to his chance, and every horse ridden with the same justice." (Spectator, No. 509.)

Milton wrote two quibbling epitaphs upon this eccentric character.

Hoccleve, Thomas, see OCCLEVE, THOMAS.

hockamore or hock. Corrupted or short form of German Hochheimer, a fine Rhine wine, product of the "Hochheimer Domdekaneil."

hocus pocus. The words formerly uttered by conjurers when performing a trick; hence, the trick or deception itself, also the juggler himself.

The phrase dates from the early 17th century, and is the opening of a ridiculous string of mock Latin used by some well-known performer: hocus pocus, toutus talontus, vade celerita jubes. The first two words may have been intended as a parody of hoc est corpus, occurring in the Roman communion service, while the whole was reeled off merely to occupy the attention of the audience.

Our word hoax is probably a contraction of hocus pocus, which also supplies the verb to hocus, to cheat, bamboozle, tamper with.

Hoder. The Scandinavian god of darkness, typical of night. He is called the blind old god. Balder is the god of light, typical of day. According to fable, Hoder killed Balder with an arrow made of mistletoe, but the gods restored him to life again.

Hodur, the blind old god,
Whose feet are shod with silence.
Longfellow, Tegner's Death.

Hodge, Mr., and Mr. Hazard. A novel by Elinor WYLIE (1928).

Hodges, Courtney H. (1887–). American army officer. Rose through the ranks to brigadier general (1940). Chief of infantry and major general (1941–1943). Lieutenant general in command of 3rd Army (1943). After D-Day took BRADLEY's place as commander of 1st Army.

Hodgson, Ralph (1871–). English "Georgian" poet. Famous for his poems Eve, The Bull, and a few others which bid fair to become fixtures in all future anthologies of English verse.

Hodgson, William Hope (1877–1918). English writer of fantastic mysteries and sea stories. The Ghost Pirates (1909), Men of the Deep Waters (1914), Captain Gault (1917).

Hoffenstein, Samuel Goodman (1890–1947). Lithuanian-born American poet and humorist. Best known for his Poems in Praise of Practically Nothing (1928).

Hoffman, Malvina (1887-). American sculptor. Awarded 1st prize in Paris (1911) for her Russian Dancers. Author of Heads and Tales (1930), an autobiography, the title of which alludes to the fact that she had been commissioned to execute 101 racial types in bronze for the Field Museum in Chicago.

Hoffmann, August Heinrich, known as Hoffmann von Fallersleben (1798-1874). German poet, philologist, and historian of literature. As a political refugee in British Helgoland he wrote "Deutschland, Deutschland über alles" (1841). About this song, the poet's great-granddaughter, Ursula S. Lamb, wrote: "In it he admonished the Germans to make justice and liberty the basis for a united Germany as against the oppression then existing in some 300-odd German principalities. The song remained in official disgrace under the later German emperors until President Ebert recognized it as the German national anthem of the Weimar Republic in 1919. The first line of the first stanza referred to the hope Hoffmann held in 1841 for a united Germany above (über) all the many reactionary German states. The misunderstanding of those words has led to continued abuse of the hymn, especially in translation, which means doing an injustice to its origin and to its meaning."

Hoffman, Ernst Theodor Amadeus (1776-1822). German author, known for his popular romances in the Gothic tradition. Among them are Phantasiestücke (1814-1815); Elixire des Teufels (1815-1816); Serapiensbrüder (1819-1821); Kater Murr (1821-1822). See also TALES OF HOFFMAN.

Hofmannsthal, Hugo von (1874-1929). Austrian romantic-symbolic poet and dramatist. Descendant of a Spanish-Jewish family. Close collaborator with Richard Strauss, the composer. Wrote words for Salome, Elektra, Der Rosenkavalier, etc. A brilliant classical scholar. It has been said of his work that it follows the leitmotiv of Calderon's "La vida es sueño, sueños vida son." In it dreams are a higher form of reality, and realities are the foil of a true dream.

Hofmann, Josef (1876-). Polish pianist. Infant prodigy. Since 1901, a favorite concert pianist in the U.S. Also a composer. Author of Piano-Playing with Piano-Questions Answered (1907) and other textbooks.

hog. In slang use, a hog is a gluttonous, greedy, or unmannered person, and motorists who, caring nothing for the rights or convenience of other travelers, drive in a selfish and reckless manner, wanting the whole road to themselves, are called road-hogs.

to go the whole hog. To do the thing completely and thoroughly, without compromise or reservation; to go the whole way. Hence the expression whole-hogger, one who will see the thing through to the bitter end, and "damn the consequences." At the time of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain's great agitation on behalf of Protection (1903, et seq.) those who advocated a complete tariff of protective duties regardless of possible "reciprocity" were called the whole-hoggers.

Hogarth, William (1697-1764). English painter and engraver. His reputation was established through the plates for Butler's Hudibras (1726). His best-known series are The Harlot's Progress (1732) and The Rake's Progress (1735). He secured the passage of an act, known as Hogarth's Act (1735), which protects designers from piracy. Portraits, historical pictures. Supreme pictorial satirist and great social force. His object was "to show vice her own feature, scorn her own image." Author of The Analysis of Beauty.

Hogben, Lancelot Thomas (1895-). English writer. Mathematics for the Million (1936); Science for the Citizen (1938); etc. Other more or less alliterative titles of his are Nature and Nurture (1933); Retreat from Reason (1936); and Dangerous Thoughts (1939). Cf. his Author in Transit (1940).

Hogen-Mogen. A High Mightiness, originally of the Netherlands States-General; hence, the Dutch or a Dutchman. The term is a corruption of Dutch hoogmogend, "high in might." Colloquially it means strong and can be applied to liquor.

Hogg, James (1770-1835). English poet, called the ETTRICK SHEPHERD because he was self-educated and inherited the occupation of shepherd from his family. He is known for his celebrations in dialect verse of Scotch rural scenes and rural pursuits, and his treatments of the Celtic folk-lore tradition. He was encouraged by Sir Walter Scott and in his later life was associated with BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE. See also NOCTES AMBROSIANAE.

Hogg, Thomas Jefferson (1792-1862). English lawyer and intimate friend of Shelley. Author of two volumes of a biography of Shelley (1858).

Hogni, see HAGEN.

Hohensteil Schwangau, Prince. The speaker in Browning's poem Prince Hohensteil Schwangau, the Savior of Society (1872) in which the Prince reviews his past life. The character is usually regarded as drawn from Napoleon III.

Hohenzollern. German princely family, deriving its name from the Swabian castle of Zollern, later Hohenzollern, first mentioned in the eleventh century. It furnished the dukes of Brandenburg (from 1415), the kings of Prussia (from 1701), and the German emperors (from 1871).

hoi polloi (Gr. The commonalty, the many). In English University slang the "poll men," or those who take degrees without "honors."

hokku. A form of Japanese poetry, stating in three lines (5, 7, 5 syllables) a complete picture, mood, etc. An example by Masaoka Shiki (1867-1902) reads:

Kumo no mine
shiraho minami ni muragareri.
Mountain-peaks of cloud;
White sails, in the south,
Crowded together.

The hokku looks accidentally like a truncated TANKA, but it is a complete form in itself.

Hokusai (1760-1849). Japanese artist. His drawings and prints exerted a lasting influence on the art of other countries. The Mangwa or Ten Thousand Sketches is a huge collection, published (till 1836) in fifteen volumes. His best-known work are The Hundred Views of Mount Fuji (1835).

Holbein, Hans, the Younger (1497?-1543). German portrait and historical painter, and wood engraver. Court painter to Henry VIII of England. Portraits of Erasmus, Sir Thomas More, Anne of Cleves, Henry VIII, etc. Best-known for his series of woodcuts, The Dance of Death (first published in 1538). Also religious paintings.

Holda, see HULDA.

Holden, Eben, see EBEN HOLDEN.

Holden, Raymond Peckham (1894-). American poet and novelist. Author of mystery novels under the pseudonym of Richard Peckham. First wife, Louise BOGAN (divorced); second wife, Sara Henderson HAY. Holden's best work in poetry is in The Arrow at the Heel (1940); in prose, in Chance Has a Whip (1935). Also Selected Poems (1946).

Hölderlin, Friedrich (1770-1843). German poet, author of Hyperion, a romance in the form of letters (2 vols.; 1797, 1799). His poetry has been called the last and most perfect flower of the Greek tradition. Like all supreme poetry, it can only be approximated in translation. The last forty years of Hölderlin's life were spent in mental disequilibrium.

hole. A better 'ole. Any situation that is preferable to that occupied at present. The phrase came into being during World War I, and the allusion is to an incident—pictured by Captain Bruce Bairnsfather—in which a soldier, Old Bill, "taking cover" in a shell-hole objects to leaving it until a "better 'ole" is provided.

Holger Danske. The Danish name of OGIER THE DANE, one of the most venturesome of Charlemagne's paladins.

Holgrave. The young daguerreotypist who marries Phoebe in Hawthorne's HOUSE OF THE SEVEN GABLES.

Holinshed, Raphael (d. ca. 1582). English clergyman and historian, known for his CHRONICLES OF ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, AND IRELAND (1578).

Holland, Josiah Gilbert (1819-1881). American writer, author of Timothy Titcomb's Letters (1858), Arthur Bonnicastle, and the metrical narrative BITTER SWEET (1858). Many of his early writings appeared under the pseudonym of Timothy Titcomb.

Hollar, Wenceslaus or Wenzel (1607-1677). Bohemian engraver. Pupil of Matthaus Merian at Frankfurt. Stayed in England (from 1635). Illustrated Dugdale's History of St. Paul's Cathedral and designed a map of London after the great fire (1666); etc.

Hollingsworth. The ardent but ruthless social reformer who plays a leading part in Hawthorne's BLITHEDALE ROMANCE.

Holloway, Emory (1885-). American educator and Whitman authority. Pulitzer prize for biography (1927) for Whitman—An Interpretation in Narrative.

Hollow Men, The. Poem by T. S. ELIOT, depicting the spiritual emptiness and doom of the 20th century as he saw it through the symbol of a scarecrow.

Hollywood. A word sometimes used as synonymous with the American motion-picture industry, from Hollywood, Cal., a suburb of Los Angeles where many of the large motion-picture studios are located.

Holm, Saxe. See JACKSON, HELEN HUNT.

Holmes, Oliver Wendell (1809-1894). American author, man of letters, and lecturer, a professor of anatomy and physiology at Harvard (1847-1882) and a leader in the Unitarian movement against CALVINISM. See UNITARIANISM. He is known for the humor and satire of his essays and verses. His works include: THE AUTOCRAT OF THE BREAKFAST TABLE (1858), a famous series of essays, imitated by The Professor at the Breakfast Table (1860), The Poet at the Breakfast Table (1872), and Over the Teacups (1891); ELSIE VENNER (1861), THE GUARDIAN ANGEL (1867), and A Mortal Antipathy (1885), novels; Soundings from the Atlantic (1864) and Pages from an Old Volume of Life (1883), essays; Songs in Many Keys (1862), The Iron Gate (1880), and Before the Curfew (1888), collections of essays. He also wrote biographies, lectures, and numerous public addresses, as well as regular contributions to the ATLANTIC MONTHLY, which he named. Holmes' best-known single poems are: OLD IRONSIDES (1830); The Chamber'd Nautilus; and The Deacon's Masterpiece (1858), see ONE-HOSS SHAY.

Oliver Wendell Holmes (1841-1935), his son, was a law professor at Harvard and later Associate Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court (1902-1932), known for his learning and his liberal opinions.

Holmes, Sherlock. The most famous detective of fiction; a creation of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, who introduced him first in his Study in Scarlet (1887). His adventures are continued in The Sign of the Four (1889), The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes (1891), The Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes (1894), The Hound of the Baskervilles (1902), The Return of Sherlock Holmes (1905), The Valley of Fear (1915); His Last Bow (1917); and The Case Book of Sherlock Holmes (1927). Although only an amateur, Sherlock Holmes has such brilliant analytical faculties and such indefatigable interest in any detective problem as such, that he frequently puts Scotland Yard to shame. He is abrupt in manner, a victim of the cocaine habit and otherwise very much a law unto himself. His admiring friend, Dr. Watson, usually records his triumphs. It is said that Dr. Joseph Bell, a physician and instructor of Conan Doyle, was the original model from which the figure of Sherlock Holmes was elaborated. In the 20th century, Sherlock Holmes became a popular detective character in motion pictures and radio also. A club of New York enthusiasts, The Baker Street Irregulars, publishes a quarterly, The Baker Street Journal.

Holofernes. (1) In Shakespeare's LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST, a pedantic schoolmaster, who speaks like a dictionary. The character has been considered by some students as a caricature of John Florio, a teacher of Italian in London and famous translator of MONTAIGNE, who published, in 1598, a dictionary called A World of Words. He may have provoked the retort by condemning wholesale the English dramas, which, he said, were "neither right comedies, nor right tragedies, but perverted histories without decorum." Holofernes is, according to this speculation, an imperfect anagram of "Joh'nes Florio," the first and last letters being omitted. According to another theory the character may have been suggested by the pedantic tutor Holoferne in Rabelais' GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL. The following sentence is a specimen of the style in which Holofernes talked:

The deer was . . . in sanguis (blood), ripe as a pomewater who now hangeth like a jewel in the ear of caelo (the sky, the welkin, the heaven); and anon falleth like a crab on the face of terra (the soil, the land, the earth).—Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, act iv. sc. 2.

(2) The name of the general slain by the Jewish heroine JUDITH.

Holt, Felix. The hero of George Eliot's FELIX HOLT, THE RADICAL, described as a "shaggy headed, strong limbed person . . . a peculiar-looking person but not insignificant."

His strong health, his renunciation of selfish claims, his habitual preoccupation with large thoughts and with purposes independent of everyday casualties, secured him a fine and even temper, free from moodiness or irritability. He was full of longsuffering toward his unwise mother.—Ch xxx

Holt, Henry (1840-1926). American publisher and novelist. Organized firm of Henry Holt and Co. (1873).

Holtby, Winifred (1898-1935). English novelist who died just as her powers were maturing South Riding (1936), her "magnificent epitaph." Cf. Testament of Friendship by Vera BRITTAIN.

Holy Alliance. A league formed by Russia, Austria, and Prussia in 1815 to regulate the affairs of Europe after the fall of Napoleon "by the principles of Christian charity"—meaning that every endeavor would be made to stabilize the existing dynasties and to resist all change. It lasted until 1830, and was joined by all the European sovereigns except those of England and Turkey, and the Pope.

Holy City. That city which the religious consider most especially connected with their religious faith, thus:

Allahabad is the Holy City of the Mohammedans of India.

Benares, of the Hindus.

Cusco, of the ancient Incas.

Fez, of the Western Arabs

Jerusalem, of the Jews and Christians.

Kairuan, near Tunis. It contains the Okbar Mosque in which is the tomb of the prophet's barber Mecca and Medina, of the Mohammedans.

Moscow and Kiev, of the Russians, the latter being the cradle of Christianity in Russia.

Holy Cross or Holy Rood Day. September 14, the day of the Feast of the Exaltation of the Cross, called by the Anglo-Saxons "Rood-mass-day," and kept in honor of the exposition of a portion of the true Cross in the basilica erected at Jerusalem by the Empress Helen (ca. 326). Another event connected with it is the recovery of the piece of the Cross, which had been stolen from Jerusalem in 614 by Chosroes, king of Persia, by Heraclius in 629.

Holy Family. The infant Savior and his attendants, as Joseph, Mary, Elizabeth, Anne, the mother of Mary, and John the Baptist. All the five figures are not always introduced in pictures of the Holy Family.

Holy Ghost. The third Person of the Trinity, the Divine Spirit, represented in art as a dove.

The seven gifts of the Holy Ghost are: (1) counsel, (2) the fear of the Lord, (3) fortitude, (4) piety, (5) understanding, (6) wisdom, and (7) knowledge.

Holy Grail. See GRAIL.

Holy Land.

(1) Christians call Palestine the Holy Land, because it was the site of Christ's ministry.

(2) Mohammedans call Mecca the Holy Land, because Mahomet was born there.

(3) The Chinese Buddhists call India the Holy Land, because it was the native land of Sakya-muni, the BUDDHA.

(4) The Greek considered Elis as Holy Land, from the temple of Olympian Zeus and the sacred festival held there every four years.

Holy League. A combination formed by Pope Julius II in 1511 with Venice, Maximilian of Germany, Ferdinand III of Spain, and various Italian princes, to drive the French out of Italy.

Other leagues have been called by the same name, particularly that formed in the reign of Henri III of France (1576), under the auspices of Henri de Guise, "for the defence of the Holy Catholic Church against the encroachments of the reformers," i.e., for annihilating the Huguenots.

Holy of Holies. The innermost apartment of the Jewish temple, in which the ark of the covenant was kept, and into which only the high priest was allowed to enter, and that but once a year—the Day of Atonement. Hence, a private apartment, a sanctum sanctorum.

Holy Roman Empire. The name given to the often very nebulous confederation of Central European States that subsisted, either in fact or in theory, from 800 A.D., when Charlemagne was crowned Emperor of the West, until the abdication of Francis II (Francis I of Austria) in 1806. It was first called "Holy" by BARBAROSSA, in allusion both to its reputed divine appointment, and to the interdependence of Empire and Church. It comprised the German-speaking peoples of Central Europe, and was ruled by an elected Emperor, who claimed to be the representative of the ancient Roman Emperors.

The name has been sometimes brought forward as an excellent instance of contradiction in terms, the confederation not properly being entitled to any one of the three epithets—"Holy," "Roman," or "Empire."

Holy Thursday. Ascension Day, i.e., the Thursday but one before Whitsun, is what is generally meant by this among Anglicans; but by Roman Catholics and others MAUNDY THURSDAY, i.e., the Thursday before Good Friday, is sometimes called Holy Thursday.

Holy War. A war in which religious fanaticism plays, or purports to play, a considerable part. The Crusades, the Thirty Years War, the wars against the Albigenses, etc., were so called. A holy war launched by Mohammedans against Christians is called a jehad.

Holy Week. Passion Week, the last week in Lent. It begins on Palm Sunday; the fourth day is called "Spy Wednesday"; the fifth is "Maundy Thursday"; the sixth is "Good Friday"; and the last "Holy Saturday" or the "Great Sabbath."

Holy Week has been called Hebdomada Muta (Silent Week); Hebdomada Inofficiosa (Vacant Week); Hebdomada Penitentialis, Hebdomada Indulgentiae, Hebdomada Luctuosa, Hebdomada Nigra, and Hebdomada Ultima.

Holy Writ. The Bible.

Trifles light as air
Are to the jealous confirmations strong
As proofs of holy writ.
Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 3.

Holy Bottle. See under BACBUC.

Holy Living and Dying. A famous religious work by Jeremy TAYLOR (1650).

Holy Moses. Not only an exclamation but also, in World War II, a high-velocity aircraft rocket weighing about 140 pounds.

Holyrood Palace. An ancient royal palace in Edinburgh, Scotland, developed from what was originally Holyrood Abbey (founded 1128). At one time occupied by Mary Queen of Scots. It suffered at the hands of the English in 1544 and was completely destroyed by a Protestant mob in 1688.

Holy Sepulchre. The rock-hewn tomb in a garden outside the walls of Jerusalem, where the body of Christ was laid after the Crucifixion. Although the site of the tomb has never been precisely identified, rumor has fixed it in a cave under the edifice known as the Church of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem, which was begun by CONSTANTINE THE GREAT in the 4th century, destroyed and rebuilt—once during the CRUSADES—and reconsecrated in 1810 after extensive repairs.

Holy War, The. An allegory by John BUNYAN (1682), depicting the capture of the city of Mansoul (man's soul, or soul of mankind) by Diabolus, its siege and rescue by an army led by Emmanuel, son of the builder of the city, its weakening and falling into evil, and the second assault by Diabolus, who is ultimately defeated by Emmanuel. Bunyan's experiences in the English Civil War contributed to this work.

Holywell Street. An old London street that used to run parallel with the Strand, from St. Dunstan's Church to St. Clement Danes, and was thrown into the Strand itself by the improvements that took place in that quarter in the closing years of the 19th century, and that resulted in the formation of Kingsway and Aldwych. It was commonly known as "Booksellers' Row," from the large number of second-hand booksellers who had their shops there. (This name has since been transferred to Charing Cross Road, to which many of the booksellers migrated.)

Holy Willie. A religious hypocrite. From the poem Holy Willie's Prayer by Robert Burns.

Home, Daniel Dunglas (1833-1886). Scottish spiritualist medium. Subject of Robert Browning's poem, Sludge the Medium (1864). Séances at courts and in public in U.S., England, France, Prussia, etc. Author of Incidents of my Life (1863); etc.

Homebred, Jedediah. A Yankee man-of-all-work in the play The Green Mountain Boy written by J. S. Jones (Am., 1833) for the actor George Hill.

Home of Lost Causes. Oxford University, so called by Matthew ARNOLD.

Home, Sweet Home. This popular English song first appears in the opera Clari, the Maid of Milan (Covent Garden, 1823). The words are by John Howard Payne, an American, and the music by Sir Henry Bishop, who professed to have founded it on a Sicilian air. Cf. Long, Long Ago, by Alexander WOOLLCOTT.

Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home.

Homer. The name given to the entirely unknown poet—or group of poets perhaps—to whom is assigned the authorship of the ILIAD and the ODYSSEY, the greatest monuments of ancient or modern epic poetry. It is much doubted whether any such person ever existed, but the name rests on very ancient tradition, and the date at which the poems are thought to have received their final shape is conjecturally put at anywhere between the 12th and the 9th century B. C.

Homer's birthplace is quite unknown. The old rhyme, founded on an epigram preserved by Aulus Gellius, says,

Seven cities warred for Homer being dead,
Who living had no roof to shroud his head.

Heywood, Hierarchy of the Blessed Angels (1635). the "seven cities" being Smyrna, Rhodes, Colophon, Salamis, Chios, Argos, and Athens.

Homer sometimes nods. Even the best of us is liable to make mistakes. The line is from Horace's De Arte Poetica, 359:

Quandoque bonus dormitat Homerus!
Verum operi longo fas es obrepere somnum.
(Sometimes good Homer himself even nods; but in so long a work it is allowable if there should be a drowsy interval or so.)

the British Homer. Milton (1608-1674).
the Celtic Homer. Ossian, son of Fingal, King of Morven.

the Homer of dramatic poets. SHAKESPEARE is so called by Dryden (1564-1616).

"Shakespeare was the Homer of our dramatic poets, Jonson was the Virgil. I admire rare Ben, but I love Shakespeare."—Dryden.

Homer of Ferrara. ARIOSTO is so called by TASSO.

Homer of the Franks. Charlemagne called Angilbert (d. 814) his Homer.

the Oriental Homer. Firdusi (940-1020), the Persian poet, who wrote the Shah Nameh (1010), a history of the Persian kings. It contains 120,000 verses, and was the work of over thirty years.

the Homer of philosophers. Plato (429-347 B. C.).

the prose Homer of human nature. Henry FIELDING, so called by BYRON.

the Scottish Homer. William Wilkie, author of The Epigoniad.

Homeric laughter. "Laughter unquenchable," like that of the gods.

Homeric verse. Hexameter.

Homer, Winslow (1836-1910). American painter, notably of marines. The Gulf Stream; North Easter; Cannon Rock; Maine Coast and twelve fine water colors now in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York City. Paintings in various galleries including Corcoran Art Gallery, Washington, D.C., and Luxembourg Museum, Paris, France.

home rule. Local autonomy of an integral part of a state or empire. Fought for for years in Ireland, in her long and bloody struggle for independence from Britain. The term is applicable to the form of government adopted successfully by Canada, Australia, and the Union of South Africa as integral parts of the British Empire.

Homespun, Zekiel. In George Colman's comedy THE HEIR AT LAW (1808), a farmer of Castleton who goes to London to seek his fortune. He was one of the first "country jakes" on the English stage.

Cicely Homespun. The sister of Zekiel, an innocent country girl betrothed to Dick Dowlas.

Homunculus. In the second part of Goethe's FAUST, a small human being created artificially by Faust's famulus, Wagner.

Hone, Philip (1780-1851). American businessman. From 1828 to 1851 he kept a Diary which is a valuable source of information on New York local life and the beginnings of the Whig Party.

Honegger, Arthur (1892-). Eminent French composer, leader of Les Six, a group of futurist French musicians including Auric, Durey, Milhaud, Poulenc and Tailleferre. He appeared in the U.S. (1929) as conductor of his own works, including the symphonic poem, Pastorale d'été, and the tone poem, Pacific 231, which "impersonates" a modern locomotive.

Honeycomb, Will. In the SPECTATOR, a fine gentleman, and great authority on the fashions of the day. He was one of the members of the imaginary club from which the Spectator issued.

Honeyman, Charles. In Thackeray's novel, THE NEWCOMES, a free-and-easy clergyman, of social habits and fluent speech.

Miss Honeyman. The likable old sister of Rev. Charles Honeyman and aunt of Clive Newcome. She keeps lodgers in Steyne Gardens and is known by admiring tradespeople as "the Duchess."

Honeywood. The titular hero of GOLD-SMITH's comedy The Good-Natured Man (1767), a young man whose motto is "universal benevolence." He is taken advantage of continuously, until his uncle, Sir William Honeywood, allows him to be arrested for endorsing a bill for an absconder. After this wholesome experience he decides to mend his ways and confesses, "though inclined to the right, I had not courage to condemn the wrong. My charity was but injustice, my benevolence but weakness and my friendship but credulity." He marries Miss Richland, who had been instrumental in his reform. Honeywood is considered in some respects a self-portrait of the author.

Honorable Peter Stirling, The. A novel by Paul Leicester FORD (1894) dealing with ward politics. Its hero, Peter Stirling, is said to represent the young Grover Cleveland. After his graduation from Harvard, he settles in New York, takes an active and genuine interest in the lives of the people in his East Side ward and rises to eminence from the anomalous position of political boss.

Honorina. The heroine of Dryden's THEODORE AND HONORINA.

honorificabilitudinitatibus. A made up word on the Lat. honorificabilitudo, honorableness, which frequently occurs in Elizabethan plays as an instance of sesquipedalian pomposity, etc.

Hooch, Pieter de (1629–after 1677). Dutch genre painter.

Hood, Thomas (1799–1845). English poet, known for his humorous and humanitarian poems, the most outstanding of which are The Song of the Shirt (1843), dealing with the wretched conditions of London workers, and THE BRIDGE OF SIGHS (1844).

Hook, Captain. In Barrie's PETER PAN, Peter's terrible one-handed enemy with a hook for his missing hand.

Hook, Theodore Edward (1788–1841). English humorist and novelist. Editor of John Bull (from 1820) and New Monthly Magazine (1836–1841). Wrote under several pseudonyms.

He was the original of Mr. Wagg in Thackeray's Vanity Fair.

Hooker, Richard (1554?–1600). English scholar and theologian, author of The Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity (1594–1597), a famous prose defense of the Church of England.

Hooker, Thomas (1586?–1647). Congregational clergyman in England. Migrated to Connecticut. Active in framing what became a constitution for Connecticut (1639). Favored a confederation of New England settlements, as realized (1643) in the "United Colonies of New England." Author (with John Cotton) of Survey of the Summe of Church Discipline (1648).

Hooker, (William) Brian (1880–). American poet and writer of period stories. His opera Mona was awarded the prize in the Metropolitan Opera Company competition (1911). His opera Fairyland won the prize of the American Opera Association (1915). He also wrote Morven and the Grail (1915), and a commemoration poem, A. D. 1919, with music by Horatio Parker; etc.

hooligan. A violent young rough. The term originated in the last years of the 19th century from the name of one of this class. From it is derived the substantive hooliganism.

The original Hooligans were a spirited Irish family of that name whose proceedings enlivened the drab monotony of life in Southwark towards the end of the 19th century. The word is younger than the Australian larrikin, of doubtful origin, but older than Fr. apache—Ernest Weekley, Romance of Words (1912).

Hoosier.

Hoosier State. Indiana. See STATES. A native of the state is called a Hoosier.

Hoosier poet. James Whitcomb RILEY (1853–1916), so called because he was a native of Indiana.

Hoosier Schoolmaster, The. The title of a widely read story of frontier life in the Middle West by Edward EGGLESTON (1871), which deals with the life of the schoolmaster, Ralph Hartsook, in the days before the Civil War. It was followed by The Hoosier Schoolboy. Meredith Nicholson was the author of A Hoosier Chronicle (Am., 1912).

Hooter, Jarl van. See EARWICKER, HUMPHREY CHIMPDEN; HOWTH CASTLE.

Hoover, Herbert Clark (1874–). Thirty-first president of the United States (1929–1933). Republican. Food and relief administrator in various capacities during and after World War I and after World War II.

Hope, Anthony, see HAWKINS, Sir ANTHONY HOPE.

Hope, Bard of. See under BARD.

Hope, Evelyn, see EVELYN HOPE.

Hope, Laurence. Real name Adela Florence Cory (1865–1904). English poet. Married

Colonel Nicolson of the Bengal army; poisoned herself after his death. The Garden of Kama (1901); Stars of the Desert (1903); Indian Love (1905); Songs from the Garden of Kama (1908).

Hopeful. In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, a companion of Christian after the death of Faithful at Vanity Fair.

Hopkins, don't hurry. A satirical reproof to those who are not prompt in their payments. It is said that one Hopkins, of Kentucky, gave a creditor a promissory note on which was this memorandum. "The said Hopkins is not to be hurried in paying the above."

Hopkins, Arthur Melancthon (1878-). American theatrical producer of plays by IBSSEN, O'NEILL, etc.

Hopkins, Gerard Manley (1844-1889). English poet, at Oxford a student of Walter PATER and Jowett, later converted to Roman Catholicism (1866) and inducted into the Jesuit order (1868), after which he became a follower of Cardinal NEWMAN. He is known for the power and striking originality of his lyrics, which deal with nature and religion and show the influence of the METAPHYSICAL POETS in many respects, especially that of George HERBERT. His poetry is distinguished by an intricate type of rhythm which he called "SPRUNG RHYTHM," and by an extremely individual technique of elliptical phrasing and compound metaphor capable of great concentration of meaning. His work, contained in a single volume entitled Poems and published in 1918, influenced in varying degrees a number of 20th-century British and American poets, notably W. H. AUDEN. Hopkins became a professor of Greek in Dublin University in 1884, and was a friend of Robert BRIDGES and Coventry PATMORE, the former serving as editor of his poems. Volumes of Hopkins' correspondence were published in 1935 and 1938, and his Notebooks and Papers in 1937.

Hopkins, Harry Lloyd (1890-1946). American administrator and politician. Special assistant to President Franklin D. ROOSEVELT (1942); etc.

Hopkins, Johns (1795-1873). American financier and philanthropist. Gave a free hospital to the city of Baltimore, Md., and over three million dollars to found Johns Hopkins University.

Hopkins, Mark (1802-1887). American educator. President, Williams College (1836-1872). Inspired teacher and lecturer. Author of many books on moral and religious subjects. Member, American Hall of Fame.

Hopkinson, Francis (1737-1791). American politician and writer. Signer of Declaration of Independence. Had an important part in designing the American flag (1777). Wrote a famous satire in verse, The Battle of the Kegs (1778).

Hop-o'-my-Thumb. A pigmy or midget. The name has been given to several dwarfs, as well as being commonly used as a generic term. Tom Thumb in the well known nursery tale is quite another character. He was the son of peasants, knighted by King Arthur, and killed by a spider.

Horace. Short English form of Quintus Horatius Flaccus (65-8 B. C.). Roman lyricist and satirist. Under patronage of MAECENAS. Extant among his works are two books of satires, one of epodes, four of odes, two of epistles, and the Ars Poetica.

Horace of England. (1) Ben Jonson (1574-1637), nicknamed Horace by Dekker in the so-called "War of the Theaters";

(2) Cowley (1618-1667), called by the Duke of Buckingham "the Pindar, Horace and Virgil of England."

Horace of France. (1) Jean Macrinus or Salmon (1490-1557).

(2) Pierre Jean de Béranger (1780-1857), also called the French Burns.

the Portuguese Horace. A. Ferreira (1528-1569).

the Spanish Horace. Both Lupericio Argensola and his brother Bartolome are so called.

Horace. (1) A famous tragedy by Corneille. See HORATIUS.

(2) The lover of AGNES in Molière's École des femmes.

Horae. In classic myth, the Hours, goddesses of change in the seasons and the works of men. They were the daughters of JUPITER and Themis.

Horatii, the Three. See under HORATIUS.

Horatio. In Shakespeare's HAMLET, the intimate friend of Hamlet.

Horatius. A legendary hero of ancient Rome, the subject of Corneille's tragedy Horace (1639), and Whitehead's Roman Father (1741) adapted from the French play. The tragedies are based on the well-known legend of the pitched battle between the three Roman Horatii and the three Albanian Curiatii. Horace, "the Roman father," shows only pride that his sons have been chosen to uphold the honor of Rome, but his daughter Horatia (in Corneille's drama, Camille), who is the betrothed of Caius Curiatus, is more human. When her lover is slain, she so provokes her single surviving brother by her taunts that he kills her. Horatius sternly gives up his son to justice, but the people refuse to have him killed.

Horatius Cocles (Horatius, the One-eyed). The hero of one of the best known of Macau-lay's Lays of Ancient Rome (1842). He and two other Romans hold the bridge against the advancing Etruscan army led by Lars Porsena until his comrades on the Roman bank succeed in breaking down the bridge. He orders his two companions to make good their escape, and they have just crossed the bridge when it falls in with a crash. Horatius then throws himself into the Tiber and swims safely to shore amid the applauding shouts of both armies.

Hore-Belisha, Leslie (1898-). English political leader. As secretary for war (1937-1940) wrought reforms in British army.

the Horn Gate. See DREAMS, GATE OF.

horn of fidelity. MORGAN LE FAY sends a horn to King Arthur, which has the following "virtue": No lady can drink out of it who is not "to her husband true"; all others who attempt to drink are sure to spill what it contains. This horn is carried to King Mark, and "his queene with a hundred ladies more" tries the experiment, but only four manage to "drinke cleane." Ariosto's enchanted cup possesses a similar spell. See also MANTLE OF FIDELITY.

horn of plenty. AMALTHEA'S HORN, the cornucopia, an emblem of plenty.

Ceres is represented with a ram's horn in her left arm, filled with fruits and flowers; sometimes they are being poured on the earth, and sometimes they are piled high in the horn as in a basket. Diodorus (iii. 68) says the horn is one from the head of the goat by which Jupiter was suckled.

Moses' Horns, see MOSES.

to come or be squeezed out at the little end of the horn. To come off badly in some affair; get the worst of it; fail conspicuously.

to draw in one's horns. To retract, or mitigate, a pronounced opinion; to restrain pride. In French, rentrer les cornes. The allusion is to the snail.

to put to the horn. To denounce as a rebel, or pronounce a person an outlaw, for not answering to a summons. In Scotland the messenger-at-arms used to go to the Cross of Edinburgh and give three blasts with a horn before he proclaimed judgment of outlawry.

to the horns of the altar. (Lat. usque ad aras amicus.) Your friend even to the horns of the altar—i.e., through thick and thin. In swearing, the ancient Romans held the horns of the altar, and one who did so in testimony of friendship could not break his oath without calling on himself the vengeance of the angry gods.

(The altar in Solomon's temple had a projection at each of the four corners called "horns"; these were regarded as specially sacred, and probably typified the great might of God.)

Upon Thine altar's horn of gold
Help me to lay my trembling hold.
Keble, Christian Year, 1st Sun. aft. Easter.

to wear the horns. To be a cuckold.

Horn, Alfred Aloysius (1861?-1931). Known as "Trader Horn." See under Ethelreda LEWIS.

Horn, King. The hero of a French metrical romance of the 13th century, and the original of our Horne Childe, generally called The Geste of Kyng Horn. The nominal author is a certain Mestre Thomas.

Horn's father, Murry, king of Suddene, is killed by invading Saracens, and Horn is set adrift in a boat. He lands at Westernesse, is welcomed by the King, and falls in love with the King's daughter, Rymenhild. This attachment causes his banishment, but after seven years, filled with the usual adventures, he returns just in time to save Rymenhild from a forced marriage and to marry her himself. Horn then leaves to recover his father's kingdom, and having done so comes back for his wife, arriving just in time to save her from a traitorous friend. Horn then takes Rymenhild to his own country, where they reign as king and queen. See also HIND HORN.

Hornaday, William Temple (1854-1937). American zoologist. Advocated game preserves and promoted laws for the protection of wild life. Wrote many books about wild animals.

Horne, Doc. A humorous character invented by George ADE, who made his first appearance in the columns of the Chicago Record and later became the hero of the volume Doc Horne (1899).

Horner, Jack, see JACK HORNER.

Hornie, Auld, see AULD HORNIE.

Hornung, Ernest William (1866-1921). English novelist and short-story writer; inventor of Raffles, the Gentleman Cracksmen, Stingaree, the Australian bushwhacker, etc. Brother-in-law of Sir Arthur Conan DOYLE.

horoscope. The scheme of the twelve houses by which astrologers tell your fortune. See HOUSES, ASTROLOGICAL. The word (Greek) means the "hour-scrutinized," because it is the disposition of the heavens at the exact hour of birth which is examined.

Banks' horse. See MAROCCO, below.

brazen horse. See CAMBUSCAN.

dark horse. See DARK.

gift horse. See GIFT.

Seian horse. A possession which invariably brought ill luck with it. Hence the Latin proverb Ille homo habet equum Seianum. Cneius Seius had an Argive horse, of the breed of DROMED, of a bay color and surpassing beauty, but it was fatal to its possessor. Seius was put to death by Mark Antony. Its next owner, Cornelius Dolabella, who bought it for 100,000 sesterces, was killed in Syria during the civil wars. Caius Cassius, who next took possession of it, perished after the battle of Philippi by the very sword which stabbed Caesar. Antony had the horse next, and after the battle of Actium slew himself.

Like the gold of Tolosa and Hermione's necklace, the Seian or Sejan horse was a fatal possession.

wooden horse. An enchanted horse of the old romance that could be directed by a peg turned by the rider and could fly through the air. CAMBUSCAN had such a horse, but his was of brass. See also CLAVILENO.

This very day may be seen in the king's armoury the identical peg with which Peter of Provence turned his Wooden Horse, which carried him through the air. It is rather bigger than the pole of a coach, and stands near Babieca's saddle—Don Quixote, pt. i, bk. iv. 19.

wooden horse of Troy. Virgil tells us that Ulysses had a monster wooden horse made after the death of Hector, and gave out that it was an offering to the gods to secure a prosperous voyage back to Greece. The Trojans dragged the horse within their city, but it was full of Grecian soldiers, who at night stole out of their place of concealment, slew the Trojan guards, opened the city gates, and set fire to Troy. Menelaus was one of the Greeks shut up in it. It was made by Epeios.

famous steeds of legend and fiction are the following:

Aligero Clavileno. The "wooden-pin wing-horse" which Don Quixote and his squire mounted to achieve the deliverance of Dolorida and her companions.

Arion (marital). Hercules' horse, given to Adrastus. Also, the horse of Neptune, brought out of the earth by striking it with his trident. Its right feet were those of a man, it spoke with a human voice, and ran with incredible swiftness.

Arundel. The horse of Bevis of Southampton. The word means swift as a swallow (Fr. hirondelle).

Bajardo (the same name as Bayard below). Rinaldo's horse, of a bright bay color, once the property of Amadis of Gaul. He was found by Malagigi, the wizard, in a cave guarded by a dragon, which the wizard slew. According to tradition he is still alive, but flees at the approach of man, so that no one can ever hope to catch him. See also ORLANDO FURIOSO.

Bavieca (Span., a simpleton). The Cid's horse. He survived his master two years and a half, during which time no one was allowed to mount him; and when he died he was buried before the gate of the monastery at Valencia, and two elms were planted to mark the site. It is so called because, when Rodrigo in his youth was given the choice of a horse, he passed by the most esteemed ones and selected a rough colt; whereupon his godfather called the lad bavieca, and Rodrigo transferred the appellation to his horse.

Borak, Al. The "horse" which conveyed Mahomet from earth to the seventh heaven. It was milk-white, had the wings of an eagle and a human face, with horse's cheeks. Every pace it took was equal to the farthest range of human sight. The word is Arabic for "the lightning."

Brigadore or Brigliadore (golden bridle). Sir Guyon's horse, in Spenser's FAERIE QUEENE (V. ii, etc.). It had a distinguishing black spot in its mouth, like a horseshoe. Orlando's famous charger, second only to Bajardo in swiftness and wonderful powers, had the same name—Brighiadoro.

Bucephalus (ox-head). The celebrated charger of Alexander the Great. Alexander was the only person who could mount him, and he always knelt down to take up his master. He was thirty years old at death, and Alexander built a city for his mausoleum, which he called Bucephala.

Bayard (bay colored). The horse of the four sons of Aymon, which grew larger or smaller as one or more of the four sons mounted it. According to tradition one of the footprints may still be seen in the forest of Soignes, and another on a rock near Dinant. Also the same as Bajardo above.

Barbary, see ROAN BARBARY below.

Bevis. Marmion's horse, in Scott's poem. The word is Norse, and means swift.

Black Beauty. The horse hero of a story called BLACK BEAUTY.

Black Bess. The famous mare ridden by the highwayman Dick Turpin, which, tradition says, carried him from London to York.

Dapple. Sancho Panza's ass in Don Quixote. So called from its color.

Fadda. Mahomet's white mule.

Grani (gray-colored). Siegfried's horse, of marvelous swiftness.

Marocco. Banks' performing horse, famous in the late Elizabethan period, and frequently mentioned by the dramatists. Its shoes were of silver, and one of its exploits was to mount the steeple of St. Paul's.

Pegasus ("born near the pege or source of the ocean"). The winged horse of Apollo and the Muses. Perseus rode him when he rescued Andromeda.

Rabicano or Rabican. Argalia's horse in Orlando Innamorato, and Astolpho's horse in Orlando Furioso. Its dam was Fire, its sire Wind; it fed on unearthly food. The word means a horse with a "dark tail but with some white hairs."

Reksh. In Persian legend, Rustam's horse.

Roan Barbary. The favorite horse of Richard II.

When Bolingbroke rode on Roan Barbary
That horse that thou so often has bestrid.
Shakespeare, Richard II, v, 5.

Rosinante ("formerly a hack"). Don Quixote's horse, all skin and bone.

Sleipnir. Odin's grey horse, which had eight legs and could traverse either land or sea. The horse typifies the wind which blows over land and water from eight principal points.

Xanthus (golden-hued). One of the horses of Achilles, who announced to the hero his approaching death when unjustly chidden by him.

Horse-Shoe Robinson. A romance (1835) of the American Revolution by J. P. Kennedy (Am., 1795-1870; better known under pseudonym Mark Littleton). The titular hero, who receives his nickname from his former trade of blacksmith, is a man of Herculean physique and courage. He has ample opportunity to use all his strength, and a supply of native wit besides, in the series of exciting adventures in which he gets the better of his British and Tory enemies. The scene is laid in Virginia. There was a popular dramatic version.

Hortense. In Dickens' BLEAK HOUSE, the vindictive French maidservant of Lady Dedlock. In revenge for the partiality shown by Lady Dedlock to Rosa, the village beauty, Hortense murdered Mr. Tulkinghorn, and tried to throw the suspicion of the crime on Lady Dedlock. Said to have been drawn from Marie Manning, a murderess, who made black satin unpopular by electing to be hanged in it.

Hortensio. In Shakespeare's TAMING OF THE SHREW, a suitor to Bianca, the younger sister of Katharina "the Shrew."

Horthy, Miklós von Nagybánya (1868-). Hungarian regent (from 1920). Had been commander in chief of Austro-Hungarian fleet in World War I and leader of anti-Bolshevik Hungarian troops after the collapse of the dual monarchy. In 1941 Horthy conferred with Hitler on Hungary's share in defeated Yugoslavia.

Horus. One of the major gods of the ancient Egyptians, a blending of Horus the Elder, the sun-god (corresponding to the Greek Apollo), and Horus the Child (see HAPOC-RATES), the son of Osiris and Isis. He is the god of silence. He was represented in hieroglyphics by a hawk, which bird was sacred to him, or as a hawk-headed man; and his emblem was the winged sun-disk. In many of the myths he is hardly distinguishable from Ra.

Horvendile. A strange youth who appears in Cabell's novels of medieval POICRESME, particularly in THE CREAM OF THE JEST. In FIGURES OF EARTH, he confesses to Manuel that he is, perhaps, insane, for "all of you appear to me to be persons I have imagined: and all the living in this world appears to me to be only a notion of mine."

Hosier's Ghost, Admiral. A ballad by Richard Glover (1739). Admiral Hosier is sent with twenty sail to the Spanish West Indies, to block up the galleons of that country. He arrives at the Bastimentos, near Portobello, but has strict orders not to attack the foe. His men perish by disease, but not in fight, and the admiral himself dies of a broken heart. After Vernon's victory, Hosier and his 3,000 men rise, "all in dreary hammocks shrouded, which for winding-sheets they wore," and lament the cruel orders that forbade them to attack the foe, for "with twenty ships he surely could have achieved what Vernon did with only six."

Hospitalers of St. John of Jerusalem, Order of the. A body of military monks, organized in the 12th century on the basis of an older order, founded (1048) in Jerusalem to minister to the poor and strangers in the Holy Land. The knights of the order are also known—after subsequent headquarters—as Knights of Rhodes and Knights of Malta.

Jean Parisot de la Valette (1494-1568) was a famous French grand master of the Knights of Malta or HOSPITALERS. He defended Malta successfully against the Turks (1565). The Maltese capital which he built is named after him, Valetta.

Host (from Lat. hostia, a sheep when offered in sacrifice). The consecrated bread of the Eucharist is so called in the Latin Church because it is regarded as a real victim consisting of flesh, blood, and spirit, offered up in sacrifice. At the Benediction it is exposed for adoration or carried in procession in a transparent vessel called a monstrance.

the elevation of the Host. The celebrant lifting up the consecrated wafers above his head, that the people may see the paten and adore the Host while his back is turned to the congregation.

Host's Tale. (In Chaucer's Canterbury Tales.) See MELIBOEUS. The Host is to be the judge of the tales told by the pilgrims. He is the proprietor of the Tabard Inn (see CANTERBURY TALES) and is perhaps best described in the following lines:

A semely man our hoste was with alle
 For to hav been a marshal in an halle;
 A large man he was with eyen stepe
 A fairer burgeys is there noon in Chepe
 Bold of his speche, and wys, and wel y-taught
 And of manhood him lakkede right naught
 Eek therto he was right a mery man
 Chaucer, Prologue to the Canterbury Tales.

Hosty. In James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE, a cricketer, one of the characters in which the hero, H. C. EARWICKER, is represented. The name contains a reference to the Host of Roman Catholicism.

Hotel Universe. A play by Philip BARRY, produced in 1930. It deals with a group of frustrated and unhappy people assembled as week-end guests at the home of Ann Field, an American woman living in southern France. Stephen Field, Ann's father, who believes in a triple system of worlds—of fact, imagination, and fact plus imagination after death—analyzes the problems of each guest in turn and reveals the past causes of their present distress. Their difficulties are solved as the old man dies.

hotspur. A fiery person who has no control over his temper. Harry Percy (d. 1403), son of the first Earl of Northumberland (cf. Shakespeare; 1 Henry IV), was so called. He is introduced in both parts of Henry IV. Lord Derby (d. 1879), the Prime Minister, was sometimes called the "hotspur of debate."

Houdin, Jean Eugène Robert (1805-1871). French watchmaker and magician, who took delight in explaining the mechanics of his tricks and in exposing the pretense of "fakes." On a government mission to Algeria he proved to the natives that French "magic" was superior to theirs. Author of books on magic and of an autobiography.

Houdini, Harry. Real name Erich Weiss (1874-1926). Famous American magician, who took his professional name from Houdin. Especially known for his ability to extricate himself from handcuffs and sealed containers.

Houdon, Jean Antoine (1741-1828). French sculptor remembered for some two hundred portrait busts of famous people. Came to America with Franklin and modeled a bust of Washington from which he made afterward his Richmond statue.

Hough, Emerson (1857-1923). American writer who worked for the preservation of wild life and the establishment of national parks. Wrote Story of the Cowboy (1897); The Mississippi Bubble (1902); and The Covered Wagon (1922) which became "a gold mine in the moving pictures."

Houghton, Claude, see OLDFIELD, C. H.

Houghton, William Stanley (1881-1913). English dramatist. Fame and fortune from Hindle Wakes (1912). Within a year of first performance in London, the play had been acted 2,000 times in London, Manchester, New York, and Chicago. It dealt with the cotton mill districts of Lancashire. Houghton had begun his career in the business of his father who was a cotton merchant.

Hound and Horn. A literary magazine founded at Harvard University in 1927, later moving to New York. Until it ceased publication in 1934 it published the work of the leading poets and prose writers of the time, many of whom were unknown when they first appeared in its pages. Among these are T. S. ELIOT, Gertrude STEIN, Allen TATE, Ezra POUND, and Kenneth BURKE.

Hound of Heaven, The. Best-known poem of Francis THOMPSON, published in 1893. Mystical and revelatory in character, it portrays the eternal pursuit of reluctant mankind by the grace and redemption of God, symbolized in the chase of a hare by a hound.

hour. The black-eyed damsels of the Mohammedan Paradise, possessed of perpetual youth and beauty, whose virginity is renewable at pleasure; hence, in English use, any dark-eyed and attractive beauty.

Every believer will have seventy-two of these houris in Paradise, and, according to the Koran, his intercourse with them will be fruitful or otherwise, according to his wish. If an offspring is desired, it will grow to full estate in an hour.

Hours of Idleness. The first series of poems published, in 1807, by Lord BYRON. The severe criticism in the Edinburgh Review brought forth the satire called English Bards and Scotch Reviewers (1809).

House, Edward Mandell (1858-1938). American diplomat. Personal representative of President Wilson in Europe (1914-1916). Appointed to act for U.S. in negotiating armistice with Central Powers (1918). With Charles SEYMOUR (later president of Yale), author of What Really Happened at Paris. Known as "Colonel House" in accordance with the rank he had once held on the staff of Governor Culberson of Texas.

Household Words. A weekly periodical (1850-1857) published by Charles DICKENS; it gave place to Once a Week, which, after 1859, was called All the Year Round.

House of Life, The. A sonnet sequence by Dante Gabriel ROSSETTI, written during the period between 1848 and 1881, chiefly autobiographical and inspired by Elizabeth SINDALL, the author's wife. The title refers to the "house of human life" in astrology (see HOUSES, ASTROLOGICAL), which is classed as the most important.

House of Mirth, The. A novel by Edith WHARTON (1905). Lily Bart, an orphan who has beauty, social connections, and expensive tastes but little money, is courted by a number of men. One, Lawrence Seldon, she loves, but his lack of a fortune makes him ineligible; another, Simon Rosedale, a wealthy Jew, she cannot quite force herself to marry. Meantime she puts herself under great obligations to Gus Trenor, a married friend who keeps up the pretext of giving her returns from her investments until she refuses to allow his attentions. Lily's fortunes gradually go from bad to worse until, shunned and snubbed by her friends, she goes to live in a third-rate boarding house, tries to learn millinery and at last, in despair, takes an overdose of chloral. Before her death she manages to discharge her debt to Trenor.

House of the Dead, The. An account of prison life in Siberia during the 19th century by Fyodor DOSTOYEVSKY, published in 1861. It was based on the author's own experiences in the land to which Russian prisoners, especially political prisoners, were sent in exile.

House of the Seven Gables, The. A novel by Nathaniel HAWTHORNE (1851). The story has to do with the slow relentless working out of a curse on the Pyncheon family of Salem, who have inhabited the House of the Seven Gables for generations. The ancestral Colonel Pyncheon whose portrait on the wall still rules the house, built on the property of a man named Maule who was executed for witchcraft largely through Pyncheon's efforts. As Maule stood with the halter round his neck he cursed his enemy, saying, "God will give him blood to drink." The book deals, in passing, with the effect of the curse upon the early Pyncheons, particularly the death of the Colonel, the disappearance of the deed to rich Maine lands (hid away by Maule's carpenter son in a nook of the Pyncheon house itself) and the hypnotizing of the proud and beautiful Alice Pyncheon by Maule's carpenter grandson. The story proper, however, concerns the few surviving Pyncheons two centuries after the building of the house. The principal characters are the gaunt old maid, Hepzibah Pyncheon, and her brother Clifford, both well past middle age. Hepzibah is desperately poor and finally forces her pride to the point of opening a little cent-shop. Clifford comes home to the old house weak and embittered from thirty years' unjust imprisonment as the supposed murderer of his uncle. His suffering was the fault of his hypocritical cousin Judge Jaffrey Pyncheon, now the most distinguished member of the old house, and prosperous from an inheritance that should have been Clifford's. In contrast to these elderly characters, steeped in the traditions of the past, are the young and pretty cousin, Phoebe, and Holgrave, the radical and adventuresome daguerreotypist (in reality the descendant of Maule), who rents a gable of the old house, falls in love with Phoebe and marries her. The death of the old Judge by apoplexy brings a fortune to make life easier for the old brother and sister and the young lovers.

houses, astrological. In judicial astrology the whole heaven is divided into twelve portions by means of great circles crossing the north and south points of the horizon, through which the heavenly bodies pass every twenty-four hours. Each of these divisions is called a house; and in casting a HOROSCOPE the whole is divided into two parts beginning from the east, six above and six below the horizon. The eastern ones are called the ascendant, because they are about to rise; the other six are the descendant, because they have already passed the zenith. The twelve houses each have their special functions—(1) the house of life; (2) fortune and riches; (3) brethren; (4) parents and relatives; (5) children; (6) health; (7) marriage; (8) death; (9) religion; (10) dignities; (11) friends and benefactors; (12) enemies.

Three houses were assigned to each of the four ages of the person whose horoscope was to be cast, and his lot in life was governed by the ascendancy or descendancy of these at the various periods, and by the stars which ruled in the particular "houses."

Housman, Alfred Edward (1859-1936). English Latin scholar and poet, known for his small quantity of lyrics showing the influence of traditional English ballads and classical verse, set against a background of the English countryside. They are marked by economy, directness, and dramatic simplicity in style, and a spirit of irony and fatalism, finding disillusionment and betrayal in love, patriotism, and sin alike. Housman was reluctant to publish his poetry, and for years was known only for his first book, A Shropshire Lad (1896). Last Poems appeared in 1922, and More Poems, selections made from his manuscripts, in 1936, after his death.

Housman, Lawrence (1865-). English dramatist, novelist and illustrator; brother of A. E. HOUSMAN. His first—almost his only—popular success came by accident. He published anonymously An Englishwoman's Love Letters (1900). The public thought them genuine! With thirty-two of his plays censored in one way or another, he has been called "England's most censored playwright," but his Victoria Regina, with Helen Hayes, was an enormous success in America. He is brilliantly versatile, a beautiful draughtsman, a fine poet, a delightful writer of fantastic stories. The Phoenix and the Carpet, by E. NESBIT, is based on a suggestion of his.

Houssain. Brother of Prince Ahmed in one of the ARABIAN NIGHTS stories. He possesses a piece of carpet or tapestry of such wonderful power that anyone has only to sit upon it and it will transport him in a moment to any place to which he desires to go.

Houston, Samuel (1793-1863). Known as Sam Houston. American general and statesman. Native of Virginia. As commander in chief of the Texans defeated the Mexicans at San Jacinto (1836). President of Texas (1836-1838; 1841-1844) and, after its admission to the Union (1845), U.S. senator (1846-1859) and governor (1859-1861) of Texas. Deposed for opposition to the Confederacy.

Houyhnhnms (whinms, or whinhims). A race of horses endowed with reason and all the finer characteristics of man, introduced with caustically satirical effect by Swift in his GULLIVER'S TRAVELS. They are the rulers of the Yahoos. The name was the author's invention, coined in imitation of the "whinny" of a horse.

Hovey, Richard (1869-1900). American poet, best known for the Songs from Vagabondia which he and Bliss CARMAN published in collaboration. Among his well-known lyrics are The Sea Gypsy and Comrades.

Howard, Henry, Earl of Surrey, see SURREY, HENRY HOWARD, EARL OF.

Howard, Leslie (1893-1943). English actor, popular on New York stage and in moving pictures from 1930. Lost in airplane accident (his plane was probably shot down) during World War II. Played in Berkeley Square, Hamlet, The Petrified Forest, etc.

Howard, Sidney Coe (1891-1939). One of the best of modern American playwrights. They Knew What They Wanted (1925), awarded Pulitzer Prize; Yellow Jack (1928); The Late Christopher Bean (1933); Dodsworth (with Sinclair Lewis; 1934); Paths of Glory (with Humphrey Cobb; 1935); also adapted plays and novels for moving pictures, Bulldog Drummond, etc.

Howe, Edgar Watson (1853-1937). American newspaper and magazine editor and novelist, known for his first novel, THE STORY OF A COUNTRY TOWN (1883), one of the early examples of realism in American fiction. His other works, less powerful in character, include A Man Story (1889); An Ante-Mortem Statement (1891); Country Town Sayings (1911); Ventures in Common Sense (1919); The Anthology of Another Town (1920); and Plain People (1929), an autobiography. See KIRKLAND, JOSEPH; also LOCAL COLOR; NATURALISM.

Howe, Elias (1819-1867). American inventor. Completed the first sewing machine in 1845. Member, Hall of Fame.

Howe, Julia Ward (1819-1910). American poet, author, and reformer, active particularly in the anti-slavery and woman suffrage movements. She is best known as the author of The Battle Hymn of the Republic (1862), set to the music of John Brown's Body and sung by the Union forces during the American Civil War. She also wrote Sex and Education (1874), Modern Society (1881), and a biography of Margaret FULLER (1883).

Howe, Mark Antony DeWolfe (1864-). Vice-president, Atlantic Monthly Co. (1911-1929); director, Boston Athenaeum (from 1933). Author of Barrett Wendell and His Letters (Pulitzer prize for biography, 1924); Yankee Ballads (1930); etc. His father, Mark Antony DeWolfe Howe (1808-1895), was the Episcopal bishop of Central Pennsylvania.

Howe, Miss. In Richardson's CLARISSA HARLOWE, the friend of Clarissa Harlowe, to whom she presents a strong contrast. In questions of doubt, Miss Howe suggests some practical solution, while Clarissa dreams of hypothetical contingencies. She is a girl of high spirit, disinterested friendship, and sound common sense.

Howell, James (1594?-1666). English man of letters. Historiographer royal of Restoration (1661). Best-known for his Epistolae Holianae: Familiar Letters, most of which were written while he was in prison as a royalist sympathizer during the Civil War (1643-1651). His chief lexicographical contribution is the Lexicon Tetraglotton (1660), a polyglot dictionary of English, French, Italian, and Spanish.

Howells, William Dean (1837-1920). American journalist, editor, and novelist, known for his realistic character studies, his interest in social, economic, and ethical problems of his time, and his insistence on truthfulness and didacticism in fiction. His works include: Their Wedding Journey (1872); A Chance Acquaintance (1873); A Foregone Conclusion (1875); The Lady of the Aroostook (1879); Dr. Breen's Practice (1881); A Modern Instance (1882); The Rise of Silas Lapham (1885); Indian Summer (1886); The Minister's Charge (1887); April Hopes (1888); Annie Kilburn (1889); A Hazard of New Fortunes (1890); A Traveler from Altruria (1894); The Kentons (1902). (See separate entries.) My Literary Passions (1895), Literary Friends and Acquaintance (1900), and Literature and Life (1902) are books of criticism. Howells also wrote a number of other novels, short stories, 31 plays, autobiographical works, and poetry. He was editor of the ATLANTIC MONTHLY for several years beginning in 1871, and later conducted the department in HARPER'S MAGAZINE called The Editor's Easy Chair. He was widely honored as the leading American man of letters during the latter part of his career and encouraged a number of younger writers, including STEPHEN CRANE, HAMLIN GARLAND, and FRANK NORRIS. He was a friend of MARK TWAIN.

Howleglass or Owleglass. A name given to Tyf EULENSPIEGEL.

Howth Castle. A castle surmounting the hill of Howth, which is located on a peninsula overlooking the harbor of Dublin, in Ireland. It is the background for a love scene between Molly and Leopold Bloom in ULYSSES, and appears prominently in FINNEGANS WAKE, both novels by JAMES JOYCE. In the opening sections of FINNEGANS WAKE there is a scene in which tourists are shown the ancient relics in Howth Castle. It is said that Dubliners like to picture the hill as the head of a sleeping giant whose body is the peninsula, and this may account for the role of Howth in FINNEGANS WAKE as one of the metamorphoses of the sleeping H. C. EARWICKER. One of Earwicker's names is Jarl van Hoothe, a pseudo-Dutch form for "Earl of Howth."

How They Brought the Good News from Ghent to Aix. A ballad by ROBERT BROWNING (1845), noted for its onomatopoeic effects. It describes a purely imaginary incident.

Hoyle, Edmond (1672-1769). English writer on card games. His whist laws remained in effect for a century (1760-1864). Cf. the phrase, "according to Hoyle."

Hrotsvitha, see ROSWITHA.

Hrothgar. In the Anglo-Saxon epic BEOWULF, King of Denmark, whom Beowulf delivers from the monster GRENDL.

Huang Ti. A legendary emperor of China (about 2600 B. C.) credited with the invention of bricks, carts, musical instruments, etc. His name means "yellow emperor."

huaca. Among the ancient Peruvians, a local spirit or tribal god, as distinguished from the major Inca divinities.

Huayna Capac (1450?-1525). Eleventh Inca ruler of Peru. During his reign of 42 (or 33) years the Inca empire attained its greatest splendor and extent (3000 miles long and 400 miles wide). At his death he divided it between his sons ATAHUALPA and Huáscar. His capital was Cuzco.

hub. The nave of a wheel; a boss. Boston, Massachusetts, has been called the hub of the solar system; i.e., the center round which everything revolves and is dependent. This phrase and the similar one, the hub of the uni- verse, have also been applied to numerous other cities.

Boston State-house is the hub of the solar system. You couldn't pry that out of a Boston man, if you had the tire of all creation straightened out for a crowbar. —Holmes, Autocrat of the Breakfast Table, vi, 143.

Hubbard, Bartley. The chief character in Howells' MODERN INSTANCE.

Hubbard, Elbert (1859-1915). Successful American businessman who retired at the age of 35 to seek culture, established the Roycroft Press in imitation of the KELMSCOTT PRESS of William MORRIS, although not as a communal venture, and himself wrote the majority of the material published there. This included two pseudo-artistic magazines, the Philistine and The Fia, and a series of 170 Little Journeys to the homes of famous men. Hubbard is best-known for A MESSAGE TO GARCIA (1899), an exhortation to fidelity and enterprise which became enormously popular among businessmen, who distributed copies of it among their employees as "inspiration." Hubbard died when the S. S. Lusitania was sunk in the Irish Sea by a German submarine.

Hubbard, Mother. An old lady of nursery rhyme fame whose whole time and attention were taken up by her dog.

The dame made a curtsy, the dog made a bow,
The dame said, "Your servant!" the dog said, "Bow, wow!"
A Nursery Tale in Rhyme.

A woman's loose coatlike wrapper is called a Mother Hubbard from this familiar character.

Hubberd, Mother. The supposed narrator of a tale called The Fox and the Ape, related to the poet SPENSER in his Prosopopoia, Or Mother Hubberd's Tale (1591), to beguile the weary hours of sickness. Several persons told him tales, but

Amongst the rest a good old woman was Nigh Mother Hubberd, who did far surpass
The rest in honest mirth that seemed her well;
She, when her turn was come her tale to tell,
Told of a strange adventure that betided
Betwixt a fox and ape by him misguided;
The which, for that my sense it greatly pleased, . .
I'll write it as she the same did say.

Spenser.

Hubert. In Shakespeare's KING JOHN, chamberlain to King John, and "keeper" of young Prince Arthur. King John conspires with him to murder the young prince, and Hubert actually employs two ruffians to burn out both the boy's eyes with red-hot irons. Arthur pleads so with Hubert to spare his eyes that he relents. However, the lad is found dead soon afterwards, either by accident or foul play. This Hubert was Hubert de Burgh, justice of England and Earl of Kent.

Hubert, St., see under SAINT.

Hubscher, Caterina, see MADAME SANS GÈNE.

Huckleberry Finn, The Adventures of. A story by MARK TWAIN (1884), sequel to TOM

SAWYER. After the first few chapters in his home town, the vagabond Huck with his raft and his faithful friend, Jim the Negro, drifts down the Mississippi into innumerable adventures.

Hudibras. A satirical poem in three parts and nine cantos (1663-1678) by Samuel BUTLER, so named from its hero, who is variously said to be drawn from Sir Samuel Luke, Colonel Rolle of Devonshire, or Sir Henry Roswell. Hudibras is a Presbyterian justice in the Commonwealth, who sets out with his squire, Ralpho, an Independent, to reform abuses, and enforce the observance of the laws for the suppression of popular sports and amusements. He is humpbacked and potbellied with a long untidy yellow-red beard. Among several other features of the poem that are reminiscent of DON QUIXOTE may be mentioned the half-blind old horse on which Hudibras rides forth on his crusade. This satiric poem against the Puritans gave rise to the adjective hudibrastic meaning mock-heroic, or in the style of Hudibras.

There are two characters of this name in Spenser's FAERIE QUEENE: (1) the lover of Elissa (II. ii), typifying rashness, and (2) a legendary king of Britain (II. x. 25).

Hudson, Sir Jeffrey (1619-1682). A famous dwarf, at one time page to Queen Henrietta Maria. When he was thirty years old he was 18 in. high, but he later reached 3 ft. 6 in. or 3 ft. 9 in. He was a captain of horse in the Civil War. Afterwards he was captured by pirates and sold as a slave in Barbary, but managed to escape. Scott introduces him in his PEVERIL OF THE PEAK, ch. xxxiv; Vandyke immortalized him by his brush; and his clothes are said to be preserved in Sir Hans Sloane's museum.

Hudson, Roderick, see RODERICK HUDSON.

Hudson, Stephen. Pseudonym of Sidney Schiff. English novelist; adamant about letting nothing be known of his private life. Started writing after he was fifty. Close personal friend of Marcel PROUST. Translated a volume of A la Recherche du temps perdu. Also intimate friend of Katherine MANSFIELD. "His is a condensed, eliminative, almost taciturn art."

Hudson, William Henry (1841-1922). English naturalist and novelist, born in Argentina of American parentage, naturalized as a British subject in 1900. He is best known for his writings on nature subjects, especially those with an Argentine background. His books include: The Purple Land (1885); Argentine Ornithology (1888-1889); Fan (1892), published under the name of Henry Harford; Birds in a Village (1893); Nature in Downland (1900); El Ombú (1902); Hampshire

Days (1903); GREEN MANSIONS (1904); A Little Boy Lost (1905); A Crystal Age (1906); A Shepherd's Life (1910); Far Away and Long Ago (1918), autobiographical; The Book of a Naturalist (1919); A Hind in Richmond Park (1922).

Hudson River school. A group of 19th-century American painters—among others Thomas Cole, A. B. Durand, F. E. Church, and Albert Bierstadt—for whom the scenery of the Hudson River Valley was the main source of subject matter and inspiration.

Hudson's Bay Company. A joint stock company chartered in 1670 by Charles II for the purpose of purchasing furs from the Indians. Its territory, the Hudson's Bay Territory or Rupert's Land, included all the streams flowing into Hudson Bay. It was sold to the British government (1869) and incorporated with the Dominion of Canada (1870).

Huggins and Muggins. Two characters of popular legend who personify vulgarity and false pretensions. They were frequently introduced in comic literature of the 19th century. The phrase may be a corruption of the Dutch Hooge en Mogende (high and mighty) or may possibly be derived from Hugin and Munin, Odin's two ravens of Scandinavian myth.

Hughes, Charles Evans (1862-1948). American jurist. Unsuccessful presidential candidate against Wilson (1916). Chief justice of the U.S. Supreme Court (1930). Retired (1941).

Hughes, David Edward (1831-1900). English-born American inventor of the printing telegraph 1850. Resident of London (from 1877). Gold Medal of Royal Society (1885).

Hughes, Hatcher (1886?-1945). American dramatist and university professor. Hell-Bent for Heaven (1922), Pulitzer prize for drama (1924); etc. National Institute of Arts and Letters.

Hughes, James Langston (1902-). American Negro poet, whose work is marked by bitter clowning and the use of the rhythms of Negro folk-music and jazz. Books of poems are The Weary Blues (1926); Dear Lovely Death (1931); The Negro Mother (1931); The Dream Keeper (1932); A New Song (1938); etc. Scottsboro Limited (1932) is a collection of poems and a play. Troubled Island and Mulatto (1936) are plays; Not Without Laughter (1930), a novel; The Ways of White Folks (1934), a collection of short stories; The Big Sea (1940), an autobiography. Poems by Hughes have been translated into German, French, Spanish, Russian, Yiddish, and Czech. Many of them have been set to music.

Hughes, John Ceiriog (1832-1887). Welsh poet. Author of hundreds of songs; called the "Welsh Burns."

Hughes, Richard Arthur Warren (1900-). Welsh novelist, poet, and dramatist. Bernard Shaw called his The Sisters' Tragedy (1924) "the finest one-act play ever written." His novel High Wind in Jamaica (in America, The Innocent Voyage; 1929), an amazing story of children, has been also successful as a play.

Hughes, Rupert (1872-). American novelist, dramatist, biographer, vastly successful magazine writer. His work varies from trash to a biography of George Washington showing great research. At his best, Hughes writes with great vigor.

Hughes, Thomas (1822-1896). English jurist, reformer, and author of Tom Brown's School Days (1857), and Tom Brown at Oxford (1861); etc. Associated with Christian Socialism, a movement for the improvement of the conditions of the poor.

Hugh of Lincoln. It is said that the Jews of Lincoln in 1255 stole a boy of 8 years named Hugh, whom they tortured for ten days and then crucified or drowned in a well. Eighteen of the richest Jews of Lincoln were hanged for taking part in this affair, and more would have been put to death had it not been for the intercession of the Franciscans. The boy was buried in state. This is the subject of The Prioress's Tale of Chaucer; it is also given in Alphonsus of Lincoln (1459), etc., and was modernized by Wordsworth. See also WILLIAM OF NORWICH.

Hugh Wynne, Free Quaker. A novel by S. Weir Mitchell (Am., 1897), dealing with the Philadelphia of Revolutionary times. The hero, who is also the narrator, is the son of a once light-hearted French mother and the strictest and most intolerant of Quaker fathers. The plot centers about his adventures during the Revolution as a spy and member of Lafayette's and Washington's staffs and his love for the charming Darthea Peniston. Darthea is also loved by Hugh's best friend, Jack Warder, and his rascally cousin, Arthur Wynne, but eventually gives her heart and hand to Hugh. The novel was illustrated by Howard Pyle.

Hugin and Munin. In Scandinavian mythology, the two ravens that sit on the shoulders of Odin. They typify thought and memory.

Hugo, Victor Marie (1802-1885). French poet, novelist, and dramatist, an early leader of French Romanticism and the most famous and most influential figure in 19th-century French literature. He is best-known to the English-speaking public for his historical novels, marked by tremendous sweep, violent melodrama, rhetorical and colorful style, and a frequent humanitarian interest in the problems and sufferings of the proletariat. Among his most popular novels are: Han of Iceland (Han d'Islande) (1823); The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Notre-Dame de Paris; 1831); Les Misérables (1862); Toilers of the Sea (Les Travailleurs de la mer; 1866); The Man Who Laughs (L'Homme qui rit; 1869); and NINETY-THREE (Quatre-Vingt Treize; 1874).

In the drama, Hugo was a leader in establishing the Romantic drama in place of the Classical, introducing such innovations as a mixture of the comic and the tragic in the same play, by realistic touches, both colloquial and extravagantly rhetorical dialogue, new freedom in meter, and violation of the old principle of unity of action. His best-known plays, chiefly historical and melodramatic, include: Cromwell (1827); HERNANI (1830), his most famous dramatic work; Maïon Delorme (1831); Ruy Blas (1838); Les Burgraves (1843). Hugo also wrote numerous volumes of poetry throughout his life, dealing with nature subjects, the Orient and Spain, political satire and invective, and history, all marked by intense imagination, excessively rich figures, and violent and apocalyptic rhetoric. Outstanding volumes are: Les Orientales (1829); Les Chants du Crépuscule (1835); Les Châtiments (1853), an attack on Napoleon III and a prediction of the triumph of the forces of good; and La Légende des Siècles (1859-1883), an account of history through the ages including Biblical lore, mythology, and legend.

Hugo is said to have been inordinately vain and egotistical in his personal life. He opposed Napoleon III and was exiled (1852-1870), living in the Channel Islands.

Huguenots. The French Protestants (Calvinists) of the 16th and 17th centuries. The name was first applied to the revolutionaries of Geneva by the adherents of the Duke of Savoy, about 1560, and is probably an adaptation of the Ger. Eidgenossen, confederates.

Philippe de Mornay (1549-1623), the great supporter of the French Protestants, was nicknamed the Huguenot Pope.

The Huguenots (Les Huguenots) is the title of an opera by MEYERBEER (1836) which is brought to its tragic end by the Massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day (1572). The heroine is Valentine, a Catholic; the hero Raoul de Nançis, a Huguenot. Political intrigues and personal jealousies separate them and they are united at last only to go to their death.

Hugues of Saxe-Gotha, Master. A poem by Robert BROWNING.

Huitzilopochtli. The war god of the Aztecs. He was extremely sanguinary and great numbers of captives were periodically sacrificed before him. His great festival was the December solstice. At that time his image, made of bread, was ceremonially eaten.

Hulda. The old German goddess of marriage and fecundity, who sent bridegrooms to maidens and children to the married. The name means "the Benignant," and is a euphemistic appellation.

Hulda is making her bed. It snows.

Hull, Cordell (1871–). U.S. secretary of state (1933–1944). Negotiated various reciprocal trade agreements especially with Latin-American countries.

Hull, Edith Maude. English novelist. Best known for The Sheik (1921) which was made into a silent moving picture for Rudolph Valentino. A preposterous story that made a scandalous sensation.

Hull House. A famous settlement house in Chicago. It is widely known through Jane Addams' autobiographical volumes Twenty Years at Hull House (1910) and The Second Twenty Years at Hull House (1931).

Hulme, Thomas Ernest (1883–1917). English author and philosopher, known for his forceful personality, his championing of abstract art, and his influence on the ideas of his contemporaries, especially Ezra Pound and T. S. Eliot. He was an early leader in the movement of Imagism, founding a group of enthusiasts which met weekly for the writing of free-verse poems and himself composing a number of such pieces. He never wrote a complete book, although he prepared many notes for a series of intended works on 20th-century art and medieval philosophy, and attacks on romanticism and post-Renaissance humanist views. These notes are collected in Speculations (1924), and Notes on Language and Style (1929). Hulme was influenced by Remy de Gourmont, Henri Bergson, and Georges Sorel, translating the works of the latter two authors. He was enthusiastic about World War I, wrote articles defending militarism, and was killed in battle.

Hulot. In Balzac's novels, notably in The Chouans (Les Chouans), an honorable and distinguished soldier, the elder of two brothers. His concern over his brother's misdeeds hastens his death.

Baron Hector Hulot d'Ervy. Brother of the above, a worthless character whose gradual degeneration is traced in Balzac's Cousin Betty (La Cousine Bette). See Fischer, Lisbeth. After a brilliant start in life, he becomes involved in disgraceful speculations and in numerous affairs with women. When his wife finally dies, he marries a kitchen maid. He is known under various names, to disguise his misdoings.

Baroness Hulot d'Ervy. Wife of the disreputable Hulot. She endures with infinite patience the shame which the Baron brings upon her, and for her children's sake makes every effort to hold the family together.

Hortense Hulot. The Baron's daughter, beloved by Wenceslas Steinbock, the young and talented protégé of Cousin Betty.

Huma. A fabulous Oriental bird which never alights, but is always on the wing. It is said that every head which it overshadows will wear a crown. The bird suspended over the throne of Tippoo Sahib at Seringapatam represented this poetical fancy. In the first chapter of the Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table a certain popular lecturer is made to compare himself, in allusion to his many wanderings, to this bird:

"Yes, I am like the Huma, the bird that never lights; being always in the cars, as the Huma is always on the wing."

Human Comedy, The, see COMÉDIE HUMAINE.

Humanism, or the New Humanism. A movement in philosophy and criticism, centered at Harvard University in the period following World War I and led by Irving Babbitt and Paul Elmer More. The movement sought to avoid the extremes of both religion and science and stressed the importance of human reason and freedom of will in ethical, intellectual, and artistic considerations. Its chief values were harmony and restraint, resulting from the "inner check" of free and enlightened reason. Romanticism in thought and literature was particularly frowned on by the Humanists, whose ideas are summed up in the symposium Humanism and America (1930). George Santayana's The Genteel Tradition at Bay (1931) is a criticism of the movement.

Humanism is considered to have had a strong influence on the ideas of T. S. Eliot, but he adapted it according to his own aims and purposes.

Humanism is a term also applied in general to the attitude of mind which grew up with the Renaissance and which laid emphasis on the individual and the secular world, rather than on feudal group relations and the world to come as in the Middle Ages, with the rediscovered literature of Greece and Rome as an inspiration and a model. The "humanists" were classical scholars and men of letters and often, especially in the early part of the Renaissance period, lived riotous and corrupt lives. The Italian humanists were the most famous, including Petrarch, Boccaccio, Lorenzo Valla, Pietro Aretino, Marsilio Ficino, Pico della Mirandola, Poggio, and Angelo Poli-

ZIANO. Humanists of northern Europe were: John Reuchlin, Philip MELANCHTHON, John COLET, Sir Thomas MORE, William Budé, and ERASMUS.

Humanities or Humanity studies. Grammar, rhetoric, and poetry, with Greek and Latin (literae humaniores); in contradistinction to divinity (literae divinae).

Human Understanding, An Essay concerning. A famous essay by John LOCKE, published in 1690, against the dogma of innate ideas, and in proof that experience is the key of knowledge.

humble pie, to eat. To come down from a position you have assumed; to be obliged to take "a lower room." Here "humble" is a pun on umble, the umbels being the heart, liver, and entrails of the deer, the huntsman's perquisites. When the lord and his household dined, the venison pasty was served on the dais, but the umbles were made into a pie for the huntsman and his fellows, who took the lower seats.

Humboldt, Baron Alexander von (1769-1854). German naturalist, traveler, and statesman. Like his older contemporary a real uomo universale. Spent five years (1799-1804) with Aimée Bonpland on a scientific expedition through South America; wrote on plant distribution; introduced Peruvian guano in Europe; delineated isothermal lines for comparing climates, etc., etc. Chief among his numerous works, written in German or French, is Kosmos (1845-1862), a description of the physical universe. He is said to have originated the current designation of Mexico as the "treasure-house of the world." See also Wilhelm von HUMBOLDT, his brother.

Humboldt, Wilhelm von (1767-1835). German philologist and statesman. Brother of Alexander von HUMBOLDT. During the Napoleonic wars, he was the Prussian minister of public instruction. As part of his program for a cultural rebirth of the nation, he became instrumental in the foundation of the University of Berlin (1810). See also under FICHTE. His main work, Über die Kawi Sprache auf der Insel Jawa (On the Kawi Language of the Island of Java; 3 vols., 1836-1840) is still studied, mainly on account of the introduction, available as a separate reprint, On the Difference in the Construction of Language, and its Influence upon the Intellectual Development of the Human Race.

Humboldt Current. A mass of cold water about 150 miles wide, which flows north from the coast of Chile, bringing cool, moist south and southwest winds. These, meeting with warm air over land, cause heavy fogs along the southern coast of Peru.

Hume, David (1711-1776). Scottish philosopher and historian. His philosophical scepticism, often referred to as Humism, restricts human knowledge to the experience of ideas and impressions, and has been of extraordinary importance in the history of modern metaphysical thinking. Author of many treatises, dissertations, and essays and of a history of England during the reigns of James I and Charles I. His best-known work is Philosophical Essays Concerning Human Understanding (1748), later issued as An Enquiry Concerning Human Understanding.

Hume, Fergus (1859-1932). Anglo-Australian "story-teller." Writer of detective stories. His magnum opus, unreadable today, was The Mystery of a Hansom Cab (1886). It received more attention than Conan Doyle's A Study in Scarlet, issued a year later. Cf. Murder for Pleasure (1941), by Howard Haycraft. It sold a phenomenal number of copies.

Hummel, Abraham Henry (1850-1926). American criminal lawyer known as "Abe." Convicted on a conspiracy charge (1905) and imprisoned; spent last years of his life in obscurity in England. Cf. Howe and Hummel (1947), by Richard Rovere.

Hummums, the. Formerly the name of two hotels, the Old Hummums and the New Hummums, in Covent Garden, London. The word "hummums" is a variant or corruption of hammam, "a Turkish bath." The London Hummums were frequented by women of doubtful repute which soon led to their suppression.

humor. As good humor, ill or bad humor, etc. According to an ancient theory, there are four principal humors in the body: phlegm, blood, choler, and black bile. As any one of these predominates, it determines the temper of the mind and body; hence the expressions sanguine, choleric, phlegmatic, and melancholic humors. A just balance made a good compound called "good humor"; a preponderance of any one of the four made a bad compound called an ill or evil humor. Cf. Ben Jonson's Every Man Out of His Humor (Prologue).

Humperdinck, Engelbert (1854-1921). German composer. Friend of Richard WAGNER; best known for his fairy opera Hänsel und Gretel (1893); composed also incidental music for Shakespeare and Maeterlinck's Blue Bird.

Humphrey, to dine with Duke. To have no dinner to go to. Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, son of Henry IV, the "Good Duke Humphrey," was renowned for his hospitality. At his death it was reported that a monument would be erected to him in St. Paul's, but his body was interred at St. Albans. The tomb of Sir John Beauchamp (d. 1358), on the south side of the nave of old St. Paul's, was popularly supposed to be that of the Duke, and when the promenaders left for dinner, the poor stay-behinds who had no dinner to go to, or who feared to leave the precincts of the cathedral because, once outside, they could be arrested for debt, used to say to the gay sparks who asked if they were going, that they would "dine with Duke Humphrey" that day.

Humphrey, Master. The hypothetical compiler of the tale entitled Barnaby Rudge in MASTER HUMPHREY'S CLOCK, by Charles Dickens (1840).

Humphry Clinker, The Expedition of. A novel by SMOLLETT (1771). The titular hero, Humphry Clinker, is a poor workhouse lad, put out by the parish as apprentice to a blacksmith, and afterwards employed as an ostler's assistant and extra postilion. When he is dismissed from the stables, he enters the service of Mr. Bramble, a fretful, grumpy, but kind-hearted old gentleman, greatly troubled with gout. Here he falls in love with Winifred Jenkins, Miss Tabitha Bramble's maid, and turns out to be a natural son of Mr. Bramble. Though nominally the hero, Humphry plays a much less important part than the BRAMBLES. The interest centers in the "expedition" of the title, a family tour through England and Scotland. The novel is written in the form of letters from the various characters.

Humpty Dumpty. A little deformed dwarf, "humpty" and "dumpty." It is also applied—in allusion to the old nursery rhyme—to an egg, and to anything that is, or may be, irretrievably shattered.

Humpty Dumpty sat on a wall,
Humpty Dumpty had a great fall,
All the King's horses and all the King's men Couldn't put Humpty together again.

In James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE Humpty Dumpty is interchangeable with Tim FINNEGAN, Lucifer, and mankind.

Hunchback of Notre Dame, see QUASIMODO.

Hunding. In Wagner's opera Die Walküre, one of the four music dramas of his RING, the husband of Sieglinde.

the Hundred Days. The days between March 20, 1815, when Napoleon reached the Tuileries, after his escape from Elba, and June 28, the date of the second restoration of Louis XVIII. Napoleon left Elba February 26; landed near Cannes March 1, entered Paris March 20, and signed his abdication June 22.

The address of the Count de Chambord, the perfect, begins: "A hundred days, sire, have elapsed since the fatal moment when your Majesty was forced to quit your capital in the midst of tears." This is the origin of the phrase.

the Hundred-eyed. Argus, in Greek and Latin fable. Juno appointed him guardian of Io, but Jupiter caused him to be put to death, whereupon Juno transplanted his eyes into the tail of her peacock.

the Hundred-handed. Three of the sons of Uranus, viz., Aegaeon or Briareus, Kottos, and Gyges or Gyes. After the war between Zeus and the Titans, when the latter were overcome and hurled into Tartarus, the Hundred-handed ones were set to keep watch and ward over them.

Sometimes CERBERUS is so called, because from his three necks sprang writhing snakes instead of hair.

the Hundred Years War. The long series of wars between France and England, beginning in the reign of Edward III, 1337, and ending in that of Henry VI, 1453.

The first battle was a naval action off Sluys, and the last the fight at Castillon. It originated in English claims to the French crown, and resulted in the English being expelled from the whole of France, except Calais.

the Chiltern Hundreds, see CHILTERN.

Huneker, James Gibbons (1860-1921). American critic and author, known for his urbane wit, the richness of his style, and his penetrating essays on contemporary painting, literature, and music. Among the latter are: Mezzotints in Modern Music (1899); Chopin: The Man and His Music (1900); Iconoclasts: A Book of Dramatists (1905); Egoists: A Book of Supermen (1909); Promenades of an Impressionist (1910); Ivory Apes and Peacocks (1915); Unicorns (1917); Variations (1921). Old Foggy (1913) and Steeplejack (1921) are books of autobiography, and Painted Veils (1921) is a novel dealing with artist life in New York City.

Hungerford, Margaret Wolfe née Hamilton (1857?-1897). Irish novelist. Best-known among her over thirty novels is Molly Bawn (1878). Most of her books were signed The Duchess.

hunger strike. The refusal of a prisoner, confined usually for a political misdemeanor, to take any food until he is released or secures some desired concession. This practice seems to have originated in Russia, but was widely employed by suffragette prisoners in England during the early years of the 20th century and later by Irish political prisoners and Mohandas K. ("Mahatma") GANDHI, Indian nationalist leader.

Hung Society. Also known as Triad Society. A very large Chinese secret society with an elaborate ritual. Founded in the 17th century and active in political revolts, etc. The triad of the name is "heaven, earth, man."

Huns. A term very generally used with reference to the Germans in World War I, from the tribe of barbarian invaders from western Asia who were a terror to all Europe in the 5th century.

Hunt. Like Hunt's dog, he would neither go to church nor stay at home. A Shropshire saying. The story is that one Hunt, a laboring man, kept a mastiff, which, on being shut up while his master went to church, howled and barked so as to disturb the whole congregation. Hunt thereupon thought he would take him to church the next Sunday, but the dog positively refused to enter. The proverb is applied to a self-willed person, who will neither be led nor driven.

Hunt, Frazier (1885-). American journalist. War correspondent in France (1918), etc.

Hunt, Gaillard (1862-1924). American man of letters. Edited the writings of James Madison (1900-1910) in nine volumes and ten volumes (16-25) of the journals of the Continental Congress (1910-1922). Author of Life in America One Hundred Years Ago (1914); etc.

Hunt, Holman (1827-1910). Pre-Raphaelite painter. Member of Order of Merit (1905). Author of Pre-Raphaelitism and the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood (1905).

Hunt, James Henry Leigh (1784-1859). English journalist, essayist, poet, and political radical, best known for his contemporary reputation and his association with and influence upon the English romantic poets BYRON, SHELLEY, and KEATS. As the result of articles in his periodical The Examiner attacking King George IV, he was imprisoned for two years (1813-1815) and became a hero among the liberals and radicals of the day. Among his verse the best-known are ABOU BEN ADHEM (1834), The Glove and the Lions (1836), and The Story of Rimini (1816; see FRANCESCA DA RIMINI).

Hunt, Violet (1866-1942). English biographer and novelist. Daughter of the Pre-Raphaelite painter Alfred William Hunt. Formed an alliance with Ford Madox Hueffer (afterward Ford Madox FORD), whose wife refused him a divorce. She and Ford were estranged for many years before his death. Her autobiography, I Have This To Say (1926), and her biography, The Wife of Rossetti (1932), are excellent source books.

Hunter, Mr. and Mrs. Leo. In Dickens' PICKWICK PAPERS, persons who court the society of any celebrity, and consequently invite Mr. Pickwick and his three friends to an entertainment in their house. Mrs. Leo Hunter is the author of an "Ode to an Expiring Frog," considered by her friends a most masterly performance.

Hunter, Vidar. See FISHER, VARDIS.

Huntington, Archer Milton (1870-). American writer and Hispanic scholar. Son of the railroad builder and millionaire Collis P. Huntington. He himself founded Hispanic Society of America (1904) and gave it the Hispanic Museum. His wife, Anna Hyatt (1876-), is a well-known sculptor, represented by bronzes of animals in the Metropolitan Museum in New York, and creator of statues of Joan of Arc, El Cid, etc.

Huntley, Edgar, see EDGAR HUNTLEY.

Huon de Bordeaux. The hero of a medieval French chanson de geste of that name, a late prose version of which was translated into English by Lord Berners in the time of Henry VIII.

Huon wishes to go from Syria to Babylon, and learns that the shortest and best way is through a wood sixteen leagues long, and full of fairies; and that few can go that way because King OBERON is sure to encounter them. Whoever speaks to him is lost forever, and if a traveler refuses to answer him, he raises a most horrible storm of wind and rain, and makes the forest seem one great river. Huon proceeds on his way, and finally addresses Oberon, who tells him the history of his birth. They become great friends, and when Oberon goes to Paradise he leaves Huon his successor as lord and king of Mommur. He marries Esclairmond, and was crowned "King of all Faerie."

Hurlothrumbo. A burlesque opera, which in 1729-1730 had an extraordinary run at the Haymarket theater. So great was its popularity that a club called "The Hurlothrumbo Society" was formed. The author was Samuel Johnson (1691-1773), a half-mad dancing master, who put this motto on the title-page when the burlesque was printed:

Ye sons of fire, read my Hurlothrumbo,
Turn it betwixt your finger and your thumb,
And being quite undone, be quite struck dumb.

The term Hurlothrumbo became proverbial for "absurdity."

Hurricane Nell. In A. G. Simms' historical novel Eutaw (1856), a mysterious and tragic woman who possesses a sort of second sight.

Hurst, Fannie (1889-). American novelist and short-story writer, author of best-selling books dealing chiefly with women and their problems in love affairs, domestic life, and public careers. Collections of short stories include Just Around the Corner (1914); Gaslight Sonatas (1918); Humoresque (1919); The Vertical City (1922); Song of Life (1927); Procession (1929); We Are Ten (1937). Among her novels are Star-dust (1921); Lum- mox (1923); Appassionata (1926); Mannequin (1926); A President Is Born (1928); Five and Ten (1929); Back Street (1931); Imitation of Life (1933); Anitra's Dance (1934); Great Laughter (1936). Several of her books were dramatized as motion pictures, especially Humoresque.

Hurston, Zora Neale (1901-). American Negro novelist. At one time amanuensis for Fannie Hurst. Her novels include Jonah's Gourd Vine (1934); Moses, Man of the Mountain (1939). Her play, From Sun to Sun, was produced at the John Golden Theatre in New York. Dust Tracks on a Road (1942) is an autobiography.

Hushai. In Dryden's ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, Laurence Hyde, Earl of Rochester (1641-1711). Hushai is David's friend, who opposes the counsels of Achitophel and causes the plot of Absalom to miscarry; so Rochester defeated the schemes of Shaftesbury, and brought to naught the rebellion of the Duke of Monmouth.

Huss, John (1369?-1415). Bohemian religious reformer. Rector of the university of Prague. Condemned and burned at stake for propagating a reform doctrine influenced by Wycliffe. His followers, the Hussites, organized a religious and political party and waged a fierce civil war (1419-1434). Their radical wing, the Taborites, became merged with the Bohemian Brethren. The conservatives or Calixtines turned Lutheran or Roman Catholic.

Hussonet. In Flaubert's SENTIMENTAL EDUCATION, an opportunistic journalist and editor, a friend of Frederic Moreau, the hero. At the time of the Revolution of 1848, he is an ardent supporter of radical beliefs, but he rapidly changes with the times and eventually becomes an equally ardent supporter of Napoleon III.

Hutchins, Eveline. In John Dos Passos' trilogy U.S.A. the daughter of a wealthy Chicago clergyman, who goes into the interior decorating business with her friend Eleanor Stoddard, later transferring it to New York, where they join a Bohemian set. The two go to France as Red Cross workers in World War I, Eveline has a brief love affair with a newspaper correspondent named Jerry Burnham, and she and Eleanor quarrel over which one is preferred by J. Ward Moorehouse. Eveline at last manages to trick Paul Johnson, an American soldier, into marrying her. After the war, she and Paul live in GREENWICH VILLAGE, associating with the Bohemians and intellectuals of the time. In THE BIG MONEY Eveline has an unsuccessful love affair and commits suicide.

sity of Chicago (from 1929). Author of The Higher Learning in America (1936); etc. His father, William James Hutchins (1871-) is especially known as president of Berea College, Ky. (from 1920).

Hutchinson, Anne (1591-1643). American religious liberal, born in England. Preached salvation by personal intuition of divine grace. Tried and convicted as leader of an antinomian faction. Banished from Bay Colony (1637). After having settled near what is now Pelham Manor, N.Y. (1642), she and her family were massacred by Indians (1643) on a split rock near the present Hutchinson Parkway, named in her memory.

Hutchinson, Arthur Stuart Menteth (1879-). English novelist. Author of If Winter Comes (1920); This Freedom (1922); etc. Belongs to the same general school as Warwick Deeping, but is a better writer.

Hutchinson, Lucy (1620-1675). English prose writer, known for her biography of her husband, Colonel Hutchinson, an outstanding Puritan leader and soldier during the English Civil War, who was imprisoned by the Stuarts during the Restoration period. The work, entitled Memoirs of the Life of Colonel Hutchinson, was written after 1664 and published in 1806. It is considered noteworthy because of its character analysis of its subject, its defense of the Puritan character in general, and its picture of a 17th-century English Puritan household. See also CAVENDISH, MARGARET.

Hutten, Ulrich von (1488-1523). German nobleman, soldier, and humanist. Vigorously defended Luther, disputed with Erasmus. Remarkable both as poet and prose satirist. Crowned poet by emperor Maximilian (1517). Co-author of the EPISTOLAE OBSCURORUM VIRORUM. Early singer of German patriotism. Died in exile on the island of Ufenau near Zurich, Switzerland.

Huxley, Aldous (1894-). English novelist, journalist, and essayist, grandson of Thomas HUXLEY and great-nephew of Matthew ARNOLD, associated with J. Middleton MURRY and Katherine MANSFIELD in editing the Athenaeum and a friend of D. H. LAWRENCE. He is best known for his witty, biting satires on the disillusioned and decadent intellectuals and society people in England of the 1920's. Later in his career he became interested in pacifism and Indian mysticism and supernaturalism. In his work of both types the influence of his scientific studies and background is strong.

Collections of Huxley's short stories include: Limbo (1920); Mortal Coils (1922); The Little Mexican, And Other Stories (1924); Two or Three Graces (1926); Brief Candles (1930). His novels are: Crome Yellow (1921); Antic

Hay (1923); Those Barren Leaves (1925); POINT COUNTER POINT (1928), his best-known novel; BRAVE NEW WORLD (1932); Eyeless in Gaza (1936); After Many a Summer Dies the Swan (1940). Grey Eminence (1942) is an historical study. Among his essays and criticism are: On the Margin (1923); Jesting Pilate (1923); Do What You Will (1929); The Holy Face, And Other Essays (1929); Vulgarity in Literature (1930); Music at Night (1931); Texts and Pretexts (1932); Beyond the Mexique Bay (1934); The Olive Tree, And Other Essays (1936); An Encyclopedia of Pacifism (1937); Ends and Means (1937). The Burning Wheel (1916) and Jonah (1917) are books of poetry. Huxley also edited the letters of D. H. Lawrence in 1932. He took up residence in California during the latter 1930's, and has written scenarios for moving pictures.

Julian Sorell Huxley (1887-), his brother, followed the scientific tradition of the family and became a leading English biologist and writer on popular science.

Huxley, Thomas Henry (1825-1895). English biologist and teacher, known for his defense of the theory of evolution held by Darwin and his lectures and writings popularizing science. His books include: Man's Place in Nature (1863); The Physical Basis of Life (1868); Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews (1870); Science and Morals (1886); Essays upon Some Controverted Questions (1892); Ethics and Evolution (1893). Huxley was called "Darwin's Bulldog" and engaged in a controversy with the English statesman Gladstone on the question of scientific evolutionary theories vs. Biblical lore. He was the grandfather of Aldous and Julian HUXLEY.

Huygens, Christian (1629-1695). Dutch mathematician, physicist, astronomer. Constructed improved telescopes; invented the pendulum in clocks; developed the wave theory of light; etc. Fellow, Royal Society of England.

Huysmans, Joris-Karl (1848-1907). French novelist, of Dutch ancestry, known for his neurasthenia, perverse tastes, and attraction, finally conversion, to Catholicism, in all of which he is considered to have been typical of the DECADENTS of his time. His style is marked by vivid and concrete figures, fantastic description, and a gift for portraying the grotesque. His books include Marthe (1876); AGAINST THE GRAIN (A Rebours; 1884); Là-bas (1891); EN ROUTE! (1895); La Cathédrale (1898).

Hyacinth. According to Grecian fable, the son of Amyclas, a Spartan king. The lad was beloved by Apollo and Zephyr, and as he preferred the sun-god, Zephyr drove Apollo's quoin at his head, and killed him. The blood became a flower, and the petals are inscribed with the signature Ai, meaning woe. See also ADONIS.

Hyatt, Anne. See under HUNTINGTON, Archer.

Hybla Minor and Major. In ancient geography, two Sicilian towns. Hybla Minor was noted for its honey. Hence Hyblaeon, "honey-eyed, sweet, etc."

Hyde, Douglas (1860-). Irish historian, poet and folklorist. Most of his writings are in Gaelic. Compiled the incomparable Love Songs of Connaught (1894). First president of Eire (1938).

Hyde, Edward. 1st Earl of Clarendon (1609-1674). See under CLARENDON PRESS.

Hyde, Mr., see JEKYLL.

Hyde Park. A large park in west central London. A recreative center and favorite place for open-air meetings.

Hydra. A monster of the Lernean marshes, in Argolis. It had nine heads, and one of the twelve labors of Hercules was to kill it. As soon as he struck off one of its heads, two shot up in its place; hence hydra-headed is applied to a difficulty which goes on increasing as it is combated.

hydra-headed multitude. The rabble, which not only is many-headed numerically, but seems to grow more numerous the more it is attacked and resisted.

Hygieia. Goddess of health in Greek mythology, and the daughter of AEscULAPIUS. Her symbol was a serpent drinking from a cup in her hand.

Hyksos (Shepherd Kings). A line of six or more foreign rulers over Egypt, who reigned for about 250 years between the XIIth and XVIIIth Dynasties, i.e., somewhere about 2000 B. C. It is uncertain whence they came, who they were, what they did, or whither they went; they left little in the way of records or monuments, and practically all that is known of them is the (historically speaking) very unsatisfactory notice gleaned by Josephus from Manetho.

Hylas. In classical mythology a favorite of Hercules whom he accompanied on the Argonautic expedition. While drawing water at a fountain in Mysia, he was drawn down by the water nymphs who had fallen in love with him.

Hymen. Properly, a marriage song of the ancient Greeks; later personified as the god of marriage, represented as a youth carrying a torch and veil—a more mature Eros, or Cupid.

Hyemttus. A mountain in Attica, famous for its honey.

Hymir. In Scandinavian mythology, a giant with a frosty beard who personifies the inhospitable sea. He owned the kettle in which the gods brewed their ale, and it was he who took Thor in his boat when that god went to kill the Midgard serpent, and robbed him of his prey.

Hymn of Hate (Hassgesang). A German poem by Ernst LISSAUER, current during World War I and denouncing England by using as a refrain the old phrase, "Gott strafe England" ("God punish England"). Hence the verb "to strafe."

Hyne, Charles John Cutcliffe Wright (1865-1944). English writer. Best-known as creator of the fictional character of Captain Kettle in several series of stories illustrated by Stanley L. Wood and running in Pearson's Magazine. The Lost Continent (1900) is a romance of the lost Atlantis.

Hypatia. A historical novel by Charles KINGSLEY (1853), a romance of 5th-century Alexandria. The hero is a young monk named Philammon, who leaves his monastery for a more active struggle with the brilliant pagan life of the great city. He is strongly drawn to Hypatia, a brilliant lecturer on Greek philosophy and a woman of rare spiritual charm. But the fanatical Christians of the city cannot tolerate her teachings, and she is torn to pieces by an angry mob.

hyperbole. The rhetorical figure of speech which consists of exaggeration or extravagance in statement for the purpose of giving effect but not intended to be taken au pied de la lettre, as, "the waves were mountains high."

Hyperboreans. A happy people of early Greek legend, who were supposed to dwell on the other side of the spot where the North Wind had its birth, and therefore to enjoy perpetual warmth and sunshine. They were said to be the oldest of the human race, the most virtuous, and the most happy; to dwell for some thousand years under a cloudless sky, in fields yielding double harvests, and in the enjoyment of perpetual spring.

Later fable held that they had not an atmosphere like our own, but one consisting wholly of feathers. Both Herodotus and Pliny mention this fiction, which they say was suggested by the quantity of snow observed to fall in those regions.

Hyperion. In Greek mythology, one of the Titans, son of Uranus and Ge, and father of Helios, Selene and Eos (the Sun, Moon and Dawn). The name is sometimes given by poets to the sun itself. One of the best-known works of Keats is his "poetical fragment" of this name (1820).

Longfellow gave the title to a long poetic romance, Hyperion, the Wanderer on High (1839), not concerned, however, with the ancient Titan but with a modern wanderer through many lands. The heroine is Mary ASHBURTON.

Hypermnestra. In Greek legend, the wife of Lynceus and the only one of the fifty daughters of Danaus who did not murder her husband on their bridal night. See DANAÏDES.

hyphenated American. An American citizen of divided allegiance because of foreign birth or parentage; an Irish-American, German-American, etc. The term was popularized during World War I.

Hypnos. In Greek mythology, the god of sleep.

Hypsipyle. In Greek legend, a woman of Lemnos who saved her father Thoas, when all the other men were killed by the women of the island. Cf. the poem of that title by Maurice HEWLETT.

I

Iacchus. A name for BACCHUS.

Iachimo. An Italian libertine who is at the bottom of most of the complications in Shakespeare's CYMBELINE.

Iago. The villain of Shakespeare's tragedy OTHELLO, who deliberately strings together such a mass of circumstantial evidence in proof of Desdemona's love for Cassio, that the Moor kills her out of jealousy.

The cool malignity of Iago, silent in his resentment, subtle in his designs, and studious at once of his interest and his vengeance, . . . are such proofs of Shakespeare's skill in human nature as it would be vain to seek in any modern writer.—Dr. Johnson.

iambus. An iambus or iamb is a poetic foot consisting of a short syllable followed by a long one, as betray, confess, be gone. Iambic verse is verse based on iambs. The meter is further designated by the number of poetic feet in the line, as iambic hexameter, pentameter, tetrameter, etc. Some examples follow.

Iambic verse of six feet or hexameter (called the ALEXANDRINE measure)—

I think the thoughts you think; and if I have the knack
Of fitting thoughts to words, you peradventure lack,
Envy me not the chance, yourselves more fortunate!

Browning, Five at the Fair, lxxvi.

Iambic verse of five feet or pentameter, the meter of the SONNET of BLANK VERSE and the heroic couplet. See PENTAMETER for a more restricted use.

The world is still deceived with ornament.
In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt
But being seasoned with a gracious voice
Obscures the show of evil?

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice.

Iambic verse of four feet (tetrameter) and three feet (trimeter) in alternate lines. This constitutes what is known as BALLAD METER.

I would begin the music here
And so my soul should rise
O for some heavenly notes to bear
My spirit to the skies.

Watts, Horae Lyricae.

Iambic verse of seven feet or heptameter, a line known as the FOURTEENER.

But all these things have ceased to be with my desire of life.

Tennyson, May Queen.

Ianthe. A poetic name much in use in the 19th century. The Ianthe to whom Lord BYRON dedicated his Childe Harold, was Lady Charlotte Harley, born 1801, and only eleven years old at the time. He borrowed it from W. S. LANDOR, who had thus "etheralized" the middle name of his early sweetheart Sophia Jane Swift, who became the Countess de Molandé and died in Paris in 1851. Landor wrote many poems in her praise. SHELLEY gave the name to the maiden to whom Queen Mab appears in his poem of that name.

Iapetus. In classical mythology, son of Uranus and Ge, father of Atlas, Prometheus, Epimetheus, and Menoetius, and ancestor of the human race, hence called genus Iapeti, the progeny of Iapetus.

Iasion. According to a Greek myth, a mortal who was united with Demeter and made her the mother of Plutus. He was killed for his presumption by Zeus' lightning. The myth probably symbolizes the fertilization of the fields.

Ibáñez, Vicente Blasco, see BLASCO IBÁÑEZ, VICENTE.

Ibbetson, Peter, see PETER IBBETSON.

Iberia. Spain; the country of the Iberus, the ancient name of the river Ebro.

Iberia's Pilot. Christopher Columbus (1446?-1507).

Iberville, Pierre le Moyne, Sieur d' (1661-1706). French-Canadian commander and explorer. Born at Montreal. Founded French colony in Louisiana, first at Biloxi, later at Mobile (1698). Died at Havana during preparations for an attack on the coast of North Carolina.

Ibis. A sacred bird of the ancient Egyptians, specially connected with the god Thoth, who in the guise of an ibis escaped the pursuit of Typhon. Its white plumage symbolized the light of the sun, and its black neck the shadow of the moon, its body a heart, and its legs a triangle. It was said that it drank only the purest of water, and that the bird was so fond of Egypt that it would pine to death if transported elsewhere.

ibn-. Arabic prefix meaning "son." Corresponding to Hebrew ben ("son"), Scotch and Gaelic Mac- ("son"), Irish O'- ("descendant of"), etc.

Ibrahim. The Abraham of the Koran.

Ibsen, Henrik (1828-1906). Norwegian dramatist, famous for his plays dealing with social problems and urging social reform, which were widely attacked as "immoral" at the time of their first production and which had an important influence on the drama of the 20th century. His works include Fru Inger at Osterrad, The Warriors at Helgoland (1858), and Kongsemnerne (1862), historical plays in a romantic vein; Love's Comedy (1863), BRAND (1866), and PEER GYNT (1867), poetic dramas; The Young Men's League (1869); Emperor and Galilean (1873); PILARS OF SOCIETY (1877); A DOLL'S HOUSE (1879); GHOSTS (1881); An Enemy of the People (1882); THE WILD DUCK (1884); ROSMERSHOLM (1886); THE LADY FROM THE SEA (1888); HEDDA GABLER (1890); THE MASTER BUILDER (1892); LITTLE EYOLF (1894); JOHN GABRIEL BORKMAN (1896), When We Dead Awaken (1899). Ibsen is considered one of the greatest and most important of modern dramatists. He particularly influenced George Bernard SHAW, and was admired by James JOYCE, whose FINNEGANS WAKE contains a number of allusions to the dramatist and his work. Most of Ibsen's problems are dead and buried. His art is alive as ever.

Ibycus. A Greek lyric poet of the 6th century B. C. According to legend, he was murdered with only a passing flock of cranes as witnesses. In the presence of a large crowd one of the murderers betrayed himself, when he saw a flock of cranes pass overhead, by exclaiming: "The cranes of Ibycus!" This phrase signifies hence "unsuspected witnesses to a crime." Cf. SCHILLER's famous ballad, Die Kranche des Ibykus.

Icarius. In Greek legend an Athenian who was taught the cultivation of the vine by Dionysus (Bacchus). He was slain by some peasants who had become intoxicated with wine he had given them, and who thought they had been poisoned. They buried the body under a tree; his daughter Erigone, searching for her father, was directed to the spot by the howling of his dog Maera, and when she discovered the body she hanged herself for grief. Icarus became the constellation Bootes, Erigone the constellation Virgo, and Maera the star Procyon, which rises in July, a little before the dog-star.

Icarus. In Greek mythology, son of DAE DALUS. He flew with his father from Crete; but the sun melted the wax with which his wings were fastened on, and he fell into the sea, hence called the Icarian.

The adjective Icarian is used to mean venturesome.

Icebound. A drama by Owen Davis (Am., 1923). The principal characters are the Jordans, hard, selfish New Englanders who can hardly wait until their sharp old mother dies to get her money. She has left it, instead, to Jane Crosby, a girl who has taken care of her for years, with a secret understanding that it is to be held in trust for the black sheep of the family, Ben Jordan, whom Jane loves. The play was awarded the Pulitzer Prize.

Iceland Fisherman, An (Pêcheur d'Islande). A novel by Pierre LOTI (1866). The Iceland fishermen live on the coast of Brittany, but make the voyage to Iceland every year during the fishing season. The hero, Sylvestre, takes part in the war between France and China and dies at Singapore on his way home. The charm of the book is considered to be its descriptive passages.

Ichabod. (1) A son of Phinehas, born just after the death of his father and grandfather (1 Sam. iv. 21). The name (Heb. I-kabhoth) means "where is the glory?" It is usually popularly translated by "the glory has departed."

(2) A poem by WHITTIER (1850). Whittier said he had in mind Daniel Webster, who had made a speech supporting the Fugitive Slave Law. Later, however, in The Lost Occasion, he paid a tribute to Webster's sincerity and genius. The following lines are from Ichabod:

"All else is gone; from those great eyes
The soul has fled;
When faith is lost, when honor dies
The man is dead."

ichthus. Greek for "fish," which in primitive times was used as a symbol of Christ because the word is formed of the initial letters of *I*esous, *C*hristos, *T*heou, *U*ios, *S*oter, "Jesus Christ, Son of God, Savior." This notarikon is found on many seals, rings, urns, and tombstones, belonging to the early times of Christianity, and was supposed to be a "charm" of mystical efficacy.

Ickes, Harold LeClair (1874-). American lawyer and politician. Staunch defender of the New Deal. U.S. Secretary of the Interior (1933-1946). Also administrator of public works (1933-1939); etc.

icon. In the Eastern Church, an image or representation of Christ, a saint, or an angel. Icons are sacred and honored with relative worship (kissing, incense, light, etc.) but not with supreme worship or the latria which is due to God alone. They range from elaborate works of art in the church buildings to humble enamel and niello objects carried by the peasantry.

Icon Basilike, see EIKON.

iconoclasts (Gr., image breakers). Reformers who rose in the Eastern Church in the 8th century, and were specially opposed to the employment of pictures, statues, emblems, and all visible representations of sacred objects. The crusade against these things began in 726 with the Emperor Leo III, the Isaurian, and continued for one hundred and twenty years under Constantine Copronymus, Leo the Armenian, Theophilus, and other Byzantine Emperors, who are known as the Iconoclast Emperors.

A person who criticizes and seriously questions ideas and attitudes previously accepted as correct, just, and valuable by convention and tradition rather than by independent examination and judgment, is also called an iconoclast.

Ida. The name of the titular heroine in Tennyson's poem, THE PRINCESS. There is also a Gilbert and Sullivan opera called Princess Ida (1884).

Idaean Mother. Cybele, who had a temple on Mount Ida, in Asia Minor.

Idalian. Pertaining to Idalium, an ancient town in Cyprus, or to Aphrodite to whom the place was consecrated.

idealism. A system of philosophy asserting reality to consist of ideas, or mind, or that only ideas are real. The historical founder of idealism was PLATO, and it was the dominant philosophical system in Europe during the romantic period (see ROMANTICISM), later being carried to the U.S. It was developed by the English philosophers LOCKE, BERKELEY, and HUME, and was brought into full flower by the Germans KANT, FICHTE, SCHELLING, and HEGEL. Later idealists were F. H. BRADLEY, Josiah ROYCE, Charles PEIRCE, and A. N. WHITEHEAD. See also SOLIPSISM; TRANSCENDENTALISM; and MATERIALISM.

In popular usage, idealism, being derived from "ideal" rather than from "idea," refers to a belief in the reality of perfection and the perfectibility of the human race; an emphasis on spiritual values, altruism, and the general good, rather than on worldly benefits for the individual; and a tendency to think in terms of what can or what should be, rather than of what is—as "an idealistic reformer." When used in this way, the term usually has a patronizing connotation.

Ides. In the Roman calendar the 15th of March, May, July, and October, and the 13th of all the other months; always eight days after the Nones.

beware the Ides of March. Said as a warning of impending and certain danger. The allusion is the warning received from a soothsayer by Julius Caesar before his assassination:

Furthermore, there was a certain soothsayer that had given Caesar warning long time afore, to take heed of the day of the Ides of March (which is the fifteenth of the month), for on that day he should be in great danger. That day being come, Caesar going into the Senate-house and speaking merrily unto the soothsayer, told him, "The Ides of March be come": "So be they," softly answered the soothsayer, "but yet are they not past."—Plutarch, Julius Caesar (North's trans.).

Idiot, The. A novel by Fyodor DOSTOYEVSKY (1868), depicting in Prince MYSHKIN, the epileptic hero, a man of gentle, childlike sincerity in contact with the world. St. Petersburg laughs at him and calls him "the Idiot." His fiancée, Aglaia, resents his magnanimity as lack of pride and is jealous of Nastasia, in whom she fears a dangerous rival. When evil passions break loose and the affair ends tragically for Nastasia, the Prince goes insane.

Idiot, The Inspired, see INSPIRED IDIOT.

Idle Bible, see BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Idler, The. A section of the English periodical The Universal Chronicle, or Weekly Gazette, to which the English Samuel JOHNSON contributed a series of essays, usually light in character, from 1758 to 1760.

Idomeneus. King of Crete, an ally of the Greeks at Troy. His adventures are related in the Iliad. After the city was burnt he made a vow to sacrifice whatever he first encountered, if the gods granted him a safe return to his kingdom. It was his own son that he first met. He offered him up to fulfil his vow, but a plague followed, and the King was banished from Crete as a murderer. See also IPHIGENIA; JEPHTHAH.

Iduna or Idun. In Scandinavian mythology, daughter of the dwarf Svald, and wife of Bragi. She was guardian of the golden apples which the gods tasted as often as they wished to renew their youth, and seems to personify the year between March and September, when the sun is north of the equator. Her apples indicate fruits generally. Loki carries her off to Giant-Land, when the Sun descends below the equator, and steals her apples. Iduna makes her escape in the form of a sparrow in March when the Sun rises again above the equator; and both gods and men rejoice in her return.

idyll. A pastoral poem, usually brief, stressing the picturesque phases of country life. The most celebrated idylls of antiquity are those of Theocritus and Vergil. The word is now used to denote such diverse forms of literature as prose tales of country life and Tennyson's poetic Idylls of the King (which have a picturesque but not a rustic setting), as well as modern pastorals.

Idylls of the King. A series of poems by TENNYSON (between 1859 and 1872), in twelve books. The titles are—THE COMING OF ARTHUR; GARETH AND LYNETTE; The Marriage of Geraint; GERAINT AND ENID; BALIN AND BALAN; MERLIN AND VIVIAN; LAUNCELOT AND ELAINE; The Holy Grail; PELLEAS AND ET-TARRE; The Last Tournament; GUINEVERE; The Passing of Arthur. See also ARTHUR; ARTHURIAN ROMANCE.

Ierne. An ancient name of Ireland or Eire. Cf. also Erin and Hibernia.

If Winter Comes. A novel by A. S. M. HUTCHINSON (Eng., 1921). The hero, Mark SABRE, a man of whimsical, affectionate, imaginative temperament, finds life with his unsympathetic wife Mabel a good deal of a trial. With a complete disregard for the conventions but from the best of motives he befriends a girl who is in trouble and is consequently accused of being the father of her illegitimate child. The real offender is the scapegrace son whom his business associate has always idolized; and when the boy's death at the front is reported, Mark knows that he can never bring himself to tell the truth and so clear himself. But in spite of numerous misfortunes, Mark's spring is not far behind; his wife divorces him, the woman he has always loved is suddenly free to marry, and all ends happily. The allusion of the title is to the last line of Shelley's Ode to the West

Wind, "If winter comes, can spring be far behind?"

Igerne or Igraine. Wife of GORLOIS, Duke of Tintagel, in Cornwall, and mother of King Arthur in Arthurian legend. Tennyson spells the name YGERNE.

Ignaro. Foster-father of ORGOGLIO in Spenser's Faerie Queene (I. viii). Whatever question Arthur asks, the old dotard answers that he cannot tell. Spenser says this old man walks one way and looks another, because ignorance is always "wrong-headed."

Ignatius, St., see under SAINT.

Ignatz. See KRAZY KAT.

ignis fatuus. The "will o' the wisp" or "friar's lanthorn" a flame-like phosphorescence flitting over marshy ground caused by the spontaneous combustion of gases from decaying vegetable matter, and deluding people who attempt to follow it; hence, any delusive aim or object, or some Utopian scheme that is utterly impracticable. The name means "a foolish fire"; it is also called "Jack o' Lantern," "spunkie," "walking fire," and "Fair Maid of Ireland."

Igraine, see IGERNE.

I have a Rendezvous With Death. A poem of World War I written by Alan SEEGER.

I.H.S. The Greek IHΣ, meaning IHΣous (Jesus), the long e (H) being mistaken for a capital H, and the dash perverted into a cross. The letters being thus obtained, St. Bernardine of Siena, in 1347, applied them to Jesus Hominum Salvator (Jesus, the Savior of men), another application being In hac salus (safety in this, i.e., the Cross).

Ike and His Friends. A humorous book by B. P. Shillaber (Am., 1879). Ike is the lively nephew of Mrs. PARTINGTON.

Ikhnaton or Akhnaton. Also Amenhotep IV. Egyptian king of the XVIIIth Dynasty; reigned ca. 1375-1358 B.C. Established worship of Aten, the sun-god, opposing priests of Amen, and hence sometimes referred to as the "religious revolutionary." His name signifies "splendor of the sun's disk."

Il Cortegiano. Popular title of Il Libro d'Oro by Baldassare CASTIGLIONE.

Ilf, Ilya Aronoldovich (1897-1937). Russian humorist. Collaborated with Eugene PETROV, much of their writing appearing in the Moscow satirical magazine Crocodile and in Pravda. The most noted humorist in post-revolutionary Russia, known as the "Soviet Mark Twain."

Iliad (Gr. Ilias, gen. Iliad-os, the land of Ilium). The tale of the siege of Troy, or Ilium, an epic poem for centuries attributed to HOMER, in twenty-four books. Menelaus, King of Sparta, receives as his guest Paris (a son of Priam, King of Troy), who runs away with Helen, wife of Menelaus. Menelaus induces the Greeks to lay siege to Troy to avenge the perfidy, and the siege lasts ten years. The poem begins in the tenth year with a quarrel between Agamemnon, King of Mycenae and commander-in-chief of the allied Greeks, and Achilles, the hero who retired from the army in ill temper. A brief synopsis follows:

Book I opens with a pestilence in the Grecian camp. The case is this: Chryses, the priest of Apollo, wishes to ransom his daughter, whom Agamemnon, the Greek commander-in-chief, has kept as a concubine, but Agamemnon refuses to give her up; so the priest prays to Apollo for vengeance, and the god sends a pestilence. A council is now called, Achilles upbraids Agamemnon as the cause of the divine wrath, and Agamemnon replies he will give up the priest's daughter, but will take instead Achilles' concubine. On hearing this, Achilles declares he will no longer fight, and accordingly retires to his tent and sulks there.

II. Jupiter, being induced to take the part of Achilles, now sends to Agamemnon a lying dream, which induces him to believe that he shall take the city at once; but in order to see how the soldiers are affected by the retirement of Achilles, the king calls them to a council of war, asks them if it will not be better to give up the siege and return home. He thinks the soldiers will shout "no" with one voice; but they rush to their ships and would set sail at once if they were not restrained by those privy to the plot.

III. The soldiers are then arrayed for battle. Paris proposes to decide the contest by single combat, and Menelaus accepts the challenge. Paris, being overthrown, is carried off by Venus, and Agamemnon demands that the Trojans shall give up Troy in fulfilment of the compact.

IV. While Agamemnon is speaking, Pandarus draws his bow at Menelaus and wounds him, and the battle becomes general.

V. Pandarus, who had violated the truce, is killed by Diomed.

VI. Hector, the general of the Trojan armies, recommends that the Trojan women in a body supplicate the gods to pardon the sin of Pandarus, and in the meantime he and Paris make a sally from the city gate.

VII. Hector fights with Ajax in single combat, but the combatants are parted by the heralds, who declare it a drawn battle; so they exchange gifts and return to their respective tents.

VIII. The Grecian host, discomfited, retreats; and Hector prepares to assault the enemy's camp.

IX. A deputation is sent to Achilles, but the sulky hero remains obdurate.

X. A night attack is made on the Trojans by Diomed and Ulysses;

XI. And the three Grecian chiefs (Agamemnon, Diomed, and Ulysses) are all wounded.

XII. The Trojans force the gates of the Grecian ramparts.

XIII. A tremendous battle ensues, in which many on both sides are slain.

XIV. While Jupiter is asleep, Neptune interferes in the quarrel in behalf of the Greeks;

XV. But Jupiter rebukes him, and Apollo, taking the side of the Trojans, puts the Greeks to a complete rout. The Trojans, exulting in their success, prepare to set fire to the Grecian camp.

XVI. In this extremity, Patroclus arrays himself in Achilles' armor, and leads the Myrmidons to the fight; but he is slain by Hector.

XVII. Achilles is told of the death of his friend;

XVIII. Resolves to return to the battle;

XIX. And is reconciled to Agamemnon.

XX. A general battle ensues, in which the gods take part.

XXI. The battle rages with great fury, the slaughter is frightful; but the Trojans are routed and retreat into their town, and close the gates.

XXII. Achilles slays Hector before he is able to enter the gates, and the battle is at an end. Nothing now remains but XXIII. To burn the body of Patroclus, and celebrate the funeral games.

XXIV. Old Priam, going to the tent of Achilles, craves the body of his son Hector; Achilles gives it up, and the poem concludes with the funeral rites of the Trojan hero.

an Iliad of woes. A number of evils falling one after another; there is scarce a calamity in the whole catalogue of human ills that finds not mention in the Iliad.

Demosthenes used the phrase (Ilias kakon), and it was adopted by Cicero (Ilias malorum) in his Ad Atticum, viii, 11.

the French Iliad. The Romance of the Rose (see under ROSE) has been so called. Similarly, the Nibelungenlied and the Lusiad have been called respectively the German and Portuguese Iliad.

Illidge, Frank. In Aldous Huxley's POINT COUNTER POINT, laboratory assistant to Lord Edward TANTAMOUNT, an ugly little man with red hair who is a Communist and is bitterly conscious of his lower-class origin, hating the rich who patronize him or ignore him in Lord Edward's house.

Illingworth, Lord. A leading character in Oscar Wilde's WOMAN OF NO IMPORTANCE.

Illuminated Doctor, see under DOCTOR.

Ilmarinen. In the Finnish epic poem KALEVALA, a brother of Wainamoinen, the hero. He was a smith and made the heavens of blue steel. One of his wives was the product of his own handicraft, made of gold and silver and brought to life, but she was so cold that whatever came near her was likely to be frozen.

Il Penseroso. A poem by John MILTON, written in 1632. It celebrates the goddess of melancholy, contemplation, solitude, and study—the opposite of its companion poem L'ALLEGRO. The title was thought by the author to mean "The Meditative One," but it has been pointed out that the Italian is incorrect.

Isan the Monk or Monte Isan. In a German medieval epic called The Rose Garden at Worms, a boisterous friar who brings home fifty-two garlands from his successful expedition against Kriemhild's Rosegarten and presses these same thorny garlands into the tender flesh of his fellow friars until they consent to pray to Heaven for the forgiveness of his sins.

imagination. In romantic aesthetic theory, the creative function of the intellect, by which separate elements of experience are synthesized in a new whole differing from and transcending any of its original parts. S. T. COLERIDGE was a leading proponent of the theory of imagination, and his two famous poems, The Rime of the Ancient Mariner and Kubla Khan, are regarded as excellent examples of the working of imagination. See FANCY. For a fuller discussion, consult Coleridge's Biographia Literaria and Coleridge on Imagination, by I. A. Richards.

imagism. A movement in poetry (ca. 1909-1917), especially flourishing in the U.S. and England, which advocated the use of FREE VERSE, new rhythmic effects, colloquial language, a greater freedom than heretofore in the choice of subject-matter, and the creation of precise, concentrated, sharply delineated images to evoke a unified impression, in which the emotion or association represented and the object in itself are balanced equally in importance. Important single influences on the movement were T. E. HULME and Ezra POUND, the latter especially favoring Greek and Roman classic poetry and the poetry of China, Japan, and the French symbolists (see SYMBOLISM) as models. POUND and later Amy LOWELL were leaders of the imagist movement in America, from time to time compiling anthologies, each of which was entitled Some Imagist Poets, of the work of their associates. H. D. and John Gould FLETCHER were other outstanding American imagists; D. H. LAWRENCE, F. S. FLINT and Richard ALDINGTON were prominent in the English movement. See also KAHN, GUSTAVE; OBJECTIVISM.

Imam, see RULERS, TITLES OF.

Imhotep. In Egyptian mythology, the god of learning, protector of scribes. Corresponding to, and identified by the Greeks with their Aesculapius.

Imitation of Christ, The. A famous devotional book written originally in Latin (1417-1421) and attributed to Thomas à Kempis or the Abbé Gerson.

Imlac. In Samuel Johnson's RASSELAS (1759) the son of a rich merchant of Goiama, near the mouth of the Nile. Imlac is a great traveler and a poet, who accompanies Rasselas in his rambles and returns with him to the HAPPY VALLEY.

Immaculate Conception. In the Roman Catholic Church, the dogma that the Virgin Mary "in the first instant of her conception, by a singular privilege and grace granted by God, was preserved free from all stain of original sin." The controversy regarding the Immaculate Conception dates from the twelfth century. It was formally proclaimed by Pope Pius IX (1854) in the bull Ineffabilis Deus.

Immanuel. From Hebrew. Literally, "God with us"; an appellation of Christ, also used as a proper name.

Immelmann, Max (1890-1916). German aviator in the first World War who developed the maneuver known as the "Immelmann turn." It is a half loop combined with a half roll and is also known as "reverse turn."

Immoralist, The (L'Immoraliste). A novel by André GIDE (1902), based on details of the author's own biography. The hero goes with his wife to North Africa to recover from an attack of tuberculosis, and while there discovers that his psychological nature is not suited to normal marriage. His wife contracts tuberculosis herself while nursing him and dies, whereupon he goes to live in the native quarter to free himself from the moral laws and conventions of his upbringing and to find satisfaction according to the impulses of his individual psychology.

the Immortal. Yǒng-Tching (1723-1736), third of the Manchu dynasty of China, assumed the title.

the Immortal Tinker. John Bunyan (1628-1688) a tinker by trade.

the Immortals. The forty members of the French Academy; also, the name given to a body of 10,000 foot-soldiers, which constituted the bodyguard of the ancient Persian kings, and to other highly trained troops.

the Immortal Four of Italy. Dante (1265-1321), Petrarch (1304-1374), Ariosto (1474-1533), and Tasso (1544-1595).

the Immortal Three. Homer, Dante and Milton.

Imogen. (1) The heroine of Shakespeare's CYMBELINE.

(2) Imogen or Imogene is the name of the fair lady in the ballad, ALONZO THE BRAVE AND THE FAIR IMOGEN.

Imoinda. In Mrs. Aphra Behn's novel OROONOKO and Sutherland's tragedy founded upon it, the wife of Oroonoko.

imperial. A kind of beard consisting of a pointed tuft of hair on chin and lower lip. It got its name from the French emperor, Napoleon III.

imperialism. Originally the system of government of an emperor or empire. Hence the tendency of a great power to extend its sovereignty for selfish reasons over peoples and regions outside its natural domain.

Imperial Palace. A novel by Arnold BENNETT (1930), dealing with life in a 20th-century "luxury" hotel.

Importance of Being Earnest, The. A well-known comedy by Oscar WILDE, produced in 1899. It is noted for its witty lines, its clever situations, and its satire on the British nobility and clergy. It deals with the aspirations of John Worthing to the hand of Gwendolen Fairfax, daughter of Lady Bracknell, and the objections raised to the proposed marriage because he was found in a hand-bag in Victoria Station and has no information as to who his parents were. Eventually matters are straightened out by the revelation that Worthing is really the son of Lady Bracknell's brother, was left in the hand-bag by the mistake of an absent-minded governess, and is actually named Ernest John Moncrieff, brother to his friend Algernon Moncrieff. He is particularly delighted to discover that his name is Ernest, since it is the one he has been using, in the capacity of guardian to Cecily Cardew, Algernon's sweetheart, as the name of a younger brother whom he has had to help out of "scrapes."

impressionism. A movement in painting, music, and literature in the latter half of the 19th century, originating in France, the aim of which was to portray the effects, or "impressions," of experience upon the consciousness of the artist or an observer with whom he identifies himself, rather than the objective characteristics of things and events.

In painting, the work of the impressionist school aroused a great deal of controversy and criticism when it was first exhibited. Its chief subjects were landscapes, and outdoor or semi-outdoor scenes, viewed at varying times of the day, with emphasis on effects of light and color and executed in a hasty, "sketchy" technique intended to bring out the pattern of the whole, as seen by the painter at a particular moment, rather than details and a formal composition. Leading impressionist painters were Sisley, Pissarro, MONET, Degas, and RENOIR. The American painters Mary Cassatt and Whistler were influenced by and associated with the impressionist school. See also POST-IMPRESSIONISM.

In music, impressionism appeared in orchestral pieces which lacked the strict formal organization of the symphony, concerto, and the like, and were intended to evoke a mood in the listener, with associations beyond the basic auditory content of the music. They were marked by great delicacy and striking chromatic effects. Debussy and Ravel were the leading musical impressionists, and Charles Tomlinson Griffes (1884-1920) was an outstanding American representative of the school. Debussy was influenced by the literary school of Symbolism, and his L'Après-midi d'un Faune is an outstanding example of impressionism in music.

In poetry and the novel, impressionism has a more general application, covering Symbolism, Imagism, and related movements, and fiction making use of the Stream-of-Consciousness technique, as well as other writing which may not fit into any formal category. Rimbaud, Verlaine, Mallarmé, G. M. Hopkins, Carl Sandburg, Amy Lowell, Ezra Pound, T. S. Eliot, Conrad Aiken, Wallace Stevens, Marianne Moore, W. C. Williams, James Joyce, Virginia Woolf, John Dos Passos, and Gertrude Stein may be said to be literary impressionists. See also EXPRESSIONISM.

Impressions of Theophrastus Such, The. A book of essays (1878) by George Eliot.

Inauguration Day. The day on which the President of the United States is inaugurated. Previous to 1934, it was the 4th of March in every year following a year divisible by four. Through the twentieth amendment, the Lame-duck amendment, the date was changed to January 20.

Inca. A member of an ancient tribe of Peruvian Indians. Specifically, a king or royal prince of the ancient Peruvians. The empire of the Incas was founded by Manco Capac about the middle of the 13th century. See RULERS.

The Inca was a war-chief, elected by the Council to carry out its decision.—Brinton, The American Race (South American Tribes), pt. I, ch. II, p. 211.

Inchcape Rock, The. A ballad by Southey concerning a dangerous point east of the Firth of Tay, twelve miles from all land, in the German Sea. Here a warning bell was floated on a buoy by the forethought of an abbot of Aberbrothok. Southey says that Ralph the Rover, in a mischievous freak, cut the bell from the buoy, and it fell into the depths; but on his return voyage his boat ran on the rock, and Ralph was drowned.

Incident of the French Camp. A poem about Napoleon by Robert Browning.

Incidents in the Life of My Uncle Arly. A poem by Edward Lear, parodying Wordsworth's Resolution and Independence. See also White Knight's Ballad, The.

incunabula (Lat.). Literally, a cradle. Works of art or industry of the infant stages in the development of a given field. In the history of bookmaking, books printed before 1500. They are sometimes called cradle books or fifteneers. In this sense the singular "incunabulum" can be used.

Independence Hall. A building on Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, where the Declaration of Independence was adopted (July 4, 1776) and read to the people on Independence Square. Independence Hall is now an historical museum.

Index, The. The Roman Index contains both the Index Librorum Prohibitorum and the Index Expurgatorius. The former contains a list of such books as are absolutely forbidden to be read by faithful Catholics. The latter contains such books as are forbidden till certain parts are omitted or amended. The lists are made out by a board of cardinals called the Congregation of the Index.

Indian.

Indian file. One after the other, singly. The American Indians, when they go on an expedition, march one by one. The one behind carefully steps in the footprints of the one before, and the last man of the file is supposed to obliterate the footprints. Thus, neither the track nor the number of invaders can be traced.

Indian gift. A gift made with the expectation of its being returned or another made in its place.

Indian summer. The autumnal summer, occurring as a rule in the early part of October. It is often the finest and mildest part of the whole year, especially in North America.

Indians. In American baseball parlance, the Cleveland Americans. See Baseball Teams.

Indiana. A novel by George Sand (1832), the first to bring her fame. Its heroine, Indiana, is a Creole, who does not love her peevish old husband, Colonel Delmare, but responds to the advances of Raymonde de Ramière, a young and fascinating lover. With the aid of an English cousin, Sir Ralph Brown, she escapes to join Raymonde, but he has married another. She and Sir Ralph leap into a waterfall, on a desperate impulse, but by some miracle are saved.

Indian Summer. A novel by W. D. Howells (1885). In the course of his engagement to the romantic young Imogene Grahame, Theodore Colville, an American journalist of forty living in Florence, becomes acutely conscious that his youth has gone. The pair are saved from each other by Imogene's chaperon, Mrs. Bower, a widow of Colville's own age who consoles him by marrying him herself. Howells considered Indian Summer his best book.

One of the novels of Galsworthy's FORSYTH SAGA is entitled The Indian Summer of a Forsythe.

Indigitamenta. In the ancient Roman religion, books containing lists of deities with indications as to how and when they had to be invoked.

indirect discourse. See under DIRECT DISCOURSE.

Indo-China, French. In World War II, Japanese troops entered the strategic region of French Indo-China with weak acquiescence of the Vichy Government in the summer of 1940. The upshot of this was the envelopment of Southeast Asia, the attack on Pearl Harbor, the fall of Hongkong, Singapore, etc., in 1941.

Indra. One of the chief deities of Hindu mythology, god of heaven and ruler over thunder, lightning and storm.

In Dubious Battle. A novel by John STEINBECK, published in 1936, dealing with labor organization among migrant fruit-pickers in California. Strikes, violence by the local vigilantes, and the murder of Jim Nolan, a young Communist leader of the workers, are featured. Mac, the leading character, is presented as a veteran Communist organizer who allows nothing to interfere with his service to his cause, not even the death of Jim, his friend.

indulgence. In the Roman Catholic Church, the entire or partial remission of punishment due to sin either in this world or in Purgatory. In the Middle Ages indulgences were of high commercial value, and it was the sale of them that first roused the ire of Luther and prepared the way for the Reformation.

the Declaration of Indulgence. The proclamation of James II in 1687 which annulled religious tests and the penal laws against Roman Catholics and Dissenters. The refusal of certain ecclesiastics to read this in their churches led to the trial of the SEVEN BISHOPS.

in extremis (Lat.). At the very point of death; in articulo mortis.

Inez. One of the leading characters in Meyerbeer's opera L'AFRICAIN.

Inez, Donna. In Byron's DON JUAN, mother of Don Juan. She trains her son according to prescribed rules with the strictest propriety, and designs to make him a model of all virtues. Her husband is Don José, whom she worries to death by her prudery and want of sympathy. Donna Inez is a "blue stocking," learned in all the sciences, her favorite one being "the mathematical."

Infanta. Any princess of the blood royal, except an heiress of the crown, was so called in Spain and Portugal.

Infante. All the sons of the sovereigns of Spain bore this title, as did those of Portugal, except the crown prince, who in Spain was called the Prince of the Asturias.

Infant Phenomenon. The stage name of eight-year-old Ivinetta Crummles in Dickens' NICHOLAS NICKLEBY.

in fieri (Lat. fieri, "to become, to be done, made, etc.). In the course of accomplishment; on the way.

inflation. Strictly speaking, an undue increase or disproportionate abundance of money and credit in relation to actual business needs. It can be caused, on the one hand, by gold discoveries, unrestrained emission of paper money, and overexpansion of credit, and on the other, by a sudden scarcity of available goods. Loosely, the term is applied to all the economic ills resulting from the discrepancy described. These include a marked rise of price levels.

inflection. Literally, bending. In music, modulation of the voice or change in pitch or tone. In grammar, the change of forms in accordance with the function of words in a sentence pattern. As "me" for "I" and "sees" for "see" in "He sees me."

in forma pauperis (Lat.). In the character of a pauper. Persons without money or the means of obtaining it are allowed to sue in the courts in forma pauperis, when fees are remitted and the suitor is supplied gratis with the necessary legal advice, counsel, etc.

Information Please. A popular American radio program of the late 1930's and the 1940's, one of the first of the many "quiz programs" of the time and the most literate. It consists of questions on literature, history, music, current events, the theater, motion pictures, and the like, which are sent in by the radio audience and which are to be answered by a "board of experts" among whom are journalists, novelists, musicians, actors and actresses, government officials, and other public figures.

infra-red, ultraviolet. Said of rays "beneath red" and "beyond violet" in the spectrum. They are invisible. Infra-red rays are heat-producing.

Infusoria. A term introduced by the Danish naturalist Otto Frederik Müller (1730-1784) and applied originally to all the microscopic organisms which developed (seemingly from nothing) in an infusion of hay and the like. In modern scientific usage the term is restricted in its application to the highest class of Protozoa.

Inge, William Ralph (1860-). Anglican prelate. Dean of St. Paul's, London (1911-1934), occasionally dubbed "the gloomy Dean." Many books on Christianity.

Ingebjorg. In the ancient LAXDALE SAGA, sister of King Olaf, at whose court KJARTAN stays for awhile. On his departure for his home in Iceland, Ingebjorg gives Kjartan an elaborate coif as a gift for GUDRUN.

Ingelow, Jean (1820-1897). English poet and novelist. Famous for the poem High Tide on the Coast of Lincolnshire.

Ingenu, The (L'Ingénu). A satiric romance by VOLTAIRE (1767) in which the titular hero, a Canadian half-breed, representing all the sturdy, simple virtues of "nature" comes to live with his European relatives, who are incurably tainted with the pettiness and vice of "civilization."

ingenuous. Free from equivocation or dissimulation; naïve, guileless. Literally, "free-born, noble, etc." Still occasionally, though less frequently than in the past, confused with ingenious, which means literally "possessed of genius."

Inger. The heroine of Hamsun's GROWTH OF THE SOIL.

Ingersoll, Ralph (1900-). American journalist. Began as a mining engineer. Was vice-president and general manager of Time, Inc., and sponsored radio and cinema productions of "The March of Time" (1935-1936). Editor, PM (which see) (1940-1946). Enlisted as private, U.S. Army (1942). Ended as a Lieutenant Colonel attached to General Bradley's staff in the 12th Army Group. He has written the scathing book (except toward Generals Devers and Bradley) TOP SECRET (1946) about the inside history of World War II. Also author of The Battle is the Pay-Off (1943) and a satirical novel, The Great Ones (1947).

Ingersoll, Robert Green (1833-1899). American lawyer, orator of the Republican Party, and lecturer, best known for his defense of free-thinking in matters of religion, which won him the sobriquet of "the Great Agnostic." He wrote numerous lectures criticizing the Bible and theology and had a wide influence during his time.

Ingmars, the. A Swedish family whose struggles and adventures are narrated in the short stories that comprise Selma Lagerlöf's JERUSALEM.

Ingoldsby Legends, The. A series of legendary tales in prose and verse, supposed to have been found in the family chest of the Ingoldsby family, and told by Thomas Ingoldsby, the assumed name of the Rev. Richard Harris Barham (1788-1845). THE JACK-DAW OF RHEIMS is especially celebrated.

Iniquity, The. In old English mystery and morality plays, the same as the Vice.

Injun Joe. A villainous character in Tom SAWYER by Mark TWAIN.

Inkle and Yarico. Hero and heroine of a story by Sir Richard STEELE, in the Spectator (No. 11). Inkle is a young Englishman who is lost in the Spanish main. He falls in love with Yarico, an Indian maiden, with whom he consorts; but no sooner does a vessel arrive to take him to Barbadoes than he sells Yarico as a slave. Steele found the tale in Ligon's History of Barbadoes (1657). It was later worked into a musical drama by George Colman called Inkle and Yarico.

in medias res (Lat.). In the middle of the subject. In novels and epic poetry, the author generally begins in medias res, and explains the preceding events as the tale unfolds.

In Memoriam (Lat., "in memory of"). A long poem written between the years 1833 and 1850 by TENNYSON, in memory of his friend Arthur H. HALLAM, who died in 1833. It is considered one of the greatest of English elegies.

Innamorato, Orlando, see ORLANDO.

inner light. Spiritual illumination. Specifically, in Quaker doctrine, a divine presence in the soul of every man, the light of Christ which gives moral guidance, and religious and spiritual assurance to all who are willing to receive it.

Inner Temple and Middle Temple. Two groups of buildings on the site of a monastic establishment of the Knights Templars in London, wrecked by Nazi bombs in World War II. The Inner Temple was so called because it was within the precincts of the City. The Middle Temple was situated between the Inner and Outer Temple. The Inner and Middle Temple were occupied by two INNS OF COURT. The Outer Temple was converted into the Exeter Buildings and its name has gone out of use.

Innes, Evelyn, see EVELYN INNES.

Inness, George (1825-1894). American landscape painter. Examples of his work are found in the Chicago Art Institute and the New York Metropolitan Museum of Art. His canvases are noted for their sensitive reproduction of the moods of nature.

Innisfail. Literally, island of destiny. A poetical name for Ireland.

Innocence Abroad. A book of literary biographies by Emily Clark (1931).

Innocents, Massacre of the. The slaughter of the male children of Bethlehem "from two years old and under," when Jesus was born (Matt. ii. 16). This was done at the command of Herod the Great in order to cut off "the babe" who was destined to become "King of the Jews." The Feast of the Holy Innocents commemorating this event is December 28.

In British parliamentary phraseology, the phrase denotes the withdrawal at the close of a session of the bills which time has not rendered it possible to consider and pass.

Innocents Abroad, The. A rollicking burlesque of European travel by Mark Twain (1869), satirizing the gullible American traveler who uses his guide book as a Bible and regards the entire Old World with awe and ecstasy.

Inns of Court. The four voluntary societies which have the exclusive right of calling to the English Bar. They are all in London, and are the Inner Temple, the Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn. Each is governed by a board of benchers.

Ino. In Greek myth, the daughter of Cadmus. She became the sea goddess LEUCOTHEA.

In Ole Virginia. A volume of Southern Negro dialect stories by Thomas Nelson Page (1887). It contains Marse Chan and MEH LADY among others.

in petto. In the breast; secretly. The expression is originally the Italian adaptation of Latin in pectore (same meaning) as applied to cardinals whose appointment by the pope has not been promulgated.

Inquisition. A court commonly called the Holy Office, instituted to inquire into offenses against the Roman Catholic religion, and fully established by Gregory IX in 1235. Torture, as a means of extracting recantations or evidence, was first authorized by Innocent IV in 1252, and those found guilty were handed over to the secular arm to be dealt with according to the secular laws of the land. The Inquisition was only once introduced into England (viz., at the trials of the Templars, who were suppressed in 1308); it was most active in southern Europe, particularly in Spain, where it flourished from 1237 to 1820. It was suppressed in France in 1772.

Insarov, Demetri. The hero of Turgenev's On the Eve, a young Bulgarian who has resolved to free his country from the Turks. The heroine is Elena Strashov.

Inside of the Cup, The. A novel by Winston Churchill (1913) dealing with 20th-century religious problems. The hero is John Hodder, the young minister of a wealthy church located in a slum district. The allusion of the title is to the Biblical text "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye cleanse the outside of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full from extortion and excess."

Inspired Idiot. OLIVER GOLDSMITH was so called by Walpole.

Institute of France (Fr. Institut de France). A national French society, established in 1795 by the Republican Convention "to advance the sciences and arts of research . . . and to prosecute those scientific and literary labors which shall have for their end general utility and the glory of the republic." It is a roof organization and embraces these five academies: L'Académie française, L'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, L'Académie des Sciences, L'Académie des Beaux Arts, and L'Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques.

Institutes of the Christian Religion (Institution Chrétienne). The principal work of John CALVIN, published in Latin in 1536 and French in 1541. It is a statement of the essential tenets of CALVINISM, and was widely used during the Puritan period.

insulin. A specific for diabetes (discovered in 1923). Its active principle is a hormone found in the pancreas, specifically in the so-called islands of Langerhans (Lat. insula, "island"; hence insulin). Marketed as a solution made from the pancreas of sheep and oxen.

Insull, Samuel (1859-1938). Public-utility magnate born in London. Overexpansion caused three of his largest American companies to go into receivership. After his indictment he fled from arrest for two years, but was finally tried and acquitted.

interior monologue. A narrative technique widely used in 20th-century fiction, by which action and external event are presented indirectly, through the mental soliloquy of one or more characters, composed of sense impressions, thoughts, memories, and associations aroused by external occurrences but never spoken aloud. It was first used by Edouard Dujardin in his We'll to the Woods No More (Les Lauriers sont coupés) and is best exemplified in The Waves by Virginia Woolf. In general, the interior monologue is identical with the STREAM-OF-CONSCIOUSNESS, although some critics prefer to use both terms, in order to distinguish the more formalized soliloquies, controlled and "edited" in harmony with the desired mood and the situation in question, of Mrs. Woolf and other writers like her, from the more chaotic and realistic flow of thought in the characters of James JOYCE.

interlinear. Between the lines. Said also of texts with an interlinear translation into another language. James Hamilton (1769-1829), a British language teacher, worked with an interlinear method which was widely acclaimed in the U.S. and Great Britain.

interlude. A form of dramatic entertainment originating during the reign of Henry VIII and popular at the Tudor court. The exact nature of an interlude is not known, but it is believed to have been a brief skit between the courses of a long banquet, or an oral dialogue. Court interludes, of which John HEYWOOD was the outstanding author, were usually lively and realistic and devoted chiefly to entertainment. There were also educational interludes, didactic and teaching an edifying moral, usually written in Latin, with type characters and situations, for use in public schools such as Eton. The interlude is considered to be a transitional form between the miracle plays and MORALITY PLAYS of the Middle Ages and fully developed Elizabethan drama.

international style, see FUNCTIONALISM.

Interpreter, Mr. The Holy Spirit personified, in Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS. He is lord of a house a little way beyond the Wicket Gate. Here CHRISTIAN is kindly entertained and shown many wonderful sights of an allegorical character. Christiana and her party also stop here later.

Intimations of Immortality. Current abridged title of Intimations of Immortality from Recollections of Early Childhood, an ode (1807) by WORDSWORTH.

In Time to Come. A play about Woodrow WILSON by Howard Koch and John Huston (1942), the foundation of the moving picture Woodrow Wilson.

introvert. In psychological parlance, one whose interest is directed inward, to the inner life of thought or fancy. See also the opposite, EXTROVERT; JUNG, CARL GUSTAV.

inverted commas. Quotation marks. Originally a printers' expression, for in composition single and double English quotation marks could actually be produced by inverting the type of one or two commas.

Invictus (Lat., "unconquered"). The title of a well-known poem, written in a tuberculosis hospital, by HENLEY. Its last lines read:

It matters not how strait the gate
How charged with punishment the scroll,
I am the master of my fate,
I am the captain of my soul.

Invincible Doctor, see under DOCTOR.

Invincibles, the Irish. An Irish secret society founded in Dublin in 1881 with the object of doing away with the English "tyranny" and killing the "tyrants." Members of this society were responsible for the Phoenix Park murders in 1882.

Invisible Empire. See under KU KLUX KLAN.

Io. In classic myth, the beautiful daughter of Inachus, king of Argos. Jupiter, who had been flirting with her, changed her into a heifer to conceal her from Juno. Argus, who had a hundred eyes, was charged by Juno to watch the heifer. Mercury, at Jupiter's request, killed Argus, and Juno sent a gadfly to chase the heifer all over the world. On the Nile Io finally recovered her shape and was returned to her family after Jupiter had promised not to pay her any more attentions. Io was by Jupiter the mother of Epaphus, the ancestor of Aegyptus, Damaus, Cepheus, and Phineus. In the allegorical interpretation of mythology, Io is the moon.

Iolcos. A city in Thessaly, the modern Volo, point of embarkation of the ARGONAUTS.

Ion. In classic myth, the ancestor of the Ionians or Athenian Greeks, a son of Apollo and Creusa and grandson of Helen of Troy. Euripides made him the subject of a drama, Ion (423 B.C.). He is brought up in the temple at Delphi, much like the Hebrew Samuel. The plot turns on the efforts of Creusa to bring about his death, not knowing that he is her own son.

Thomas M. Talfourd was the author of a tragedy Ion (1835), dealing with another Ion, a prince of Argos who sacrifices himself to the gods to end a pestilence.

Iona or Icolmkill. A small northern island near Scotland, where St. Columba founded a missionary monastery (563 A.D.).

Ione. The heroine of Bulwer Lytton's LAST DAYS OF POMPEII.

Ionic Order. In architecture, one of the three Greek ORDERS, distinguished by the spiral volutes of its capitals.

IOU, i.e., "I owe you." The memorandum of a debt given by the borrower to the lender. It requires no stamp unless it specifies a day of payment, when it becomes a bill, and must be stamped.

Iphigenia. In classic legend, the daughter of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra. One account says that her father, having offended Artemis by killing her favorite stag, vowed to sacrifice to the angry goddess the most beautiful thing that came into his possession in the next twelve months; this was an infant daughter. The father deferred the sacrifice till the fleet of the combined Greeks that was proceeding to Troy reached Aulis and Iphigenia had grown to womanhood. Then Calchas told him that the fleet would be wind-bound till he had fulfilled his vow; accordingly the king prepared to sacrifice his daughter, but Artemis at the last moment snatched her from the altar and carried her to heaven, substituting a hind in her place. Euripides, Aeschylus, and Sophocles all wrote tragedies on Iphigenia. Racine's tragedy Iphigénie (Fr., 1674) is considered one of his best. GOETHE also has a tragic drama Iphigenie auf Tauris (1787). Gluck's two operas, Iphigenia in Aulis (1777) and Iphigenia in Tauris (1779) deal with the legend.

The similarity of this legend to the Scripture stories of Jephthah's vow, and Abraham's offering of his son Isaac, is noticeable. See also IDOMENEUS.

Ippolito, Don. A Venetian priest who plays a leading rôle in Howells' FOREGONE CONCLUSION.

I.Q. Intelligence Quotient, a term used in connection with the mental tests of 20th-century educational psychology. See SIMON BINET TESTS.

Iras. In Shakespeare's ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA and Dryden's ALL FOR LOVE, a female attendant on Cleopatra. When Cleopatra has arrayed herself with robe and crown, prior to applying the asps, she says to her two female attendants, "Come, take the last warmth of my lips. Farewell, kind Charmian! Iras, farewell!" When she has kissed them, Iras falls down dead, either brokenhearted, or else because she has already applied an asp to her arm, as Charmian did a little later.

Ireland, William Henry (1777-1835). English forger of Shakespearean manuscripts and documents. His blank verse play, "Vortigern and Rowena, by William Shakspeare," was a complete failure on the stage (1796) and led to the exposure of the fraud. Author of An Authentic Account of the Shaksperian MSS.

Irena. In Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE (Bk. v), the personification of Ireland whose inheritance was withheld by the tyrant GRANTORTO. Sir Artegal (Justice) is sent by the Faërie Queene to succor the distressed lady, and, Grantorto being slain, she is restored to her throne and reigns in peace.

Irene. (1) The beautiful dead heroine of a poem by Poe which appeared under that title in 1831 but was later republished as The Sleeper.

(2) The heroine of Turgenev's novel SMOKE.

Ireson, Floyd. A New England skipper in Whittier's ballad, Skipper Ireson's Ride (1860). According to tradition, he was tarred and feathered by the women of Marblehead for refusing to go to the rescue of a leaking ship. There was a real Skipper Ireson, but according to Samuel Roads' History and Traditions of Marblehead, the helpless skipper received unjust blame for the actions of a stubborn and cowardly crew. Whittier wrote to Roads, "I have no doubt that thy version of Skipper Ireson is the correct one."

Ireton, Henry (1611-1651). English Parliamentary cavalry leader. Married Oliver Cromwell's daughter Bridget. Signed the warrant for the execution of King Charles I.

Iris. Goddess of the rainbow, or the rainbow itself. In classic mythology, she is called the messenger of the gods when they intended discord, and the rainbow is the bridge or road let down from heaven for her accommodation. When the gods meant peace they sent Mercury.

Irish.

Irish Agitator. Daniel O'Connell (1775-1847).

Irish apricots. Potatoes.

Irish wedding. When a person has a black eye we sometimes say to him, "You have been to an Irish wedding."

Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann). Constituted as a self-governing dominion within the British Empire (1922).

Irish Renaissance. Term applied to the movement at the end of the 19th century in Ireland to arouse a consciousness of cultural unity and nationality among the Irish people by reviving the literature of the Celtic past and portraying contemporary life and manners. Among the leaders of this movement were: A. E., painting and poetry; Edward MARYN (1859-1923), drama and liturgical music; George MOORE, novels and poetry; W. B. YEATS, poetry and drama; Lady Augusta GREGORY, plays and studies and adaptations of traditional legends; and John M. SYNGE, drama. An important step in the accomplishment of the movement's objectives was the establishment of the Abbey Theater in Dublin for the presentation of plays on Irish life and legend; Yeats, Synge, and Lady Gregory were outstanding figures in the promotion of the theater's plans. A number of the plays written for and produced by the Abbey Theater are recognized by critics as among the greatest of the 20th century, and had an important influence on English and American drama. Cf. Mary Colum's Life and the Dream (1947).

Iroldo. In Boiardo's Orlando Innamorato, the friend of PRASILDO.

the Iron Duke. The Duke of Wellington (1769–1852).

the Iron Emperor. Nicholas I of Russia (1796–1855).

Iron, Ralph, see SCHREINER, OLIVE.

Iron Crown. The old crown of the Lombard Kings indicating sovereignty over Italy. It was actually made of gold but contained a circlet of iron forged, according to tradition, from a nail in the cross of Christ.

Iron Hand, Tonty of the. A co-explorer of LA SALLE, the Italian Henry de Tonti or Tonty (1650–1704), who had one iron hand fixed to an amputation.

Iron Maiden of Nuremberg. A famous instrument of torture, formerly exhibited in the museum of the castle at Nuremberg, consisting of a metal frame in the shape of a human body with spikes inside and a hinged opening to admit the victim. There is no record of its ever having been in use.

Iron Mask. See under MAN.

Ironquill. Pseudonym of Eugene Fitch WARE.

Ironsides. The soldiers that served under Cromwell were so called, especially after the battle of Marston Moor, where they displayed an iron resolution. The name had first been applied only to a special regiment of stalwarts.

Old Ironsides, see under OLD.

Iron Woman, The. A novel by Margaret DELAND (1911), a sequel to The Awakening of Helena Richie. The "Iron Woman" is Sarah Maitland, a widow who finds her chief satisfaction in managing the Maitland Iron Works in a competent, masculine fashion. The impulsive marriage of her son Blair to Elizabeth Ferguson while Elizabeth is still engaged to David Richie, Helena's adopted son, brings on bitter feelings between Blair and his mother, and she disipherits him. On his mother's death a check which Mrs. Maitland had intended young Dr. Richie to use for his hospital, goes to Blair, and when Elizabeth learns the truth and fails to persuade him to give it up, she decides to run away with David, whom she has always loved. At this juncture Helena Richie intervenes and prevents the elopement by telling them her own story. Eventually Elizabeth is divorced and marries David, and Helena Richie marries Elizabeth's uncle, Robert Ferguson.

irony (from Gr. ieron, "a dissembler"). A dissembling; hence, subtle sarcasm, language having a meaning different from the ostensible one and which will be understood correctly by the initiated. Socratic irony is an assumption of ignorance, as a means of leading on and eventually confuting an opponent. Dramatic irony is the theatrical device of making a speaker utter words which have a hidden meaning for the audience of which he is himself unconscious. Thus Oedipus, in Sophocles' Oedipus Tyrannus, calls down curses on the slayer of Laius, not knowing that they will fall on his own head.

the irony of fate. A strange fatality which has brought about something quite the reverse of what might have been expected.

Iroquois. A confederacy of five (later six) North American Indian tribes, organized in the sixteenth century and known to the English as the Five (later Six) Nations. The name they used for themselves signifies "we of the long house." They also called each other "real men," while the word Iroquois is of Algonquin origin (as heard by the French) and means "real adder." The Iroquois were the Mohawk, Oneida, Onondaga, Cayuga, Seneca (and later Tuscarora). Their territory was Central New York. After the revolution many of them went to Canada.

irredenta. From Italia irredenta, "unredeemed Italy," the slogan of the Italian political party (founded in 1878) that demanded as part of its platform the incorporation of Trieste, Istria, the Ticino, Nice, Corsica, Malta, and other Italian-speaking territories in the Italian kingdom. In English and other languages irredenta came to be used for regions detached from the country of their historical allegiance and for the movement advocating their return. As, the Austrian irredenta in the Italian Tyrol, etc.

Irrefragable Doctor, see under DOCTOR.

Irus. In Greek legend, the beggar of Ithaca, who ran on errands for Penelope's suitors. When Ulysses returned home dressed as a beggar, Irus withstood him, and Ulysses broke his jaw with a blow. So poor was Irus that he gave birth to the proverbs, "As poor as Irus," and "Poorer than Irus" (in French, plus pauvre qu' Irus).

Irving, Sir Henry (1838–1905). English actor. Particularly remembered for his Shakespearean rôles and as professionally associated with Ellen TERRY. Eight American tours.

Irving, Washington (1783-1859). American journalist, author, satirist, and man of society, known for his early wit and humor and his later portrayal of the romantic and picturesque in his sketches and histories. His works include: Letters of Jonathan Oldstyle, Gent. (1802-1803), a series of satires on New York society published in the Morning Chronicle; SALMAGUNDI: OR, THE WHIM-WHAMS AND OPINIONS OF LAUNCELOT LANGSTAFF, ESQ., AND OTHERS (1807-1808), satires on New York revealing Irving's conservative viewpoint; KNICKERBOCKER'S HISTORY OF NEW YORK (1809); THE SKETCH BOOK (1819); BRACEBRIDGE HALL (1822); Tales of a Traveler (1824); History of the Life and Voyages of Christopher Columbus (1828); THE CONQUEST OF GRANADA (1829); THE ALHAMBRA (1832); A Tour on the Prairies (1835); Astoria (1836); The Adventures of Captain Bonneville, U.S.A. (1837), a biography of a frontiersman; A Book of the Hudson (1849), sketches; Mahomet and His Successors (1849-1850); and a Life of George Washington (1855-1859). Irving was active in politics and diplomacy, serving as an attaché and later minister to Spain, where he did research for his Spanish histories and sketches. He was enthusiastic about European culture and was influenced by the English essayists ADDISON and STEELE and to some extent by Sir Walter SCOTT.

Irwin, Wallace (1876-). American humorist and novelist. The Love Sonnets of a Hoodlum (1902) are a remarkable contribution to American vernacular verse. Invented the amusing character of the Japanese school-boy Hashimura Togo.

Irwin, Will (1873-1948). American journalist and writer, first gaining fame with The City That Was (1907), an inspired picture of San Francisco before the Fire. War correspondent, playwright, writer on contemporary affairs, etc. His wife, Inez Haynes Irwin (1873-) is a well-known writer of fiction who was awarded the O. Henry memorial prize for the best short story (1924). As Inez Haynes Gillmore, she wrote a feminist novel, Angel Island (1914) and the popular Phoebe and Ernest stories (1910-1919). She has also written mystery novels.

Isaac. In the Old Testament (Gen. xxiv-xxviii), the son of ABRAHAM. As a test of faith his father was commanded to offer up the young Isaac as a burnt offering, but at the last moment was told to slay a ram instead. Isaac was the husband of REBEKAH and the father of JACOB and Esau.

Isaac of York. In Scott's IVANHOE, the father of Rebecca. When he is imprisoned in the dungeon of Front de Boeuf's castle, Front de Boeuf comes to extort money from him, and orders two slaves to chain him to the bars of a slow fire, but the party is disturbed by the sound of a bugle. Ultimately, both the Jew and his daughter leave England and go to live abroad.

Isaacs, Mr., see MR. ISAACS.

Isabel Archer. Chief woman character in James' Portrait of a Lady.

Isabella. In Arthurian legend, the sister of King Mark of Cornwall, married to King Meliadus of Lionesse. In Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, the daughter of a king of Galicia, loved by Zerbino but slain by Rodomont.

Isabella. (1) In Shakespeare's MEASURE FOR MEASURE the sister of Claudio, insulted by the base passion of Angelo, deputy of Vienna in the absence of Duke Vincentio.

(2) Heroine of Meyerbeer's opera ROBERT LE DIABLE.

Isabella I, also known as the Catholic. Spanish Isabel la Católica (1451-1504). Queen of Castile (1474-1504). Through her marriage with Ferdinand II of Aragon (1469), Castile and Aragon were united and ruled jointly by the two monarchs (with Ferdinand as Ferdinand V). They were granted the title of Los Reyes católicos.

Isabella, or the Pot of Basil. A story from Boccaccio turned into verse by Keats (1820).

Isabelle. In Molière's comedy, L'École des Maris, one of the two orphan sisters brought up to be model wives. See SGANARELLE.

Isaiah. The greatest of the Hebrew Major Prophets. He prophesied during the period preceding the captivity of Judah. Also, the book of the Old Testament containing his prophecies.

Isaie le Triste, see YSAIE LE TRISTE.

Isak. The hero of Hamsun's GROWTH OF THE SOIL.

Isenbras or Isumbras, Sir. A hero of mediæval romance. Sir Isenbras is at first proud and presumptuous, but adversity makes him humble and penitent. In this stage he carries two children of a poor woodcutter across a ford on his horse.

Isengrin or Isgrim. The wolf, afterwards created Earl of Pitwood, in the beast-epic of Reynard the Fox (1498). Isengrin typifies the barons, and Reynard the church; and the gist of the tale is to show how Reynard bamboozles his uncle Wolf.

Iselt, see ISOLT.

Ishbosheth in Dryden's satire of ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, is meant for Richard Cromwell, whose father Oliver is called "Saul." As Ishbosheth is the only surviving son of Saul, so Richard was the only surviving son of Cromwell. As Ishbosheth was accepted king on the death of his father by all except the tribe of Judah (2 Sam 1v), so Richard was acknowledged "protector" by all except the royalists. As Ishbosheth reigned only a few months, so Richard, after a few months, returned to private life.

Isherwood, Christopher William Bradshaw (1904–). English short-story writer and novelist, associated with the group of English writers of Marxist sympathies including W. H. AUDEN, C. DAY LEWIS, and Stephen SPENDER. He is best known for the books on which he collaborated with Auden: THE DOG BENEATH THE SKIN (1935) and The Ascent of F6 (1936), verse plays; On the Frontier (1938), "a melodrama in three acts"; and Journey to a War (1939), an account of travels in China during the war with the Japanese. Other works of Isherwood are: The Memorial: Portrait of a Family (1932); The Last of Mr. Norris (1935); Sally Bowles (1937); Lions and Shadows: An Education in the Twenties (1938); Goodbye to Berlin (1939), a collection of sketches of people and life in Germany at the time of the rise of Nazism; and Prater Violet (1945), a novel concerning a German refugee from Nazism. He also translated the Intimate Journals of BAUDELAIRE (1930), and A Penny for the Poor, by Bertolt BRECHT (1937).

Ishmael. In the Old Testament, the son of Abraham and HAGAR; hence any outcast from society, from the prophecy "And he shall be as a wild ass among men; his hand shall be against every man and every man's hand against him." After the birth of Isaac, Ishmael was cast out of Abraham's household and became the father of a separate people.

Ishtar (Gr. Astarte). The Babylonian goddess of love and war, corresponding to the Phoenician ASHTORETH except that while the latter was identified with the moon, Ishtar was more frequently identified with the planet Venus. She was the wife of Bel.

Isidore. In Molière's comedy, LE SICILIEN, ou L'AMOUR PEINTRE, a Greek slave, the concubine of Don Pedre, a Sicilian nobleman. This slave is beloved by ADRASTE a French gentleman, who plots to allure her away.

Isidorian Decretals, see DECRETALS.

Isis. The principal goddess of ancient Egypt, sister and wife of Osiris, and mother of Horus. She was identified with the moon (Osiris being a sun-god), and the cow was sacred to her, its horns representing the crescent moon which, in Egypt, appears lying on its back.

Her chief temples were at Amydos, Busiris, and Philae. She is represented as a queen, her head being surmounted by horns and the solar disk or by the double crown. Proclus mentions a statue of her which bore the inscription—

I am that which is, has been, and shall be. My veil no one has lifted. The fruit I bore was the Sun—hence, to lift the veil of Isis is to pierce to the heart of a great mystery.

She was identified with Io, Aphrodite, and others by the Greeks; with Selene, Ceres, Venus, Juno, etc., by the Romans; and the Phoenicians confused her with Ashtoreth. Her worship as a nature goddess was very popular among the later Greeks and with the Romans of republican times. Milton, in Paradise Lost (l. 478), places her among the fallen angels.

See MAGIC FLUTE.

The upper reaches of the Thames River in England are called the Isis.

Islam. The Mohammedan religion, the whole body of Mohammedans, the true Mohammedan faith. The Moslems say every child is born in Islam, and would continue in the true faith if not led astray. The word means resignation or submission to the will of God.

Islam emphasizes five duties:—

- (1) Bearing witness that there is but one God
- (2) Reciting daily prayers
- (3) Giving the appointed and legal alms.
- (4) Observing the Ramadan (a month's fast).
- (5) Making a pilgrimage to Mecca at least once in a lifetime.

island of Saints. So Ireland was called in the Middle Ages.

island of St. Brandan. The flying island, the supposed retreat of King Rodrigo. So called from St. Brandan, who went in search of the Islands of Paradise in the 6th century. See under SAINT.

island of the Seven Cities. A kind of Utopia, where seven bishops, who quitted Spain during the dominion of the Moors, founded seven cities. The legend says that many have visited the island, but no one has ever quitted it.

Island of Penguins, see PENGUIN ISLAND.

Islands of the Blessed, called by the Greeks "Happy Islands," and by the Romans "Fortunate Islands." They are imaginary islands somewhere in the west, where the favorites of the gods are conveyed at death, and dwell in everlasting joy.

the Island City. Montreal. See under CITY.

Isle of Lanterns. In Rabelais' GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, an imaginary country, inhabited by pretenders to knowledge, called "Lanternois." See also LANTERN LAND.

Ismene. In Greek legend, daughter of Oedipus and Jocasta. Antigone was buried alive by the order of King Creon, for burying her brother Polynices, slain in combat by his brother Eteocles. Ismene declared that she had aided her sister, and requested to be allowed to share the same punishment.

Ismene and Ismenias. A love story in Greek by Eustathius, in the 12th century. Many of its details have been copied by D'Urfé, Montemayor, and others. Ismene is the "dear and near and true" lady of Ismenias.

Isocrates (436-338 B.C.). Attic orator. Pupil of Socrates. Founded a school and taught some of the greatest future statesmen, orators, and philosophers. Killed himself when Philip of Macedon conquered Greece. Of his orations twenty-one have been preserved.

Isokeha and Tawiskara. In Iroquois myth, twin brothers, symbols of light and darkness. Isokeha, "the White One," vanquished his brother Tawiskara, "the Dark One" and became the father of mankind and special protector of the Iroquois.

Isolt, Iseult, Yseult, or Isolde, etc. The name of two heroines of Arthurian romance, the more important, Isolt the Fair, King Mark's wife, being the lover of TRISTAN, the other, Isolt of the White Hands, or Isolt of Brittany, being his wife, whom he married after he had been discovered by King Mark and had been obliged to flee.

It is through the treachery of Isolt of the White Hands that Sir Tristan or Tristram dies, and that Isolt the Fair dies in consequence. The story has it that King MARK buried the two in one grave, and planted over it a rose-bush and vine, which so intermingled their branches as they grew up that no man could separate them.

In James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE, the wife and daughter of Humphrey C. EARWICKER represent the two Isolts to his Tristan.

Israel (Heb., literally, "contender with God"). In the Old Testament, a name given to JACOB after he wrestled with the angel of the Lord; also, the name given to the Jewish nation descended from him and frequently referred to as the Children of Israel.

Israel, in Dryden's ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, stands for England.

Israfil or Israfil. The angel of music of the Mohammedans. He possesses the most melodious voice of all God's creatures, and is to sound the Resurrection Trump which will ravish the ears of the saints in paradise. Israfil, Gabriel, and Michael were the three angels that, according to the Koran, warned Abraham of Sodom's destruction. Israfil is the title of one of Edgar Allan Poe's poems (1831), and also of a biography of him by Hervey ALLEN.

In Heaven a spirit doth dwell
Whose heart-strings are a lute;
None sing so wildly well
As the angel Israfil,
And the giddy Stars (so legends tell),
Ceasing their hymns, attend the spell
Of his voice, all mute—Poe, Israfil.

Issachar, in Dryden's satire of ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, means Thomas Thynne (1648-1682), of Longleat, known as "Tom of Ten Thousand."

Issachar's ears. Ass's ears. The allusion is to Gen. xlix. 14: "Issachar is a strong ass couching down between two burdens."

Is't possible that you, whose ears
Are of the tribe of Issachar's,
Should yet be deaf against a noise
So roaring as the public voice?
S Butler, Hudibras to Sidrophei.

Issland. In the NIBELUNGENLIED, the kingdom of Brunhild.

Istar, see ISHTAR.

Isthmian games. Games consisting of chariot races, running, wrestling, boxing, etc., held by the ancient Greeks in the Isthmus of Corinth every alternate spring, the first and third of each Olympiad. Epsom races, and other big sporting events have been called Isthmian games in allusion to these.

Italian. For the Italian Froebel, the Italian Molière, etc., see FROEBEL, MOLIÈRE.

italic.

Italic type or italics (the type in which the letters, instead of being erect—as in Roman—slope from left to right, thus) was first used by Aldo Manuzio in printing the Aldine classics. It was called by him "Cursive," a running hand (from Lat. curro, "I run"). Virgil was the first author printed in this type (1501). Francesco of Bologna cast it.

The words italicized in the ordinary versions of the Bible have no corresponding words in the original. The translators supplied these words to render the sense of the passage more full and clear.

In preparing manuscript for the printer, italics are indicated by underlining.

It Can't Happen Here. A novel by Sinclair LEWIS, published in 1935. It presents a fancied Fascist (see FASCISM) dictatorship in the U.S., set up by Berzelius (Buzz) Windrip, a New England demagogue who is elected to the presidency. Doremus Jessup, editor of a small Vermont newspaper, fights Windrip, although he is arrested for his opposition, and secretly aids the New Underground, a revolutionary, anti-Fascist movement set up in Canada by Walt Trowbridge, Windrip's defeated rival in the presidential election. Eventually there is a war against Mexico, and Jessup takes part in the revolution promoted by Trowbridge. The novel has been dramatized, with the author playing the rôle of Jessup.

Ithunn. In Norse mythology, the wife of Bragi. She was the goddess who kept in Asgard the apples which were eaten by the gods to preserve their eternal youth.

Ithuriel. The angel who, with ZEPHON, was, in Milton's Paradise Lost, commissioned by Gabriel to search for Satan, after he had effected his entrance into Paradise. The name is Rabbinical, and means "the discovery of God."

He was armed with a spear, the slightest touch of which exposed deceit. Hence, when Satan squatted like a toad "close to the ear of Eve," Ithuriel made him resume his proper form:—

Him [i.e., Satan], thus intent Ithuriel with his spear Touched lightly; for no falsehood can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likeness.—Paradise Lost, iv. 810.

Iturbi, José (1895–). Spanish pianist, conductor, and motion picture actor. Musical director, Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra.

Itzcoatl (1360?–?1440). First emperor of the Aztecs (1427–?1440). Through him Tenochtitlan, the modern Mexico City, was set up as an independent power dominating the lake valley.

Ivan IV Vasilievich. Called Ivan the Terrible (1530–1584). Czar of Russia. Conquered Kazan and Astrakhan. Acquired Siberia through conquest by Cossacks (1581). Killed his son Ivan in a fit of anger. At the age of seventeen he assumed the title of Czar of Russia which has since been borne by all Russian monarchs.

Ivan Ilyitch, The Death of. A short novel by TOLSTOY.

Ivanhoe. A novel by Sir Walter Scott (1820), a tale of the period following the Norman Conquest. The titular hero is Wilfred, knight of Ivanhoe, the son of Cedric the Saxon, in love with his father's ward Rowena. Cedric, however, wishes her to marry Athelstane, who is descended from the Saxon royal line and may restore the Saxon supremacy. The real heroine is Rebecca the Jewess, daughter of the wealthy Isaac of York and a person of much more character and charm than the mild Rowena. Richard I in the guise of the Black Knight and Robin Hood as Locksley play prominent rôles, and knights and palmeres from the Holy Land, fair ladies, conspiracies and counterattacks, a tournament and the burning of a great castle combine to give it a rich and varied color. Ivanhoe does not return Rebecca's love; he marries Rowena. See under REBECCA for Thackeray's sequel.

Ivanovich or Ivan Ivanovitch. The national impersonation of the Russians as a people. See also NICKNAMES OF NATIONALITIES. BROWNING has a poem called Ivan Ivanovich in his Dramatic Idylls (1879). Ivan Ivanovich, a Russian carpenter, is working at a "huge shipmast trunk," when a sledge dashes up to the workyard with a half-frozen, fainting woman in it, who is recognized by the crowd assembled as "Dmitri's wife." She tells them that on her journey home in the sledge, with her three children, she was overtaken by wolves, and, to save herself, threw the children to the beasts. Ivan Ivanovich takes the law into his own hands, and slays her with an axe as she lies before him. The verdict of the village judge and of the neighbors is in Ivan's favor.

ivory gate, see DREAMS, GATES OF.

ivory shoulder, see PELOPS.

ivory tower. A poet's retreat, hence a withdrawal from the realities of life.

Ivy-Day in the Committee Room. A story by James Joyce in the collection entitled DUBLINERS. It deals with the meeting of a group of Irish politicians on the birthday of Charles Stewart PARNELL, and the dramatic conflicts between his supporters and the conservatives.

Iwain, see YWAIN.

iwis, ywis. Certainly, truly. Archaic. Cf. German gewiss, same meaning. The prefix was occasionally mistaken for the pronoun I, and later poets used the word as follows:

A certain shape I wist.

Coleridge

Our ship, I wis,
Shall be of another form than this.

Longfellow

I.W.W. The popular designation of the Industrial Workers of the World, a wage-earners' union organized in 1905 which rapidly acquired the reputation of being radical and lawless.

Ixion. In Greek legend, a king of the Lapithae who was bound to a revolving wheel of fire in the infernal regions, either for his impious presumption in trying to imitate the thunder of heaven, or for boasting of the favors supposed to have been conferred on him by Hera, Zeus having sent a cloud to him in the form of Hera, and the cloud having become by him the mother of the CENTAURS.

izzard. An old name of the letter "z." Still used in the phrase, from A to izzard, "from alpha to omega, from A to Z." The word has no satisfactory explanation. Possibly from "s hard" (which makes little sense) or from French "et z"—pronounced "ay zed" (which is not much better either).

J

Jabal. In the Old Testament, one of the early descendants of Cain, "the father of such as dwell in tents and have cattle."

Jabberwocky. A well-known ballad by LEWIS CARROLL, found in THROUGH THE LOOKING-GLASS. It contains a number of words coined by the author himself, often of the "PORTMANTEAU" variety, such as "brillig," "slithy," "toves," "gimble," "borogove," "mome," "rath," and "outgrabe." Some critics consider it a burlesque of the word-coinages of Edmund SPENSER. The Jabberwock is a species of dragon.

Jaccuse (I accuse). Commonly used as the title of the famous letter addressed by Émile ZOLA to President Faure of France (1898) in denunciation of the DREYFUS affair. In it Zola used the phrase several times for rhetorical emphasis.

Jack.

a good Jack makes a good jill. A good husband makes a good wife, a good master makes a good servant. Jack, a generic name for man, husband, or master; and Jill for a woman.

Jack of all trades is master of none. One who can turn his hand to anything is not usually an expert in any one branch. Jack of all trades is a contemptuous expression.

Jack, Colonel. The hero of Defoe's novel entitled The History of the Most Remarkable Life and Extraordinary Adventures of the truly Hon. Colonel, Jacques, vulgarly called Colonel Jack. The colonel (born a gentleman and bred a pickpocket) goes to Virginia, and passes through all the stages of colonial life, from that of "slavery" to that of an owner of slaves and plantations.

Jack-a-Lent. A stuffed figure at which boys threw sticks at Lent in Old England.

Thou didst stand six weeks the Jack of Lent,
For boys to hurl, three throws a penny, at thee.
Ben Jonson.

Jackanapes. A pert, vulgar, apish little fellow; a prig. The word first appears as a derisive nickname for William de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk (murdered in 1450), whose badge was the clog and chain of a tame ape. Jackanapes must, however, have been in use before it became a nickname, and it is uncertain whether the -napes is connected originally with ape or with Naples, Jackanapes being a jack (monkey) of (imported from) Naples, just as fustian-a-napes was fustian from Naples. There is an early 15th-century record of monkeys being sent to England from Italy, and by the 16th century, at all events, Jackanapes was in use as a proper name for a tame ape.

Jack and Jill. The well-known nursery rhyme is said to be a relic of a Norse myth, accounting for the dark patches in the moon: the two children are supposed to have been kidnaped by the moon while drawing water, and they are still to be seen with the bucket hanging from a pole resting on their shoulders.

Jack and Jill went up the hill
To fetch a pail of water;
Jack fell down and cracked his crown,
And Jill came tumbling after.

Jack and the Beanstalk. A nursery tale found among all sorts of races from Icelanders to Zulus. Jack is a very poor lad, sent by his mother to sell a cow, which he parts with to a butcher for a few beans. His mother, in her rage, throws the beans away, but one of them grows during the night as high as the heavens. Jack climbs the stalk, and, by the direction of a fairy, comes to a giant's castle, where he begs food and rest. This he does thrice, and in his three visits steals the giant's red hen, which lays golden eggs, his money-bags, and his harp. As he runs off with the last treasure, the harp cries out, "Master! master!" which wakes the giant, who runs after Jack. But the nimble lad cuts the beanstalk with an axe, and the giant is killed in his fall. As we know it, this story is of Teutonic origin. According to a frequently advanced theory, the "beanstalk" is the ash, Yggdrasil, of the Eddas, the giant is All-Father, whose three treasures are a harp—i.e., the wind, bags full of treasures—i.e., the rain, and the red hen which lays golden eggs—that is, the genial sun. "Jack" typifies Man, who avails himself of these treasures and becomes rich.

Jack Brag. A vulgar, pretentious braggart, who gets into aristocratic society, where his vulgarity stands out in strong relief. The character is in Theodore Hook's novel of the same name.

Jack Cade, see CADE.

Jackdaw of Rheims, The. The title of a poem in The Ingoldsby Legends. It tells how a jackdaw stole the ring of the cardinal of Rheims and was cursed by him.

Jack Drum, see DRUM.

Jack Frost. Frost personified.

Jack Horner. A commonly accepted explanation of the old nursery rhyme Little Jack Horner is that Jack was steward to the Abbot of Glastonbury at the time of the dissolution of the monasteries, and that he, by a subterfuge, became possessed of the deeds of the Manor of Mells, which is in the neighborhood and which is still owned by his descendants of the same name. Some say that these deeds with others were sent to Henry VIII concealed, for safety, in a pasty; that "Jack Horner" was the bearer; and that on the way he lifted the crust and extracted this "plum."

Little Jack Horner sat in a corner
Eating his Christmas pie
He put in his thumb and pulled out a plum
And said "What a brave boy am I."

Jack-in-the-green. In the May-day games of England, a boy in a frame covered with leaves.

Jack Ketch. A hangman and executioner, notorious for his barbarity, who was appointed about 1663 and died in 1686. As early as 1678 his name had appeared in a ballad, and by 1702 it was associated with the Punch and Judy puppet-play, which had recently been introduced from Italy.

Jack Robinson, Before you can say. Immediately. Grose says that the saying originated from a very volatile gentleman of that name, who used to pay flying visits to his neighbors, and was no sooner announced than he was off again; Halliwell says (Archaic Dictionary, 1846):

The following lines from "an old play" are elsewhere given as the original phrase—

A warke it ys as easie to be done
As tys to saye Jacke' robys on.

But the "old play" has never been identified, and both these accounts are palpably ben trovato. The phrase was in use in the 18th century, and is to be found in Fanny Burney's Evelina (1778), II. xxxvii.

Jacks, Lawrence Pearsall (1860-). English philosopher and essayist. Editor of the Hibbert Journal (1902). Believer in a living universe and creative evolution. Nearly thirty published works.

Jack Sheppard, see SHEPPARD.

Jack Sprat. A character famed in nursery rhyme.

Jack Sprat could eat no fat,
His wife could eat no lean;
And so betwixt 'em both
They licked the platter clean.

Jackson, Andrew (1767-1845). Seventh president of the United States (1829-1837). Inaugurator of spoils system in government. Despite Jackson's intervention, the cabinet was broken up because its members refused to accept socially Mrs. (Peggy O'Neill) Eaton, wife of the Secretary of War. The charter of the United States Bank was vetoed during Jackson's administration and the national debt completely paid off.

Jackson, Helen Maria Hunt (1831-1885). American poet and novelist, best known for her novel RAMONA (1884). A Century of Dishonor (1881) is an account of injustice to the Indians on the part of the U.S. government, and Mercy Philbrick's Choice (1876) is a novel considered to deal with the life of Emily Dickinson. Saxe Holm was a pseudonym used by the author early in her career.

Jackson, Holbrook (1874-1948). English essayist, literary historian, editor. With Ralph Hodgson and Claude Lovat Fraser, he published the now famous Flying Fame chapbooks and broadsides (1913). His The Eighteen Nineties (1913) has been called "the finest history" of that literary and artistic period.

Jackson, Mrs. George. In James T. Farrell's STUDS LONIGAN, a married woman of moderate middle class standing who gambles secretly on horse-racing, loses money, and in a desperate attempt to secure funds to pay her gambling debts, impulsively sells her favors to Studs Lonigan and three of his friends who happen to be in the bookmaker's shop at the same time as she. Studs is attracted to her and later returns alone to visit her but is scornfully rebuffed.

Jackson, Thomas Jonathan (1824-1863). One of the Confederate generals in the American Civil War. Called Stonewall Jackson because at the Battle of Bull Run (1861) General Bee of South Carolina, observing his men waver, exclaimed, "Look at Jackson's men; they stand like a stone wall!" Mortally wounded by his own men at the battle of Chancellorsville as he was returning from a reconnaissance.

Jack Straw. The name (or nickname) of one of the leaders in the Peasants' Revolt of 1381. There is an allusion to him in Chaucer's Nun's Prologue (1386), and the name soon came to signify a man of straw, a worthless sort of person.

Jack Tar. A common sailor, whose hands and clothes are tarred by the ship tackling. Also explained as short for tarpaulin. Tar alone was used for sailor as early as the 17th century. The combination with Jack seems to have been introduced by Dickens.

Jack the Giant-killer. The hero of an old nursery tale, who owes much of his success to his four marvelous possessions—an invisible coat, a cap of wisdom, shoes of swiftness, and a resistless sword. When he puts on his coat, no eye can see him; when he has shoes on, no one can overtake him; his sword will cut through everything; and when his cap is on, he knows everything he needs to know. The story is given by Walter Map (and later by Geoffrey of Monmouth), who obtained it in the early 13th century from a French chronicle. Jack is a "valiant Cornishman," and his first exploit is to kill the giant Cormoran, by digging a deep pit which he films over with grass, etc. The giant falls into the pit, and Jack knocks him on the head with a hatchet. Jack encounters various giants, but outwits them all. See also BLUNDERBORE.

Jack the Ripper. Popular name of an unknown London criminal to whom were attrib-ured a number of gruesome murders (1888-1889) and who appears in The Lodger (1913) by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes, which was later made into a moving picture, Vincent Price starring. The picture starring the late Laird Cregar departed widely from the novel.

Jacob. A Biblical patriarch of the book of Genesis, whose twelve sons were the founders of the twelve tribes of Israel. As a young man Jacob purchased the birthright of his brother Esau for a mess of pottage and by impersonating his brother, secured from his blind old father Isaac the blessing intended for Esau. He served his mother's brother Laban seven years for Rachel, Laban's daughter, and was given her much less attractive sister Leah instead; whereupon he served another seven years "and they seemed to him but a short while, so great was the love he bore her." Jacob is famed for the shrewdness with which he accumulated wealth while in Laban's service. For his later life, see JOSEPH, BENJAMIN.

Jacob's ladder. The ladder seen by the patriarch Jacob in a vision (Gen. xxviii. 12). Jacob is, on this account, a cant name for a ladder, and steep and high flights of steps going up cliffs, etc., are often called Jacob's ladders, as is a flaw in a stocking where only the woof threads are left, the warp threads giving a ladderlike appearance. There is a garden flower also so called.

Jacob Faithful, or The Adventures of a Waterman. A novel by Captain Marryat (1834). The hero is born on a Thames "lighter" and his first experience with land is at the age of eleven.

Jacobins. (1) The Dominicans were so called in France from the "Rue St. Jacques," Paris, where they first established themselves in 1219.

(2) A political club, originally called the Club Breton, formed at Versailles in 1789. On their removal to Paris, they met in the hall of an ex-convent of Jacobins (see above), in the Rue St. Honoré.

Jacobites. The partisans of James II and his heirs after William III superseded him. They engaged in fruitless rebellions in 1715 and 1745. See the FIFTEEN; the FORTY-FIVE; also, WARMING-PANS.

Jacobs, Joseph (1854-1916). Jewish scholar and writer. Author of Earliest English Version of the Fables of Bidpai (1888); The Jews of Angevin England (1893); etc. Editor, Jewish Encyclopedia (1900).

Jacobs, William Wymark (1863-1943). English story writer. A delightful humorist of lusty sea-stories. One great horror story, The Monkey's Paw, and a number of plays. Snug Harbor (1931) is an omnibus of his stories.

Jacobsen, Jens Peter (1847-1885). Danish poet and novelist. Started his career as a botanist. His creative years began after he retired as a tubercular patient to his native Thisted (1873). His work exerted a very strong influence on the generation of German writers typically represented by Rainer Maria RILKE. Fru Marie Grubbe (1876); Niels Lyhne (1880). A masterly novella by Jacobsen is Pesten i Bergamo (The Plague in Bergamo; 1881).

Jacob's Room. A novel by Virginia Woolf (1922).

Jacob Stahl, see STAHL, JACOB.

Jacopo. In Cooper's BRAVO.

Jacopone da Tody (1230?-1306). Italian Franciscan monk. Author (?), on the basis of earlier material, of Stabat Mater.

Jacquard, Joseph Marie (1752-1834). French mechanic and inventor of a loom (1801) that revolutionized the technique of woven designs. Later awarded a pension and elected to the Legion of Honor (1819).

Jacquemart, Jules Ferdinand (1837-1880). French etcher, distinguished for a remarkable series representing works of Rembrandt, Hals, Meissonier, etc. At Paris exposition (1878) awarded Grand Médaille for etching.

Jacquerie, la. An insurrection of the peasantry of France in 1358, excited by the oppressions of the privileged classes and Charles the Bad of Navarre, while King Jean II was a prisoner in England. It was so called from Jacques, or Jacques Bonhomme, the generic name which was often given to the French peasantry. They banded together, fortified themselves and declared war to the death against every gentleman in France, but in six weeks some 12,000 of the insurgents were cut down, and the rebellion suppressed with the greatest determination. See also under GOODMAN JAMES.

Jacques (Fr.). (1) A generic name for the poor artisan class in France so called from the jaque, a rough kind of waistcoat, sleeved, and coming almost to the knees, that they used to wear. A peasant is also frequently called Jacques Bonhomme.

Jacques, il me faut troubler ton somme;
Dans le village, un gros huissier
Rude et court, suivi du messier:
C'est pour l'impôt, las! mon pauvre homme,
Lève-toi, Jacques, lève-toi,
Voici venir l'huissier du roi.
Béranger (1831).

pauvre Jacques (poor Jacques). The absent sweetheart of a love-lorn maiden. Marie Antoinette sent to Switzerland for a lass to attend the dairy of her "Swiss village" in miniature, which she arranged in the Little Trianon (Paris). The lass was heard sighing for pauvre Jacques, and her longing made a capital sentimental amusement for the court idlers. The swain was sent for, and the marriage consummated.

Pauvre Jacques, quand j'étais près de toi
Je ne sentais pas ma misère;
Mais à présent que tu vis loin de moi
Je manque de tout sur la terre Marquis de Travenet, Pauvre Jacques

(2) The hero of a novel of that name by George SAND. Discovering that his wife is in love with another man, he disappears and kills himself in order to insure their happiness.

Jacquotte. In Balzac's COUNTRY DOCTOR (Le Médecin de campagne), the faithful old cook of Dr. Benassis.

Jade Emperor. The chief god of the triad of popular Taoism.

Jadwin, Curtis. The hero of Frank Norris' novel THE PIT.

Jael. In the Old Testament, a woman who offered Sisera, the Canaanite, refuge from the pursuit of Deborah and Barak, and then killed him with a tent-pin.

Jaffar, see GIAFER.

Jaffier. The hero of Otway's tragedy, VENICE PRESERVED.

Jagganath, see JUGGERNAUT.

Jaggers. In Dickens' GREAT EXPECTATIONS, a lawyer of Little Britain, London. He is a burly man, of exceedingly dark complexion, with a large head and large hands; when he speaks to anyone, he throws his fore-finger at him pointedly. A hard, logical man is Mr. Jaggers, who requires an answer to be "yes" or "no," allowing no one to express an opinion, but only to state facts in the fewest possible words. Magwitch appoints him Pip's guardian, and he is Miss Havisham's man of business.

Jahannam. A name of the Mohammedan HELL or of the first of its seven divisions. The word is the same as the Hebrew GEHENNA.

Jairus' daughter. In the New Testament, a child twelve years old who was raised from the dead by Jesus.

Jalna, see under DE LA ROCHE, MAZO.

jalopy. In American slang, a dilapidated automobile or airplane. Possibly from some foreign equivalent of sloop, as French cha-loupe.

James I of England and VI of Scotland (1566-1625). He appears in Scott's FORTUNES OF NIGEL (1822) as one of the principal characters. He was called "the English Solomon" and "the Wisest Fool in Christendom" on account of his impractical learning. He was the author of Essays of a Prentice in the Divine Art of Poesy (1584), a critical treatise, and Poetical Exercises at Vacant Hours (1591), but wrote little after becoming sovereign of England. He failed to live up to the hopes of the English poets that he might become their patron; he is known to have assisted only Ben Jonson. RHYME ROYAL was so named because it was believed James had been the first to use it. For King James Bible, see under BIBLE.

James II (1633-1701). King of England, Scotland, Ireland (1685-1688). Son of Charles I and Henrietta Maria. Embraced Roman Catholic faith (probably before 1672). Succeeded to throne at death of his brother, Charles II. Out of fear of a Roman Catholic tyranny the English nobles offered the throne to William of Orange, James's son-in-law. James escaped to France, where he was received by Louis XIV. He later landed in Ireland (1689) but was defeated at the battle of the Boyne (July 1, 1690).

James, Henry (1843-1916). American novelist, considered one of the greatest figures in the history of the novel form, educated in England and Europe and in 1915 naturalized as a British citizen. He is known for his realistic psychological penetration and analysis; his subtle, intricate, and balanced prose style; his attitude of detachment in dealing with his characters and plot; his studies of the American upper middle class, especially as, ingenious and self-confident in their newly obtained wealth, they are contrasted with the sophisticated and often decadent aristocracy of Europe; and his frequent use of melodrama and the supernatural for purposes of psychological symbolism. See also REVERBERATOR, THE. James preferred to live abroad, finding the brash, materialistic spirit of the U.S. of his time not conducive to his best work. Important influences on James' writing were George Eliot, Hawthorne, Flaubert, and Turgenev.

James' novels include: RODERICK HUDSON (1876); THE AMERICAN (1877); THE EUROPEANS (1878); DAISY MILLER (1879); An International Episode (1879); Confidence (1880); Washington Square (1881); The Bostonians (1886); THE PORTRAIT OF A LADY (1881); THE PRINCESS CASAMASSIMA (1886); THE REVERBERATOR (1888); The Aspern Papers (1888); The Tragic Muse (1890); The Other House (1896); The Spoils of Poynton (1897); What Maisie Knew (1897); In the Cage (1898); The Awkward Age (1899); The Sacred Fount (1901); THE WINGS OF THE DOVE (1902); THE AMBASSADORS (1903); THE GOLDEN BOWL (1904); The Ivory Tower (1917) and The Sense of the Past (1917), these last two being left incomplete. Among his collections of tales are: A Passionate Pilgrim, And Other Tales (1875); The Madonna of the Future (1879); The Author of Beltraffio (1885); The Lesson of the Master, And Other Tales (1892); The Private Life (1893); The Real Thing, And Other Tales (1893); Termination (1895); Embarrassments (1896); The Soft Side

(1900); The Better Sort (1903); THE ALTAR OF THE DEAD (1909); The Finer Grain (1910). The Two Magics (1898) contains the famous story called THE TURN OF THE SCREW. His essays and criticism include: French Poets and Novelists (1878); Hawthorne (1879); Partial Portraits (1888); The American Scene (1907); Views and Reviews (1908). Theatricals (1894-1895) is a collection of four comedies, and A Small Boy and Others (1913), Notes of a Son and Brother (1914), and The Middle Years (1917) are autobiographical works.

Henry James was the brother of William JAMES and the son of Henry James, Sr. (1811-1882), a clergyman, author, and lecturer, who rebelled against CALVINISM and was strongly influenced by the mystical doctrines of SWEDENBORG.

James, Jesse Woodson (1847-1882). American outlaw, famous for his railroad and bank robberies in the Middle West during the period following the Civil War. He was popularly regarded as a hero, and after his death several folk-tales and dime novels and a well-known ballad, Jesse James, were written about him. A play, Missouri Legend, dealing with James's life, was produced in 1938.

James, William (1842-1910). Brother of HENRY JAMES. American psychologist and philosopher. One of the founders of PRAGMATISM. Author of The Principles of Psychology (1890); The Will to Believe and Other Essays (1897); The Varieties of Religious Experience (1902); Pragmatism (1907); etc.

The James-Lange theory of emotion, named after William James and the Danish physician Carl Georg Lange (1834-1900), states characteristically that an emotion, which seems to find expression in certain bodily symptoms, is really not the cause of those symptoms but rather the individual's sensation of them. The "symptoms" are the cause and not the effect of an emotion.

Jameson, Storm (1897-). English novelist. Successful in evoking the Victorian era. A liberal and profound feminist but "as English as Yorkshire pudding."

Jameson Raid. A raid on Johannesburg, South Africa (1895-1896), led by the Englishman Dr. Jameson, that is, Sir Leander Starr Jameson (1853-1917), in an attempt to overthrow the Boer government during the troubles between the Boers and foreigners in the gold mines. Jameson was captured, handed over to the British for trial, but was released shortly and became later prime minister of Cape Colony (1904-1908).

James Shore's Daughter. A novel by Stephen Vincent BENÉT (1934).

James the Pretender. See under PRETENDER.

Jamestown. The first permanent English settlement in the New World, founded (1607) by Capt. John SMITH on the site of the abandoned Spanish settlement of San Miguel (1526), and named after King James I. It was the capital of Virginia until 1698. The first settlers suffered great hardships, especially during the starving years of 1609-1610. Jamestown was burned down in Bacon's Rebellion (1676). Before its restoration in modern times, the only surviving relics were the tower of the church and a number of tombs.

Jamieson, the Honorable Mrs. In Mrs. Gaskell's CRANFORD, the social arbiter of the little village of Cranford.

Jammes, Francis (1868-1938). French poet and novelist, characterized by his passionate love for nature and, especially since the time of CLAUDEL's influence on him, by his deep Catholic faith. He has been called "the Thoreau of France." It is a fitting symbol that he should be a namesake of St. Francis of Assisi. No one complete book of his has appeared in English.

Jamshid or Giamschid. In Persian legend, the fourth king of the Pishdadian Dynasty, i.e., the earliest, who is fabled to have reigned for 700 years and to have had the Deevs, or Genii, as his slaves. He possessed a seven-ringed golden cup, typical of the seven heavens, the seven planets, the seven seas, etc., which was full of the elixir of life; it was hidden by the genii and was said to have been discovered while digging the foundations of Persepolis.

I know too where the genii hid
The jewelled cup of their king Jamshid,
With life's elixir sparkling high.

Thomas Moore, Paradise and the Peri.

Iram indeed is gone with all his rose
And Jamshyd's Sev'n-ring'd Cup where no one knows Fitzgerald, Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyám

Jane Clegg. A drama by St. John ERVINE (1911). The heroine, Jane Clegg, comes at last to find life with her scoundrel husband Henry and his doting old mother unendurable.

Jane Eyre. A novel by Charlotte BRONTË (1847). In both heroine and hero the author introduced types new to English fiction. Jane Eyre is a shy intense little orphan, never for a moment, either in her unhappy school days or her subsequent career as a governess, displaying those qualities of superficial beauty and charm that had marked the conventional heroine. Jane's lover, Edward Rochester, to whose ward she is governess, is a strange, violent man, bereft of conventional courtesy, a law unto himself. Rochester's moodiness is due to the fact that he is married to an insane wife, whose existence, long kept secret, is revealed on the very day of his projected marriage to Jane. Years afterward the lovers are reunited.

Jane Seymour (1509?-1537). Third queen of Henry VIII of England. Lady-in-waiting to Catharine of Aragon and to Anne Boleyn, one day after whose execution she married the king. Died a few days after giving birth to Edward VI.

Jane Shore. A tragedy by Nicholas ROWE (1714), based on the life of the historical Jane Shore, the wife of a London merchant who, in 1470, left her husband to become the mistress of Edward IV. After the death of that monarch she was accused of witchcraft by Richard III, who condemned her to wander about in a sheet, holding a taper in her hand, and decreed that anyone who offered her food or shelter should be put to death. Jane continued an out-cast for three days; then her husband came to her succor, but he was seized by Gloucester's myrmidons, and Jane Shore died. She is also the heroine of a ballad included in Percy's Reliques, and of an anonymous drama earlier than Rowe's.

Janet's Repentance. A story by George ELIOT, one of her Scenes of Clerical Life (1857). Mr. Tryan, the earnest young Evangelical curate in the town of Mibly, has aroused great opposition. Chief among his opponents are Robert Dempster, a dissipated lawyer, and his beautiful but unhappy wife Janet, both of whom are addicted to drink. Janet meets the curate, becomes interested in his ideals and gradually breaks away from her evil habits.

Janice Meredith. A historical novel by Paul Leicester FORD (1899) dealing with the American Revolution. The plot centers about the love affair of the patriotic Janice Meredith, daughter of a Tory father, and Charles Fownes, whose name is really John Brereton. He is first an indentured servant of Janice's father but later becomes a general in Washington's army. Washington is also a prominent figure.

Janiculum. A hill in Rome on the right bank of the Tiber, opposite the Capitoline and Aventine. On the point nearest the city was a watch tower. It is the highest of the Roman hills (276 feet).

Janissaries or Janizaries (Turk yenitscheri, new corps). A celebrated militia of the Ottoman Empire, raised by Orchan in 1326, originally, and for some centuries, compulsorily recruited from the Christian subjects of the Sultan. It was blessed by Hadji Bektash, a saint, who cut off a sleeve of his fur mantle and gave it to the captain. The captain put the sleeve on his head, and from this circumstance arose the fur cap worn by these foot guards. In 1826, having become too formidable to the state, they were abolished after a massacre in which many thousands of the Janissaries perished.

Jannes and Jambres. The names under which St. Paul (2 Tim. iii, 8) referred to the two magicians of Pharaoh who imitated some of the miracles of Moses (Exod. vii). The names are not mentioned in the Old Testament, but they appear in the Targums and other rabbinical writings, where tradition has it that they were sons of Balaam, and that they perished either in the crossing of the Red Sea, or in the tumult after the worship of the golden calf.

Jannings, Emil (1887-). Swiss-born actor of German-American parentage. Stage career with Max Reinhardt at Deutsches Theater in Berlin. Screen debut (1916) in Lubitsch films. Very successful in Hollywood (1926-1929) but did not survive advent of "talkies." Returned to stage (1932). Especially remembered for The Last Laugh and The Blue Angel, with Marlene Dietrich.

Jansenists. A sect of Christians, who held the doctrines of Cornelius Jansen, Bishop of Ypres, in West Flanders. Jansen professed to have formulated the teaching of Augustine (1640) which resembled CALVINISM in many respects. He taught the doctrines of "irresistible grace," "original sin," and the "utter helplessness of the natural man to turn to God." Louis XIV took part against them, and they were put down by Pope Clement XI, in 1705, in the famous bull Unigenitus.

Jansoulet. Hero of Daudet's NABOB.

Januarius, St., see under SAINT.

January and May. The chief characters in The Merchant's Tale, one of the Canterbury Tales of CHAUCER (1388). January was an old Lombard baron, some sixty years of age, who married a girl named May. This young wife loved Damyan, a young squire. One day, the old baron found them in close embrace; but May persuaded her husband that his eyes were so dim he had made a mistake, and the old baron, too willing to believe, allowed himself to give credit to the tale.

Janus. The ancient Roman deity who kept the gate of heaven; hence, the guardian of gates and doors. He was represented with two faces, one in front and one behind, and the doors of his temple in Rome were thrown open in times of war and closed in times of peace. At one time, they had to stay open with only one very brief interlude, for 700 years. The name is used allusively both with reference to double-facedness and to war.

Japhet. A name for Iapetus, introduced by Milton in Paradise Lost. Also one of the sons of Noah and, according to legend, the father of Hition from whom descended the French, Italian, German, and British peoples.

Jaquenetta. In Shakespeare's LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST, a country wench courted by Don Adriano de Armado.

Jaques. In Shakespeare's AS YOU LIKE IT, one of the lords attendant on the banished duke in the forest of Arden, a philosophic idler, cynical, sullen and contemplative. He could "suck melancholy out of a song, as a weasel sucks eggs." He has little to do with the plot, but his musings furnish some of Shakespeare's most frequently quoted lines, notably from the familiar soliloquy on the "Seven Ages of Man" (Act II. Sc. 1) beginning—

All the world's a stage . . .

Jaques-Dalcroze, Émile (1865–). Swiss musician and teacher of eurhythmics. The Institut Jaques-Dalcroze at Geneva was founded by him for the teaching of eurhythmics.

Jarley, Mrs. In Dickens' OLD CURIOSITY SHOP a kind-hearted woman, mistress of a traveling wax-work exhibition, containing "one hundred figures the size of life"; the "only stupendous collection of real wax-work in the world"; "the delight of the nobility and gentry, the royal family, and crowned heads of Europe." Mrs. Jarley is kind to Little Nell, and employs her as a decoy-duck to "Jarley's unrivalled collection."

Jarndyce v. Jarndyce. An interminable Chancery suit in Dickens' BLEAK HOUSE. Mr. Jarndyce, the client in the great Chancery suit of "Jarndyce v. Jarndyce," and guardian of Esther Summerson, conceals the tenderest heart under a flimsy churlishness of demeanor, and can never endure to be thanked for any of his numberless acts of kindness and charity. If anything goes wrong with him, or if he hears of an unkind action, he will say, "I am sure the wind is in the east"; but if he hears of kindness or goodness, the wind veers round at once, and is "due west."

Jarvie, Bailie Nicol. In Scott's ROB ROY, a magistrate at Glasgow, and kinsman of Rob Roy. He is petulant, concerted, purse-proud, without tact, and intensely prejudiced, but kind-hearted and sincere. Jarvie marries his maid.

Jason. The hero of Greek legend who led the ARGONAUTS in the quest for the Golden Fleece. He was the son of Aeson, king of Iolcus, was brought up by the centaur, Chiron, and when he demanded his kingdom from his uncle, Pelias, who had deprived him of it, he was told he could have it in return for the Golden Fleece. Jason thereupon gathered together the chief heroes of Greece and set sail in the Argo. After many tests and trials he, through the help of MEDEA, was successful. He married Medea, but later deserted her, and, according to one account, killed himself with grief, according to another, was crushed to death by the keel of his old ship, Argo, while resting beneath it. He is the hero of the Alexandrian epic poem Argonautica by Rhodius (222–181 B.C.). William Morris made him the hero of a long narrative poem called The Life and Death of Jason (1866).

Jas Pagan, see under EARWICKER.

Jastrow, Joseph (1863–1944). American psychologist. Gifted popularizer and author of many books, as The Life of the Mind (1938), etc.

Jaurès, Jean Léon (1859–1914). French socialist leader. With Briand, founder and editor of the daily L'Humanité (1904). Assassinated by a French chauvinist at the outbreak of World War I. One of the greatest orators in French parliamentary history.

Java Head. A novel by Joseph HERGESHEIMER (1919), a tale of old Salem. Gerrit Amidon, the big-hearted, unconventional son of a family of New England sea-traders, amazes Salem by bringing home a Chinese wife, Taou Yuen. Much of the novel is a study in contrasting civilizations. Gerrit is loved by Nettie Volter, a wretched girl whom he has befriended, and when her dissipated uncle, Edward Dunsack, succeeds in his evil schemes of insinuation and traps the unhappy Chinese woman in Nettie's room, Taou Yuen commits suicide. Gerrit and Nettie are later married.

Javert. In Victor Hugo's LES MISÉRABLES, an officer of police, the impersonation of inexorable law. He pursues the ex-convict Jean Valjean relentlessly, but at the end he commits suicide rather than arrest his prey.

Jay Gould's daughter. The principal figure of a popular American song, the best verse of which, and a famous one, is:

Jay Gould's daughter said before she died,
"Fix the blinds so the bums can't ride;
If ride they must, let 'em ride the rod,
Let 'em put their trust in the hands of God!"

A certain likeness to the immortal ballad of "Casey Jones" is apparent in its rhythm and in some words.

Jay Hawk. An irregular soldier belonging to a band of anti-slavery guerrillas active before and during the Civil War, particularly in Kansas and Missouri. Kansas is known as the Jay Hawk State on this account.

jay walker. One who crosses a city street in the middle of a block instead of at a corner crossing. In some American cities this practice is against the regulations. The term probably comes from the common use of "jay" or "jake" (country-jake) as a stupid person from the country who does not know how to behave in town.

jazz. Syncopated or ragtime music played by a band of very loud, clangy instruments, tremendously popular during the 1920's, especially in the U.S. Jazz music is said to have originated in New Orleans. According to one story, in March, 1916, Bert Kelly's "Jazz Band" (said to be the first so called) was engaged by the Boosters' Club of Chicago, scored an immediate success, and started jazz on its conquering career. The term was soon widely applied to modern life and such expressions as a jazz resort, this jazz civilization, and the adjective jazzy (meaning loud, gaudy, vulgar, exciting to the senses) came into common use.

Another account of the origin of jazz traces it back to the year 1895 when it was heard in New Orleans as the accompaniment to a dance called the "Pasmala."

The word is of uncertain origin. It may have come from an African word for hurry, getting into English by way of Creole, or from Arabic or even Hindustani. The most picturesque story links it up with the abbreviated first name of the Vicksburg singer, Charles (that is, Chas. or Chazz) Alexander, whose audience (about 1910) would encourage him at "hot" moments in his songs by the exclamation, "Come on, Jazz!"

jazz age. A term used to designate the period of the 1920's in the U.S., when the crude abandon of jazz seemed to express best the spirit of determined unconventionality, gaiety, and dissipation of the American boom era that followed World War I. Such dances as the "BLACK BOTTOM" and "CHARLESTON" went hand in hand with "SPEAKEASIES," "petting parties," and the bobbed hair, short skirts, and new freedom of behavior of the "FLAPPER." F. SCOTT FITZGERALD and JOHN HELD, JR. were outstanding portrayers of the mores of the jazz age. JOHN DOS PASSOS' U.S.A. and JAMES T. FARRELL'S STUDS LONIGAN take place in part against a background of the period, and present a somewhat more objective picture of it than the work of Fitzgerald and Held. E. E. CUMMINGS and HART CRANE were among the poets who sought to express the jazz age in their poetry, and in music such composers as GEORGE GERSHWIN and AARON COPLAND tried to raise jazz to the level of serious music. See also GANGSTERS; PROHIBITION; SWING.

Jean. In MAUPASSANT'S PIERRE ET JEAN.

Jean-ah Poquelin. A short story by G. W. CABLE in his Old Creole Days (1879). The Creole, Jean-ah Poquelin, lives alone in an almost furtive fashion despite his wealth. When an attack of a suspicious mob brings on his death, his only mourner is the leper brother, long since thought dead, to whom he had devoted himself.

Jean Baptiste. See under NICKNAMES OF NATIONALITIES.

Jean Christophe. A novel by Romain ROLLAND (1904-1912) in three very long volumes. Jean Christophe is the spiritual biography of a German musician and composer who is forced to escape from his own country and lives for years in Paris. His unhappy childhood, his friendships and loves, his struggles, all the external events and inner vicissitudes of his long life are put before the reader. There is little plot in any strict or artificial sense. Probably the most interesting of Jean Christophe's many relationships with other people are not so much his affairs of passion as his boyhood friendship with Oliver and the platonic devotion to the Italian Countess Grazia that was the inspiration of his later life. Music is the all absorbing interest of the book.

Jean or Johnny Crapaud. See under NICKNAMES OF NATIONALITIES.

Jean de Meun. Pseudonym of Jean CLOPINEL (fl. ca. 1270). Medieval French poet, known for his completion of the Romance of the Rose (see under rose), in which he introduces a realistic and middle-class point of view, in contrast to that expressed by Guillaume de LORRIS in the first part of the allegory, and bitingly satirizes women and the evils of society as he saw them.

Jeanie with the Light-brown Hair. A sentimental song by Stephen FOSTER, revived of late years and again popular in the U.S.A. The first verse runs:

I dream of Jeanie with the light-brown hair
Borne like a vapor on the summer air.
I see her tripping where the bright streams play,
Happy as the daisies that dance on her way.

Jean Jacques. So J. J. ROUSSEAU (1712-1778) is often called.

Jean Paul. J. P. FRIEDRICH RICHTER (1763-1825) is generally so called.

Jeanneret-Gris, Charles Edouard. See LE CORBUSIER.

Jeans, Sir James Hopwood (1877-1946). English physicist, astronomer and author. One of the greatest scientists of modern times. Evolved from the study of electrons a theory of supernaturalism. Author of many books, among them excellent popularizations. According to H. L. MENCKEN, Jeans has "a really extraordinary gift for making the most difficult of scientific concepts understandable." The Mysterious Universe (1930); The New Background of Science (1933); etc.

Jebusites. In Dryden's ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, the Roman Catholics. England was Roman Catholic before the Reformation, and Jerusalem was called Jebus before the time of David.

Succeeding times did equal folly call,
Believing nothing, or believing all
The Egyptian rites the Jebusites embraced,
When gods were recommended by their taste.
Pt 1. 117-23.

Jeddler, Dr. A character in Dickens' Battle of Life, "a great philosopher." The heart and mystery of his philosophy is to look upon the world as a gigantic practical joke, something too absurd to be considered seriously by any rational man. He is kind and generous by nature.

Grace and Marion Jeddler. Daughters of the doctor, beautiful, graceful and affectionate. They both fall in love with Alfred Heathfield, but Alfred loves the younger daughter.

Jedwood justice. Putting an obnoxious person to death first, and trying him afterwards. This sort of justice was dealt to moss-troopers. Same as Jedburgh justice, Jeddart justice. We have also "Cupar justice" and "Abingdon law."

Jedwood justice—hang in haste and try at leisure.
—Scott, Fair Maid of Perth. Ch. xxxii.

Jefferies, Richard (1848-1887). English naturalist. Author of the stories The Gamekeeper at Home (1877); Red-Deer (1884); etc. They are remembered because of their superior descriptions of nature.

Jeffers, John Robinson (1887-). American poet, known for his belief in extreme individualism, tending toward a Nietzschean adulation of the hero (see NIETZSCHE, FRIEDRICH), his opposition to a commercial and mechanical civilization, his attraction to strong, primitive types, and his quasi-mystical preoccupation with sexual abnormality. His work, chiefly narrative and dramatic, shows the influence of Greek drama and Freudian psychology (see also Eugene O'NEILL) and is marked by tragedy and physical violence, the use of psycho-analytical and anthropological symbolism, and a loose, apocalyptic free-verse style. His work includes: Flagons and Apples (1912); Californians (1916); Tamar (1924); ROAN STALLION (1925), his best-known poem; The Women at Point Sur (1927); Cawdor (1928); Dear Judas (1929); Thurso's Landing (1932); Give Your Heart to the Hawks (1934); Solstice (1935); Such Counsels You Gave to Me (1937); Selected Poems (1939); Be Angry at the Sun (1941).

Jefferson, Thomas (1743-1826). Third president of the United States (1801-1809). A gentleman and a scholar of thorough legal and diplomatic training. Drafted the Declaration of Independence, became governor of Virginia (1779-1781), was U.S. minister to France (1785-1789), and founded the Democratic-Republican party as whose candidate he won the presidential election and became the successor of John Adams. As an opponent of the federative party he was bitterly opposed to Alexander Hamilton. During his administration occurred the war with Tripoli, the Louisiana Purchase, the reduction of the national debt, etc. He retired to his seat at Monticello in Virginia and died, as did John Adams, on Independence Day, July 4, 1826.

Jefferson Davis's Birthday. June 3, a holiday in most of the Southern states. See JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Jefferson's Birthday. April 13, celebrated as a holiday in Alabama and elsewhere. See THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Jeffreys, George. 1st Baron Jeffreys of Wem (1648-1689). English judge. As chief justice and lord chancellor of England (from 1685), he became notorious for his flagrant injustice. See BLOODY ASSIZES. When James II was overthrown, Jeffreys was imprisoned and died in the Tower.

Jehennam, see JAHANNAM.

Jehoash. One of the kings of JUDAH.

Jehovah, see ELOHISTIC AND JEHOVISTIC SCRIPTURES.

Jehovah's Witnesses. Members of the International Bible Students' Association. See RUSSELLITE.

Jehu. A coachman, especially one who drives at a rattling pace.

The watchman told, saying, . . . The driving is like the driving of Jehu the son of Nimshi; for he driveth furiously.—2 Kings ix. 20

Jehu overthrew Ahab's son Joram, king of Israel and seized the throne. See JEZEBEL.

Companions of Jehu. The CHOUANS were so called, from a fanciful analogy between their self-imposed task and that appointed to Jehu, on being set over the kingdom of Israel. Jehu was to cut off Ahab and Jezebel, with all their house, and all the priests of Baal. The Chouans were to cut off all who assassinated Louis XVI, and see that his brother (Jehu) was placed on the throne. Alexandre DUMAS has a romance entitled The Companions of Jehu (1851).

Jekyll, Dr. One of the two phases of one man, "the law of his members warring against the law of his mind." Dr. Jekyll is the "would do good," the other, Hyde, is "the evil that is present." The phrase comes from R. L. Stevenson's The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, first published in 1886. Dr. Jekyll is an honorable man, beloved by all for his philanthropic labors. Mr. Hyde is positively loathsome, lives without restraint, and plunges into all manner of evil. The truth is that Dr. Jekyll has discovered a potion, by means of which he can change himself into Mr. Hyde, and another to effect the change back again into Dr. Jekyll. By the time that he finally resolves, in revolt against a murder committed by Hyde, to have no more to do with him, it is too late. He finds himself transformed into Mr. Hyde without taking the potion, and, though he takes double doses of the other potion to keep himself Dr. Jekyll, he often lapses. At last he can procure no more of one of the ingredients of the mixture, and commits suicide.

Jellicoe, John Rushworth. 1st Earl Jellicoe (1859-1935). British naval commander. During World War I, commander of the grand fleet in battle of JUTLAND. Governor general of New Zealand (1920-1924). Member, Order of Merit (1916).

Jellicot, Old Goody. In Scott's WOODSTOCK, servant at the under-keeper's hut, Woodstock Forest.

Jellyby, Mrs. The type of the enthusiastic, unthinking philanthropist who forgets that charity should begin at home. She figures in Dickens' BLEAK HOUSE, and would do anything for the poor fan-makers and flower-girls of Borrioboola-Gha, but she shamefully neglects her own children and would bundle into the street a poor beggar dying of starvation on her step.

je maintiendrai (Fr.). Literally, I will maintain. Motto of the Netherlands and of William of Orange. Title of a novel by Marjorie BOWEN (I Will Maintain).

Jenkins, Mrs. Winifred. In Smollett's HUMPHRY CLINKER, Miss Tabitha Bramble's maid, noted for her bad spelling, misapplication of words, and ludicrous misnomers. Mrs. Winifred Jenkins is the original of Mrs. Malaprop.

Jenkins's Ear, see WAR OF JENKINS'S EAR.

Jenkinson, Ephraim. In Goldsmith's VICAR OF WAKEFIELD, a green old swindler, whom Dr. Primrose meets in a public tavern. Imposed on by his venerable appearance, apparent devoutness, learned talk about "cosmogony," and still more so by flattering praise of his work on the subject of monogamy, Dr. Primrose sells the swindler his horse, Old Blackberry, for a draft upon Farmer Flamborough. When the draft is presented for payment, the farmer tells the vicar that Ephraim Jenkinson "is the greatest rascal under heaven," and that he is the very rogue who sold Moses Primrose the spectacles. Subsequently Jenkinson becomes a reformed character.

Jenkinson, Mrs. Mountstuart. A clever social dictator in Meredith's novel, THE ECOIST.

Jenkyns, Misses Deborah and Mattie. Two old maid sisters, the chief characters in Mrs. Gaskell's CRANFORD. Their brother Peter Jenkyns is also an important character.

Jenner, Edward (1749-1823). English physician. First performed public vaccination on his own son (1796). The practice was accepted in the army and navy and soon spread to other countries.

Jennifer Lorn: A Sedate Extravaganza. An imaginative novel by Elinor WYLIE, published in 1923. It deals with the adventures of the heroine, Jennifer Lorn, in England and colonial India in the 18th century and is a delicate and poetic adaptation of the 18th-century picaresque tradition.

Jennings, Sarah. Duchess of Marlborough. See ATOSSA.

Jenny Wren. The sweetheart of Robin Redbreast in the old nursery rhyme. Robin promises Jenny, if she will be his wife, she shall "feed on cherry-pie and drink currant-wine." He says:

"I'll dress you like a goldfinch,
Or any peacock gay;
So, dearest Jen, if you'll be mine,
Let us appoint the day."

Jenny replies:

"Cherry-pie is very nice,
And so is currant wine;
But I must wear my plain brown gown
And never go too fine."

Jensen, Johannes Vilhelm (1873-). Danish lyric poet and novelist; representative of a modern school, opposed to that led by Georg BRANDES. His most ambitious work, The Long Journey, is a six-volume epic of the Cimbrians, i.e., the Teutonic race, from their emergence in Jutland after the ice age to Christopher Columbus. Jensen was awarded the Nobel prize for literature (1944).

Jenson. A style of type originally cut (about 1470) by the noted Venetian printer Nicholas Jenson (1420-1483).

Jephthah's Daughter. Jephthah was judge of Israel (Judges xi) who sacrificed his only daughter because he had vowed to offer up to Jehovah the first thing that met him on his return home from victory over the Ammonites.

Jeremiah. One of the Major Prophets of the Jews, who lived at the time of the conquest of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, and the subsequent carrying away of Judah into captivity. His prophecies are to be found in the book of Jeremiah and the dirge Lamentations.

Jeremiad. A pitiful tale, a tale of woe to produce compassion; so called from Lamentations of the prophet Jeremiah.

Jericho. Used in a number of phrases for the sake of giving verbal definition to some altogether indefinite place. The reason for fixing on this particular town is possibly to be found in 2 Sam. x. 5, and 1 Chron. xix. 5.

And the king said, Tarry at Jericho until your beards be grown.

Another derivation is from Jericho, the manor of Blackmore, near Chelmsford. Here Henry VIII had a house of pleasure, and when he was absent on some affair of gallantry, the expression in vogue was, he's gone to Jericho. go to Jericho with you. A euphemistic turn of phrase for "Go and hang yourself," or something more offensive still.

gone to Jericho. No one knows where. I wish you were at Jericho. Anywhere out of my way.

Jeritza, Maria (1887?-). Operatic soprano, chiefly known for her interpretation of Wagnerian rôles and the title-rôle in Puccini's Tosca. Also widely acclaimed as a concert singer. Imperial Opera, Vienna (1913) and Metropolitan Opera Company, New York (1921).

Jermyn, Matthew. In George Eliot's FELIX HOLT, an attorney who is in reality the father of Mrs. Transome's son Harold.

Jeroboam. In the Old Testament, the "son of Nebat who made Israel to sin." Under his leadership the ten tribes revolted against Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, and set up a separate state, of which he became king. His name is a byword for wickedness because of the idol-worship he initiated.

Jeroboam. A very large wine bottle or flagon is so called in allusion to this Biblical Jeroboam, the "mighty man of valor" (1 Kings xi. 28, xiv. 16). Its capacity is not very definite.

Jerome, A Poor Man. A novel of New England life by Mary E. Wilkins FREEMAN (1897).

Jerome, Jerome Klapka (1859-1927). English humorist and playwright. Best known for his Three Men in a Boat (1889), and The Passing of the Third Floor Back (1908), a successful modern morality play.

Jerome, St. See under SAINTS.

Jerome Coignard, see COIGNARD.

Jerónimo. The chief character in The Spanish Tragedy by Thomas KYP (acted about 1590). On finding his application to the king ill-timed, he says to himself, "Go by, Jerónimo," which tickled the fancy of the audience so that it became for a time a street jest, and was introduced into many contemporary plays, as in Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew (Induction), Jonson's Every Man in his Humour (I. v), Dekker's Shoemaker's Holiday (II. 1), etc.

Jerrymandering, see GERRYMANDERING.

Jerusalem. (1) A long, mystical poem by William BLAKE (1804), in which he presents his theory that the world of "imagination" is a world of eternity after death. See entry IMAGINATION for rôle of this function of the intellect in romantic aesthetics.

(2) A collection of stories by Selma LAGERLÖF (1901), dealing with an old peasant family, the Ingmars of Ingmarson, and their devotion to the family farm in Sweden. The title refers to a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, for which the land is finally sold at auction by one member of the family, but another Ingmar gives up his fiancée and marries a rich wife to buy it back.

Jerusalem Delivered. An Italian epic poem in twenty books, by Torquato TASSO. It was published in 1581, and was translated into English by Edward Fairfax in 1600. The tale is as follows:

The Crusaders, encamped on the plains of Tortosa, choose Godfrey for their chief, and Alandine, King of Jerusalem, makes preparations of defense. The overtures of Argantes to Godfrey are declined and he declares war in the name of the King of Egypt. When the Christian army reaches Jerusalem, the King of Damascus sends Armida to beguile the Christians; she tells an artful tale by which she draws off several of the most puissant. It is found that Jerusalem can never be taken without the aid of Rinaldo; but Rinaldo has withdrawn from the army, because Godfrey cited him to answer for the death of Gernando, slain in a duel. Godfrey, being informed that the hero is dallying with Armida in the enchanted island, sends to invite him back to the army. He returns, and Jerusalem is taken in a night attack. As for Armida, after setting fire to her palace, she flees into Egypt, and offers to marry any knight who slays Rinaldo; but when she finds the Christian army is successful, she flees from the field. The love of Rinaldo returns; he pursues her and she relents. The poem concludes with the triumphant entry of the Christian army into the Holy City, and their devotions at the tomb of the Redeemer. The two chief episodes are the loves of Olindo and Sophronia, and of Tancred and Corinda.

Jerusalem the Golden. A hymn (published 1858) translated by John Mason NEALE from the Latin of BERNARD OF CLUNY.

Jervis, Mrs. In Richardson's PAMELA, the virtuous housekeeper of young Squire B. Mrs. Jervis protects Pamela when her young master assails her.

Jessamy Bride. The name given by Oliver GOLDSMITH to Mary Horneck when he fell in love with her in 1769. Title of a novel by F. Frankfort Moore.

Jesse. In the Old Testament, the father of David. A Jesse tree is a genealogical tree usually represented as a vine or as a large brass candlestick with many branches, tracing the ancestry of Christ, called a "rod out of the stem of Jesse." (Is. xi. 1.) Jesse is himself sometimes represented in a recumbent position with the vine rising out of his loins; hence a stained-glass window representing him thus with a tree shooting from him containing the pedigree of Jesus is called a Jesse window.

Jesse, Fryniwyd Tennyson. English novelist, dramatist, criminologist. Grandniece of Lord TENNYSON. She evolved the theory that there were "born murderers," i.e., people destined to be murdered. A Pin to See the Peep-show (1934) is a novel based on the Thompson-Bywaters murder.

Jessup, Doremus. In Sinclair Lewis' IT CAN'T HAPPEN HERE, editor of a small newspaper in Vermont, honest and liberal in his views but forced into revolutionary action by the oppressions of an American Fascist dictatorship set up by President Berzelius WINDRIP.

Jest, The. A play by Sem BENELLI (1917) in which John and Lionel Barrymore starred. Also made into an opera.

Jesuit. The popular name of members of the "Society of Jesus," founded by St. Ignatius Loyola (see under SAINT) in 1533, who, when asked what name he would give his order, replied, "We are a little battalion of Jesus." The order was founded to combat the Reformation and to propagate the Roman Catholic faith among the heathen, but through its discipline, organization, and methods of secrecy, it soon acquired such political power that it came into conflict with both the civil and religious authorities. It was driven from France in 1594, from England in 1579, from Venice in 1607, from Spain in 1767, from Naples in 1768; in 1773 it was suppressed by Pope Clement XIV, but was revived in 1814.

Owing to the casuistical principles maintained by many of its leaders and attributed to the order as a whole, the name Jesuit has acquired a very opprobrious signification both in Protestant and Roman Catholic countries, and a Jesuit, or Jesuitical person has come to mean (secondarily) a deceiver or prevaricator.

Jesuit Martyrs of North America. Eight French missionaries, the priests Isaac Jogues, John de Brebeuf, Noel Chabanel, Anthony Daniel, Charles Garnier, Gabriel Lalemant, and the laymen René Goupil and John Lalonde, whom the Indians martyred in the 17th century in New York and Canada. They were canonized by Pope Pius XI (1930). Cf. the epic poem by the Canadian poet Edwin John Pratt, Brebeuf and His Brethren.

Jesus, Lover of My Soul. A hymn by Charles WESLEY. It was first published in the grammatically more orthodox form of Jesu, Lover of My Soul (1740).

Jevons, Tasker. The hero of May Sinclair's novel, The Belfry, supposed to be a combination of Arnold BENNETT and H. G. WELLS.

Jevons, William Stanley (1835-1882). English economist and logician. He was the son of a nailmaker. Among his numerous books is one on the exhaustion of coal mines (1865).

Jew, the Wandering, see WANDERING JEW.

Jewel Song, The. An aria in the third act of GOUNOD'S Faust.

Jewett, Sarah Orne (1849-1909). American novelist and short-story writer, known for her local-color stories of Maine. Her works include the following collections of sketches and tales: Deephaven (1877); Old Friends and New (1879); Country By-Ways (1881); A White Heron, And Other Stories (1886); The King of Folly Island, And Other People (1888); Strangers and Wayfarers (1890); A Native of Winby, And Other Tales (1893); The Country of the Pointed Firs (1896), considered to contain her best work; The Queen's Twin, And Other Stories (1899). A Country Doctor (1884), A Marsh Island (1885), and The Toy Lover (1901) are novels. Because of her charming style, her perception, and her sympathetic understanding of her subjects, Sarah Orne Jewett is regarded as one of the best of the LOCAL COLOR writers. She influenced the writing of Willa CATHER. (Cf. the latter's Not Under Forty).

Jewish. For the Jewish Plato, the Jewish Socrates, etc., see PLATO, SOCRATES.

Jewkes, Mrs. A detestable character in Richardson's PAMELA.

Jew of Malta, The. A tragic drama by Christopher MARLOWE (c. 1590), anticipating The Merchant of Venice in plot. The Jew of the title is BARABAS.

Jezebel, a painted. A flaunting woman of bold spirit but loose morals; so called from Jezebel, wife of Ahab, king of Israel (see 2 Kings ix, 31).

John MASEFIELD has a poetic drama A King's Daughter, on the story of Jezebel and Jehu.

Jill. A generic name for a lass, a sweetheart. See also JACK AND JILL.

Jim. In Mark Twain's HUCKLEBERRY FINN, Huck's faithful Negro friend who accompanies him down the river on his raft. In the latter part of the book Jim is imprisoned, and Huck and his pal, Tom Sawyer, outdo themselves in the effort to get him free.

Jim, Lord. Titular hero of Joseph Conrad's LORD JIM.

Jim Bludso. A poem by John HAY, one of his PIKE COUNTY BALLADS, relating the heroism of the engineer of a steamboat on the Mississippi. When the vessel catches fire, he beaches it and sacrifices himself to save his passengers. The poem is based on an actual incident; in real life the engineer was Oliver Fairchild.

Jim Crow. A Negro. The expression came from a popular Negro song and dance first inroduced by Thomas D. Rice into a play called The Rifle by Solon Robinson. The story is that Rice picked up the song and peculiar limping dance by accident from an old Negro in Louisville, Kentucky, in 1828, whom he heard singing—

Wheel about, turn about
Do jis so,
An' ebery time I wheel about
I jump Jim Crow.

Jim Crow car. A railroad or street car in the southern U.S. for the use of Negroes. In many of the Southern states they are forbidden to sit elsewhere.

Jimmy. In Masefield's WIDOW IN THE BYE STREET.

Jinaglo, John of. A fantasy by Laurence HOUSMAN (1912).

Jingle, Alfred. In Dickens' PICKWICK PAPERS, a strolling actor, who, by his powers of amusing others and his sharp-wittedness, imposes for a time on the members of the Pickwick Club, and is admitted to their intimacy; but being found to be an impostor, he is dropped by them. The generosity of Mr. Pickwick, in rescuing Jingle from the Fleet, reclaims him, and he quits England.

Jingling Geordie. Nickname for George HERIOT. Cf. Scott's Fortunes of Nigel.

Jingo. A word from the unmeaning jargon of the 17th-century conjurers (see HOCUS-FOCUS), probably substituted for God, in the same way as Gosh, Golly, etc., are. In Motteux's translation of Rabelais (1694), where the original reads par Dieu (Bk. iv. lvi), the English rendering is "By jingo"; but there is a possibility that the word is Basque jinko or jainko, God, and was introduced by sailors.

Hey, Jingo! What the de'il's the matter?
Do mermaids swim in Dartford water?
Swift: Actaeon or The Original Horn Fair.

The later meaning of the word, a blustering so-called "patriot" who is itching to go to war on the slightest provocation—a Chauvinist in France—is from a music-hall song by G. W. Hunt, which was popular in 1878 when the country was supposed to be on the verge of intervening in the Russo-Turkish War on behalf of the Turks:

We don't want to fight; but, by Jingo, if we do,
We've got the ships, we've got the men, and got the money too.

The Russophobes became known as the Jingoes, and such policy has been labeled Jingoism ever since.

Jiniwin, Mrs. In Dickens' OLD CURIOSITY SHOP, a widow, the mother of Mrs. Quilp. She is a shrewd, ill-tempered old woman, who lives with her son-in-law in Tower Street.

jinn. Demons of Arabian mythology, according to fable created from fire two thousand years before Adam was made of earth, and said to be governed by a race of kings named Suleyman, one of whom "built the pyramids." Their chief abode is the mountain Kaf, and they assume the forms of serpents, dogs, cats, monsters, or even human beings, and become invisible at pleasure. The evil jinn are hideously ugly, but the good are exquisitely beautiful. The word is a plural; its singular is jinnée. A Jinnée is the chief character in The Brass Bottle, by "F. ANSTEEY."

Jinnah, Mohammed Ali (1876-1948). Head of the Moslems in India. Read law in Lincoln's Inn, London, after going to school in Bombay. Worked for Moslem-Hindu unity in World War I. Governor-General (since 1947) of the Dominion of Pakistan. The name is derived as follows:

P for Punjab, A for the Afghans of the North-West Frontier, K for Kashmir, S for Sind, Tan from Baluchistan. "Pak" also means "pure" in Urdu, with "stan" means "Land of the Pure."

Jinnistan. The Fairy Land of the Arabs.

Jinny. In Virginia Woolf's THE WAVES a child, pretty, fond of flattery, and "ambitious of distinction," who grows up to be a society beauty loved by many men and afraid of growing old. In the novel she is paired with NEVILLE.

Jip. In Dickens' DAVID COPPERFIELD, the pet dog of David's child wife, Dora.

jitterbug. A devotee of swing music, that is, a bug (not the insect but a slightly crazy enthusiast) who behaves as though he had the jitters (a mixture of gin and bitters).

jive. Swing music or selections in this style. Also, the lingo of swing musicians. JITTERBUGS are "hep to jive."

Jno Citizen, see under EARWICKER.

Jo. In Dickens' BLEAK HOUSE (1852), a poor little outcast, living in one of the back slums of London, called "Tom All Alone's." The little human waif is hounded about from place to place, till he dies of want.

Joad. A family of "OKIES" in John Steinbeck's THE GRAPES OF WRATH. The family includes: "Grampa" and "Granma," who die on the way to California; Uncle John; Pa, a rather weak and quiet man; Ma, strong and courageous, who is the ruler and leader of the family; Tom, the hero, who was imprisoned in Oklahoma for killing a man, is involved in further murder in the California fruit-growing region, and later becomes a labor organizer; Noah, who leaves the group before they reach California; Rose of Sharon (called "Rosasharn") who is pregnant; Connie, Rose of Sharon's husband, who runs away when the family comes into difficulties in California; Al; and Ruthie and Winfield, children.

Joad, Cyril Edwin Mitchinson (1891-). English philosopher of considerable individuality: "persuasive, glib, caustic, profound." He has written, among other books, Common Sense Ethics (1921); Common Sense Theology (1922); Guide to Philosophy (1936); The Testament of Joad (1937); Good and Evil (1943); etc.

Joan, see DARBY AND JOAN.

Joan, Pope. A mythical female pope, fabled in the Middle Ages to have succeeded Leo IV (855). The vulgar tale is that Joan conceived a violent passion for the monk Folda and in order to get admission to him assumed the monastic habit. Being clever and popular, she was elected pope, but was discovered through giving birth to a child during her enthronization. The whole story has long since been exploded.

The name was given to a once popular card-game played with an ordinary pack minus the eight of diamonds (called the "Pope Joan"), and a circular revolving tray divided into eight compartments.

Joan of Arc. (Fr. Jeanne d'Arc.) A heroine of French history, surnamed La Pucelle and known as the Maid of Orleans. She was born in the village of Domrémy, the child of poor country folk. While still a mere girl, she assumed military leadership, raised the English siege of Orleans in 1429 and crowned the Dauphin Charles VII. Shortly afterward she was taken prisoner by the English and burned as a witch.

Joan has been variously represented in literature. In many works, notably in VOLTAIRE's poem La Pucelle d'Orléans (1738) and in early English representations she appears in very uncomplimentary character. SCHILLER's famous tragedy, Die Jungfrau von Orléans (1801), Mark TWAIN's historical romance, Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc (1896) Percy MACKAYE's Jeanne d'Arc (1906) Anatole FRANCE's Jeanne d'Arc (Fr., 1908), and Bernard SHAW's drama, Saint Joan (1922), are the most outstanding attempts to present her tragic story in an idealistic vein that is nevertheless true to history.

Job. The personification of poverty and patience, in allusion to the patriarch whose history is given in the Bible. According to the story, which is in the form of a poetic drama (Book of Job), the Lord gave Satan permission to test Job. His wealth thereupon vanished, his children died and he was smitten with boils. In spite of his wife's advice to "curse God and die" he remained steadfast, even under the admonitions of his friends, the "three false comforters." He was finally restored to health and prosperity "greater than the first."

In the Koran, Job's wife is said to have been either Rahmeh, daughter of Ephraim, son of Joseph, or Makhir, daughter of Manasses; and the tradition is recorded that Job, at the command of God, struck the earth with his foot from the dunghill where he lay, and instantly there welled up a spring of water with which his wife washed his sores, and they were miraculously healed.

Job's comforter. One who means to sympathize with you in your grief, but says that you brought it on yourself, thus in reality adding weight to your sorrow.

Job's post. A bringer of bad news.

Job's pound. Bridewell prison.

Joblilies. A famous nonsense word. See PANJANDRUM.

There were present the Picinnies, and the Joblilies, and the Garyulies, and the Grand Panjandrum himself.—Footie, The Quarterly Review, xciv. 516, 517.

Jocasta. In classic legend, the mother of OEDIPUS. She plays a prominent rôle in all the tragedies concerning him.

Jocelyn. A narrative poem by Alphonse LAMARTINE (1836). The hero is a priest. As a lad he finds refuge from war in an Alpine cave, where he lives with another boy, who turns out to be a girl named Laurence. Although he loves her, he remains true to his priestly vows and leaves her for a life of self-denying devotion.

Jocelyn, Rose. Heroine of Meredith's novel, EVAN HARRINGTON.

Jock o' Hazeldean. A ballad by SCOTT. Jock is beloved by a "ladye fair." The lady's father wants her to marry Frank, "the chief of Errington and laird of Langley Dale," rich, brave, and gallant; but "aye she let the tears down fa' for Jock o' Hazeldean." At length the wedding morn arrives, the kirk is gaily decked, the priest and bridegroom, with dame and knight, are duly assembled; but no bride can be seen, for she has crossed the border and given her hand to Jock of Hazeldean. This ballad is a modernized version of an ancient ballad entitled Jock o' Hazelgreen.

Joconde. A tale by LA FONTAINE (1665), which is a paraphrase of an episode in Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, where Joconde is known as Giocondo. The hero, a wondrous breaker of hearts, is called to dispute his skill in this art with Astolpho. He discovers first his own, then Astolpho's wife in secret love affairs, but the two heroes can think of no better way to revenge themselves on the sex than by breaking more hearts. The tale was made into a farce by Fagan (1740), and into two comic operas, the first by DeForge (1790), the second by Etienne and Nicolo (1814).

Joconde, la Belle, see MONA LISA.

Jocoseria. Title of a book of lyrics by Robert Browning, including the famous Never the Time and The Place (1863). It means "mingled mirth and seriousness," and comes from the adjective "joco-serious."

Joel. One of the Minor Prophets of the Old Testament; also, the book of prophecy called by his name.

Joe Miller. A jestbook or a joke; usually a stale joke. See MILLER, JOSEPH.

Joey. See under GRIMALDI, JOSEPH.

Joffre, Joseph Jacques Césaire (1852-1931). In World War I, commander in chief of the French armies and victor in the decisive battle of the Marne (Sept., 1914) where he stopped the German advance on Paris. Created field marshal and marshal of France (1917).

John, Don. In Shakespeare's comedy, MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING, the bastard brother of Don Pedro, prince of Aragon. In order to torment the governor, Don John tries to mar the happiness of his daughter Hero, who is about to be married to Lord Claudio, by false accusation against Hero, but his perfidy is finally unmasked.

John, Friar. A prominent character in Rabelais' GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, a tall, lean, wide-mouthed, long-nosed friar of Seville, who dispatches his matins with wonderful celerity, and runs through his vigils quicker than any of his fraternity. He swears lustily and is a Trojan to fight:

a right monk if ever there was any, since the monkish world monk'd a monkery (I, xxvii).

In the original he is called "Friar John des Entommeures." Urquhart mistakenly translated this as "of the Funnels," although "of the Trenchermen" is the best equivalent (from Fr. entamer, to broach, to carve, with reference to a hearty appetite). Entonnnoirs are "funnels," and as this word has been used as slang for the throat, perhaps that accounts for the mistake.

John, Little. A semi-legendary character in the Robin Hood cycle, a big stalwart fellow, first named John Little (or John Nailor), who encountered Robin Hood, and gave him a sound thrashing, after which he was rechristened, and Robin stood godfather. He is introduced by Scott in THE TALISMAN.

"This infant was called John Little," quoth he;

"Which name shall be changed anon.

The words we'll transpose, so wherever he goes,
His name shall be called Little John."

Ritson, Robin Hood, xxi.

John-a-dreams. A stupid, dreamy fellow, always in a brown study and half asleep.

"Yet I,

A dull and muddy-mettled rascal, peak,
Like John-a-dreams, unpregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing."

Shakespeare, Hamlet, ii, 2.

John Anderson, my Jo. Burns' well-known poem of this title is founded on an old song.

But now your brow is bald, John,
Your locks are like the snow;
But blessings on your frosty pow

John-a-Nokes and John-a-Stiles. Names formerly given, instead of the very impersonal "A and B," to fictitious persons in an imaginary action at law; hence, either name may stand for "just anybody." See also DOE.

Poets gve names to men they write of, which argueth a conceite of an actuall truth, and so, not being true, proves a falshood And doth the Lawyer lye then, when under the names of John a stile and John a noakes, hee puts his case?—Sir Philip Sidney, An Apologie for Poetrie (1595).

John Bockhold or Boccold. John of Leyden. See Le PROPHET.

John Bull. The national nickname for an Englishman, represented as a bluff, kind-hearted, bull-headed farmer. The character is from Dr. Arbuthnot's satire The History of John Bull, which was originally published in 1712 as Law is a Bottomless Pit. John Bull is the Englishman, the Frenchman is termed Lewis Baboon, the Dutchman Nicholas Frog, etc.

One would think, in personifying itself, a nation would . . . picture something grand, heroic, and imposing, but it is characteristic of the peculiar humour of the English, and of their love for what is blunt, comic and familiar, that they have embodied their national oddities in the figure of a sturdy, corpulent old fellow . . . with red waistcoat, leather breeches, and a stout oaken cudgel . . . [whom they call] John Bull.—Washington Irving

In the early years of the 19th century there was a scurrilous journal of this name, and in the early years of the 20th (1906) the name was adopted for a British weekly edited by Mr. Horatio Bottomley. Owing to the fact that it forms a convenient vent for all sorts of real and imaginary grievances, the phrase Why not write to John Bull about it? is sometimes heard.

George Bernard SHAW has a play entitled John Bull's Other Island (1904), concerned with the Irish question.

See also NICKNAMES OF NATIONALITIES.

John Company. The old "Honorable East India Company." It is said that "John" is a perversion of "Hon.," but probably "John Company" is allied to the familiar "John Bull."

John Doe, see DOE.

John Dory. A popular ballad of the 14th century, often referred to in later literature. John Dory was a French pirate, who was taken prisoner by the English.

John Dory is also the name given to a golden yellow fish, the Zeus faber.

John Drum's Entertainment. See under DRUM.

John Duns Scotus, see DUNS SCOTUS, JOHN.

John Ferguson. A play by St. John ERVINE (1915). The hero is an old man of sterling character whose children are involved in tragedy which he is powerless to prevent. When his daughter Hannah is betrayed, her brother Andrew murders the offender. Hannah's boastful, cowardly lover, Jimmy Caesar, is accused of the crime, but Andrew confesses and gives himself up to justice. Presented in New York by the Theatre Guild May 13, 1919. It started the Guild on the road to success.

John Gabriel Borkman. A drama by Henrik IBSEN (1866). Bernard Shaw, in his Dramatic Opinions, describes the titular hero as "a man of the most energetic imagination whose illusions feed on his misfortunes and whose conception of his own power grows hyperbolic and Napoleonic in his solitude and impotence."

John Gilpin. A humorous ballad by William COWPER, the full title of which reads The Diverting History of John Gilpin, Showing How He Went further than He Intended and Came Safe Home Again (1782). Gilpin's wife says to him, "Though we have been married twenty years, we have taken no holiday"; and at her advice the well-to-do linen-draper agrees to make a family party, and dine at the Bell, at Edmonton. Mrs. Gilpin, her sister, and four children go in the chaise, and Gilpin promises to follow on horseback. The horse begins to trot, and then to gallop, and John, being a bad rider, grasps the mane with both his hands. On goes the horse and off flies John Gilpin's cloak, together with his hat and wig. The dogs bark, the children scream, the turnpike-men, thinking he is riding for a wager, fling open their gates. He flies through Edmonton, and never stops till he reaches Ware. Here he heads his horse back toward Edmonton, but is unable to stop until he reaches his original starting place in London. John Gilpin was a Mr. Beyer, of Paternoster Row, who died in 1791, and it was Lady Austin who told the anecdote to the poet.

John Halifax, Gentleman. A novel by Dinah Maria Mulock Craik (1856). The hero is an orphan dependent entirely on his own resources, but he has the inspiration of an autograph in one of his dead father's books, "John Halifax, Gentleman," which sets for him an ideal. His friendship with Phineas Fletcher, his employer's invalid son, and his love for Ursula March, furnish much of the interest of the book. Eventually he wins through to well-deserved success.

John Hancock. An autograph signature. See under HANCOCK, JOHN.

John Long, the carrier, to wait for. To wait a long time; to wait for John, who keeps us a long time.

Johnny Appleseed. Nickname of John Chapman (1774-1845), a New England eccentric who settled (about 1800 or 1810) in the Ohio valley and made it his business to plant apple seeds all over the countryside and to tend the growing trees. He became the hero of a body of popular legends of great folkloristic interest. Cf. Vachel Lindsay, In Praise of Johnny Appleseed.

Johnny Reb. In the U.S. Civil War, a Confederate. Obviously short for Johnny Rebel.

John of Austria, Don (1547-1578). Spanish general who won the great naval battle of Lepanto over the Turks (1571). Cf. Chesterton's ballad Lepanto, reprinted in Burton E. Stevenson's The Home Book of Modern Verse.

John o' Groat's. The story is that John o' Groat (or Jan Groot) came with his two brothers from Holland in the reign of James IV of Scotland, and purchased lands on the extreme northeastern coast of Scotland. In time the o' Groats increased, and there came to be eight families of the name. They met regularly once a year in the house built by the founder, but on one occasion a question of precedence arose, and John o' Groat promised them the next time they came he would contrive to satisfy them all. Accordingly he built an eight-sided room, with a door in each side, and placed an octagonal table therein. This building went ever after with the name of John o' Groat's House; its site is the Berubium of Ptolemy, in the vicinity of Duncansby Head.

Hear, land o'cakes and brither Scots,
Frae Maidenkirke to Johnny Groat's . . .
A chield's amang you takin' notes,
And, faith, he'll prent it.
Burns, Captain Grose.

from John o' Groat's to the land's end.
From Dan to Beersheba, from one end of Great Britain to the other.

John Peel. An old English hunting song, beginning:

Do you ken John Peel, with his coat so gay,
Do you ken John Peel, when he's far, far away

It is one of the songs echoed throughout FINNEGANS WAKE by James Joyce.

Johns, Orrick (1887-1946). American poet. Winner of Lyric Year national poetry prize (1912) with "Second Avenue." Wild Plum (1926); Time of Our Lives, the Story of My Father and Myself (1937); etc. Co-organizer of first American Writers' Congress and League of American Writers.

Johnson, alias Ramarrez. The outlaw hero of THE GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST.

Johnson, Andrew (1808-1875). Seventeenth president of the United States (1865-1869). Nominated vice-president by Republicans to placate Democrats. Succeeded to presidency on death of Lincoln. Impeached (1868) but acquitted by a vote of 35 to 19. His friction with the Republican majority in Congress was basically due to his Democratic adherence to the principle of State rights.

Johnson, Edward (1881?-). Canadian-born opera singer. General manager, Metropolitan Opera Association, New York City (from 1935).

Johnson, Esther. See under STELLA.

Johnson, Hewlett (1874-). English churchman. Dean of Canterbury (from 1931). Known as "the Red Dean." Author of The Socialist Sixth of the World (1940; American title, The Soviet Power).

Johnson, Hugh Samuel (1882-1942). American lawyer and army officer. Administrator, NRA (1933-1934), New York City WPA (1935), etc. Opponent of Roosevelt in third presidential election (1940).

Johnson, James Weldon (1871-1938). American Negro poet and essayist. Editor of Negro anthologies. Vigorous polemic writer for his race. Selected Poems (1936). Killed in railroad accident.

Johnson, Paul. In John Dos Passos' U.S.A., a young American soldier in France during World War I who is married by Eveline HUTCHINS as a means of providing herself with security.

Johnson, Owen McMahon (1878-). Son of Robert Underwood JOHNSON. American novelist and short-story writer. Famous for his Lawrenceville school stories. Also author of adult novels and plays.

Johnson, Robert Underwood (1853-1937). American editor, diplomat, poet. Editor in chief, Century Magazine (1909-1913). Chiefly responsible for the marble Hall of Fame at New York University in uptown New York City. Director of it (from 1919), and secretary of the American Academy of Arts and Letters.

Johnson, Samuel (1696-1772). American philosopher, the first native disciple of the 18th-century movement of RATIONALISM. He corresponded with Bishop BERKELEY when the British philosopher was visting in America in 1729, and debated with Jonathan Dickinson on CALVINISM, attacking the doctrine of Predestination. Johnson is not considered to have been a thinker of any great value, but he is known for his introduction into America of the leading philosophical ideas circulating in Europe in the early 18th century. His works include: Introduction to Philosophy (1731); A Letter from Aristocles to Authodes Concerning the Sovereignty and Promise of God (1745); System of Morality (1746); Elementa Philosophica (1752).

Johnson, Samuel (1709-1784). English poet, critic, and man of letters, the literary dictator of England in the latter half of the 18th century and one of the most famous personalities of his time, known for his eccentricity of behavior, slovenliness of dress and manner, indolence, peevishness, arrogance, and predilection for learning. He wrote essays, philosophical poems, satires according to the Latin tradition, classical tragedies, fiction, and criticism, in a neo-classical style marked by heaviness, awkwardness, excessive Latinity, and complicated generality. Johnson's works include: London (1738), a satirical poem; The Vanity of Human Wishes (1749), a philosophical poem; Irene (1749), a classical tragedy which the actor David Garrick tried in vain to produce; the RAMBLER papers (1750-1752); his Dictionary (1755), his most famous work, in some respects an innovation in lexicography but chiefly important because of the picture its subjective definitions give of the personality of the author; RASSELAS, PRINCE OF ABYSSINIA (1759), a didactic novel; the IDLER papers (1758-1760); and Lives of the Poets (1779-1781), a series of critical biographies presenting the typical neo-classical theories of the time. In his early youth Johnson was forced to do hack-writing to support himself (1738-1746) and lived on GRUB STREET. He had the strongest influence of any of his contemporaries on the literary thought and style of the latter 18th century, and became famous in later periods through the celebrated biography written by James BOSWELL. See also METAPHYSICAL POETS.

Johnsonese. A complicated, Latinized literary style like that of Samuel Johnson.

I own I like not Johnson's turgid style,
That gives an inch th' importance of a mile:
Casts of manure a waggon-load around,
To raise a simple daisy from the ground,
Uplifts the club of Hercules—for what?
To crush a butterfly or brain a gnat;
Creates a whirlwind from the earth, to draw
A goose's feather or exalt a straw.
Dr. John Wolcot, Peter Pindar (1816).

Johnson's Circle. A group of literary and professional men associated with Samuel Johnson. Among them were: David GARRICK, the actor; Jones, the philologist; Edmund BURKE, Edward GIBBON, Oliver GOLDSMITH, and Joshua REYNOLDS.

Johnston, Albert Sidney (1803-1862). During U.S. Civil War, famous Confederate general. Defeated Grant in battle at Shiloh Church, but was himself killed in the same action (April 6, 1862).

Johnston, Sir Harry Hamilton (1858-1927). British explorer and writer. "Not only wrote the history of Africa but often made it." The Gay-Donbays (1919), a novel continuing the history of characters in Dickens' Donbey and Son, and a long list of other books.

Johnston, Joseph Eggleston (1807-1891). American Confederate general. Lost Vicksburg to Grant (1863). Surrendered to Sherman (1865) at Durham Station, N.C. Author of a Narrative of Military Operations Directed, during the Late War between the States, by Joseph E. Johnston (1874). U.S. Commissioner of railroads (1887-1891).

Johnston, Mary (1870-1936). American historical novelist, author of the phenomenally popular To Have and to Hold (1900) Audrey (1902), the Civil War novels (told from the Confederate point of view) The Long Roll (1911) and Cease Firing (1912), and mystical novels like Silver Cross (1921).

Johnstone, Christie, see CHRITIE JOHNSTONE.

Johnstown flood. May 31, 1889, in Johnstown, Pa., caused by the bursting of a reservoir. Cost 2,205 lives and a property loss of ten million dollars.

John the Baptist, St., and John the Beloved Disciple; see under SAINTS; SALOME.

John Ward, Preacher. A once widely discussed novel by Margaret DELAND (1888), presenting the problem of the married life of an orthodox minister and a wife whose religious tendencies are liberal.

Joinville, Jean de (1224?-1317). French chronicler. Wrote L'Histoire de Saint Louis (1305-1309), which is particularly valuable since author and king were connected by ties of personal friendship and both had been on a crusade together.

Jókai, Maurus (1825-1904). Hungarian novelist and dramatist of political propensities. Leader in the revolution of 1848.

Joliet, Louis (1645-1700). Canadian-French explorer. Intended for the priesthood, he became a merchant and is remembered for his trips through the Mississippi valley and the region of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and Hudson Bay.

Jolly Beggars, The. A poem by Robert BURNS, published in 1799, although written in 1785. It is in the form of a cantata and vigorously presents a series of songs by a group of beggars who tell variously of their sorrows, their wretchedness, their cynicism and disillusionments, and their scorn for the church and wealthy nobility. Its realism, satire, and drama have been highly praised by critics, many of whom regard it as Burns' greatest work.

Jolly God, the, see BACCHUS.

Jolly Roger. The black flag of a pirate ship.

Jolyon. See under FORSYTE SAGA.

Jonah. A famous Biblical prophet, said to have been swallowed by a whale. Instructed by Jehovah to go to preach to the great and wicked city of Nineveh, he wilfully took ship in another direction. A great storm arose, and the sailors, after casting lots, threw Jonah into the sea to appease the deity. After the "great fish" had deposited Jonah on dry land, he went to Nineveh and was the cause of widespread repentance in that city. His story is told in the book of Jonah.

Jonathan. In the Old Testament, the son of King Saul, famed for his friendship with David.

Jonathan's arrows. They were shot to give warning, and not to hurt. (1 Sam. xx. 36.)

Jonathan Oldbuck, see OLDBUCK, JONATHAN.

Jonathan Oldstyle, see OLDSTYLE, JONATHAN.

Jonathan Ploughboy, see PLOUGHBOY, JONATHAN.

Jonathan Wild, see WILD, JONATHAN.

Jones. Everybody's neighbor; the other fellow; Mr. Averageman. He and his family correspond to the Dubois in French, to Meier and Mullei in German, etc.

Jones. A gentleman adventurer in Conrad's VICTORY.

Jones, Sir Henry Arthur (1851-1929). English playwright, known for his presentation of social relationships and social problems in his plays, several of which were influenced by Ibsen. His works include: Breaking a Butterfly (1885); Saints and Sinners (1891); MICHAEL AND HIS LOST ANGEL (1896); and Mrs. Dane's Defense (1900).

Jones, Howard Mumford (1892-). American educator and poet, playwright, and critic.

Jones, Inigo (1573-1652). English architect. Sometimes referred to as "the English Palladio." Designed stage sets for court masques written by JONSON, HEYWOOD, DAVENANT, etc. Designed queen's home at Greenwich, Lincoln's Inn Chapel, banqueting hall at Whitehall (1619-1622), reconstruction of St. Paul's Cathedral, Covent Garden piazza, etc. In 1646 he was fined for being a favorite of the king and a Catholic. He was painted twice by Vandyck.

Jones, John Paul (1747-1792). An American seaman famed for his exploits in the Revolution. He is the hero of Cooper's novel THE PILOT, and a prominent character in Churchill's RICHARD CARVEL.

Jonson, Ben (1572-1637). English poet and dramatist, once a bricklayer, soldier, and playwright for the Elizabethan theatrical manager Philip Henslowe, later leading author of masques at the court and pensioned under James I and Charles I as the "King's poet," a forerunner of the poet laureateship. Jonson is known for his satire, his classicism, his rigid observance of theoretic principles in his writing, his opposition to the romantic attitude and style of his contemporary playwrights, including Shakespeare, and his use of the theory of "humors." See HUMOR. His plays, chiefly comedies, for which he was most famous in his own time, include: EVERY MAN IN HIS HUMOR (1598); Every Man Out of His Humor (1600); Cynthia's Revels (1600); The Poetaster (1601); Sejanus (1603) and Catiline (1611), classical tragedies; Eastward Ho (1605), in collaboration with MARSTON and CHAPMAN; VOLPONE, OR THE FOX (1606); EPICENE, OR THE SILENT WOMAN (1609); THE ALCHEMIST (1610); BARTHOLOMEW FAIR (1614); The Devil Is an Ass (1616); The Staple of News (1625); The New Inn (1629); The Magnetic Lady (1632); and Tale of a Tub (1633). Jonson took part in the quarrel among Elizabethan playwrights known as the "War of the Theaters," and in Cynthia's Revels and The Poetaster attacks his enemies under classical names. His poetry includes odes, epigrams, songs, and letters in verse, and shows the influence of the classics, being polished, restrained, and musical.

Jonson was the first literary dictator (see also DRYDEN, POPE, SAMUEL JOHNSON) in English literature, and held forth as an acknowledged leader in gatherings of men of letters at the Mermaid Tavern. The faithful members of this group later were called the "tribe of Ben," and the poets they approved as followers of Jonson's poetic principles and practice were known as "sons of Ben." Among the latter are THOMAS CAREW, ROBERT HERRICK, RICHARD LOVELACE, and SIR JOHN SUCKLING.

Jordan, David Starr (1851-1931). American biologist and educator. President (1891-1913) and chancellor (1913-1916), Stanford University. Author of many books on fishes.

Jordan, Robert. Hero of Ernest Hemingway's FOR WHOM THE BELL TOLLS. He is a young instructor in Spanish at the University of Montana, of sincere liberal convictions, who joins the Spanish Republican army during the civil war of the 1930's. Although he perceives the weaknesses of the Communist command and doubts that he himself will survive the mission, he carries through his assignment to blow up a bridge as a gesture in support of his own belief.

Jordan, Ruth. The heroine of Moody's drama, THE GREAT DIVIDE.

Jordans, The. The New England family of Owen Davis' play, ICEBOUND.

Jormungandr or Midgardsormen (i.e., "earth's monster"). The great serpent of Scandinavian mythology, brother of HELA and FENRIS, and son of LOKI, the spirit of evil. It lay at the root of the celestial ash till All-Father cast it into the ocean; it then grew so large that in time it encompassed the whole world, and was forever biting its own tail.

Jorrocks. A famous amateur sportsman created by Robert Smith Surtees (Eng., 1803-1864). He appeared in Hunts with Jorrocks from Handley Cross and in Jorrocks' Jaunts and Jollities, the Hunting, Shooting, Racing, Driving, Sailing, Eating, Eccentric and Extravagant Exploits of that Renowned Sporting Citizen, Mr. John Jorrocks of St. Botolph Lane and Great Coram Street.

Josaphat. See under BARLAAM.

José, Don. (1) In Byron's DON JUAN, the father of Don Juan, and husband of Donna Inez. He is henpecked and worried to death by his wife's "proprieties."

(2) A Spanish officer in Bizet's opera CARMEN, in love with Carmen.

Joseph. A Biblical hero of the book of Genesis. A younger son and favorite of his father Jacob, he was hated by his ten older brothers, and when the opportunity presented itself, they sold him as a slave to a caravan going to Egypt. There he rose to a position of responsibility with his master Potiphar, but was maligned and thrown into prison on his refusal to respond to the advances of Potiphar's wife. In time he was set free and given rank and honor as a result of his interpretations of the dreams, first of his fellow-prisoners, the chief butler and baker, and later of Pharaoh himself. Pharaoh's dreams of seven lean cattle swallowing up seven fat cattle and seven lean ears of corn devouring seven full ears were said to betoken the coming of famine, and Joseph was therefore installed as food administrator. During the famine his brothers came to Egypt to buy corn and after a dramatic series of events (see BENJAMIN) Joseph revealed his identity and brought about their migration to Egypt.

THOMAS MANN wrote a series of elaborately symbolic novels on the Joseph story, in which Joseph represents the artist who redeems society by his own vicarious suffering. Included in the series are: Joseph and His Brothers (1924); Young Joseph (1935); and Joseph in Egypt (1938). For a discussion of the symbolism, see Thomas Mann's Joseph Story, by Harry Slochower.

a Joseph. One not to be seduced from his continency by the severest temptation is sometimes so called. The reference is to Joseph in Potiphar's house (Gen. xxxix). See also BELEROPHON.

A great-coat used to be known by the same name, in allusion to Joseph, who left his garment, or upper coat, behind him.

Joseph's coat. Either the above, or the "coat of many colors" given Joseph by his father.

Joseph Andrews. A novel by FIELDING (1742). He is a footman who marries a maid-servant. The novel was begun as a burlesque of Richardson's PAMELA, and Joseph Andrews is Pamela's brother. His adventures with the high-born Lady Booby are modeled after those of Pamela and Mr. B., and, like Pamela, Joseph remains virtuous.

The accounts of Joseph's bravery and good qualities, his voice too musical to halloo to the dogs, his bravery in riding races for the gentlemen of the county, and his constancy in refusing bribes and temptation, have something refreshing in their naïveté and freshness, and prepossess one in favour of that handsome young hero.—Thackeray.

Josephine. The heroine of Gilbert and Sullivan's comic opera, H.M.S. PINAFORE.

Joseph of Arimathea. The rich Jew, probably a member of the Sanhedrin, who believed in Christ but feared to confess it, and, after the Crucifixion, begged the body of the Savior and deposited it in his own tomb (see Matt. xxvii. 57–60, Mark xv. 42). Legend relates that he was imprisoned for forty-two years, during which time he was kept alive miraculously by the Holy Grail (see GRAIL), and that on his release by Vespasian, about 63 A.D., he brought the Grail and the spear with which Longinus wounded the crucified Savior, to Britain, and there founded the abbey of GLASTONBURY, whence he commenced the conversion of Britain.

The origin of these legends is to be found in a group of apocryphal writings of which the Evangelium Nicodemi is the chief one. These were worked upon at Glastonbury between the 8th and 11th centuries, and were further embellished by Robert de Boron in the 13th, the latter version (by way of Walter Map) being woven by Malory into his MORTE D'ARTHUR.

George Moore introduces Joseph of Arimathea into his romance, THE BROOK KERITH.

Josephson, Matthew (1899–). American critic and biographer. Started as a literary "expatriate," tried brokerage, wrote biographies of ZOLA and ROUSSEAU, and, with his The Robber Barons (1934), switched from literary to economic history. The Politicos (1938) followed, and The President Makers (1940).

Joseph Prudhomme, see PRUDHOMME, JOSEPH.

Joseph Surface, see SURFACE, JOSEPH.

Josephus, Flavius. Original name Joseph ben Matthias (37–?100). Jewish historian and general. Imbued with deep admiration for Rome and its institutions, he managed in his later years to live in the sunshine of the favor of the emperors Vespasian and Titus. This was after the defeat of his people in the revolt of 66 A.D., in which he had taken an active part. Author of a History of the Jewish War (7 books in Aramaic and Greek); Antiquities of the Jews (in 20 books); etc. Called the "Hebrew Livy."

Joseph Vance, An Ill-Written Autobiography. A novel by William DE MORGAN (1906).

The hero's love for his childhood playmate, Lottie Thorpe, is the central interest of the book, but both heroine and hero contract other and in each case quite congenial marriages and are not united until late in life. The irresponsible father of Joseph Vance, now successful, now utterly down-and-out, is a well-drawn character.

Joshua. A Biblical hero whose name is given to the sixth book of the Old Testament. It tells how Joshua, after the death of Moses, led the Israelites into the Promised Land. Forty years before, Joshua had been among the twelve spies appointed to spy out the land of Canaan, and because of his favorable report, maintained in the face of the prevailing discouragement, he was one of the two Israelites of his generation permitted by Jehovah to enter Canaan. He was a valiant fighter and gradually conquered the land. One of his most striking exploits was to command the sun to stand still.

Joshua tree. A treelike yucca of some elevated desert regions in the southwestern United States, often 25 feet high, with short leaves and greenish-white flowers.

Josiah Allen's Wife. Pseudonym of Marietta Holley (1836–1926), American writer of humorous stories chiefly devoted to the adventures of Josiah Allen and Josiah Allen's wife Samantha. Samantha at the Centennial (1877) and Samantha in Europe are perhaps the best.

Josiana, Lady. The heroine of Victor Hugo's historical romance, THE MAN WHO LAUGHS (L'Homme qui rit).

joss (Pidgin English). An idol or house-god of the Chinese; every family has its joss. A temple is called a joss house, and a joss-stick is a stick of scented wood which is burnt as incense in a joss-house.

Josse. A jeweler in Molière's L'AMOUR MÉDECIN. Lucinde, the young daughter of SGANARELLE, pines and falls away, and the anxious father asks his neighbors what they would advise him to do. Josse replies that he would buy the young lady a beautiful piece of jewelry. Sganarelle's answer is, "You are a jeweler, M. Josse (Vous êtes orfèvre, Monsieur Josse!), and are not disinterested in your advice."

Jotham. In Dryden's ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, he represents Saville, Marquis of Halifax. The original Jotham (cf. Judges ix. 7) uttered the parable of The Trees Choosing a King when the men of Shechem made Abimelech king.

Jötunnheim or Jötunheim. Literally, "home of the giants." In Norse mythology, one of the Nine Worlds. It lies in the northwest where the ocean reaches the edge of the universe and is inhabited by the giants. One of the roots of the ash tree Yggdrasill extends into it.

Joubert, Petrus Jacobus, known as Piet (1831-1900). Boer farmer, lawyer, soldier and statesman. Commander of Boer forces in several successful engagements with the British during the war waged in opposition to British annexation of the Transvaal (1880-1881). Opponent of KRUGER but forced by ill health to abandon military commandership at outbreak of Boer War (1899).

Jourdain, Monsieur. The type of the bourgeois, placed by wealth in the ranks of gentlemen, who makes himself ridiculous by his endeavors to acquire their accomplishments. The character is from Molière's comedy Le Bourgeois gentilhomme (1670). He employs masters of dancing, fencing, and philology. The fun of the drama is provided by the ridiculous remarks he makes, and the awkward figure he cuts as the pupil of these professors. One remark is especially noted: he says he had been talking prose all his life, and never knew it till his professor told him.

Journal of the Plague Year, A. A famous account of the epidemic of bubonic plague in England during the summer and fall of 1665 by Daniel DEFOE (1722). It is fictitious, although it purports to be authentic, and is considered by critics to show greater imagination and dramatic appeal than the original, eyewitness account in the diary of Samuel PEPYS.

Journal to Stella. A private diary kept by Jonathan SWIFT from 1710 to 1713, written partly in cipher and in the form of letters addressed to "STELLA," the woman deeply loved by Swift. It reveals the author intimately in his hopes and anxieties, his social life, political intrigue, associations with his friends, and tenderest emotions. See also PPT.

Jove. Another name of JUPITER, the later being Jovis pater, father Jove. The Titans made war against Jove, and tried to dethrone him.

Not stronger were of old the giant crew,
Who sought to pull high Jove from regal state.
Thomson, Castle of Indolence, canto 1.

Milton, in PARADISE LOST, makes Jove one of the fallen angels (l. 512).

Jowett, Benjamin (1817-1893). English Greek scholar, of great influence through his translations of Plato, Thucydides, and Aristotle. Regius professor at Oxford (1855); master of Balliol (1870-1893); vice-chancellor of Oxford (1882-1886). Tried but acquitted on a charge of heresy because of religious liberalism.

Joyce, James Augustine Aloysius (1882-1941). Irish novelist and poet, regarded as one of the greatest literary talents of the 20th century. Leading influences on his thought and technique, paid tribute by constant echoes and allusions throughout his work, were Henrik IBSEN, the Elizabethan writers, especially Ben JONSON; DANTE ALIGHIERI; the French symbolists (see SYMBOLISM); ARISTOTLE; ST. THOMAS AQUINAS and other scholastic philosophers; the dogma and hagiography of the Roman Catholic Church; the legend, history, and politics of Ireland, especially as epitomized in the figure of Charles Stewart PARNELL; the ODYSSEY; medieval romance, especially the TRISTRAM cycle; Benedetto CROCE; Jonathan SWIFT; Sir James G. FRAZER; Giambattista VICO; Giordano BRUNO; Sigmund FREUD. He is most famous for his experiments in the structure and narrative technique of the novel, in the technique of the "STREAM OF CONSCIOUSNESS," and in language, where his linguistic studies and his interest in philology had an important influence on his numerous innovations.

In his youth Joyce rebelled strongly against what he regarded as the bigotry, narrowness, and insularity of his Irish Roman Catholic background, and was contemptuous of the movement in poetry and the drama known as the IRISH RENAISSANCE. Although he never returned to Ireland after 1912, the subject-matter of all his work is the city of Dublin, its streets, topography, history, and residents, and to a somewhat lesser extent, biographical details of his own childhood and youth. It might be said that Joyce's work is narrower in scope than that of any novelist of his time, but also deeper in its roots and wider in its ramifications. It is marked by humor, tremendous vitality, a robust coarseness sometimes compared to that of CHAUCER, realistic detail and documentation in the painstaking manner of the naturalistic tradition (see NATURALISM), psychological penetration (stream-of-consciousness passages), an understanding treatment of character (see DUBLINERS) and a talent for character creation (see ULYSSES), and a remarkable sensitivity to language, speech, and auditory impressions in general. His works are THE DAY OF THE RABBLEMENT (1901); CHAMBER MUSIC (1907), poetry; DUBLINERS (1914), short stories; EXILES (1915), a play; A PORTRAIT OF THE ARTIST AS A YOUNG MAN (1916); ULYSSES (1922); POMES PENYEACH (1927); FINNEGANS WAKE (1939). Like the great French novelists BALZAC, FLAUBERT, the GONCOURT brothers, and DAUDET, Joyce toiled long hours at his writing and repeatedly revised and polished his work. Ulysses required 7 years to complete (1914-1921) and Finnegans Wake, which was known until its publication as Work in Progress, took 17 years (1922-1939). ♀

Although Joyce suffered from partial blindness during most of his life; was forced to do teaching and clerical work to support himself and his family; saw his books banned by censors or pirated by publishers; was widely misunderstood and denounced as obscene or unintelligible, and in general had one of the most difficult lives in the history of literature, he had the greatest influence on his contemporaries of any novelist in the 20th century and is regarded by serious critics as one of the outstanding writers of modern times. Among leading authors showing the influence of Joyce in style, technique, approach, and vocabulary are Virginia Woolf, Ernest Hemingway, John Dos Passos, William Faulkner, Thomas Wolfe, and James T. Farrell. For a fuller discussion of Joyce, cf. the biography by Herbert Gorman and James Joyce, by Harry Levin.

Joyeuse. A name given to more than one sword famous in romance, but especially to Charlemagne's, which bore the inscription Decem praeceptorum custos Carolus, and was buried with him.

Joyeuse Garde, La or La Garde Joyeuse (Fr.). Anglicized, Joyous Gard. The estate given by King Arthur to Sir Launcelot of the Lake for defending the Queen's honor against Sir Mador. It is supposed to have been at or near Berwick-on-Tweed, but the Arthurian topography is very indefinite.

Juan de la Cruz, San, see ST. JOHN OF THE CROSS under SAINTS.

Juárez, Benito Pablo (1806-1872). Mexican statesman of pure Indian blood. Repeatedly (self-styled or by election) president of Mexico for and after the interlude of Maximilian's French-supported puppet emperors. His name will always remain associated with that of Maximilian whom, after his defeat, he had court-martialed and shot. Cf. WERFEL's drama, Juarez and Maximilian (1926).

juba. A characteristic Negro dance, originally of the southern plantations. The nonsense word juba occurs repeatedly in the refrain sung by the spectators who also keep time by hand-clapping, stamping, etc., which is known as patting juba.

And our hearts are patting juba
To the banjo of the spring.
Richard Hovey, Stein Song.

Jubal. In the Old Testament, son of Lamech and Adah, the inventor of the lyre and flute (Gen. iv. 19-21). George Eliot has a narrative poem of that title (1874).

jubilée. In Jewish history, the year of jubilee was every fiftieth year, which was held sacred in commemoration of the deliverance from Egypt. In this year the fields were allowed to lie fallow, land that had passed out of the possession of those to whom it originally belonged was restored to them, and all who had been obliged to let themselves out for hire were released from bondage. The year of jubilee was proclaimed with trumpets of ram's horn, and takes its name from Hebrew yobel, "a ram's horn." (Cf. Lev. xxv. 11-34, 39-54 and xxvii. 16-24.)

Hence, any fiftieth anniversary, especially one kept with great rejoicings, is called a jubilee, and the name has been applied to other outbursts of joy or seasons of festivity, such as the Shakespeare Jubilee, which was held at Stratford-on-Avon in September, 1769, and the Protestant Jubilee, celebrated in Germany in 1617 at the centenary of the Reformation.

Judah. In the Old Testament, one of the sons of Jacob; also, the tribe of his descendants. After the death of Solomon, King of Israel, ten tribes seceded under Jeroboam and the remaining kingdom was known thereafter as Judah. Its capital was Jerusalem.

Judas Iscariot. The traitorous disciple who betrayed Jesus to his enemies for thirty pieces of silver. See ACELDAMA. He had kept the bags containing the money for the group during the years of his master's ministry. According to the Biblical narrative, after the crucifixion he was overcome by remorse and hanged himself. DANTE in his Inferno places Judas in the mouth of Satan. There is a tradition that he is released from hell once a year to cool himself on an ice floe. In his poem St. Brandan, Matthew Arnold describes the saint's encounter with the arch-traitor on his annual holiday.

Judas kiss. A deceitful act of courtesy. Judas betrayed his Master with a kiss (Matt. xxvi. 49).

So Judas kissed his Master,
And cried, "All hail!" whenas he meant all harm.
Shakespeare, III Henry VI. v. 7.

Jude the Obscure. A novel by Thomas Hardy (1895), dealing with the mutual love of Jude Fawley and his cousin, Sue Bridehead. They both marry outsiders, but finally secure divorces to live with each other. After some years, young Jude, the son of Jude's former wife Arabella, murders Jude's two younger children and hangs himself to escape from misery. Broken by this tragedy, Sue returns to her husband and Jude to Arabella. Soon afterward Jude dies.

Judges. A book of the Old Testament which contains the history of the Israelites after the death of Joshua, when the people were governed by judges. Gideon, Jephthah, Samson, and Deborah are the chief rulers mentioned in Judges.

Judgment Day. A novel by James T. Farrell, published in 1935, the final part of his trilogy STUDS LONIGAN. It deals with Studs' declining health, futile dissipation, love affair with Catherine Banahan, fruitless search for a job, and ultimate death from pneumonia. The climax of the novel is a dramatic death scene against a background of the family's lamentations and quarrels and the Roman Catholic prayers for the dead.

Judith. A legendary Jewish heroine whose story is told in the Apocryphal book of Judith. She was a beautiful girl of Bethulia, who, to save her native town, assassinated Holofernes, the general of Nebuchadnezzar. When Judith showed the head of the general to her countrymen, they rushed on the invading army, and put it to a complete rout.

Judson, Edward Zane Carroll (1823-1886). American adventurer and author. Wrote, under the pseudonym of Ned Buntline, early dime novels and adventure fiction.

Jugendbewegung (Ger., "Youth Movement"). A collective term applied in Germany to a teen-age movement of opposition to dogmatic religion, bourgeois parent authority, and conventionalized school, seeking inspiration in folk art, history, and nature, and finding an organizational frame in the boy-scoutlike associations of the Wandervogel (Migratory Bird) which date from about 1906. The declining remnants of the youth movement were absorbed by the Hitler youth organization.

Juggernaut or Jagannath. A Hindu god, "Lord of the World," having his temple at Puri, in Orissa. The legend, as told in the Ayeen-Akbery, is that a learned Brahmin was sent to look out a site for a temple. The Brahmin wandered about for many days, and then saw a crowd dive into the water, and, having washed, make obeisance to the element. This was selected as the site of the temple. While the temple was being built, the king, Indica Dhumna, had a prophetic dream, telling him that the true form of Vishnu should be revealed to him in the morning. When the king went to see the temple he beheld a log of wood in the water, and this log he accepted as the realization of his dream, enshrining it in the temple.

Jagannath is regarded as the remover of sin. His image is on view three days in the year. The first day is the Snanayatra, or Bathing Festival, when the god is washed; he is then supposed to have a cold for ten days, at the end of which he is again brought out and taken in his car to the nearest temple. A week later the car is pulled back amid the rejoicings of the multitude at his recovery. It was formerly erroneously supposed that on this final day, the Rathayatra, fanatical devotees threw themselves beneath the wheels of the enormous, decorated machine, in the idea that they would thus obtain immediate admission to Paradise. Hence, the phrase the car of Juggernaut is used of customs, institutions, etc., beneath which people are ruthlessly and unnecessarily crushed.

Juive, La (The Jewess). A tragic opera (1835) in five acts by Jacques HALÉVY, after a text by Eugène Scribe. Eleazar, in La Juive, was one of the great rôles of ENRICO CARUSO.

jujitsu. Literally, "soft art." A Japanese system of self-defense without weapons, based entirely on the principle that the opponent's own (superior) strength can be used to defeat him. Thus the adept will, for instance, be able to provoke with little force a counteraction which he can guide to dislocate a joint of his opponent's arm, etc. Also called judo.

juke box. A type of automatic phonograph, stationed in taverns, restaurants, lunch-rooms, cocktail lounges, etc., which was extremely popular in the U.S. in the late 1930's and early 1940's. Juke boxes were usually brilliantly colored and offered a list of phonograph recordings—principally of popular songs and "swing" music—from which the customer could make a selection that he would hear after he had inserted a nickel.

Jukes, The. Full title, The Jukes, a Study in Crime, Pauperism, Disease, and Heredity (1877). A report of the New York Prison Association by Richard Louis Dugdale (1841-1883). The subjects are the descendants of a group of sisters who lived in New York toward the end of the 18th century. In a sense the study is the criminological precursor of the wave of interest on the part of novelists in the "fall and decline" of entire families. Cf., for instance, Thomas Mann's Buddenbrooks.

Julia. (1). In Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona, a lady who disguises herself as a page to gain the love of Proteus.

(2). The heroine of Knowles' drama The Hunchback (1832).

Julian. Pertaining to Julius Caesar (100-44 B. C.), particularly with reference to the Calendar (i.e. the "Old Style") instituted by him in 46 B. C. (the Julian Year, consisting of 365¼ days), which was in general use in Western Europe till it was corrected by Gregory XIII in 1582, in England till 1752, and much longer in Russia. To allow for the odd quarter day, Caesar ordained that every fourth year should contain 366 days, the additional day being introduced after the 6th of the calends of March, i.e. February 24. Caesar also divided the months into the number of days they contain at present, and July is named in his honor.

Julian, Count. A legendary hero whose tale is told in Scott's Vision of Don Roderick, Southey's Roderick and Landor's Count Julian. He was a powerful lord of the Spanish Goths. When his daughter Florinda was violated by King Roderick, the Count was so indignant that he invited the Moors to come and push him from the throne, and even turned renegade the better to effect his purpose.

Julian, surnamed the Apostate (331-363). Roman emperor. Brought up in the Christian faith. As governor of Spain, Gaul, Britain, resident of Paris. On his accession (361), he publicly announced his apostasy and published an edict of tolerance. Killed in action during a war against Persia.

Julie. The heroine of J. J. ROUSSEAU's novel entitled Julie, ou la nouvelle Héloïse (1761). The prototype was the Comtesse d'Houdetot. In the novel the hero is Saint Preux, Julie's tutor, drawn chiefly from Rousseau himself, who bore the same relation to his countess. The two love, but are parted and Julie marries M. de Wolnar. Later Saint Preux returns as the trusted friend of the household and tutor of the children. See also HÉLOÏSE.

Juliet. (1). The heroine of Shakespeare's ROMEO AND JULIET.

(2). In Shakespeare's MEASURE FOR MEASURE, the lady beloved by Claudio.

Juliette. The heroine of George Sand's LEONE LEONI.

Julius Caesar. A historic tragedy by Shakespeare (ca. 1601). The real hero is BRUTUS, but see also CAESAR, JULIUS.

July Revolution. An uprising (July 27-29, 1830) of the people of France against the Bourbon dynasty. The newspapers led the insurrection and after some fighting in barricaded streets, the king, Charles X, abdicated—with the result that the Bourbon-Orléans line succeeded to the throne in the person of the "citizen king" Louis Philippe.

Jumbles, The. Subjects of a nonsense poem by Edward LEAR.

Far and few; far and few
Are the lands where the Jumbles live.

Jumping Frog, The. A story by Mark TWAIN (1865), more formally known as The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County. It appeared first in the New York Saturday Press as Jim Smiley and His Jumping Frog.

Jung, Carl Gustav (1875-). Swiss psychologist and psychiatrist, originally of the Freudian school. His view that the libido (energy or driving force) is a will to live rather than a sexual manifestation puts his later work in opposition to the Viennese school. Introduced the now popular terms INTROVERT and EXTRAVERT and advanced psychoanalysis immeasurably by applying it to national myths, legends, etc.

Jungfrau. One of the most magnificent mountains of Switzerland, rising 13,670 feet in the Bernese Alps twelve miles south of Interlaken on the boundary of the cantons of Bern and Valais. First ascended in 1811. It is part of the Jungfrau-Eiger-Monch group and its contours, especially on postal cards of dubious taste, are often depicted as the outline of a reclining young woman. German Jungfrau, "young woman, virgin," but the origin of the name is obscure.

Jungle, The. A novel by Upton SINCLAIR (1906) which caused widespread discussion on account of its grim picture of life in the Chicago stockyards. The central figures are Slav immigrants, Jurgis Rudkus and his wife Ona.

Jungle Books. A series of animal stories for children in two volumes by Rudyard KIPPLING (1894, 1895). The central figure is the human Mowgli, brought up in the jungle by Mother Wolf.

Junípero, Father, see SERRA, JUNÍPERO.

Junius Letters. A series of anonymous letters, the authorship of which has never been finally settled, which appeared in the London Public Advertiser from November 21, 1768, to January 21, 1772, and were directed against Sir William Draper, the Duke of Grafton, and the Ministers generally. The author himself said, "I am the sole depositary of my secret, and it shall die with me." They were probably by Sir Philip Francis (1740-1818) but many other authors have been suggested.

Junker (Ger., from jung, "young" and Herr, "master, lord"). Originally a young nobleman. Later, any member of the landed aristocracy, especially of Prussia east of the Elbe river. The caricature of the Junker emphasizes his bullying and overbearing attitudes and his reactionary narrow-mindedness. Historically the Junker class has been an important factor in the development of east-Elbian culture and the formation of the Prussian state. Its decline is depicted in Eduard von Keyserling's masterpiece, Abendliche Hauser (Houses at Dusk).

Junkers, Hugo (1859-1935). German aeronautical engineer. Pioneer in the construction of all-metal airplanes. Developed the Junkers motors which at one time were used by a third of the world's airplanes.

Juno. The "venerable ox-eyed" wife of Jupiter, and queen of heaven, in Roman mythology. She is identified with the Greek Hera, was the special protectress of marriage and of woman, and was represented as a war goddess.

Junonian bird. The peacock, dedicated to the goddess-queen.

junta (Sp.). In Spain, a council or legislative assembly other than the Cortes, which may be summoned either for the whole country, for one of its separate parts, or for some special object only. The most famous is that called together by Napoleon in 1808.

I had also audience of the King, to whom I delivered two Memorials since, in His Majesty's name of Great Britain, that a particular Junta of some of the Council of State and War might be appointed to determine the business.—Howell's Letters, Bk. i, sect. iii, 10 (Madrid, Jan. 5, 1622).

Junto. In English history, the name given to a faction that included Wharton, Russell, Lord-Keeper Somers, Charles Montague, and several other men of mark, who ruled the Whigs in the reign of William III for nearly twenty years, and exercised a very great influence over the nation. The word is a corruption of JUNTA.

Jupien. In Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, especially in CITIES OF THE PLAIN, a valet, father of Charles MOREL, who as well as his son engages in abnormal relations with Baron de CHARLUS.

Jupiter. The supreme deity of Roman mythology, corresponding to the Greek Zeus (see JOVE), son of Cronus, or Saturn, whom he dethroned, and Rhea. He was the special protector of Rome, and as Jupiter Capitolinus—his temple being on the Capitoline Hill—presided over the Roman games. He determined the course of all human affairs and made known the future to man through signs in the heavens, the flight of birds, etc.

As Jupiter was lord of heaven and prince of light, white was the color sacred to him; hence, among the medieval alchemists, Jupiter designated tin. In heraldry Jupiter stands for azure, the blue of the heavens.

His statue by PHIDIAS (taken to Constantinople by Theodosius I and there destroyed by fire in 475 A. D.) was one of the Seven Wonders of the World.

Jupiter Scapin. A nickname of Napoleon Bonaparte, given him by the Abbé de Pradt. SCAPIN is a valet famous for his knavish tricks, in Molière's comedy of Les Fourberies de Scapin.

Jupiter tonans (the thundering Jupiter). A complimentary nickname given to the London Times in the days of its greatness, i.e., about the middle of the 19th century. See THUNDERER.

Jupiter's beard. House leek, supposed to be a charm against evil spirits and lightning; hence, it was at one time grown very generally on the thatch of houses.

Jura. A picturesque range of mountains between France and Switzerland. Highest peaks about 5,000 feet. Famous for its watch home-industry, less so for its cheese. Hence the geological term Jurassic.

juramentado (Span.) Literally, "one bound by an oath." In the Philippines, a Moro of Mohammedan faith who has bound himself by the oath to sacrifice his life while killing Christians. Hence, to go juramentado, "to run amuck."

Jurgen, a Comedy of Justice. A satiric romance by James Branch CABELL (1919), a tale of medieval POICTESME. Jurgen is a middle-aged pawnbroker who is given a year of youth, which he spends adventuring. He visits Heaven and Hell, to say nothing of other mysterious regions in which he toys with and wins the love of Guinevere, of the Lady of the Lake (here called Anaitis), and of other strange and lovely ladies. He even sees his old love Dorothy la Désirée, and looks, too, upon the immortal Helen of Troy. But he cannot regain his youthful illusions nor his youthful ideals, and in the end he is content to return to his scolding old wife, Dame Lisa.

Jurgen purports to be retold from old chronicles. Its temporary suppression caused it to become widely discussed. See also MANUEL.

jus et norma loquendi (Lat.). The right method of speaking and pronouncing established by the custom of each particular nation.

Multa renascentur quae jam cecidere, cadentque
Quae nunc sunt in honore vocabula, si volet usus.
Quem penes arbitrium est, et jus, et norma loquendi.
Horace, Ars Poetica, 70.

As translated by Conington:

Yes, words long faded may again revive;
And words may fade now blooming and alive,
If usage wills it so, to whom belongs
The rule and law, the government of tongues.

Jusserand, Jean Jules (1855-1932). French writer, diplomat, and student of English literature and history. Minister at Washington, D.C. (1902-1925). The only non-American ever to head the American Historical Society. In 1917 he received the Pulitzer prize in History for his With Americans of Past and Present Days.

Just, the. Among rulers and others who have been given this epithet are:

Aristides, the Athenian (d. 468 B. C.).

Baharam, styled Shah Endeb, fifth of the Sassanidae (276-296).

Casimir II, King of Poland (b. 1117, reigned 1177-1194).

Ferdinand I, King of Aragon (b. 1373, reigned 1412-1416).

Harun al Raschid, the most renowned of the Abbasside caliphs, and the hero of several of the Arabian Nights stories (b. 765, reigned 786-808).

James II, King of Aragon (1261-1327).

Khosru or Chosroes I of Persia (531-579), called by the Arabs Molk al Adel (the Just King).

Pedro I of Portugal (b. 1320, reigned 1357-1367).

juste-milieu (Fr.). The just or golden mean. In political parlance said of actions and attitudes characterized by moderation and compromise.

Justice. A drama by John GALSWORTHY (1910). The central character, William Falder, forges a check in order to secure funds to free the woman he loves from her husband's cruelty. He serves out a three years' sentence with good resolution, but his subsequent struggle to live down his past ends in tragedy.

Justinian, the English. Edward I (b. 1239, reigned 1272-1307).

Just So Stories. Children's animal stories by Rudyard KIPLING (1902) explaining questions like why the leopard has spots, etc.

Jutland, Battle of. Greatest naval battle in history (May 31-June 1, 1916) fought in North Sea off Jutland peninsula between the German battle cruiser and High Seas fleet under Admirals von Scheer and von Hipper, respectively, and the British battle-cruiser and Grand fleets under Admirals Beatty and Jellicoe, respectively. The Germans lost 11 out of 110 vessels engaged, with 2,863 officers and men; the British 14 out of 149 vessels, with 6,617 officers and men. The German fleet retired after the battle and left the British in undisputed control of the North Sea. Identical with German Battle of the Skagerak.

Juvenal. Full Latin name Decimus Junius Juvenalis (60?-140). Roman lawyer and satirist of Roman vices under the Empire. Sixteen satires of his are extant.

the English Juvenal. John Oldham (1653-1683).

the Juvenal of painters. William Hogarth (1697-1764).

juveniles. In theatrical parlance, those actors who play young men's parts; in journalistic and book-trade slang, periodicals or books intended for the young.

K

K. The hero of Franz Kafka's THE CASTLE, a land surveyor allegorically in search of divine grace, sometimes compared to John Bunyan's CHRISTIAN. See also Joseph K. below.

K., Joseph. In Franz Kafka's THE TRIAL, a bank assessor who is charged with a crime of which he knows nothing. His attempts to defend himself against the charges and to win a legal trial are interpreted as being symbolic of mankind's quest for divine justice. See also K. above.

ka. In Egyptian mythology, a sort of double which survived after a man's death if a statue of him were made into which it might enter, and sundry other rites were performed; hence, such a statue, placed usually near the mummy in the tomb.

Kaaba (Arabic ḥabāh, "a square house"). A shrine at Mecca, said to have been built by Ishmael and Abraham on the spot where Adam first worshiped after his expulsion from Paradise, and where, after being a wanderer on the face of the earth for two hundred years, he received pardon. In the northeast corner is the famous "black stone." See HAJAR AL ASWAD.

Kabul. National capital of Afghanistan on Kabul river. Taken by the British (1839) but liberated again (1842) with losses of 16,000 lives to the conquerors. Since 1880 under an Afghan consul. Cf. Kipling's poem of that title.

Kaddish. In Jewish ritual, the doxology recited in the synagogue. So called because of the repeated occurrence of the word (meaning "holy") in the text.

Kadr, Al. The night on which the Koran was sent down to Mahomet. Al Kadr is supposed to be the seventh of the last ten nights of Ramadan, or the night between the 23rd and 24th days of the month.

Verily we sent down the Koran on the night of Al Kadr; and what can make thee comprehend how excellent the night of Al Kadr is?—Koran, xcvi.

Kaempffert, Waldemar (1877–). American editor and author. Writer on astronomy, science, inventions, etc.

Kaf, Mount. The huge mountain in the middle of which, according to Mohammedan myth, the earth is sunk, as a night light is placed in a cup. Its foundation is the emerald Sakhrat, the reflection of which gives the azure hue to the sky.

from Kaf to Kaf. From one extremity of the earth to the other. The sun was supposed to rise from one of its eminences and to set on the opposite.

Kaffir. Literally, "infidel." An Arabic term of contempt for non-Mohammedans, chiefly in Africa. Hence the name came to be applied in the Western languages to either all or some of the Bantu races in Southern Africa, including the Zulus of Natal. The Kaffirs are among the tallest people in the world. They are intelligent, warlike, and socially well organized.

Kafka, Franz (1883–1924). Bohemian novelist, known for his mysticism, his interest in philosophy and religion, in which he was especially influenced by the CABALA and the works of Søren KIERKEGAARD, and the unique character of his books. These, broadly expressionistic in manner (see EXPRESSIONISM), are marked by an objective narrative technique; an extensive use of philosophical and religious symbolism, bordering on the allegorical; a compact, intense, and closely reasoned style; frequent analytical discussions of logical and theological points; fantastic and nightmarish occurrences sometimes suggesting a comparison with SURREALISM; and moving portrayals of tragic and pathetic men and women of humble status. Kafka's dominating ideas as expressed in his writings are: the fruitlessness of man's trying to understand the laws of God; the necessity for unquestioning submission and obedience to God; and the necessity also for tireless striving on the part of man in order to discover what is required of him by God, although success depends more on his attitude than on his comprehension. Kafka's works, which give an excellent picture of society in Germany and Central Europe immediately before and after World War I, had an important influence on a small group of English and, later, American writers—among them being W. H. AUDEN, Rex WARNER, and Delmore SCHWARTZ—during the 1930's. His published writings include: THE TRIAL (Der Prozess), first published in 1924; THE CASTLE (Das Schloss), first published in 1926; AMERICA, first published in 1927; The Great Wall of China (Beim Bau der Chinesischen Mauer), a collection of short stories, first published in 1931; The Metamorphosis (Die Metamorphose; 1937); and A Kafka Miscellany (1940). The first three titles are of unfinished novels; a number of other works remain in manuscript, the author having left instructions that all his writings be destroyed, since he had written them originally with a religious rather than literary aim.

For a discussion of Kafka and his work, consult the critical sections of A Kafka Miscellany. See also KLEIST.

Kagawa, Toyohiko (1888–). Japanese social worker and novelist. U.S. university training. Powerful influence in Japanese social life, especially in labor matters. Organized Japanese cooperatives. His autobiographical novel, Across the Death Line (1924), sold a quarter of a million copies. Author of more than fifty books. A believer in communism of the early Tolstoyan brand rather than in Marxism.

Kagey, Rudolf (1905-1946). American author of ten mystery stories. Also a writer on philosophy and logic, secretary of the Authors' Guild, and instructor in philosophy and director of the evening division of New York University (from 1928). His writing name was Kurt Steel. He was director of public education for the New York World's Fair (1939).

Kahn, Gustave (1859-1936). French poet of the symbolist group (see SYMBOLISM), with Jules LAFORGUE considered the official originator of modern free verse, especially as practiced in France. His contributions were freedom from observing a definite line-length and the use of assonance, internal rhyme, and the like, as rhythmic devices. Kahn's volumes of poetry include: Les Palais nomades (1887); Chansons d'amant (1891); La Plume et le beau temps (1895); and Le Livre d'images (1897). His later books of verse are regarded as early examples of IMAGISM.

Kahn, Otto Hermann (1867-1934). American banker and patron of music and literature. Chairman, the Metropolitan Opera Company; vice-president, the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra. Assisted the American poet Hart CRANE.

Kailyal. The heroine of Southey's Curse of KEHAMA, the lovely and holy daughter of Ladurlad, persecuted relentlessly by Arvalan; but virtue and chastity, in the person of Kailyal, always triumphed over sin and lust.

kailyard. Scottish, "kale or cabbage patch." The motto of Ian Maclaren's Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush (1894) is, "There is a bonnie brier bush in our kailyard." Hence, kailyard school (as introduced by W. E. HENLEY), a group of Scottish writers of the 90's who wrote, partly in dialect, on humble homespun topics. They were, besides Maclaren, J. M. Barrie, S. R. Crockett, etc. Cf. Geo. Douglas (Brown), The House With the Green Shutters (1901), written in reaction against them.

Kaiser, see UNDER RULERS, TITLES OF.

Kaiser, Georg (1878-1944). German dramatist. Considered with Ernst TOLLER the outstanding German exponent of EXPRESSIONISM.

Kaiser, Henry J. (1882-). American industrialist. Engaged in enormous projects like San Francisco Bridge (1933), Bonneville Dam (1934), Grand Coulee Dam (1939). During World War II, he developed new methods of construction of ships and cargo planes.

Kalakaua I, David (1836-1891). King of Hawaiian Islands (1874-1891). His ideas of reform aroused political opposition culminating in a revolution (1887). Died in San Francisco.

Kalb, Johann, known as Baron de Kalb (1721-1780). German-born army officer. Major general in Continental army (1777-1780); mortally wounded in action (Aug. 16, 1780).

Kaled. In Byron's LARA, Gulnare disguised as a page in the service of Lara.

kalends, see CALENDAS.

Kalevala (Finn., from the name of the giant hero Kaleva). The national epic of the Finns, compiled from popular songs and oral tradition by the Swedish philologist, Elias Lönnroth (1802-1884), who published his first edition of 12,000 verses in 1835, and a second, containing some 22,900 verses, in 1849. The hero is a great magician, Wainamöinen, and a large part of the action turns on Sampo, an object that gives one all his wishes.

The epic is influenced by, but by no means dependent upon, Teutonic and Scandinavian mythology, and, to a lesser extent, by Christianity. It is written in unrhymed alliterative trochaic verse, and is the prototype, both in form and content, of Longfellow's HIAWATHA.

Kali. The Hindu goddess after whom Calcutta receives its name, Kali-ghat, the steps of Kali, i.e., those by which her worshipers descended from the bank to the waters of the Ganges. She was the wife of SIVA, the acme of bloodthirstiness, many human sacrifices being made to her. It was to her that the Thugs sacrificed their victims. Her idol is black besmeared with blood; she has red eyes, four arms with blood-stained hands, matted hair, huge fang-like teeth, and a protruding tongue that drips with blood. She wears a necklace of skulls, earrings of corpses, and is girdled with serpents. She is also known as Durga and Parvati.

Kalidasa (fl. 5th century A.D.). Greatest Hindu dramatist and lyric poet, often referred to as the "Shakespeare of India." Author of SAKUNTALA.

Kalinin, Mikhail Ivanovich (1875-1946). Russian statesman. Peasant deputy from Lenin-grad and president of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (from 1923).

Kallas, Aino Julia Maria, née Krohn (1878-). Finnish-Estonian novelist. Received several prizes for literature in Finland. John Galsworthy admired her work. The White Ship (1924) was well received in England.

Kallen, Horace Meyer (1882-). German-born professor of philosophy at the New School for Social Research, New York City. Author of A Free Society (1934), etc.

Kaltenborn, H. V. (1878-). American radio commentator. Original name Hans von Kaltenborn.

Kalyb. The "Lady of the Woods," who stole St. George from his nurse, brought him up as her own child, and endowed him with gifts. St. George enclosed her in a rock, where she was torn to pieces by spirits. See SEVEN CHAMPIONS OF CHRISTENDOM, Pt. I.

Kama. The god of young love in Hindu mythology. His wife is Rati (voluptuousness), and he is represented as riding on a sparrow, holding in his hand a bow of flowers and five arrows (i.e., the five senses). He is also known as Kamadeva or Kandarpa.

Kamakura. A town in Japan in the southern part of Honshu, near Yokohama. Noted for a colossal bronze statue of the seated Buddha, known as the Daibutsu. Cf. the poem by KIPLING. Kamakura was the seat of government in late medieval times.

Kamehameha I (1737?-1819). King of Hawaii (1795-1819). Had known Captain Cook. Encouraged foreign trade and suppressed human sacrifice.

politan Museum of Art in New York. The Grass Roof (1931); East Goes West (1937), a novel.

Kansa. In Hindu mythology, the uncle and constant enemy of KRISHNA.

Kansas-Nebraska Act. An act of Congress (1854) for the organization of Kansas and Nebraska territories in the region closed to slavery by the MISSOURI COMPROMISE. Its provision that either territory might become a state "with or without slavery, as their constitutions may prescribe at the time of admission," which violated the Missouri Compromise, angered abolitionists and aggravated the problems leading to the outbreak of the Civil War.

Kant, Immanuel (1724-1804). German philosopher. His system, known as Kantian criticism or Kant's critical philosophy, is formulated in his three major works, Critique of Pure Reason (Kritik der reinen Vernunft; 1781, 1787); Critique of Practical Reason (Kritik der praktischen Vernunft; 1788); and Critique of Judgment (Kritik der Urteilskraft; 1790). His major metaphysical concern was the determination of the limits of human reason; his ethics is summed up in the categorical imperative. His style is difficult and heavy. It has been said that his system as a whole is as lucid as his individual statements are obscure, in contrast to Hegel, whose system is obscure while his detached statements are clear. Kant's influence on SCHILLER and the philosophers of the Romantic era (FICHTE, SCHELLING, HEGEL, etc.) was considerable. The philosophy of the latter has been characterized as nothing but a desperate attempt to break through the limits of cognition erected by Kant.

In an unexpected upsurge of poetic inspiration, Kant stated that the two fixed poles in his spiritual life were the moral law within and the starred firmament above. He never left his native city of Königsberg; he remained a bachelor all his life; there is a story according to which the people of Königsberg used the phases of his daily routine to set their clocks by.

Kantor, MacKinlay (1904-). American novelist and story writer. His Long Remember (1934) is one of the best Civil War novels. The long short-story, The Voice of Bugle Ann (1935), has also been very popular.

kaolin. A very pure white clay used as the raw material for porcelain. The word is Chinese, means "high hills" and was originally the name of a place where kaolin was found.

Kapellmeister (Ger.). The conductor of a Kapelle in the sense of an orchestra in the employ of a prince or a military band. Hence Kapellmeister music, uninspired music; the kind of music to be expected from a Kapellmeister whose duties often included mass composition to order. Nevertheless, men like Haydn and Gluck were Kapellmeisters.

Karakoram Range. Formerly also Mus-tagh. A mountain range in the Himalaya with some of the highest peaks in the world. Mount Godwin-Austen, the highest, reaches 28,251 feet. The range is crossed by the Karakoram Pass with a height of 18,550 feet.

Karamazov, Alexey Fyodorovich. Also known as Alyosha. In Dostoyevsky's THE BROTHERS KARAMAZOV, the youngest of the three brothers, dreamy, gentle, and "pure in heart," a religious mystic.

Dmitry Fyodorovich Karamazov. Also known as Mitya. The eldest of the brothers, of military education, wild, hot-tempered, and extravagant.

Fyodor Pavlovich Karamazov. Father of the three brothers, a crafty, miserly, scheming old sensualist, suggestive of a Dickens character.

Ivan Fyodorovich Karamazov. Also known as Vanya. The middle brother, university-educated, interested in philosophy and literature and influenced by the NIHILISM of the time, a typical young Russian intellectual of the latter part of the 19th century.

It has been pointed out that the Karamazov brothers respectively represent three national psychological types of Russia in Dostoyevsky's day: the religious mystic, a holdover from medieval Christianity; the soldier and roisterer, a type almost as old as Russia itself, a spiritual descendant of the ancient heroes of the BYLINES; and the Europeanized intellectual, an heir of the period of ROMANTICISM, differing from the intellectual of France or Germany only in the conflict he feels between the new ideas and attitudes imported from western Europe and the century-old ideas and attitudes of his Russian background. The novel dramatizes this conflict.

karela. The balsam apple, a vine of India, mentioned in Kipling's Jungle Books.

... and the karela, the bitter karela shall cover you all.

Karénina, Anna, see ANNA KARÉNINA.

Karlfeldt, Erik Axel (1864-1931). Swedish poet. In 1912 he refused the Nobel prize for poetry arguing that his work was unknown outside of Sweden. He was the only poet who ever did that. The prize was awarded him posthumously in 1931.

karma (Sans., "action, fate"). In Buddhist philosophy, the name given to the results of action, especially the cumulative results of a person's deeds in one stage of his existence as controlling his destiny in the next. Among Theosophists the word has a rather wider meaning, viz., the unbroken sequence of cause and effect; each effect being, in its turn, the cause of a subsequent effect.

Karol, Prince. A character in George Sand's novel, Lucrezia Floriani.

Károlyi, Count Mihály (1875-). Hungarian nobleman and politician. After World War I, prime minister of Hungary and president of the newly organized Hungarian People's Republic (1918-1919). Overthrown by the communists and forced into exile. To U.S. (1925). In his absence, he was tried and convicted of high treason. His lands were confiscated.

Karoon or Karun. The Arabic form of Korah (Numb. xvi.), who, according to the commentators of the Koran, was the most wealthy and most beautiful of all the Israelites. It is said that he built a large palace, which he overlaid with gold, and that the doors of his palace were solid gold. He was the Croesus of the Mohammedans, and guarded his wealth in a labyrinth.

karroo. From Hottentot; literally "red soil." In South Africa, a dry table-land. The Great or Central Karroo in Cape Province has an elevation of 3,000 to 4,000 feet.

Katerfelto. A generic name for a quack or charlatan. Gustavus Katerfelto was a celebrated quack who became famous during the influenza epidemic of 1782, when he exhibited in London his solar microscope and created immense excitement by showing the infusoria of muddy water. The doctor used to aver that he was the greatest philosopher since the time of Sir Isaac NEWTON. He was a tall man, dressed in a long, black gown and square cap, and died in 1799.

Katharina. The heroine of Shakespeare's TAMING OF THE SHREW, the elder daughter of Baptista of Padua. She was of such an ungovernable spirit and fiery temper, that she was nicknamed "the shrew."

Katharine, Queen. In Shakespeare's Henry VIII, the divorced wife of Henry VIII.

Kathay. China. See CATHAY.

Katherine Walton, or the Rebel of Dorchester. The third novel in W. G. SIMMS' trilogy of the American Revolution (1851). The others are The Partisan (1835) and Mellichampe (1836). The trilogy deals with the exploits of General Marion's men in the Carolinas, for the most part near Dorchester. The central characters are the Walton family, particularly the intrepid Colonel Walton and his daughter Katherine, who finally marries Singleton, the hero. But far more captivating than these stilted heroic figures is the amusing braggart Captain PORGY. Many of the characters of the trilogy appear also in The Forayers (1855) and its sequel Eutaw (1856).

Kathleen Mavourneen. A popular song composed by Frederick Nicholls Crouch (1808-1896) with words by a Mrs. Crawford, probably Louisa Crawford (1790-1858).

Kathleen Mavourneen, the gray dawn is breaking,
The horn of the hunter is heard on the hill;
Oh, hast thou forgotten how soon we must sever?
Oh, hast thou forgotten this day we must part?
It may be for years, and it may be for ever!
Oh, why art thou silent, thou voice of my heart?

The line, "It may be for years, and it may be for ever," caused the name of Kathleen Mavourneen to be used as a synonym of "promis-sory note." See also MAVOURNIN.

Kathrina. A long narrative poem by J. G. HOLLAND (1867).

Katmir or Kratim. In the Koran, the dog of the seven sleepers. It spoke with a human voice, and said to the young men who wanted to drive it out of the cave, "I love those who love God. Go to sleep, masters, and I will keep guard." The dog kept guard over them for 309 years, and neither slept nor ate. At death it was taken up into paradise.

He wouldn't give a bone to Katmir, or he wouldn't throw a bone to the dog of the seven sleepers is an Arabic proverb, applied to a very niggardly man.

Keats, John (1795-1821). English poet, one of the outstanding representatives of ROMANTICISM in England and associated with LEIGH HUNT, as well as being acquainted with HAZLITT, SHELLEY, LAMB, COLERIDGE, and WORDSWORTH. His poetry is marked by youthful exuberance, intense sensuous appeal and pictorial quality, imagination, emotion, a sense of symbolism, and attraction to medieval and supernatural subjects. Vividness in poetic imagery was a more important consideration in Keats's poetry than in that of the other English Romantic poets, and he influenced the Pre-Raphaelites (see PRE-RAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD), TENNYSON, and the French symbolists (see SYMBOLISM). Among his most famous poems are: ENDYMION (1818); LAMIA, ISABELLA, THE EVE OF ST. AGNES, LA BELLE DAME SANS MERCI, The Eve of St. Mark, HYPERION, Ode to a Nightingale, Ode on a Grecian Urn, and Ode on Melancholy, all published in 1820. Keats himself was strongly influenced by the poetry of Edmund SPENSER. He died of tuberculosis in Italy, although his friends preferred to believe he died of a broken heart because of the harsh criticism of Endymion delivered by the reviewers on BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE. Shelley's elegy Adonais was written in Keats's memory. Amy LOWELL and J. M. MURRY are among 20th century writers who were admirers of Keats and prepared, respectively, a biography and several critical studies concerning him.

Keble, John (1792-1866). Anglican clergyman and poet. The OXFORD MOVEMENT of Newman's day took its origin from a sermon he preached at St. Mary's, Oxford (1833). Wrote hymns and seven numbers of Tracts for the Times.

Kedar's tents. This word. Kedar was a son of Ishmael (Gen. xxv. 15), and was the ancestor of an important tribe of nomadic Arabs. The phrase means houses in the wilderness of this world, and comes from Ps. cxx. 5: "Woe is me, that I sojourn in Mesech, that I dwell in the tents of Kedar." Seton Merriman's novel, In Kedar's Tents (1897), tells the adventures of a wandering, exiled Irishman who joins the anti-Carlist forces in Spain.

Kentons, The. A novel by W. D. HOWELLS (1902). It deals with an Ohio family who roam over England and America in the effort to save their daughter from an unhappy love affair. Of the two Kenton girls, Lottie is lively and carefree; Ellen, a more spiritual type, tormented with a conscience. "From her unselfishness spring all the woes of the Kenton family."

Kentucky Cardinal, A. A novel by James Lane ALLEN (1894). The hero, Adam Moss, is a recluse, in love with nature only, until he falls in love with his charming next-door neighbor Georgianna. She is jealous of his interest in the out-of-doors. At her capricious demand he reluctantly cages a Kentucky cardinal, and to her great remorse the bird dies in a wild effort to regain its freedom. Aftermath (1895), a sequel, tells of the short but happy married life of Adam and Georgianna. The latter dies, and Adam is left with a son and his old love, nature.

Kenwigs, Mr. In Dickens' NICHOLAS Nickleby, a turner in ivory, and "a monstrous genteel man." He toadies to Mr. Lillyvick, his wife's uncle, from whom he has "expectations."

Mrs. Kenwigs. Wife of the above, considered "quite a lady," as she has an uncle who collects the water-rates and sends her daughter Moleena to a day school.

Kenyon. In Hawthorne's MARBLE FAUN, the New England sculptor who marries Hilda.

Kepler, Johannes (1571-1630). German scientist and one of the fathers of modern astronomy. Assistant and successor to Tycho BRAHE at Prague. His name is associated with three important laws of planetary motion, known as Kepler's laws. (1) The orbit of a planet is an ellipse. The sun occupies one of the foci. (2) The line drawn from the sun to a planet covers equal areas in equal times. (3) The squares of the times the planets need to revolve around the sun are in the ratio of the cubes of their mean distances from the sun.

Ker, John. 1st Duke of Roxburgh or Roxburghe (ca. 1680-1741). Beneficiary of the last creation in the Scottish peerage (1707). His grandson, John Ker, 3rd Duke of Roxburgh (1740-1804), was the famous bibliophile whose superb collection, including many books from Caxton's press, was sold in 1812. The Roxburghe Club was formed after the sale. At first meant merely for convivial gatherings, it did some good work in printing rare volumes. The Roxburghe Ballads were three rare volumes of broadside ballads contained in the original library.

Ker, William Paton (1855-1923). English authority on medieval literature. His best-known work is Epic and Romance (1897).

Kerensky, Aleksandr Feodorovich (1881-). Russian revolutionary leader of moderate policies. After the February revolution of 1917, minister and prime minister of the provisional government. Lost his chance through indecision and fled to Paris after the Bolshevik Revolution (Nov., 1917).

kermis or kermess. Literally, "church mass." In the Low Countries, originally a local outdoor festival on the feast day of the patron saint; later a kind of country fair.

Kettering, Charles Franklin (1876-). American engineer. Inventor of Delco system of starting, lighting, and ignition for automobiles, of Delco-light for farmhouses, etc. General manager, General Motors Research Corporation (from 1917).

Kettledrummle, Gabriel. In Scott's novel OLD MORTALITY, a Covenanter preacher.

kettle of fish. An old Border name for a kind of fête champêtre, or picnic by the riverside, in which newly caught salmon is the chief dish. After water is thickened with salt to the consistency of brine, the salmon is put therein and boiled, and when it is fit for eating, the company partake in gipsy fashion. The discomfort of this sort of picnic probably gave rise to the phrase "a pretty kettle of fish," meaning an awkward state of affairs, a mess, a muddle.

ketuba. From a Hebrew word meaning "document." A Jewish marriage contract. It was instituted as a check to divorce and provides for a payment to be made to the wife after the husband's death or in case of a divorce.

Kevin, St., see under SAINTS.

key. Often used figuratively in the sense of something which affords or prevents an entrance, as follows:

key of art. Alchemy.

khamsin. A hot southerly wind in Egypt, coming from the Sahara. It blows regularly for about fifty days commencing by the middle of March. It frequently carries particles of sand. Hence, a dust storm.

Khan, see RULERS, TITLES OF.

khedive. The title by which, from 1867 to 1914, the ruler of Egypt, as viceroy of the Sultan of Turkey, was known. The word is Turkish (from Persian) and means a prince, or viceroy. See also RULERS, TITLES OF.

Khepera. An Egyptian solar deity represented by the beetle.

Khnemu. An Egyptian ram-headed deity, worshiped especially in the region of the five cataracts of the Nile.

Khufu. First king of the IVth or Memphite dynasty of Egypt. The Greek form of his name is Cheops. See under PYRAMID.

kiblah or keblah. The point towards which Mohammedans turn when they worship, i.e., the KAABA at Mecca; also, the stone or slab (called the mihrab) on the interior wall of a mosque indicating this direction.

Kickleburys on the Rhine, The. "A Christmas Book," by THACKERAY (1851).

Kidd, Captain. A famous pirate about whom many legends have collected. He was finally caught and hanged at Execution Dock, London, in 1701. Many of the stories concern buried treasures supposed to have been left by him at various points. He was the hero of a popular melodrama of a century ago, Captain Kyd, Or the Wizard of the Sea, by J. S. Jones (Am., 1830), and was prominent in dime-novel fiction.

Kidnapped. A novel by Robert Louis STEVENSON (1886). The title-page contains the following summary: "Kidnapped; Being Memoirs of the Adventures of David Balfour in the Year 1751—How he was Kidnapped and Cast Away; his Sufferings in a Desert Isle, his Journey in the Wild Highlands; his Acquaintance with Alan Breck Stewart and other notorious Highland Jacobites; with all that he suffered at the hands of his Uncle, Ebenezer Balfour of Shaws, falsely so called." There is a sequel, DAVID BALFOUR.

Kiel Canal. Formerly known as Kaiser-Wilhelm Canal. The canal through the Schleswig isthmus, which connects the Baltic with the North Sea and makes of the important German naval base of Kiel a port with free access to the Atlantic. Opened in 1895.

Kieran, John Francis (1892-). American journalist. Well-known for his memory work on "INFORMATION PLEASE" radio forum. Formerly a sports editor.

Kierkegaard, Søren Aabye (1813-1855). Danish philosopher. In contrast to Hegel's objective philosophy, based his system on "faith, knowledge, thought, reality." The "razor-edge decision" of human free will which determines man's personal relation to God is clearly analyzed in Enten-Eller (Either-Or) (1843). Most of Kierkegaard's books were published under various pseudonyms. The twentieth-century revival of Kierkegaard was initiated by the German philosophers Heidegger and Jaspers and furthered by their (indirect) disciples of the French existentialist movement. See SARTRE. In South America, Kierkegaard plays a rôle almost as important as in Europe. In the U.S., Princeton University Press has become the center of Kierkegaard publicity. W. H. AUDEN acknowledges his debt to Kierkegaard.

Kildare's Holy Fane. Famous for the "Fire of St. Bridget," which was inextinguishable, because the nuns never allowed it to go out. Every twentieth night St. Bridget was fabled to return to mend the fire. Part of the chapel still remains, and is called "The Firehouse."

Kilimanjaro, The Snows of. One of HEMINGWAY's best short stories, the result, like his book, The Green Hills of Africa (1935), of a journey to the dark continent. The Kilimanjaro is a volcanic snow-clad peak in East Africa, the highest in the continent (19,780 feet).

Killers, The. A short story by Ernest HEMINGWAY, published in Men Without Women (1927), and the most famous of his stories. In a detached and coldly "hardboiled" manner, chiefly through dialogue, it tells of two gunmen, Al and Max, who come to a lunchroom and inquire about Ole Andreson, an ex-prize-fighter, whom they announce they are going to murder for having "double-crossed" them. Nick Adams, a customer in the lunchroom, goes to warn Andreson in his rooming-house, but Andreson says simply, "There isn't anything I can do about it." The story made an excellent moving picture.

Killigrew, Thomas (1612-1683). English playwright and courtier of Charles I and his successors. Remembered chiefly as a wit. Built several theaters, among them the original Theatre Royal in Drury Lane (1663).

Kilmansegg, Miss. Heroine of a satirical poem by Thomas Hood called Miss Kilmansegg and her Golden Leg (1828). She is an heiress with great expectations, who has an artificial leg of solid gold.

Kilmer, Alfred Joyce (1886-1918). American poet, chiefly remembered for his poem Trees (1914). His best war poem, written at the front in World War I, is The Peacemaker. Killed in action on reconnaissance as a sergeant of infantry. His wife, Aline Kilmer (1888-1941), daughter of the poet Ada Foster Murray, is remembered as the author of several volumes of verse: Candles that Burn (1919); Vigils (1921); etc.

Kim. A novel of Indian life by Rudyard KIPPLING (1901). The Irish boy hero, Kimball O'Hara, better known as Kim, is an orphan, shifting for himself in Lahore. He attaches himself to a holy man, an old lama from Tibet who is on a quest for the mystic River of the Arrows, and together the pair roam about India. By accident Kim is recognized by his father's Irish regiment and much against his wishes is sent to St. Xavier's College. During the long vacations he still tramps with his beloved lama. His intimate knowledge of India makes him a valuable asset of the English Secret Service, in which he wins renown while still a mere boy.

Kimberley. A town in Cape Colony, Africa, famous for its diamond mines which were first worked in 1871. During the Boer War, it was besieged by the Boers for 123 days.

Kimmel, Husband Edward (1882-). Commander of U.S. Pacific fleet (1941). Relieved after Pearl Harbor. Through his position he would automatically have become the wartime commander in chief of the combined U.S. fleet.

kindhart. A jocular name for a tooth-drawer; so called from a dentist of the name in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

Kindred, Peter. Titular hero of Robert NATHAN's first novel (1919).

king. For individual kings of legend or fiction, as King Arthur, King Cole, King Horn, etc., see under their respective names. Dramas, etc., beginning with the word king, as King John, King Lear, are given under separate entries.

King Cotton. Cotton, the staple of the southern states of America, and one of the chief articles of manufacture in England. The expression was first used by James H. Hammond in the United States Senate in 1858.

King James' Bible, see BIBLE, THE ENGLISH. the king-maker. Richard Neville, Earl of Warwick (1420-1471); so called because, when he sided with Henry VI, Henry was king, but when he sided with Edward IV, Henry was deposed and Edward crowned. He was killed at the battle of Barnet. See LAST OF THE BARONS.

King Mob. The crowd.

King of Bark. Christopher III of Scandinavia, so called because he had bark mixed with bread in time of famine.

King of Bath. Richard Nash (1674-1761), generally called Beau Nash, a celebrated master of the ceremonies at Bath for fifty-six years. He was ultimately ruined by gambling.

king of the forest. The oak.

king of fresh-water fish. So Izaak Walton called the salmon.

king of the jungle. The tiger.

King of Kings. In the Prayer Book the term, of course, refers to the Deity, but it has been assumed by many Eastern rulers, especially Artaxerxes, first Sassanid king of Persia (ca. 226-240).

king of metals. Gold.

King of Misrule. In medieval and Tudor times, the director of the Christmas-time horse-play and festivities, called also the Abbot, or Lord, of Misrule, and in Scotland the Master of Unreason. At Oxford and Cambridge one of the Masters of Arts superintended both the Christmas and Candlemas sports, for which he was allowed a fee of 40s. A similar "lord" was appointed by the lord mayor of London, the sheriffs, and the chief nobility. Stubbs tells us that these mock dignitaries had from twenty to sixty officers under them, and were furnished with hobby-horses, dragons, and musicians. They first went to church with such a confused noise that no one could hear his own voice. Polydore Vergil says of the Feast of Misrule that it was "derived from the Roman Saturnalia," held in December for five days (17th to 22nd). The Feast of Misrule lasted twelve days.

King of Painters. A title assumed by Parrhasius, the painter, a contemporary of Zeuxis (400 B.C.).

King of Preachers. Louis Bourdaloue (1632-1704), the eloquent French Jesuit.

king of the sea. The herring.

king of shreds and patches. In the old mysteries, Vice used to be dressed as a mimic king in a particolored suit. (Cf. Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. 4). The phrase has been applied to hacks who compile books for publishers but supply no originality of thought or matter.

king of terrors. Death.

king of waters. The Amazon River.

King of Wisdom. OMAR KHAYYAM.

King of the World. The Roman Emperor.

King's English. See under ENGLISH.

King's Evil. Scrofula; so called from a notion which prevailed from the reign of Edward the Confessor to that of Queen Anne that it could be cured by the royal touch. The Jacobites considered that the power did not descend to William III and Anne because the "divine" hereditary right was not fully possessed by them, but the office remained in the Prayer-Book till 1719. Prince Charles Edward, when he claimed to be Prince of Wales, touched a female child for the disease in 1745; but the last person touched in England was Dr. Johnson, in 1712, when only thirty months old, by Queen Anne.

The French kings laid claim to the same divine power from the time of Clovis, 481 A. D.; on Easter Sunday, 1686, Louis XIV touched 1,600 persons, using these words: le Roi te touche, Dieu te guérise.

Kings of Brentford, see BRENTFORD.

Kings of Cologne, see MAGI.

the Snow King. So the Austrians called Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden (born 1594, reigned 1611-1632), because, said they, he "was kept together by the cold, but would melt and disappear as he approached a warmer soil."

the Wise King. SOLOMON.

King, Basil (1859-1928). Canadian-born American novelist. Rector, Christ Church, Cambridge, Mass. (1892-1900). The Inner Shrine (1909); The Street Called Straight (1912); etc.

King Cambyases. The titular hero, a pompous, ranting character, of a tragedy by Thomas Preston (1537-1598). Cf. Shakespeare, 1 Henry IV, ii. 4, line 426: "I will do it in King Cambyases' vein." Hence the expression, King Cambyases' vein, "rant."

King Charles Spaniel. An English toy spaniel named for King Charles II, but known much earlier.

King Cole. A legendary British king of the third century, described in the nursery rhyme as "a merry old soul" fond of his pipe, fond of his glass, and fond of his "fiddlers three." Robert of Gloucester says he was father of St. HELENA (and consequently grandfather of the Emperor Constantine); and Colchester has been said to have been named after him, though it is more probable that the town is named from Lat. colonia. John Masfield wrote a narrative poem entitled King Cole (Eng. 1921) and E. A. ROBINSON has a King

Cole among the characters of his TILBURY TOWN.

King Dagobert and St. Eloi. In a very popular French song, St. Eloi tells King Dagobert that his coat has a hole in it, and the king replies, "C'est vrai, le tien est bon; prête-le moi." Next the saint complains of the king's stockings, and Dagobert makes the same answer. Then of his wig and cloak, to which the same answer is returned. After seventeen complaints St. Eloi said, "My king, death is at hand, and it is time to confess," when the king replied, "Why can't you confess, and die instead of me?"

kingdom come. As a slang phrase, death, the grave, execution, the next world.

King John. A tragedy by Shakespeare (ca. 1595). This drama is founded on an earlier play, formerly attributed to Shakespeare, The First and Second Parts of the Troublesome Raigne of John King of England, etc. As they were sundry times publickly acted by the Queenes Majesties players in the Honourable Citie of London (1591). The drama covers the whole of King John's reign (1199-1216). The action centers about John's usurpation of the crown from Prince Arthur, the rightful heir, his attempts to injure Arthur (see HUBERT), and the complications caused by the concerted opposition of the Pope and the French Dauphin to John's reign.

Kinglake, Alexander William (1809-1891). English historian; wrote Eothen, or Traces of Travel Brought Home from the East (1844), a classic.

King Lear. A tragedy by Shakespeare (ca. 1605). Lear is the King of Britain, son of Bladud. He has three daughters, and, when four-score years old, wishing to retire from the active duties of sovereignty, resolves to divide his kingdom among them in proportion to their love. The two elder say they love him more than their tongue could express, but Cordelia the youngest says she loves him as it becomes a daughter to love her father. The old king, displeased with her answer, disinherits Cordelia, and divides his kingdom between the other two, with the condition that each alternately, month by month, should give him a home, with a suite of a hundred knights. He spends the first month with his eldest daughter, who shows him scant hospitality. When he passes on to the second, she refuses to entertain so large a suite; whereupon the old man will not enter her house, but spends the night abroad in a storm. When Cordelia, who has married the King of France, hears of this, she brings an army over to dethrone her sisters, but is taken prisoner and dies in jail. In the meantime, the elder sister (Goneril) first poisons her younger sister from jealousy, and afterwards puts an end to her own life. Lear also dies. The story of King Lear is given by Geoffrey of Monmouth in his Chronicles, whence HOLINSHED, Shakespeare's immediate source, transcribed it. Spenser introduced the same story into his Faerie Queene (II. x).

King Log and King Stork. See under LOG.
king-of-arms. Also king-at-arms. The chief heraldic officer of a country. In England there are three kings-of-arms, Garter (who regulates arms of peers and of knights of the garter), Clarenceux (with jurisdiction south of the Trent), and Norroy (with jurisdiction north of the Trent). In addition, there are kings-of-arms for Scotland, Ireland, and Wales. They are placed under the Earl Marshal. Formerly their jurisdiction of armory gave them great authority.

King of Rome. A title given at his birth to Napoléon François Charles Joseph (1811-1832), son of Napoleon I and Marie Louise. Also known as the Duke of Reichstadt and counted in the Napoleonic dynasty as Napoleon II. He is the hero of Edmond ROSTAND's L'Aiglon (1900).

King of the Wood. Rex Nemorensis. The priest of Diana who must pluck the golden bough and then slay his predecessor in a duel before entering on his office at Aricia on the shores of a lake in the Alban Mountains (now Lago di Nemi), where the goddess had a sacred grove. A discussion of this myth is the opening passage and explains the name of Sir James G. Frazer's GOLDEN BOUGH.

Kings, Books of. Two of the canonical books of the Old Testament. They contain the history of the Hebrew people from the death of David to the Exile. In the Vulgate and Douay Versions, among others, they are called Third and Fourth Books of Reigns, the First and Second Books of Reigns corresponding to 1 and 2 Samuel.

kismet (from Turkish qismet, "portion, lot"). Fate, destiny; or the fulfilment of destiny.

Kit-cat Club. A club formed about the beginning of the 18th century by the leading Whigs of the day, and held in the house of Christopher Catt, a pastrycook of Shire Lane, which used to run north from Temple Bar to Carey Street. Its site is now covered by the Law Courts. Christopher Catt's mutton pies, which were eaten at the club, were also called kit-cats, and in the Spectator (No. IX) we are told that it was from these the club got its name.

Steele, Addison, Congreve, Garth, Vanbrugh, Manwaring, Stepney, Walpole, and Pulteney were of it; so was Lord Dorset and the present Duke. Manwaring . . . was the ruling man in all conversation . . . Lord Stanhope and the Earl of Essex were also members. . . . Each member gave his [picture].—Pope to Spence.

Sir Godfrey Kneller painted forty-two portraits of the club members for Jacob Tonson, the secretary, whose villa was at Barn Elms, and where latterly the club was held. In order to accommodate the paintings to the height of the club-room, he was obliged to make them three-quarter lengths (28 in. by 36 in.), hence a three-quarter portrait is still called a kit-cat.

Kitchen Cabinet. A name used by the opponents of President Andrew Jackson during his term of office in the White House (1829-1833) with reference to his political advisers, especially Francis P. Blair and Amos Kendall, both of whom were connected with The Globe, which supported Jackson's policies.

Kitchener, Horatio Herbert. 1st Earl Kitchener of Khartoum and of Broome (1850-1916). British soldier. Secretary of state for war (1914); engaged in the organization of Britain's military forces (1914-1916); lost at sea in the sinking of the cruiser Hampshire (1916).

kitchen middens. Prehistoric mounds (referred to the Neolithic Age) composed of sea-shells, bones, kitchen refuse, rude stone implements, and other relics of early man. They were first noticed on the coast of Denmark, but have since been found in the British Isles, North America, etc.

Kite, Sergeant. The title rôle in Farquhar's comedy, The Recruiting Officer (1705). He describes his own character thus:

"I was born a gipsy, and bred among that crew till I was 10 years old; there I learnt canting and lying. I was bought from my mother by a certain nobleman for three pistoles, who . . . made me his page; there I learnt impudence and pimping. Being turned off for wearing my lord's linen, and drinking my lady's ratafia, I turned bailiff's follower; there I learnt bullying and swearing. I at last got into the army, and there I learnt . . . drinking. So that . . . the whole sum is. canting, lying, impudence, pimping, bullying, swearing, drinking, and a halberd."

Kitely. In Ben Jonson's drama, EVERY MAN IN HIS HUMOUR, a rich city merchant, extremely jealous of his wife.

Kittredge, George Lyman (1860-1941). American philologist, Harvard professor, and Shakespearean authority. A great teacher, stern but beloved by his students, generations of whom remember him simply as "Kitty." His book on Chaucer and His Poetry (1915) has done more than any other work to make clear the greatness of Chaucer to the modern reader. In addition to his numerous books and editions, he prepared the final volume of Professor Francis James Child's English and Scottish Popular Ballads (1898).

kiva. A Hopi word, signifying, in Pueblo Indian architecture, a normally circular ceremonial chamber with access and lighting through the roof.

Kjartan. In the Laxdale Saga, a young Icelandic in love with the strong-willed heroine Gudrun, who is also passionately in love with him. When Kjartan returns home from the Danish court and learns that Gudrun has married for the third time, his own cousin Bolli being her new husband, he decides to take a wife of his own, Hrefna. During the ensuing feud between the two couples, Kjartan continues to love Gudrun and to defend her against Hrefna's complaints, even when he realizes Gudrun is in the wrong.

K. K. K. The initials of the Ku Klux Klan.

Klaboterman. The kobold of the phantom ship, CARMILHAN.

Klabund. Pseudonym of Alfred Henschke (1891-1928). German poet and (chiefly historical) novelist. Author of translations and imitations of Chinese literature. Especially remembered for his highly subjective volumes on German and universal literary history (1919, 1921).

Klamm. In Franz Kafka's THE CASTLE an official of the Castle whom the hero K. tries in vain to see.

Klaus, Peter. An old German legendary hero, the prototype of RIP VAN WINKLE. Klaus was a goat-herd of Sittendorf, who was one day accosted by a young man, who beckoned him to follow. He obeyed, and was led into a deep dell, where he found twelve knights playing skittles, no one of whom uttered a word. Gazing around, he noticed a can of wine, and, drinking some of its contents, was overpowered with sleep. When he awoke, he was amazed at the height of the grass, and when he entered the village everything seemed strange to him. After much perplexity, he discovered he had been asleep for twenty years.

Klee, Paul (1879-1940). Swiss modernist painter. Cofounder with KANDINSKI and Marc of the Munc school of abstract painting, BLAUE REITER (1911). Also cofounder of the Blue-Four movement (1926).

Klein, Charles (1867-1915). American playwright. Best known for The Lion and the Mouse (1905). Collaborated on a number of works with Arthur Hornblow.

Kleist, Bernd Heinrich Wilhelm von (1777-1811). German poet and dramatist, a typical figure of the Romantic period in his country. His dramas, a number of which are of the STURM UND DRANG type, include Die Familie Schroffenstein (1803); Der Zerbrochene Krug (1812), a famous comedy; Penthesilea (1808), a tragedy; Das Käthchen von Heilbronn (1810); Die Hermannschaft (1809), a patriotic play inspired by the author's hate for Napoleon; and Prinz Friedrich von Homburg. His tales in particular are highly praised, Michael Kohlhaas being considered one of the outstanding works of German fiction. Kleist was also editor for a time of the periodical Berliner Abendblätter (1810-1811). It is believed by some critics that he had some influence on the 20th-century novelist Franz KAFKA.

Kleist was sensitive and moody in temperament, and at one time had an attack which brought him close to madness. In 1811, discouraged by the failure of his writings to achieve the success he had hoped for, he first shot Henriette Vogel, a woman with whom he was passionately in love, and then committed suicide.

Kleist, Paul Ludwig Ewald von (1881-). German colonel general in World War II. Commanded panzers through the Ardennes in first rush through France (1940); stormed Southern Russian front (1941); advanced through Ukraine and Don region into Caucasus (1941-1942) until defeats and withdrawals forced by the Russian winter offensive (1942-1943) forced him to evacuate his troops to the Crimea (October, 1943).

klepts (Gr., robbers). The name given to those Greeks who, after the conquest of their country by the Turks in the 15th century, refused to submit and maintained their independence in the mountains. They degenerated—especially after the War of Independence (1821-1828)—into brigands, hence the word is often used for a lawless bandit or brigand.

Klesmer, Herr. In George Eliot's DANIEL DERONDA, a poverty-stricken German musician who teaches Gwendolyn Harleth and attempts to convert her to some of his own high ideals.

klieg light. A kind of bright arc light used in motion pictures and named after the inventors John Kliegl (1869-) and Anton Kliegl (1872-1927), partners of the firm of Kliegl Bros. Hence klieg eyes, eyes inflamed and weeping from excessive exposure to intense light.

Klinger, Friedrich Maximilian von (1752-1831). German dramatist and novelist. His Sturm und Drang (1776) gave its name to the period of German literature in which young GOETHE received his baptism of fire. The Faust theme, mastered by Goethe in the form of a drama, became in Klinger's version a heavy novel (1791).

Klingsor or Klingshor, Nicolas. One of the MINNESINGERS of the 13th century, with whom myth has credited many magic powers. According to tradition he presided over the contest of minnesingers on the WARTBURG. In the opera PARSIFAL, Wagner introduces him as a magician who has given himself over to the task of seducing the Knights of the Grail.

Klondike. A region in the Yukon Territory of Canada. Famous for its gold mines. Cf. the poem by Edwin Arlington Robinson and books by Rex Beach. See also Robert William SERVICE.

Klopstock, Friedrich Gottlieb (1724-1803). German poet, especially remembered for his Miltonian epic The Messiah in hexameters (20 cantos).

Kluck, Alexander von (1846-1934). German general. In World War I, commanded right-wing army in the three-pronged invasion of France (1914), directed upon Paris. A hastily organized French army under Maunoury repulsed him, marking the beginning of the French success at the first battle of the Marne. Wounded (1915) and forced to give up his command.

Kneller, Sir Godfrey (1646-1723). German-English portrait painter. Principal painter to William III. Paintings by him of ten reigning monarchs are extant. In his earlier years he seems to have received some instruction from Rembrandt.

Knibbs, Harry Herbert (1874-). Canadian poet and story writer. His forte is verse narrative of a popular western nature.

Knickerbocker's History of New York. A mock-serious history of early New York by Washington IRVING (1809) purporting to be written by Diedrich Knickerbocker. It relates, in rollicking burlesque, the old Dutch traditions of colonial days.

Knickerbocker school. A name given to a group of early American authors who were followers of Washington Irving. Chief among them were Fitz-Greene Halleck and Joseph Rodman Drake.

Father Knickerbocker. A personification of New York.

knickerbockers, or knickers. Loose-fitting breeches, gathered in at the knee, and worn by boys, cyclists, sportsmen, tourists, etc., and at one time by women as an undergarment. So named from George Cruikshank's illustrations of Knickerbocker's History of New York, where the Dutch worthies are drawn with very loose knee-breeches. The name Knickerbocker is found among the old Dutch inhabitants of New York a century and more earlier; it probably signified a baker of knick-ers, i.e., clay marbles.

knight (A.S. cniht). Originally meaning merely a boy or servant, the word came to denote a man of gentle birth who, after serving at court or in the retinue of some lord as a page and esquire, was admitted with appropriate ceremonies to an honorable degree of military rank and given the right to bear arms.

There are nine Orders of Knighthood in the British Empire, viz. (in the following order of precedence) the Garter, the Thistle, St. Patrick, the Bath, the Star of India, St. Michael and St. George, the Indian Empire, the Royal Victorian Order, and the British Empire. After these come the Knights Bachelor, who are members of no Order and who do not constitute an order. Bachelor here is Fr. bas chevalier, signifying "lower than the knight of an order."

The word knight is used in various slang or jocular phrases denoting a member of some trade or profession, follower of some calling or occupation, etc. Thus we have: knight of the blade, a roystering bully; knight of the cleaver, a butcher; knight of the cue, a billiard player; knight of the needle, a tailor; knight of the pestle, a druggist; knight of the road, a footpad or a hobo; knight of the spigot, a tapster; knight of the wheel, a cyclist; etc.

Knight of the Cloak. Sir Walter Raleigh, who spread his cloak in a mud puddle for Queen Elizabeth to walk upon.

Knight of the Invincible Sword. So Amadis styled himself in the 14th century romance AMADIS OF GAUL. He cleft in twain, at one stroke, two tremendous giants.

Knight of the Lions. The appellation assumed by Don Quixote after his attack upon the van containing two lions sent by the general of Oran as a present to the King of Spain.

Knight of the Rueful Countenance. Don Quixote, so called by Sancho Panza, his squire.

Knight of the Swan. LOHENGRIN.

Knights of Columbus. A fraternal and benevolent association of Roman Catholic men in America, founded at New Haven, Conn., in 1882.

Knights of Labor. A secret organization of American workmen, founded at Philadelphia in 1869, a pioneer in the labor movement in the U.S. Its objects were to regulate wages, the degree of skill to be exacted from workmen, the length of a day's work, and to control strikes. This league decided when a strike was to be made, and when workmen of the union might resume work. See AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR; CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS.

Knights of Malta. First called "Knights of St. John of Jerusalem," otherwise "Knights of Rhodes." The most celebrated religious military order of the Middle Ages.

Knights of the Garter. An order instituted by Edward III of England in 1344. According to Selden, "it exceeds in majesty, honor, and fame, all chivalrous orders in the world." The story is that Joan, Countess of Salisbury, while dancing with the King, let fall her garter, and the gallant Edward, perceiving a smile on the faces of the courtiers, picked it up, bound it round his knee, and exclaimed, "Hon soit qui mal y pense." The blue garter and the motto of the order are thus accounted for.

Knights of the Round Table. King ARTHUR's knight were so called, because they sat with him at a round table made by Merlin for King Leodegrance. See ROUND TABLE.

Knight, Charles Robert (1874-). American painter, illustrator and muralist. Excelled in animals and birds, especially for the American Museum of Natural History in New York, the Field Museum in Chicago, etc.

Knight, Eric (1897-1943). Anglo-American novelist. Created The Flying Yorkshireman (1937). Killed in airplane crash on official war mission. His Lassie Come Home (1940; juvenile) became a successful moving picture.

Knight, Sarah Kemble. Known as Madam Knight (1666-1727). American teacher of Boston, known for the diary in which she recorded observations and impressions of a journey made on horseback from Boston to New York in the winter of 1704-1705. Published in 1825, it is considered valuable as a first-hand source of information on the transportation, inn facilities, housing, and manners and speech of the early 18th century in New England.

Knightly, Mr. Hero of Jane Austen's EMMA.

Knight of the Burning Pestle, The. A comedy in ridicule of chivalrous romance, by Beaumont and Fletcher (1609).

Knights, The. A comedy by Aristophanes directed against Cleon, the demagogue (produced, 424 B. C.).

Knight's or Knighte's Tale. (In Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES.) See PALAMON AND ARHITE. The Knight is perhaps best described in the following well-known lines:

A Knight ther was, and that a worthy man. . . .
And though that he were worthy, he was wys,
And of his port as meke as is a mayde.
He never yet no vileynye ne sayde
In al his lyf unto no maner wight.
He was a verray parfit gentil knight.

Chaucer, Prologue to the Canterbury Tales.

Knittelvers (Ger.). Doggerel. Originally a literal translation of Latin versus rhopalicus (club verse) which was technically a verse in which the length of the feet kept increasing by one syllable, but came to be understood as meaning any sort of irregular verse. Rehabilitated by the amazingly effective use GOETHE made of it in Faust and other works.

Knoblock, Edward (1874-1945). British playwright, scenarist, novelist. Kismet (1911); Milestones (1921; with Arnold BENNETT); Grand Hotel (1931; from the novel by Vicki BAUM); etc.

Know-Nothings. A political society in the United States, originally (ca. 1853) secret but later (1855) reorganized without its secret machinery and also known as the American Party. In the beginning its members replied to every question about their society, "I know nothing about it." Their object was to accomplish the repeal of the naturalization laws, and to advocate laws which would have excluded all but natives from holding office. It split on the slavery question and died out soon after 1856.

Knox, Edmund George Valpy (1881-) and Ronald Arbuthnot Knox (1888-). First and fourth sons, respectively, of the Rt. Rev. E. A. Knox, D.D. Edmund is the "Evoc" of Punch, noted for his humorous verse and parodies. Succeeded Sir Owen Seaman as editor of Punch (1932). Ronald was converted to Catholicism (1917), ordained priest (1919), and became the Catholic chaplain at Oxford (1925). He is one of the most influential Catholic apologists in England and a master of witty satire. He also writes erudite detective novels.

Knox, Frank (1874-1944). American newspaper publisher. U.S. secretary of the navy (1940-1944) under F. D. Roosevelt though still affiliated with the Republican party.

Knox, John (1505-1572). Scottish reformer. Twice at Geneva in personal contact with Calvin (1554, 1556-1558). Published six tracts dealing with religion in Scotland. The best-known are his Blasts of the Trumpet against the Monstrous Regiment of Women (1st and 2nd, 1558). They were not meant for Queen Elizabeth but offended her deeply. Knox preached throughout Scotland against Mary Queen of Scots, whom he simply called "Jezebel," and against catholicism in general. He was a fanatic of wide influence.

Knox, Philander Chase (1852-1921). American politician. Secretary of state (1909-1913); senator (1917-1921). Identified with "DOLLAR DIPLOMACY." Opposed to American collaboration with the League of Nations.

Koch, Robert (1843-1910). German physician and one of the pioneers of modern bacteriology. Isolated anthrax and tubercle bacillus; identified the bacillus which causes Asiatic cholera; investigated bubonic plague in Bombay (1899) and malaria and sleeping sickness in Africa; etc. Awarded Nobel prize for physiology and medicine (1905).

Koh-i-Nûr (Pers., "mountain of light"). A large diamond which, since 1849, has been among the British Crown Jewels; hence, anything of great worth. It is said to have been known 2,000 years ago, but its authentic history starts in 1304, when it was wrested by the Sultan, Al-eddin, from the Rajah of Malwa. From his line it passed in 1526 to Humaiun, the son of Sultan Baber, and thence to Aurungzebe (d. 1707), the Mogul emperor, who used it for the eye of a peacock in his famous peacock throne at Delhi. In 1739 it passed into the hands of Nadir Shah, who called it the Koh-i-nûr. It next went to the monarchs of Afghanistan, and when Shah Sujah was deposed he gave it to Runjit Singh, of the Punjab, as the price of his assistance towards the recovery of the throne of Cabul. After his death (1839) it was kept in the treasury at Lahore, and when the Punjab was annexed to the British Crown in 1849 it was, by stipulation, presented to Queen Victoria. At this time it weighed 186 $\frac{1}{16}$ carats, but after its acquisition it was cut down to 106 $\frac{1}{16}$ carats. There is a tradition that it always brings ill luck to its possessor.

Ko-Ko. Lord High Executioner in the comic opera THE MIKADO by Gilbert and Sullivan.

Kolchak, Aleksandr Vasilievich (1874-1920). Russian counter-revolutionary leader. During World War I, admiral of the Baltic and (later) Black Sea fleet. After the Revolution he gathered a White army in Siberia (1917). His position grew untenable when a Red army captured Omsk. He retreated to Irkutsk, was captured and shot.

Komroff, Manuel (1890-). American writer. Editor of Nietzsche's Zarathustra. His two-volume historical novel, Coronet (1929) was a great success.

Konoye, Prince Fumimaro (1891-). Japanese statesman. Premier (1937-1939, 1940-1941); foreign minister (1928); etc. Japan's policy in the Chino-Japanese war (1937 ff.) was largely shaped by him.

Koo, Vi Kyuin Wellington (1887-). Chinese statesman, representing his country on the Council of the League of Nations (1932-1934); ambassador to France (1936-1941); ambassador to England (1941); etc. "Wellington" became part of his name through sound association with the original Wei-chün.

Korah. In the Bible (Num. xvi), a Levite who led a rebellion against Moses and Aaron. His name signifies "ice." His descendants, the Korahites, were temple musicians.

Koran. The sacred book of the Mohammedans. The word means "reading." The variant Alcoran has a prefixed article. The substance of the Koran is the uncreated and eternal truth that was revealed to Mohammed. The tradition that the text should be transmitted by word of mouth had to be broken at an early date when the best Koran reciters had fallen in battle. The chapters of the Koran are called suras. There are 114, not numbered but individually named and written in Arabic.

The subject matter of the Koran is, historically speaking, of Jewish and to a lesser extent of Christian origin.

Kornilov, Lavr Georgievich (1870-1918). Russian general of Cossack descent. As commander of the imperial troops in Petrograd, he tried after the Revolution (1917) to establish himself as antibolshevik dictator. Forced to flee to the Caucasus, he organized a Cossack force and was killed in action.

Korolenko, Vladimir Galaktionovich (1853-1921). Russian novelist of advanced social ideas in his day. Master of style. The Blind Musician (1888) is one of his greatest novels.

Korrigans. Nine fays of Breton folklore, who can predict future events, assume any shape they like, move quickly as thought from place to place, and cure diseases or wounds. They are not more than two feet high, have long flowing hair, which they are fond of combing, dress only with a white veil, are excellent singers, and their favorite haunt is beside some fountain. They flee at the sound of a bell or benediction, and their breath is most deadly.

Koshchei. A deity who appears or is referred to in many of James Branch Cabell's novels of medieval POICTESME, notably in JURGEN, where he is responsible for Jurgen's year of youth, given him because he speaks well of the Devil. Koshchei is usually spoken of as "Koshchei the Deathless, who made things as they are."

Krakatoa. Volcanic island in Sunda strait, between Java and Sumatra. The waves caused by the eruption of 1883 killed more than 30,000 persons. The consequent atmospheric phenomena were observed over great portions of the globe.

kraken. A fabulous Scandinavian sea monster.

Then, like a kraken huge and black,
She crushed our ribs in her iron grasp!
Longfellow, The Cumberland.

Kralitz Bible, see BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Krapp, George Philip (1872-1934). American philologist and professor at Columbia University. His comprehensive two-volume The English Language in America (1925) was a pioneering work. H. L. MENCKEN said of Krapp's Pronunciation of Standard English in America (1919), "no one can henceforth write about American pronunciation without leaning heavily upon Professor Krapp's work."

Krassnoff, Peter Nikolaevich (1869-). Russian monarchist. After failing in his fight against the Bolsheviks he retired to Batum where he wrote a long saga, From Double Eagle to Red Flag (English edition, 1926), which has been described as "too emotional to be historically convincing, too vivid to be dull." Other reminiscences, novels and short stories, followed.

Kratim or Kratimer. The dog of the seven sleepers, more correctly called KATMIR.

Crazy Kat. An American comic strip, by George Herriman, featuring a cat and his friend Ignatz, a mouse, as leading characters.

It was extremely popular during the period of the 1920's and was used as the basis for a ballet by John Alden CARPENTER.

Krehbiel, Henry Edward (1854-1923). American editor of Grove's Dictionary of Music, 2d edition (1904-1910). Author of several books and music critic for the New York Tribune.

Kreisler, Fritz (1875-). Austrian violin virtuoso and composer. Resident in U.S. (intermittently, from 1915).

Kremlin, the. A gigantic pile of buildings in Moscow, of every style of architecture: Arabesque, Gothic, Greek, Italian, Chinese, etc., enclosed by battlemented and many-towered walls one and one-half miles in circuit. It was built by two Italians, Marco and Pietro Antonio, for Ivan III in 1485 to 1495, but the Great Palace, as well as many other buildings, dates only from the middle of the 19th century.

The name is a French adaptation of Russian kreml, a citadel, and other towns beside Moscow possess kremlins, but none on this scale.

The Kremlin is the seat of the Russian government, and the term is often used as a synonym and personification of Soviet rule.

Kreuger, Ivar (1880-1932). Swedish industrialist and financier. Developed an international match monopoly (hence often referred to as the "match king") and various other financial and industrial schemes. The collapse of his organization (1929) led to the discovery of huge irregularities. Committed suicide in Paris.

Kreutzer, Rodolphe (1766-1831). German-French violinist and composer of much varied work. Beethoven dedicated his Kreutzer Sonata to him.

Kreymborg, Alfred (1883-). American playwright, poet and critic. An original creator of great versatility; an inspirer of other poets. Has won verse-play prizes, was once professional chess player, and gives entertainments on the "Mandalute." Edited the poetry magazine Others and helped edit the American Caravan.

kriegspiel. A game with blocks, pins, flags, etc., representing contending forces, guns, etc., moved about according to rules representing conditions in actual warfare. H. G. Wells adapted it as a floor game.

Kriemhild. The legendary heroine of the NIBELUNGENLIED, a woman of unrivaled beauty, sister of GUNTHER. She first marries SIEGFRIED, and next Etzel (Attila), king of the Huns. Hagen, the Dane, slays her first husband, and seizes all her treasures. In revenge she invites her brothers and Hagen to visit her in Hungary, where they are all slain.

as a result of the brawl that ensues when Hagen kills Etzel's young son. Kriemhild herself slays first her brother Gunther, in the hope that this will force Hagen to reveal the whereabouts of the hidden hoard. This being unavailing, she strikes off Hagen's head, and is thereupon hewn to pieces by Hildebrand, one of the knights of Dietrich of Bern. Until the death of Siegfried, Kriemhild is depicted as gentle, modest and lovable, but afterwards she becomes a perfect fury. In the Volsunga Saga, Kriemhild is known as Gudrun, and in Wagner's operas of the Ring des Nibelungen, as Gutrune.

Krilenko, Nikolai Vasilievich (1886?-1938). Private secretary to Lenin. People's commissar for justice (1922-1938).

Krishna (the black one). One of the greatest of the Hindu deities, the god of fire, lightning, storms, the heavens, and the sun, usually regarded as the eighth AVATAR of Vishnu. One story relates that Kansa, demon-king of Mathura, having committed great ravages, Brahma prayed to Vishnu to relieve the world of its distress; whereupon Vishnu plucked off two hairs, one white and the other black, and promised they should revenge the wrongs of the demon-king. The black hair became Krishna.

Another myth says that Krishna was the son of Vasudeva and Devaki, and when he was born among the Yadavas at Mathura, between Delhi and Agra, his uncle, King Kansa, who had been warned by heaven that this nephew was to slay him, sought to kill Krishna, who was, however, smuggled away. He was brought up by shepherds, and later killed his uncle and became King of the Yadavas in his stead. He was the Apollo of India and the idol of women. His story is told in the Hindu epic, the MAHABHARATA. See also BHAGAVADGITA.

Kriss Kringle. The Pennsylvania Dutch "Santa Claus." On Christmas Eve, arrayed in a fur cap and strange apparel, he goes to the bedroom of all good children, where he leaves a present in the stocking that is hung up in expectation of his visit. The word is a dialectal variant of High German Christkindle, "the little Christ child," and has undergone such radical changes because it is no longer associated with either of its component parts.

Kristin Lavransdatter. A trilogy of novels by SIGRID UNDSÆT, published as a whole in English in 1929 and dealing with the devout Catholic Norway of the 13th and 14th centuries.

Krock, Arthur (1886-). American journalist. Washington correspondent to the New York Times (since 1932). Pulitzer prizes for journalism (1935, 1938).

Kröger, Tonio, see TONIO KRÖGER.

Kroll, Leon (1884-). American painter. Murals for U.S. Department of Justice building, Washington, D.C.; also portraits, still-lives, landscapes, etc.

Kronborg, Thea. The heroine of Willa Cather's SONG OF THE LARK.

Kronos, see CRONUS.

Krook. In Dickens' BLEAK HOUSE, proprietor of a rag-and-bone warehouse, where everything seems to be bought and nothing sold. He is a grasping drunkard, who eventually dies of spontaneous combustion. Krook is always attended by a large cat as uncanny as her master, which he calls "Lady Jane."

Kropotkin, Prince Pëtr Alekseevich (1842-1921). Russian geographer, and social philosopher. Lived in England and Russia. Visited U.S. (1900). Author of works on anarchism, the terror in Russia, and related subjects. His book, Memoirs of a Revolutionist (1899), is the English translation of Paroles d'un Révolté (1885), originally written in French.

Kruger, Stephanus Johannes Paulus. Known as Oom Paul (1825-1904). South African statesman and president for four terms of the Transvaal (1883-1900). In Europe during Boer War (1899-1902), vainly attempting to get European powers to intervene. Died in Switzerland.

Krupskaya, Nadezhda Konstantinovna (1869-1939). Russian social worker and wife of LENIN. Wrote Memoirs of Lenin.

Krupp. A family of German ironmakers, controlling the greatest ordnance works in Germany. The firm was established at Essen (ca. 1810) by Friedrich Krupp (1787-1826). When Alfred Krupp (1812-1887), Friedrich's son, took over, there were three regularly employed workers; when he died the number had risen to 20,000. At the time of the first World War, Bertha Krupp (1886-) and her husband Gustav Krupp von Bohlen und Halbach were in control of the enterprise. Bertha gave her name to the famous BIG BERTHA.

Kubera or Kuvera. In Hindu mythology, the god of wealth. In early legends he is lord of the powers of evil. He was the half-brother of Ravana, the demon-king, who drove him from Ceylon.

Kubla Khan. An unfinished poem by COLERIDGE (1797). The poet said that he composed this fragment from a dream, after reading PURCHAS's Pilgrimage, a description of Khan Kubla's palace, and wrote it down on awaking. It begins:

In Xanadu did Kubla Khan
A stately pleasure dome decree
Where Alph, the sacred river, ran Through caverns measureless to man
Down to a sunless sea.

The poem is regarded in some respects as a forerunner of both SYMBOLISM and SURREALISM.

Kublai Khan (1216-1294). Mongol emperor of China and founder of the 20th Chinese dynasty. A grandson of Genghis Khan. Visited by MARCO POLO. Humane ruler in peace; successful in war, but his expeditions to Japan and Java bore no fruit.

Kudrun, see GUDRUN.

Ku Klux Klan. A secret society which originated in 1866 in the Southern part of the United States as a move against the carpet-baggers from the North who took control after the Civil War. It attempted to repress the Negroes through acts of terrorism. The old Ku Klux Klan, officially abolished by the "force bill" passed by Congress in 1871, showed no signs of activity for many years; but it was revived in 1915, and on Dec. 4 of that year was incorporated in the State of Georgia as the Invisible Empire, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. Its avowed aims are to maintain pure Americanism and white supremacy; it is accused by its enemies of being violently opposed to Catholics, Jews, and Negroes. The organization played an active part in the 1928 presidential election, when Alfred E. Smith, a Catholic, was the Democratic candidate.

The name is based on Greek cyclos, "circle," wilfully corrupted to achieve an alliterative effect and the striking abbreviation K.K.K.

kulak. A wealthy Russian peasant. The word is derived from the Lithuanian term for "fist" and is used as an uncomplimentary term implying readiness to exploit the poorer class and unwillingness to cooperate with the government. Under the Soviets, kulaks were liquidated and exiled in great numbers because they were a hindrance to collective farming.

Kultur (Ger.). Literally, "culture." In general use in German for civilization as against barbarism. At the time of the first World War, the word was taken over by a number of languages with the sarcastic connotation of the German imperial system of intellectual, moral, aesthetic, economic, and political progress as characterized by the subordination of the individual to the State.

Kulturkampf. In German history, the long and bitter struggle (Ger. Kampf) which took place in the last half of the 19th century between Bismarck and the Vatican, with the idea of ensuring the unity of the new Empire and protecting the authority of its government against outside interference. The phrase was coined by Ferdinand LASSALLE in Demokratische Studien ii. 505, but it was popularized by Rudolph Virchow, who said that the struggle involved not merely religion but all human culture.

Kumara (the youthful). A name, or, rather, epithet, of the Hindu war-god KARTIKEYA.

kumiss. Fermented mare's or camel's milk, not unlike sour buttermilk, in common use as a beverage among the nomads of northern Asia. Some tribes distill from it an intoxicating drink which is known by the same name.

Kummer, Clare. American playwright who first made a hit with the popular song Dearie. Wrote popular comedies, as Good Gracious Annabelle (1916); etc.

Kun, Béla (1885-). Hungarian journalist and leader of the Communist revolution. His reign of terror (1919) was terminated by a successful counter-revolution. Fled to Russia.

Kundry. In Wagner's opera PARSIFAL, an enchantress who, at the instigation of Klingsor, tempts Amfortas into the sin that brings on his terrible wound.

Kunigunde. The Lady of Kynast, a German castle built over an abyss. She vowed to marry no one who would not ride around the edge of the steep battlements and saw one aspirant after another perish. Finally an unknown knight accomplished the feat and won her heart, but scorned her for her cruelty and rode away. This legend is the subject of two famous German poems by Theodor Körner and Friedrich Rückert.

The name Kunigunde is sometimes given to the equally cold-hearted lady love of DE LORGE who threw her glove to the lions to test her lover's devotion. Cf. Schiller's poem, Der Handschuh.

Kunz, George Frederick (1856-1930). American expert and writer on gems.

Kuomintang. The three parts of this Chinese term stand for nationalist, people, and party. The Kuomintang is the republican party that was organized chiefly by Dr. Sun Yat-sen and gained control of most of China in 1926-1927. Opposed by the communists.

Kuprin, Aleksandr Ivanovich (1870-1938). Russian anti-Bolshevik author in exile. Satirical realist in short stories and full-length books. The Duel (1905) is his most famous novel. Yama (1915), an analysis of the lot of prostitutes in Czarist Russia, was primarily a succès de scandale.

Kurma, see under AVATAR.

Kuropatkin, Aleksei Nikolaevich (1848-1921). Russian general. Supreme commander of Russia's Far Eastern forces (1904) but opposed to war with Japan. Defeated at Mukden (1905). Author of a book on the Russo-Japanese war.

Kursaal (Ger.). A public hall for visitors at a watering place. Center of social activities with café, bandstand, etc.

Kurusu, Saburo (1888-). Japanese diplomat. Special envoy to U.S. (Nov.-Dec., 1941) during negotiations cut short by attack on Pearl Harbor.

Kuvera, see KUBERA.

Kuyumjian, Dikran, see ARLEN, MICHAEL.

Kwasind. In Longfellow's HIAWATHA, the strongest man that ever lived, the Hercules of the North American Indians. The only weapon which could injure him was the "blue cone of the fir tree," a secret known only to the pygmies or Little-folk. This mischievous race, out of jealousy, determined to kill the strong man, and one day, finding him asleep in a boat, pelted him with fir cones till he died; and now, whenever the tempest rages through the forests, and the branches of the trees creak and groan and split, they say, "Kwasind is gathering in his fire-wood."

Dear, too, unto Hiawatha
Was the very strong man Kwasind;
He the strongest of all mortals.
Longfellow, Hiawatha, xv. and xviii

Kyd, Thomas (1557?-1595). English playwright of the Elizabethan period, one of the "UNIVERSITY WITS." He was extremely well-known in his time and was the author of THE SPANISH TRAGEDY (1594) and Pompey the Great (1595). The Tragedy of Solymán and Perseda (1599) has also been attributed to him, as has been a lost play on HAMLET written before Shakespeare's version.

Kyffhäuser. A hill in Thuringia in the Harz Mountains, one of the supposed sites of the legendary sleep of Frederick BARBAROSSA. See also BERCHTESGADEN.

Kynast, The Lady of. KUNIGUNDE.

Kyne, Peter Bernard (1880-). American writer of popular fiction. Captain of field artillery in World War I. Created the character of Cappy Ricks (1916).

Kyoto. Japanese city on Honshu Island. Capital of the empire for nearly eleven centuries (until 1869). Among its historic buildings is the imperial palace, the Nije Castle, a 13th-century Buddhist temple, etc. It is the locale of the famous annual Cherry Dance.

Kyrie Eleison (Gr., "Lord have mercy"). The short petition used in the liturgies of the Eastern and Western Churches, as a response at the beginning of the Roman Mass and in the Anglican Communion Service; also, the musical setting for this.

Kyushu. One of the five large islands of Japan. Mountainous and volcanic and south of the main island of Honshu. Nagasaki is the chief port.

L

Laban. In the Old Testament, the uncle of JACOB, father of Leah and Rachel. Jacob served him for fourteen years for his two daughters.

labarum. The standard borne before the Roman emperors. It consisted of a gilded spear, with an eagle on the top, while from a cross-staff hung a splendid purple streamer, with a gold fringe, adorned with precious stones. Constantine substituted a crown for the eagle, and inscribed in the midst the mysterious monogram. See CROSS.

labdanum. A dark oleoresin of fragrant smell and bitter taste, derived from the Cistus or rockrose.

Heap Cassia, Sandal-buds and stripes
Of labdanum, and aloë-balls.

Browning, song in Paracelsus, iv.

Labe, Queen. The Circe of the Arabians, who, by her enchantments, transformed men into horses and other brute beasts. She is introduced into the Arabian Nights' Entertainments, where Beder, a prince of Persia, marries her, defeats her plots against him, and turns her into a mare. Being restored to her proper shape by her mother, she turns Beder into an owl, but the Prince ultimately regains his own proper form.

La Belle Dame Sans Merci. See under BELLE.

Labor, American Federation of, see AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Labor Day. A legal holiday set aside in honor of the working class. In many European countries and in the Philippines, it is May 1. In most of the states of the U.S.A., the first Monday in September is celebrated as Labor Day. The custom dates back to about 1882. Colorado was the first state to give it legal force (1887).

labor legislation. Laws designed to regulate employment conditions and safeguard the standard of living of the working class. Labor legislation had its origin in the necessity of enacting laws to regulate the employment of women and children, who were not sui juris. It soon extended its scope to safeguard the labor of persons in dangerous occupations, etc., and finally to cover the problems of trade unions and collective bargaining. In the period after the Civil War, liberal State labor legislation was often ruled by the courts to be unconstitutional. In more recent years most of the states managed to adopt laws on industrial compensation, old-age pension, regulation of hours, etc. The power of the federal government to enact labor laws is fairly well established under its power to regulate interstate commerce. Pertinent provisions are contained in the National Industrial Recovery Act (1933) and the Social Security Act (1935). The National Labor Relations Act (Wagner Act; 1935), which created the National Labor Relations Board, was in its day the most advanced form of labor legislation in the United States.

labors of Hercules. See under HERCULES.

Labouchère, Henry du Pré (1831-1912). British journalist and liberal political leader. Gained reputation during the Franco-Prussian war by his Diary of a Besieged Resident in Paris (1871). Edited Truth, a weekly journal dedicated to the exposure of corruption and sham. As M.P. he inquired courageously into the unsavory affair of the JAMESON RAID. Advocated abolition of the House of Lords, home rule for Ireland, etc. His nickname was "Labby."

La Bruyère, Jean de (1645-1696). French author of the neo-classical period, known for his misanthropy, conservatism, social criticism and satire, as revealed in his most famous work, Les Caractères (1688). This is a collection of maxims and character portraits of French social types and individuals of his day, in the manner of THEOPHRASTUS. See CHARACTER WRITERS. It attacks particularly aristocrats, fortune-hunters, and religious heretics.

labyrinth. A Greek word of unknown (but probably Egyptian) origin, denoting a mass of buildings or garden walks, so complicated as to puzzle strangers who are trying to extricate themselves; a maze. The chief labyrinths of antiquity are:

(1) The Egyptian, by Petesuchis or Tithoes, near the Lake Moeris. It had 3,000 apartments, half of which were underground. (1800 B. C.) Pliny, xxxvi, 13; and Pomponius Mela, i, 9.

(2) The Cretan, by Daedalus, for imprisoning the Minotaur. The only means of finding a way out of it was by help of a skein of thread. Cf. Virgil, Aeneid, v.

(3) The Cretan conduit, which had 1,000 branches or turnings.

(4) The Lemnian, by the architects Smilis, Rhodus, and Theodorus. It had 150 columns, so nicely adjusted that a child could turn them. Vestiges of this labyrinth were still in existence in the time of Pliny.

(5) The labyrinth of Clusium, made by Lars Porsena, King of Etruria, for his tomb.

(6) The Samian, by Theodorus (540 B. C.). This is referred to by Pliny; by Herodotus, ii. 145; by Strabo, x; and by Diodorus Siculus, i.

(7) The labyrinth at Woodstock, built by Henry II to protect the Fair Rosamund.

Labyrinthine Ways, The. Title of the first American edition of The Power and the Glory (1940) by Graham GREENE. Taken from the poem The Hound of Heaven by Francis Thompson:

I fled Him, down the labyrinthine ways
Of my own mind.

La Calprenède, Gautier de Costes de (1609-1663). French dramatist and novelist, best known for his historical romances. Outstanding among these are: Cassandre (1642-1645), in 10 volumes; Cléopâtre (1646), twelve volumes; and PHARAMOND, OU L'HISTOIRE DE FRANCE (1661-1663), also in twelve volumes. La Calprenède's romances were very popular in his day and were read in England until the time of RICHARDSON and FIELDING. They are marked by long and complicated plots, full and detailed descriptions, "literary portraits," and frequent Oriental backgrounds.

Lacedaemon. An ancient name of Laconia, also of Sparta, its chief city.

In lordly Lacedaemon,
The city of two Kings.
Macaulay, The Battle of Lake Regillus.

La Chaise, François d'Aix de (1624-1709). French Jesuit confessor to Louis XIV. His favorite retreat near Paris became later (1806) the site of a famous cemetery, known as the cimetière du Père Lachaise.

Lachesis. The Fate who spins life's thread, working into the woof the events destined to occur. See FATES.

Lachryma Christi. A rich Neapolitan wine. The term means "tear of Christ" and is as little sacrilegious as the name of the Rhine wine Liebfraumilch, "milk of our Lady, the Virgin Mary"; it is rather evidence of a more naïve and robust spirit of worship of past ages.

Lackaye, Wilton (1862-1932). American actor. Best known for his interpretations of Svengali in Trilby and Curtis Jadwine in The Pit.

Lackland. Nickname for John, King of England (1167?-1199-1216).

Lack-learning Parliament, see under PARLIAMENTS.

Laconian, Laconic. Pertaining to Laconia or its main city, Sparta. Hence laconic (but never laconian), "sparing of words," as the Spartans were reputed to be.

Lacretelle, Jacques de (1888-). French novelist. Became famous for Silbermann (1923), a story of the persecution of a Jewish boy by his Catholic fellow-students in a Paris lycée. A Man's Life (1929) is a profound psychological study which won the Grand Prix of the French Academy. Les Hauts-Points, a detailed history of a family through half a century (successive volumes since 1932), is perhaps more ambitious in scope than Proust's Remembrance of Things Past.

lacrosse. A game of ball, originated by North American Indians, popular in Canada and, spreading from there, throughout the English-speaking world. It may be described as a kind of hockey which is played with a long-handled racket, the so-called crosse (Fr., literally "crozier"). Hence the name.

Lacy, Ernest (1863-1916). American poet, dramatist, and authority on Chatterton. He wrote a poetic drama about Chatterton, The Bard of Mary Redcliffe, which was never performed but which Christian Gauss, dean of Princeton, has called "the greatest poetic drama written in the United States." His drama Chatterton was staged by Julia Marlowe.

Lacy, Sir Hugo de. One of the chief characters of Scott's novel, THE BETROTHED, constable of Chester, a Crusader.

Sir Damian de Lacy. Nephew of Sir Hugo. He marries Lady Eveline.

Randal de Lacy. Sir Hugo's cousin, introduced in several disguises, as a merchant, a hawk-seller, and a robber-captain.

Ladd, George Trumbull (1842-1921). American professor of philosophy at Bowdoin and Yale. Pioneer in experimental psychology. His books include Philosophy of Mind (1895) and Knowledge, Life and Reality (1909).

Ladislav, Will. In George Eliot's MIDDLEMARCH the gay, lovable Bohemian whom Dorotea Brooke marries after Rev. Mr. Casaubon's death. He becomes the editor of a Middlemarch newspaper.

Ladon. The name of the dragon which guarded the apples of the HESPERIDES; also, of one of the dogs of Actaeon.

Ladrone Islands. Marianas. From Spanish ladrón, "thief, robber." The Ladrone Islands were discovered by Magellan (1521) and so called by him because their inhabitants had stolen from him.

Ladurlad. In Southey's Curse of Kehama (see KEHAMA), the father of KAILYAL. He kills Arvalan for attempting to dishonor his daughter, and thereby incurs the "curse of Kehama" (Arvalan's father). The curse is that water shall not wet him or fire consume him, that sleep shall not visit him or death release him, etc. After enduring a time of agony, these curses turn to blessings.

Lady Bountiful. The benevolent lady of a village is so called, from Lady Bountiful in THE BEAUX' STRATAGEM, by Farquhar.

Lady chapel. A chapel (in a church) dedicated to the Virgin Mary.

Lady Chatterley's Lover. A famous novel by D. H. LAWRENCE (1928), presenting the author's mystical theories of sex in the story of the wife of an English aristocrat who falls in love with her lodge-keeper and runs away with him. Because of the frankness of language and situation in the book, it was banned in England and America as obscene and thereby won a notorious reputation and a sizable illegal circulation. See also Theodore DREISER; JURGEN; ULYSSES; HALL, RADCLIFFE.

Lady from the Sea, The. A drama by Henrik IBSEN (1888), portraying the struggle in the titular heroine, Ellida, between wholesome love for her husband, Dr. Wrangel, and an unhealthy hypnotic infatuation for a strange seaman to whom she had once been engaged and to whose renewed appeals she all but yields. Her husband wins her by his understanding sympathy.

Lady of Babylon or Lady of Rome. The Roman Catholic Church, with reference to the scarlet woman described in Revelation.

Lady of Lyons, The. A romantic comedy by BULWER-LYTTON (1838) with the subtitle, Love and Pride.

Lady of Shalott, the. A maiden of the Arthurian legends, who falls in love with Sir LAUNCELOT of the Lake, and dies because her love is not returned. TENNYSON wrote a poem on the subject, and the story of ELAINE, "the lily maid of Astolat," is substantially the same.

Lady of the Aroostook, The. A novel by W. D. HOWELLS (1879). The position of the New England heroine, Lydia Blood, as the only feminine passenger to make the trip to Venice on board the freighter Aroostook, gives rise to criticism and gossip, but Lydia bears herself with charming propriety and ends by marrying Staniford, who had been one of the most horrified of her fellow passengers.

Lady of the Lake, The. (1) In the Arthurian legends, Nimue or Vivien, the mistress of Merlin. She lives in the midst of an imaginary lake which apparently prevents access to her, surrounded by knights and damsels. She steals Launcelot in his infancy, and plunges with him into her home lake; hence Launcelot comes to be called du Lac. When her protégé has grown to manhood, she presents him to King Arthur. It was she who gives Arthur the famous sword EXCALIBUR. James Branch CABELL introduces her into his Jurgen as Anaitis. See MORGAN LE FAY.

(2) In Scott's poem of this name (1810), Ellen Douglas, who lives with her father near Loch Katrine.

Lady of the Lamp, see Florence NIGHTINGALE.

Lady or the Tiger, The. A short story by Frank R. Stockton (Am., 1882) much admired for its clever ending which does not solve but only proposes the puzzle of the story. A youth so bold as to love the King's daughter is condemned to open one of two doors. Behind one is a fascinating girl whom he must marry, behind the other a tiger. The King's daughter learns the secret and signals her lover to open one of the two doors—but which?

Lady Windermere's Fan. A drama by Oscar WILDE (1892). Annoyed at her husband's persistent interest in Mrs. Erlynne, a woman of little reputation, Lady Windermere decides to leave him and run away with her lover, Lord Darlington. Mrs. Erlynne, who is in reality Lady Windermere's mother, supposed by her to be dead, finds the note left for Windermere and follows her daughter to Darlington's apartments. When Lord Darlington, Lord Windermere and others come in from the club, Lady Windermere yields to Mrs. Erlynne's persuasions and escapes unnoticed. She has, however, left her fan, and only Mrs. Erlynne's quick-witted and generous assumption of guilt and explanation that she took the fan by mistake, saves her daughter's reputation at the cost of her own. She succeeds nevertheless in her scheme of marrying Lord Augustus Lawton and departs for the Continent.

Laelaps. In classical mythology, the powerful dog given by Diana to Procris who gave it to CEPHALUS. While pursuing a wild boar it was metamorphosed into a stone. The name, which was originally that of one of Actaeon's fifty dogs, means "the hurricane."

Laelius. See under DE AMICITIA.

Laemmle, Carl (1867-1939). German-born American motion-picture producer. Organized and headed Universal Pictures Corporation (until 1936).

Laertes. In Shakespeare's HAMLET, son of POLONIUS, and brother of Ophelia. He is induced by the king to challenge Hamlet to a "friendly" duel, but poisons his rapier. Laertes wounds Hamlet, and in the scuffle which ensues, the combatants change swords, and Hamlet wounds Laertes, so that both die.

La Farge, Christopher (1897-). Brother of Oliver H. P. LA FARGE and son of Christopher Grant La Farge (1862-1938), architect. American poet; author of Hoxsie Sells his Acres (a novel in verse; 1934); Each to the Other (a novel in verse; 1939); Poems and Portraits (1940); etc. President, Authors' Guild. Prose novels include The Wilsons (1941), and The Sudden Guest (1946).

La Farge, John (1835-1910). American artist. Mural decoration of Trinity Church, Boston; panels in St. Thomas' Church, New York City; The Ascension in the Church of the Ascension, New York City; etc. Developed opalescent glass. Specimens of his work in stained glass in Memorial Hall, Harvard, and several churches. Member, American Academy of Arts and Letters.

La Farge, Oliver Hazard Perry (1901-). American anthropologist and novelist, best known for his works of fiction dealing with the American Indians. His novels include: Laughing Boy (1929), a novel dealing with Navajo Indian life, winner of the Pulitzer Prize in 1930; The Sparks Fly Upward (1931); Long Pennant (1933); The Enemy Gods (1937). All the Young Men (1935) is a collection of short stories, and other works are Tribes and Temples (1925, 1927), a book on archaeology in Arizona, Mexico, and Central America, and As Long as the Grass Shall Grow (1940), a study of the American Indian. Raw Material (1945), is his autobiography. La Farge's grandfather was JOHN LA FARGE.

Lafayette, Marquis de. Marie Joseph Paul Yves Roch Gilbert du Motier (1757-1834). French statesman and general. In American service during Revolutionary War (1777-1781), partly on furlough in France (1778-1780) to further the American cause. Revisited U.S. (1784; 1824-1825). Active in French politics. Advocated moderation during Revolution and was forced to flee to Flanders (1792). Back in France (1799), he kept aloof from public affairs till the time of Napoleon's fall. During the Revolution of 1830, he was the Commander of the National Guard.

Lafayette Escadrille. In World War I, prior to American participation, a unit of French aviation consisting entirely of American volunteers. Named in memory of the services performed by the Marquis de LAFAYETTE for the American colonies. The squadron first raised the American flag on the Western front in April, 1917. Thirty German aircraft were shot down before it became part of the U.S. Aviation Service. A similar formation in World War II was the American Eagle Squadron.

Lafeu. In Shakespeare's ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL, an old French lord, sent to conduct Bertram, Count of Rousillon, to the King of France, by whom he is invited to the royal court.

Lafitte, Jean (1780-1826). American pirate and smuggler born in France; known as "the pirate of the gulf." Plundered commerce off the coast of Louisiana. Offered services to Andrew Jackson and commanded detachment at Battle of New Orleans (1815). Pardoned by President Madison.

La Follette, Robert Marion (1855-1925). American liberal statesman Governor of Wisconsin (1900-1906); U.S. Senator (1906-1925). Supported Wilson's reform measures; tried to keep America out of the first World War and opposed American participation in League of Nations and World Court. Fought deflation, domination of big business. Ran for President (1924) on a Progressive ticket and received five million votes. Autobiography (1912); Political Philosophy (collected writings; 1920). His sons, Robert Marion La Follette, Jr. (1895-), succeeding his father as U.S. senator, and Philip Fox La Follette (1897-), governor of Wisconsin (1931, 1935, 1937), have continued his liberal policies.

La Fontaine, Jean de (1621-1695). French poet and prose-writer, an associate of BOILEAU, RACINE, and MOLIÈRE, known for his skill at story-telling. His Fables (1668-1680), in 18 books, is his most famous work, consisting of animal fables in the tradition of AEsop and the medieval "beast epic" presented with humor, grace, and satire, and a colorful, flexible verse style. Other works of La Fontaine include Nouvelles en Vers (1665), containing a translation of part of Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO and a tale by Boccaccio, and Contes et Nouvelles. La Fontaine was by nature a vagabond, a dreamer, and a lover of pleasure. He drifted from one patron to another, in the last 20 years of his career choosing only women of the aristocracy.

the Danish Lafontaine. Hans Christian ANDERSEN.

LaForgue, Jules (1860-1887). French symbolist (see SYMBOLISM) poet, with Gustave KAHN considered to have "invented" FREE VERSE in the form in which it came to be best known in the 20th century. Among his outstanding poetry, included in Oeuvres Complètes (1902-1903), are Le Sanglot de la terre, Les Complaintes, L'imitation de Notre-Dame la Lune, Le Concile féérique. Moralités Legendaires (1897-1898) consists of tales of Hamlet, Lohengrin, Salome, etc. LaForgue was one of the poets exerting important influence with regard to form, rhythm, subject-matter, and attitude on the early poetry of T. S. ELIOT.

Lagado. In Swift's Gulliver's Travels (see GULLIVER, LEMUEL), the capital of BALNIBARBI celebrated for its grand academy of projectors, where the scholars spend their time in such useful projects as making pincushions from softened rocks, extracting sunbeams from cucumbers, and converting ice into gunpowder.

Lagerlöf, Selma (1858-1940). Swedish novelist and short-story writer, known for her romantic tales dealing chiefly with her native land. Among these are: The Story of Gosta Berling (see GÖSTA BERLING) (1894); The Miracles of Antichrist (1897); Jerusalem (1901); The Emperor of Portugallia (1914); Bannlyst (1918); Mårbacka (1922), an account of her family and her home; Charlotte Löwensköld (1925); Anna Svärd (1928); A Child's Memoirs (1930), continuing Mårbacka; Harvest (1935), legends, sketches, recollections, etc.; The Diary of Selma Lagerlöf (1936). Collections of short stories include: Invisible Links (1894); From a Swedish Homestead (1899);

The Adventures of Nils (1906-1907); The Girl from the Marsh Croft (1908); Men and Trolls (1916). In 1909 Selma Lagerlöf won the Nobel Prize for literature, the first woman to do so.

lagniappe. In Louisiana, a gratuity given to customers by tradesmen. Mark Twain uses the form "lanny-yap." The word is a Creole assimilation of Spanish ñapa or yapa, "tip."

La Grande Chartreuse. Until 1903, chief house of the Carthusians in the mountains near Grenoble, France. It was founded by St. Bruno about 1084. See also CHARTREUSE.

La Grange. A character in Molière's PRÉCIEUSES RIDICULES. He and his friend Du Croisy pay their addresses to two young ladies whose heads have been turned by novels.

Lagrange, Joseph Louis (1736-1813). Famous mathematician. Born in Italy of French ancestry, he became the director of the Berlin Academy of Sciences (1766-1786), settled in Paris (1787) and was made senator and count by Napoleon I. At the age of eighteen he was professor of mathematics at Turin and later organized a society which became the Turin Academy of Sciences.

La Guardia, Fiorello H. (1882-1947). American politician, Mayor of New York City (1934-1946). Chief, U.S. Office of Civilian Defense (1941-1942) and United Nations Rehabilitation and Reconstruction Administration (1945).

La Hogue, Battle of. Naval operations of the English and Dutch fleets against the French off the coast of Normandy (May 19 to 23, 1692), from where Louis XIV attempted to invade England.

lai. A short tale of the Middle Ages as written by MARIE DE FRANCE, utilizing the material of the romances but presenting only one incident or the concise development of a single motif of folk-lore. The name of the form is said to have been taken from the songs (Irish lôid or laid) to the accompaniment of which Breton minstrels told the stories which were the source of many of Marie's works.

L'Aiglon. Title of a play by Edmond ROSTAND (1900). See AIGLON, L'.

Laing, Alexander Kinnan (1903-). American poet. Graduate of Dartmouth; assistant librarian at Dartmouth (since 1937). Fools' Errand (1928), End of Roaming (1930), and the discourse on poetry, Wine and Physic (1934). Also author and editor of horror and sea stories.

Laird's Jock, Death of the. A tale by Sir Walter SCOTT (1827). The "Laird's Jock" is John Armstrong, the laird of Mangerton. This old warrior, who has been the champion of the Border counties, witnesses a combat between his son and the English champion Foster in which his son is overthrown, and the shock of humiliation causes his death.

Laïs. A courtesan, from the name of two celebrated Greek courtesans. The earlier was the most beautiful woman of Corinth, and lived at the time of the Peloponnesian War. The beauty of Laïs the Second so excited the jealousy of the Thessalonian women that they pricked her to death with their bodkins. She was the contemporary and rival of Phryne and sat to Apelles as a model. Demosthenes tells us that Laïs sold her favors for 10,000 (Attic) drachmae, and adds tanti non emo poemitere. (Horace, 1 Epis. xvii. l. 36.)

laissez faire (Fr., "let do," that is, "let people and things alone"). The principle of laissez faire allows problems to work themselves out without planning and regulations. It is, specifically, the principle of non-interference by Government in commercial affairs. The phrase comes from the motto of the mid-18th century "PHYSIOCRATIC" school of French economists, Laissez faire, laissez passer (let do, let pass), who wished to have all customs duties abolished, demanded free circulation for their goods, thus anticipating the later Free traders. Its authorship is generally credited to Jean Claude Marie Vincent de Gournay (1712-1759). ADAM SMITH took laissez-faire theories to England, from where they later spread to the U.S. As embodied in the writings of Smith, the principle became one of the bulwarks of capitalist economics.

Lajeunesse, Gabriel. The lover of EVANGELINE in Longfellow's poem of that name.

Lajoie, Napoleon. Known as Larry (1875-). Famous American professional baseball player.

Lakamba. The native rajah of Sambir in CONRAD'S OUTCAST OF THE ISLANDS.

Lake, Simon (1866-). American naval engineer. Builder of the Argonaut (1897), the first sea-worthy submarine. Originator of the even-keel principle for submarines and inventor of underwater devices for the location of sunken vessels.

Lake School, the. The name applied in derision by the Edinburgh Review to WORDSWORTH, COLERIDGE, and SOUTHEY, who resided in the Lake District of Cumberland and Westmoreland and sought inspiration in the simplicity of nature, and to the poets who followed them.

CHARLES LAMB, LLOYD, and "CHRISTOPHER NORTH" are sometimes placed among the Lake Poets or Lakers.

Lake State. Michigan. See under STATES.

Lakmé. A romantic opera (1883) by the French composer LÉO DELIBES (1836-1891). The libretto by Gondinet and Gille is based on

THE MARRIAGE OF LOTI and is Oriental in character.

Laksmi or Lakshmi. One of the consorts of the Hindu god Vishnu, and mother of KAMA. She is goddess of beauty, wealth and pleasure, and the Ramayana describes her as springing, like Venus, from the foam of the sea.

Lalique, René (1860-). French jeweler and glassmaker; manufactured fine but inexpensive glass objects. Lalique glass is decorative, ornamented with flowers, birds, or animals in relief.

Lalla Rookh (tulip cheek). In Thomas Moore's poem of that name (1817), the supposed daughter of Aurungzebe, emperor of Delhi, betrothed to Aliris, Sultan of Lesser Bucharra. On her journey from Delhi to the valley of Cashmere, she is entertained by the young Persian poet Feramorz, who relates the four tales of the romance, and with whom she falls in love. Unbounded is her delight when she discovers that the young poet is the sultan to whom she was betrothed.

The four tales are:

- (1) The Veiled Prophet of Khorassan. See under VEILED; MOKANNA.
- (2) Paradise and the Peri. See PERI.
- (3) The Fire Worshippers. See HAFED.
- (4) The Light of the Harem. See NOUR-MAHAL.

L'Allegro. Literally, the cheerful or merry one. A poem written by John Milton in 1632. It is a pastoral idyl, celebrating a mood of gaiety and contrasting with the author's IL PENSEROSO.

Lalou, René (1889-). French essayist and critic. La Littérature Française Contemporaine (1922) is his most important book available in English (Contemporary French Literature). He has also interpreted the leading modern writers of the English-speaking world to his countrymen.

Lama, see RULERS, TITLES OF.

La Mancha, The Knight of. Don Quixote de la Mancha, the hero of Cervantes' romance DON QUIXOTE. La Mancha, an old province of Spain, is now a part of Ciudad Real.

Lamarck, Chevalier de. Jean Baptiste Pierre Antoine de Monet (1744-1829). French naturalist. Advocate of views on organic evolution which are sometimes (mistakenly) interpreted as representing a preparatory stage of Darwinism. Lamarck held (positively) that an organism reacts to a new or changing environment by fitting developments and not (negatively), as Darwin did, that a new or changing environment permits the survival of the accidentally fittest. Lamarck was connected with the Jardin du Roi and was instrumental in changing its name to Jardin des Plantes. He introduced new principles in the classification of animals and originated the terms vertebrate and invertebrate.

Lamartine, Alphonse de (1790-1869). French poet and statesman of the Romantic period. (See Romanticism.) His work is marked by a preoccupation with nature, religion, and love, subjectively presented, and is regarded as the first truly romantic poetry in French literature. Among his books are Les Premières méditations (1820); Les Nouvelles méditations (1823); Les Harmonies poétiques et religieuses (1830); Jocelyn (1836), a narrative poem dealing with a priest's love; La Chute d'un ange (1838). Lamartine was liberal, tending toward radical, in his political beliefs and, after serving as a deputy for several years and distinguishing himself as an orator, he was a leader in the Revolution of 1848. He became Minister of Foreign Affairs and in many ways was virtually the chief of the Provisional Government, but his power was lost when Louis Napoléon made his famous coup d'état. Lamartine died in poverty and obscurity.

lamasery. A Buddhist monastery (or convent) presided over by a lama, corresponding to a Christian abbot.

Lamassu. In Babylonian religion, one of a race of semi-divine beings. The Lamassus were visualized as colossal bulls or lions with human heads. Statues of them flanked the entrances of palaces and public buildings.

lamb. In Christian art, an emblem of the Redeemer, in allusion to John i, 29, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

It is also the attribute of ST. AGNES, ST. GENEVIÈVE, ST. CATHARINE, and ST. REGINA. JOHN THE BAPTIST either carries a lamb or is accompanied by one. It is introduced symbolically to represent any of the "types" of Christ, as Abraham, Moses, and so on.

Lamb, Lady Caroline (1785-1828). English novelist. Married William Lamb (later 2nd Viscount Melbourne), from whom she was separated twenty years later (1825). Her nine-months' intrigue (1813) with Lord Byron is notorious. Her anonymous novel, Glenarvon (1816; republished, 1865), contains a caricature of her erstwhile lover.

Lamb, Charles (1775-1834). English essayist of the Romantic period, a schoolmate of COLERIDGE and a friend of the other figures of English romanticism as well. Although he attempted work in the field of the drama and poetry, he was most successful in the personal essay. His writings in this form are known for their humor, whimsy, and faint overtones of pathos. They are contained in the two series entitled Essays of Elia, which appeared in The London Magazine from 1820 to 1823 and from 1824 to 1825, being collected and published in 1823 and 1833, respectively. Outstanding single essays are: A Dissertation upon Roast Pig, A Chapter on Ears, Mrs. Battle's Opinions on Whist, Dream-Children, and The Superannuated Man. Other works of Lamb are The Tale of Rosamund Gray and Old Blind Margaret (1798), a prose narrative; John Woodvil (1802), a dramatic tragedy; Tales from Shakespeare (1807), adaptations for children written in collaboration with his sister, Mary Lamb; The Adventures of Ulysses (1808), another book for children; Specimens of English Dramatic Poets Contemporary with Shakespeare (1808); Album Verses (1830), poetry.

Lamb's personal life was marked by frustration and sorrow. Because of a stammer, he was unable to take an examination at his preparatory school to qualify for a university, and so went to work as an accountant for the East India Tea House, where he stayed until 1825. There was a strain of insanity in the family, and Lamb's sister, whom he took care of, had several attacks of madness, during one of which she killed her mother; Lamb himself stayed for a while in a sanatorium.

Lamb, Harold (1892-). American writer of historical studies and biographies including Genghis Khan (1927); Tamerlane (1928); The Crusades (2 vols.; 1930); The March of the Barbarians (1940); etc.

Lamber, Juliette, see ADAM, JULIETTE.

Lambeth Palace. The official city residence in London (Lambeth) of the archbishops of Canterbury. It was acquired in 1197, but the oldest parts of the present building do not date back beyond the 13th century.

Lambro. In Byron's DON JUAN, a Greek pirate, father of Haidée. The original of this character was Major Lambro, who was captain (1791) of a Russian piratical squadron, which plundered the islands of the Greek Archipelago and did great damage.

Lamech. In the Old Testament, one of the men of pre-diluvian days.

Lamech's song. "Ye wives of Lamech, hearken unto my speech: for I have slain a man to my wounding, and a young man to my hurt! If Cain shall be avenged sevenfold, truly Lamech seventy and sevenfold."—Gen. iv. 23, 24.

As Lamech grew old, his eyes became dim, and finally all sight was taken from them, and Tubal-cain, his son, led him by the hand when he walked abroad. And it came to pass . . . that he led his father into the fields to hunt, and said to his father: "Lo! yonder is a beast of prey; shoot thine arrow in that direction." Lamech did as his son had spoken, and the arrow struck Cain, who was walking afar off, and killed him. . . . Now when Lamech . . . saw [sic] that he had killed Cain, he trembled exceedingly, . . . and being blind, he saw not his son, but struck the lad's head between his hands, and killed him. . . . And he cried to his wives, Ada and Zillah, "Listen to my voice, ye wives of Lamech. . . . I have slain a man to my hurt, and a child to my wounding!"—The Talmud, i.

lame duck. (1) In U.S. political cant, an officeholder who has failed of re-election and therefore cannot bring himself to more than half-hearted interest in his work. Before the adoption of the Twentieth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution (lame-duck amendment; February 6, 1933), congressional terms began on March 4 (not, as afterwards, on January 3). Thus there was a session of Congress between election day and the beginning of the new term, and this was known as the Lame Duck Session.

(2) A stock jobber who will not, or cannot, pay his losses. Also anyone who is unable to discharge his obligations or play his part in the world.

Lamentations of Jeremiah, The. The twenty-fifth book of the Old Testament.

Lamerock or Lameracke, Sir. In Arthurian romance, one of the knights of the Round Table, son of Sir Pellinore, and brother of Sir PERCIVAL. He had an amour with his own aunt, the wife of King Lot.

lamia. A female phantom, whose name was used by the Greeks and Romans as a bugbear to children. She was a Libyan queen beloved by Jupiter, but robbed of her offspring by the jealous Juno. In consequence she vowed vengeance against all children, whom she delighted to entice and devour.

Witches in the Middle Ages were called lamioe, and Keats' poem Lamia (1820), which relates how a bride when recognized returns to her original serpent form, represents one of the many superstitions connected with the race. Keats' story came (through BURTON) from Philostratus' De Vita Apollonii, Bk. iv. In Burton's rendering, the sage Apollonius, on the wedding night—found her out to be a serpent, a lamia . . . When she saw herself despoiled, she wept, and desired Apollonius to be silent, but he would not be moved, and thereupon she, plate, house, and all that was in it, vanished in an instant; many thousands took notice of this fact, for it was done in the midst of Greece. —Anatomy of Melancholy, Pt. iii. sect. ii, memb. i, subsect. i.

laminak. Basque fairies, little folk, who live under ground, and sometimes come into houses down the chimney, in order to change a fairy child for a human one. They bring good luck with them, but insist on great cleanliness, and always give their orders in words the very opposite of their intention. They hate church-bells. Every Basque laminak is named Guillen (William).

Lammas. The elements of the word are "loaf" and "mass." Lammas Day was formerly a harvest festival. In the modern calendar it falls on August 1 which is a quarter day in Scotland and a half-quarter day in England.

Lammie, Alfred. In Dickens's novel, OUR MUTUAL FRIEND (1864), a "mature young gentleman, with too much nose on his face, too much ginger in his whiskers, too much torso in his waistcoat, too much sparkle in his studs, his eyes, his buttons, his talk, his teeth." He marries Miss Akershem, thinking she has money, and she marries him under the same delusion, so the two kept up a fine appearance on nothing at all.

Lamont, Corliss (1902-). American essayist. Son of Thomas W. LAMONT. Author of The Illusion of Immortality (1935) which he considers his best work in the field of philosophy. Man Answers Death (1936), an anthology of "what the poets of the race have had to say about death." He is a member of the editorial council of Soviet Russia Today, has taught philosophy at Columbia, and is chairman of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, Inc.

Lamont, Thomas William (1870-1948). American banker. Member of J. P. Morgan & Company; etc. Representative of U.S. treasury on the commission to negotiate peace at Paris (1919) and alternate delegate on the committee of experts on German reparations at Paris (1929).

La Motte-Fouqué, Baron Friedrich Heinrich Karl de (1777-1843). German romantic novelist and poet; author of Undine (1811) and libretto for Hoffmann's opera of the same title. Descendant of a French family of Huguenots that left France after the revocation of Edict of Nantes.

lampad. Variant of "lamp." Francis Thompson refers to "the lampads seven," meaning the seven lamps which, in Revelations 4:5, burning before the throne, are said to be "the seven Spirits of God." The word is used exclusively in references of this kind.

Lamplighter, The. A once-popular novel by Maria S. Cummins (Am., 1854). The heroine, Gertrude, a child of unknown parentage, is brought up by the old lamplighter, Trueman Flint. She is befriended by Emily Graham, a wealthy blind girl, and eventually her father turns out to be Miss Graham's long-lost brother.

lampoon. A personal satire in writing, usually malicious. The Harvard Lampoon is the humorous publication of that university. The word lampoon is an English assimilation of Old French lampons, "let's drink," from lamper, "to guzzle," which, in turn, is a nasalized development of English to lap. The meaning of the word in modern English is explained by the fact that lampons occurred frequently as a refrain in drinking songs of a satirical nature.

Lampson, Robin (1900-). Californian poet. Author of several long narratives in cadence, as Laughter Out of the Ground (1935) and Death Loses a Pair of Wings, the story of Surgeon General William Crawford Gorgas (1854-1920) and the conquest of yellow fever.

Lancastrian. A member or supporter of the English royal house of Lancaster. See also WARS OF THE ROSES.

Lancelot, see LAUNCELOT.

Lancelot, or The Knight of the Cart (Lancelot, ou le chevalier de la charette). A romance of the Arthurian cycle by CHRÉTIEN DE TROYES. It concerns the capture of GUINEVERE by the mysterious Meleagant, interpreted by scholars as the King of Death, after he has challenged and defeated Sir KAY, and the Queen's ultimate deliverance by the valor of Lancelot, or LAUNCELOT. This is the first romance in which the famous knight appears, and when he is introduced he is known only as The Knight of the Cart because, lacking a horse, he rides for awhile in a cart used to transport criminals. Stock elements of the fairy-tale and courtly love traditions are found in this romance, including a sword bridge as one entrance to the land of Meleagant and a "perilous bed," equipped with a set of knives, as one of Launcelot's trials. In addition, Queen Guinevere behaves in a cold and imperious manner to Launcelot when she has an interview with him at her captor's castle, because he hesitated 3 steps before entering the cart and so was not a perfect lover according to the strict code of courtly love. She further asserts her power over the knight by bidding him do his "worst" rather than his best as he fights with Meleagant in a tournament. Scholars regard this romance as an embodiment in part of the classic legend of PLUTO and PROSERPINA.

Land of Beulah (Is. lxii. 4). In THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, that land of heavenly joy where the pilgrims tarry till they are summoned to enter the Celestial City; the Paradise before the resurrection.

land of bondage. Egypt, from the oppression of the Israelites there.

land of cakes. Scotland, famous for its oatmeal cakes.

Land of Nod. To go to the land of Nod is to go to bed. There are many similar puns, and more in French than in English. Of course, the reference is to Gen. iv. 16, "Cain went . . . and dwelt in the land of Nod," which seems to mean "the land of wandering" rather than any definite locality.

Land o' the Leal. The land of the faithful or blessed; a Scotticism for a hypothetical land of happiness, loyalty and virtue, hence heaven, as in Lady Nairn's song—

I'm wearin' awa'
To the land o' the leal.

Gladstone, in one of his Midlothian campaigns, once amused the natives by using the phrase as a complimentary synonym for Scotland itself.

Land of Promise, or Promised Land. Canaan, which God promised to give to Abraham for his obedience. See Ex. xii. 25, Deut. ix. 28, etc.

Land of Steady Habits. A name given to the State of Connecticut, which was the original stronghold of Presbyterianism in America and the home of the notorious BLUE LAWS.

Land, The. A long poem (1926) by Victoria SACKVILLE-WEST, which established her reputation. It deals with the year's cycle of an English farmer, interspersed with lyrics, and was awarded the Hawthornden prize (1927).

landgrave. Corresponding to German Landgraf. In medieval times (since the 12th century) a German count (that is, "Graf") to whom jurisdiction over a certain territory was entrusted. Later, the title of certain German princes, as the heads of the non-regnant branches of the family of Hesse.

Landis, Kenesaw Mountain (1866-1944). American jurist and high commissioner for American and National Leagues of Professional Base Ball Clubs and National Association of Professional Base Ball Leagues (from 1920).

Land of Little Rain. Title of a book about California, the region "between the high Sierras south from Yosemite—east and south beyond Death Valley and on into the Mojave Desert," by Mary Austin (1903).

Land of the Midnight Sun. Norway. In the Arctic and Antarctic there are periods when the sun does not descend below and others when it does not rise above the horizon within the twenty-four hours of the day. At the poles these periods are half a year. They decrease in regions closer to the polar circles beyond which the phenomenon can no longer occur. Northern Norway is the region of the Arctic most frequently visited by travelers from western Europe and the U.S. Hence its common association with the sun shining at midnight for a time in mid-summer. It could similarly be associated with the sun not shining at noon for a time in mid-winter and be called the Land of the Midday Night.

Landon, Alfred Mossman (1887-).

American businessman. Governor of Kansas (1933-1937). Unsuccessful Republican candidate for the presidency (1936).

Landon, Letitia Elizabeth (1802-1838). English poet and novelist. Signed her work L. E. L.

Landon, Walter Savage (1775-1864). English poet, literary critic, and prose-writer, known for his interest in the Greek and Latin classics and the severity and intellectual coldness of his lyrics, many of which were written in direct imitation of Latin and Greek models. Among his works are: GEORGE (1797), an Oriental tale in blank verse; COUNT JULIAN (1812), a tragedy; Imaginary Conversations (1824-1853), a series of discussions between historical figures on a variety of subjects; Citation and Examination of William Shakespeare (1834), literary criticism; Pericles and Aspasia (1836), imaginary letters; Poemata et Inscriptiones (1847), Latin verse; The Hellenics (1847), poems on Greek subjects; Last Fruit Off an Old Tree (1853); Antony and Octavius (1856), dramatic dialogues; Heroic Idyls (1863). ROSE AYLMER is his best-known lyric.

In his youth, Landon was influenced by the revolutionary atmosphere of the time, being forced to leave Oxford because of his opinions and in 1808 going off with a regiment he had raised to fight against Napoleon in Spain. He tried to institute humanitarian reform on his estate in Wales but failed, and for a number of years lived in Italy. His poetry was never popular in his own time.

Landseer, Sir Edwin Henry (1802-1873). Famous English animal painter. Drew Sir Walter Scott's dogs with the poet in their midst. His paintings owe their popularity largely to the etchings made of them by his brother Thomas Landseer (1795-1880).

Land's End. Granite cliffs some sixty to a hundred feet high in Cornwall, the most westerly extremity of England. In ancient geography, Bolerium.

Landsknecht (Ger., "servant of the land"). Original form of the French adaptation lansquenets. One of the mercenary foot soldiers constituting the German (and French) standing armies from the time of Emperor Maximilian through the 17th century. The Landsknechte took their name from the serfs of earlier centuries who owed military service to the lord of their land. They became a colorful class of professional warriors who fought for fighting's sake, for booty and personal loyalty to their leader but never (not even in theory) for ideals and principles. The type has been glorified anachronistically by the German general and author Ernst Jünger.

Landsturm (Ger.). In German-speaking countries, originally a call to arms throughout the land. Later, and still in Switzerland, the third line of defense. Similarly Landwehr ("defense of the land"), the second line of defense. In Switzerland, the first line of defense is called Auszug ("marching out").

Lane, Edward William (1801-1876). English Arabic scholar. Author of a translation of A Thousand and One Nights (1838-1840), excellent in its day but superseded by that of Richard Burton. Compiler of an exhaustive thesaurus of Arabic, an Arabic dictionary, etc.

Lane, John (1854-1925). English publisher. Founded (with Elkin Mathews) the Bodley Head Publishing Co. (1887) and the Yellow Book (1894), a magazine famous in its time.

Lang, Andreas (1862-1933) and his cousin Anton Lang (1875-1938). Members of a family of potters and woodcarvers of Oberammergau, Bavaria, who enacted various roles in the Passion Plays of their native village.

Lang, Andrew (1844-1912). Scottish scholar and man of letters. In a controversy with Max Müller he held that literary mythology is the outgrowth of anonymous folklore. Author of volumes of graceful verse, translator (in collaboration) of Homer, and editor of numerous volumes of fairy tales. See Andrew Lang; a Critical Biography (1946), by Roger L. Green.

Lang, Cosmo Gordon (1864-1945). Anglican prelate. Archbishop of Canterbury (1928-1942). His opposition to the friendship between Mrs. Wallis Simpson and Edward VIII (1936) was said to be partly responsible for the king's abdication.

Langdon-Davies, John (1897-). British anthropologist and sociologist. A popular lecturer both in England and America. He took the part of the Loyalists in the Spanish Civil War from its beginning in 1936. His Man and His Universe (1930) has been very popular.

Langeais, Antoinette de. Titular heroine of Balzac's novel, The Duchess de Langeais, usually published as part of The Thirteen (L'Histoire des treize). She is beloved by Armand, Marquis de Montriveau, whom she holds always at arm's length.

Langham, Edward. An Oxford tutor, shy, morbid but nevertheless likable, in Mrs. Humphry Ward's Robert Elsmere (1888). The author explained later that the character was suggested by AMIEL, whose diary she had been engaged in translating.

Langland, William (ca. 1332-ca. 1400). Long-assumed author of PIERS PLOWMAN, conjectured to have been a Benedictine cleric of humble birth in the convent of Malvern, later to have led the greater part of his life as a vagabond in London, and to have had a moderate amount of education. The findings of more recent scholarship, however, tend to discredit the theory that the poem is the work of one man, since there are three separate versions of it and more than one man is referred to as the author during the unfolding of the story.

Langley, Samuel Pierpont (1834-1906). American astronomer and pioneer in theory and construction of mechanically propelled heavier-than-air flying machines. First successful experiment with a model plane on the Potomac (May 6, 1896). His full-sized machines failed in several trials. An airdrome near Norfolk, Virginia, is named in his honor.

Langmuir, Irving (1881-). American research chemist. With Gilbert N. Lewis, originator of the Lewis Langmuir atomic theory. Nobel prize for chemistry (1932).

Langner, Lawrence (1890-). Anglo-American playwright and patent lawyer. Organized the Washington Square Players (1914) and helped found the Theatre Guild. With his wife Armina Marshall, co-author of several American historical comedies, and owner and operator of the Westport County Playhouse, a summer theater in Connecticut.

Langstaff, Launcelot. The pseudonym under which SALMAGUNDI was published (1807), the authors being Washington IRVING, William Irving and J. K. Paulding.

Langton, Stephen (1150?-1228). Archbishop of Canterbury (1207). Refused possession of his see by King John until England was placed under interdict by the Pope (1213). Became the leader of the barons in their contest with the king and was the first subscribing witness to the Magna Carta at Runnymede. Crowned Henry III and demanded of him the full execution of the charter (1223).

Langtry, Lily, née Emily Charlotte Le Breton (1852-1929). Known as "the Jersey Lily." English actress, famous for her beauty.

langue d'oc. The language of southern France. From the 13th century on, it became customary to group the Romance dialects that had emerged from Vulgar Latin according to their word for "yes." The dialects of the langue de si were spoken in Italy; those of the langue d'oc and the langue d'oïl were spoken in France, south and north of the Loire basin, respectively. Standard modern French developed from a langue d'oïl dialect (oïl = oui).

Languish, Lydia. In Sheridan's comedy THE RIVALS, the heroine, a romantic young lady who is for ever reading sensational novels and molding her behavior on the characters.

Lanier, Sidney (1842-1881). American poet and musician, considered one of the most accomplished poets of the South and the U.S. in the latter part of the 19th century. He tried to achieve in his work the auditory effects of music and experimented with varying metrical patterns and unusual imagery. Much of his poetry shows an affinity with that of the Pre-Raphaelites (see PRE-RAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD) and A. C. SWINBURNE. Among his works are Tiger Lilies (1867), a novel based on his experiences in the Civil War; Poems (1877); St. Augustine in April (1878); The Boys' Library of Legend and Chivalry (1879-1882), a series of adaptations of legends and romances for children; The Science of English Verse (1883), a work on prosody; The English Novel (1883), criticism; Poems (1884); Music and Poetry (1898); Retrospects and Prospects (1899); Shakespeare and His Forerunners (1902), lectures; Poem Outlines (1908). His son, Henry Wysham Lanier, edited The Golden Book, an eclectic magazine.

Lanigan, George Thomas (1845-1886). Canadian-American journalist. Wrote the immortal humorous verses, Threnody for the Ahkoond of Swat.

Lankes, Julius J. (1884-). American artist, specializing in wood cuts. Represented in permanent collections of Library of Congress, Toronto Art Gallery, British Museum, Metropolitan Museum in New York, etc.

lanner. A small variety of falcon.

Oh for a noble falcon-lanner
To flap each broad wing like a banner.
Browning, The Flight of the Duchess.

Lanner, Josef (1801-1843). Austrian violinist and composer. Creator of the modern Viennese waltz. Leader of an amateur quartet, in which Johann STRAUSS, known as the "Waltz King," played the viola.

Lansing, Robert (1864-1928). American lawyer. Secretary of State under Wilson (1915-1920) at whose request he resigned. Author of The Peace Negotiations (1921).

lansquenet, see LANDSKNECHT.

Lantenac, the Marquis de. A character in Victor Hugo's NINETY-THREE.

lantern.

Lantern Land. The land of literary charlatans, pedantic graduates in arts, doctors, professors, prelates, and so on ridiculed as "Lanterns" by RABELAIS (with a side allusion to the divines assembled in conference at the Council of Trent) in his GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, v. 33. See CITY OF LANTERNS.

Feast of Lanterns. A popular Chinese festival, celebrated at the first full moon of each year. Tradition says that the daughter of a famous mandarin one evening fell into a lake. The father and his neighbors went with lanterns to look for her, and happily she was rescued. In commemoration thereof a festival was ordained, and it grew in time to be the celebrated Feast of Lanterns.

Lanternois. Inhabitants of Rabelais' LANTERN LAND.

Laocoön. In Virgil's AENEID, a son of Priam and priest of Apollo of Troy, famous for the tragic fate of himself and his two sons, who were crushed to death by serpents while he was sacrificing to Poseidon, in consequence of his having offended Apollo. The group representing these three in their death agony, now in the Vatican, was discovered in 1506, on the Esquiline Hill (Rome). It is a single block of marble, and is attributed to Agesandrus, Athenodorus, and Polydorus of the School of Rhodes in the 2nd century B. C. It has been restored.

Lessing called his famous treatise on the limits of poetry and the plastic arts (1766) Laokoon because he uses the group as the peg on which to hang his dissertation.

Since I have, as it were, set out from the Laocoön, and several times return to it, I have wished to give it a share also in the title.—Preface.

Irving BABBITT has a book entitled The New Laokoon (1910).

Laodamia. In classic myth, the wife of Protesilaus, who was slain before Troy. She begged to be allowed to converse with her dead husband for only three hours, and her request was granted. When the respite was over, she voluntarily accompanied the dead hero to the shades. WORDSWORTH has a poem on the subject (1815).

Laodicean. One indifferent to religion, caring little or nothing about the matter, like the Christians of that church, mentioned in the book of Revelation (Ch. iii. 14-18).

Laodicean, A. A novel by Thomas HARDY (1881). The plot centers about the rivalry of Somerset, a young architect, and Captain de Stancy for the hand of Paula Powers, the owner of the Stancy castle. Captain de Stancy's son, who is known as Will Dare, steals Somerset's plans and takes underhanded means of discrediting Somerset in his work on the castle, but is finally exposed.

Laomedon. In classic myth, King of Troy, the father of PRIAM. He is remembered chiefly for the sin of ingratitude committed when he refused to give the rewards he had promised to APOLLO for pasturing his flocks on Mount Ida, to POSEIDON for building the walls of Troy, and to HERCULES for rescuing his daughter Hesione from the sea-monster sent by Poseidon. Hercules slew him and all his sons but Priam in revenge.

Laon. Hero of Shelley's poem THE REVOLT OF ISLAM.

Lao-tzu, Lao-tse, or Lao-tsze (ca. 604-531 B.C.). "The Venerable Philosopher." See under TAOISM.

Lapham, Silas. The hero of Howells' Rise of Silas Lapham. Mrs. Lapham and the daughters Irene and Penelope are important characters in the same novel.

Lapithae. A people of Thessaly, noted in Greek legend for their defeat of the Centaurs at the marriage-feast of HIPPODAMIA, when the latter were driven out of Pelion. The contest was represented on the Parthenon, the Theseum at Athens, the Temple of Apollo at Basso, and on numberless vases.

Laplace, Marquis Pierre Simon de (1749-1827). French astronomer and mathematician. Made discoveries in celestial mechanics and set forth a nebular hypothesis of cosmogony (1796) which is essentially like that advanced by Immanuel KANT.

lapsus linguae (Lat.). A slip of the tongue, a mistake in uttering a word, an imprudent word inadvertently spoken. Cf. also the Latin phrases lapsus calami (a slip of the pen), and lapsus memoriae (a slip of the memory).

Laputa. The flying island inhabited by scientific quacks, and visited by Lemuel GULLIVER in his "travels." These dreamy philosophers are so absorbed in their speculations that they employ attendants, called "flappers," to flap them on the mouth and ears with a blown bladder when their attention is to be called off from "high things" to vulgar mundane matters.

Lara. A narrative poem by BYRON (1814) which continues the tale related in THE CORSAIR.

Larbaud, Valéry (1881-). French critic, novelist, short-story writer, translator, and poet. His books, "few and far between, form a sort of continuous veiled autobiography." Edited the French edition of James JOYCE's Ulysses.

Larcom, Lucy (1824-1893). American author and educator. Poems (1869). Collaborated with John Greenleaf Whittier in editing anthologies. Her best-known poem is Poor Lone Hannah.

Lardner, Ringgold Wilmer (1885-1933). American sports writer, newspaper columnist, and short-story writer, known for his bitterly humorous and satirical stories and sketches of 20th-century American life, told in the characteristic slang and vernacular speech of baseball players, boxers, song-writers, stock-brokers, stenographers, chorus-girls, etc., in order to show the stupidity or viciousness of the people involved. His books include You Know Me, Al: A Busher's Letters (1916), dealing with a baseball player; Bib Ballads (1915), verse; Gullible's Travels (1917); The Big Town (1921), a novel; How to Write Short Stories (1924); What of It? (1925); The Love Nest (1926), dramatized by Robert E. SHERWOOD in 1927; June Moon (1929), a play, a satire on the song-writers of TIN PAN ALLEY, written with George S. KAUFMAN; The Story of a Wonder Man (1927), a satire in the form of an autobiography; Round Up (1929); and First and Last (1934).

lares and penates. Used as a collective expression for home, and for those personal belongings that distinguish a home. In ancient Rome the lares (sing. lar) were the household gods, usually deified ancestors or heroes; the penates were also guardian deities of the household (and the state), but were more in the nature of personifications of the natural powers, their duty being to bring wealth and plenty rather than to protect and ward off danger. The lar familiaris was the spirit of the founder of the house, which never left it, but accompanied his descendants in all their changes.

Largo Caballero, Francisco (1869-1946). Spanish labor leader. Directed the Unión General de Trabajadores, the Spanish equivalent of the American C.I.O. Reached the height of his career as a Marxist and revolutionary when he became prime minister and minister of war during the Spanish Civil War. Fled to France after the defeat of the Loyalists and landed in a German concentration camp. Liberated by Russian forces at the end of World War II, he was taken to Paris for surgical treatment and died there in his 76th year.

Lariat, the. In Mark Twain's INNOCENTS ABROAD, one of the party of American tourists in Europe, a willing composer of doggerel verse on all subjects and the self-constituted Lariat (Laureate) of the excursion.

Lark, The. A LITTLE MAGAZINE published (1895-1897) by Les Jeunes, a San Francisco group of the nineties led by Gelett BURGESS, whose famous poem The Purple Cow first appeared in it. It was somewhat influenced by THE CHAP-BOOK, published by Stone and Kimball in Chicago (1894-1898).

Larned, William Augustus (1872-1926). American tennis player. Seven times national singles champion; six times member of the U.S. Davis Cup team.

La Rochefoucauld, Duc Francois VI de (1613-1680). French author, known for his maxims, assembled in Maximes (1664-1665), and for his memoirs, published in Mémoires (1662). The latter work describes in a detached manner the author's own political failures, especially in his efforts to destroy the power of Cardinal RICHELIEU over the French royal family. The maxims are observations on life in general, witty, succinct, profound, written in a lucid and concise style.

Lars, a Pastoral of Norway. A narrative poem by Bayard TAYLOR. The hero, a Norwegian peasant, escapes to America after a duel and there adopts the Quaker faith.

Larsen, Hanna Astrup (1873-1946). Translator and editor of The American-Scandinavian Review, and literary secretary of the American-Scandinavian Foundation. Editor of about seventy books published by the Foundation. She translated novels by J. P. JACOBSEN and short stories by Steen Blicher. She was the editor of Norway's Best Short Stories (1927), Sweden's Best Stories (1928) and Denmark's Best Stories (1928). She wrote biographies of Knut Hamsun (1922) and Selma Lagerlöf (1935) and was awarded the Swedish Vasa Medal (1931) and the Royal Danish Medal of Merit (1935).

Larsen, Wolf. The leading character in Jack London's SEA-WOLF.

larvae. A name among the ancient Romans for malignant spirits and ghosts. The larva or ghost of Caligula was often seen according to Suetonius in his palace.

[Fear] sometimes representeth strange apparitions, as their fathers' and grandfathers' ghosts, risen out of their graves, and in their winding-sheets; and to others it sometimes sheweth Larves, Hobgoblins, Robbin-goodfellows, and such other Bug-beares and Chimeræes.—Florio's Montaigne, I. xvii.

La Salle, Sieur de. Robert Cavalier (1643-1687). French explorer in America. Descended Mississippi River to Gulf of Mexico (1682), claiming the whole valley for France and naming the region Louisiana after the French king, Louis XIV. Murdered by his own men in what is now Texas during a second expedition undertaken to conduct a band of French colonists to the Mississippi.

La Salle Street. A street in the heart of Chicago, on which are located the Stock Exchange and many financial institutions. Chicago's WALL STREET, State Street, or LOMBARD STREET.

Las Casas, Bartolomé de (1474-1566). Spanish Dominican missionary and historian. Arrived at Hispaniola as a planter (1502) and became the first priest ordained in the New World (1510). Preached and labored against Indian slavery and other colonial abuses. The title "protector of the Indians," bestowed on him by Cardinal Ximenes, was well earned. Among his works on America is the important historical source, Historia General de las In- dias, available in a number of manuscripts until it was finally published in 1875.

lasher. Water rushing through a weir. Hence its pool.

To bathe in the abandoned lasher . . .
Matthew Arnold, The Scholar Gypsy.

Connected with London School of Economics (from 1920). Member of the FABIAN Society and of the Industrial Court (since 1926). Professor of political science in the University of London (since 1926). "Probably no Englishman since Lord Bryce has known American politics, history and law as thoroughly as he does." A convinced Marxist but not a Communist. Has edited the words of Edmund BURKE and John Stuart MILL. Among his many books are The American Presidency: An Interpretation (1940); Strategy of Freedom (1941); Reflections on the Revolution of our Time (1943); etc.

Lassalle, Ferdinand (1825-1864). German socialist leader. Disciple of Karl MARX (from 1848). Regarded as founder of the German Social Democratic party. Killed in a duel growing out of his love affair with Helene Dönniges, wife of the Rumanian boyar Racowitza. George MEREDITH's novel, The Tragic Comedians (1880) is based on this affair.

Lassus, Orlandus de. Also Orlando di Lasso. Original name Roland Delattre (1530-1594). Flemish composer and choirmaster. More than 2,000 compositions. He understood the instruments of his day—lute, viol, dulcimer, etc.—and did not confine himself to church music. He and PALESTRINA "represent the highest point attained in sixteenth century polyphonic writing." The year of his death coincided with that of Palestrina.

last of the dandies. Count Alfred d'Orsay (1801-1852).

last of the English. HEReward (fl. ca. 1070).

last of the Fathers. St. Bernard, Abbot of Clairvaux (1091-1153).

last of the Goths. Roderick, who was the last of the kings of the Visigoths in Spain and died in 711. SOUTHEY has a tale in blank verse on him.

last of the Greeks. The general, Philopoe-men of Arcadia (253-183 B. C.).

last of the knights. The Emperor Maximilian I (1459-1519).

last of the Romans. A title, or sobriquet, given to a number of historical characters, among whom are:

Marcus Junius Brutus (85-42 B. C.), one of the murderers of Caesar.

Caius Cassius Longinus (d. 42 B. C.), so called by Brutus.

Stilicho, the Roman general under Theodosius.

Aetius, the general who defended the Gauls against the Franks and other barbarians, and defeated Attila near Châlons in 451. He was so called by Procopius.

François Joseph Terasse Desbillons (1711-1789), a French Jesuit; so called from the elegance and purity of his Latin.

Pope called CONGREVE Ultimus Romanorum, and the same title was conferred on Dr. Johnson, Horace Walpole, and C. J. Fox.

last of the Saxons. King HAROLD (1022-1066), who was defeated and slain at the Battle of Hastings.

last of the Stuarts. Henry, Cardinal of York (1725-1807), the last legitimate male descendant of James I.

Last Days of Pompeii, The. A historical novel by BULWER LYTTON (1834). The hero, Glaucus, is a noble young Athenian, in love with the beautiful Ione. Her guardian Arbaces, a priest of Isis and the villain of the story, makes every effort to thwart the romance and win Ione for his own evil ends. When the city is destroyed by the eruption of Vesuvius, the blind flower girl, Nydia, who has loved Glaucus passionately but in vain, leads the lovers out of the doomed city. Nydia's bitter despair finally brings her to a tragic end.

Last Leaf, The. A poem by O. W. HOLMES (1833) about an old, old man.

I know it is a sin
For me to sit and grin
At him here
But the old three-cornered hat
And the breeches, and all that Are so queer.

Last of the Barons, The. A historical novel by Bulwer LYTTON (1843), dealing with the Wars of the Roses. The hero is Richard Neville, Earl of Warwick, known as the King-maker. The novel traces his downfall. Sibyl Warner and her father Adam WARNER are important characters.

Last of the Mohicans, The. A historical novel by James Fenimore COOPER (1826), one of the LEATHERSTOCKING series. The action takes place in the dense forests about Fort William Henry during the French and Indian War. "The Last of the Mohicans" is Uncas, the son of CHINGACHGOOK and the pride of his friend HAWKEYE. Uncas is a brave and noble Indian youth who cherishes a hopeless love for Cora Munro, the quadroon daughter of the English commander, and dies in the attempt to rescue her from his Huron enemy Magua. Chingachgook and Hawkeye (the Leatherstocking of the other novels) play a prominent part in the plot, which consists largely of pursuit, escape and capture, and is one of the swiftest-moving of all Cooper's novels. The Yankee psalm-singer, David Gamut, an incongruous figure in the silent woods, adds a touch of humor. The French general Montcalm plays a subordinate part in the action.

Last Puritan, The, A Memoir in the Form of a Novel. A novel by George SANTAYANA (1936), a study of Oliver Alden, descendant of an old and wealthy New England family, who comprises in himself the Puritan characteristics of austerity, single-mindedness, gravity, and conscientious, scrupulous devotion to purpose. He is out of place in the civilization of the 20th century; as a friend of his in the novel says, ". . . In Oliver Puritanism worked itself out to its logical end. He convinced himself, on Puritan grounds, that it was wrong to be a Puritan. . . . He thought it his clear duty to give Puritanism up, but couldn't." Oliver is presented to us in the prologue of the novel supposedly as a former student of the author at Harvard University and one of the young men killed during World War I. (Santayana later stated that he was partly based on W. Cameron Forbes.) In style, subject-matter, and approach, The Last Puritan recalls the novels of Henry JAMES.

Last Ride Together, The. Title of a short poem by Robert BROWNING in Dramatic Romances (1841-1846).

Last Rose of Summer, 'T is the. Title and first line of a song, generally known from the second act of the opera Martha (1847) by Flo-tow, but written (1813) by Thomas Moore to the tune of an old air.

Latch, William. In George Moore's ESTHER WATERS, the father of Esther's child.

Late Christopher Bean, The. Title of a play (1933) by Sidney HOWARD, adapted from the French.

Late George Apley, The. Title of a Pulitzer Prize-novel (1937) by J. P. MARQUAND.

Lateran. The church or basilica of St. John Lateran. It is the Cathedral church of Rome and as such the highest in the hierarchy of churches in the Catholic world. Adjoining is the Lateran Palace, scene of a number of Church councils known as Lateran Councils. The name goes back to the Roman family Lateranus who owned a palace on the same site until the last owner was put to death by Nero.

Lateran Treaty. A concordat between the Holy See and the Kingdom of Italy (ratified June 8, 1929). It settled a sixty-year-old controversy, establishing the sovereign (Papal) State of Vatican City and stipulating that Catholicism should be the only state religion in Italy.

Lathrop, Dorothy Parsons (1891-). American illustrator and author, with a long list of book illustrations. Three Mulla-Mulgars by Walter DE LA MARE (1919); A Little Boy Lost by William Henry HUDSON (1920); Down-Adown-Derry (1922) and Crossings (1923) by Walter De la Mare; The Princess and Curdie by George Macdonald (1927); Hitty: Her First Hundred Years by Rachel Field (1929); author and illustrator of The Fairy Circus (1931); The Snail Who Ran (1934); The Little White Goat (1933); The Lost Merry-Go-Round (1934); Who Goes There? (1935); Bouncing Betsy (1936); etc.

Latimer, Hugh (1485?-1555). English reformer and Protestant martyr. On Mary's accession committed to Tower. Burned at stake for heresy, "at the ditch over against Balliol College" (October 16).

Latin Church, Fathers of the, see under FATHER.

Latini, Brunetto, see BRUNETTO LATINI.

Latin Quarter (le Quartier Latin). The University quarter of Paris on the left bank of the Seine. For centuries it has been a center for artists, writers, students, intellectuals, and Bohemians of all varieties and from many lands.

Latinus. Legendary king of the Latini, the ancient inhabitants of Latium. According to Virgil, he opposes Aeneas on his first landing, but subsequently forms an alliance with him, and gives him his daughter, Lavinia, in marriage. Turnus, King of the Rutuli, declares that Lavinia has been betrothed to him. The issue is decided by single combat, and Aeneas, being victor, obtains Lavinia for his wife and becomes by her the ancestor of Romulus, the mythical founder of Rome.

The name Latinus is given to one of the Italian heroes in Tasso's JERUSALEM DELIVERED. He and his five sons are all slain in battle by the Soldan Solymán in a single hour.

Latitudinarians. A Church of England party in the time of Charles II, opposed both to the High Church party and to the Puritans. The term came to be applied to those persons who attach little importance to dogma and what are called orthodox doctrines.

Latmos, Mount. The mountain where Endymion pastured his flocks when Diana fell in love with him.

Latona. The Roman name of the Greek Leto, mother by Jupiter of Apollo and Diana. Milton, in one of his sonnets, refers to the legend that when she knelt by a fountain in Delos with her infants in arms to quench her thirst, some Lycian clowns insulted her and were turned into frogs.

Latour, Jean. In DEATH COMES FOR THE ARCHBISHOP, an aristocratic French bishop who reveals qualities of intellectual distinction, tolerance, and courage.

latria and dulia. Greek words adopted by the Roman Catholics. The former is used to express that supreme reverence and adoration which is offered to God alone, and the latter, that secondary reverence and adoration which is offered to saints. Latria is from the Greek suffix -latreia, worship, as in our idolatry; dulia is the reverence of a doulos or slave.

Latter-Day Saints, see MORMONISM.

Latzko, Andreas (1876-). Hungarian writer whose best-known book, Men in War (1917), is a war novel of pacifist tendencies.

Laud, William (1573-1645). English prelate; son of a clothier, who rose to the rank of Archbishop of Canterbury (1633). Most influential statesman under Charles I, representing absolutism in both Church and State. Sought to root out Presbyterianism in Scotland and Calvinism in England. Provoked riot in St. Giles, Edinburgh, leading to Bishops' Wars and the Long Parliament. Impeached of high treason by the Long Parliament, he was condemned and beheaded.

Lauder, Sir Harry. Real name Harry MacLennan (1870-). Scottish singer and composer of songs, internationally popular for rendition of Scottish songs and ballads, such as I Love a Lassie.

Laughing Boy. Title of a Pulitzer prize-novel (1930) about a young Navajo silver-smith by Oliver LA FARGE.

Laughing Philosopher. Democritus of Abdera (5th century B.C.), who viewed with supreme contempt the feeble powers of man. See WEEPING PHILOSOPHER.

Major rôles in The Private Life of Henry VIII; The Barretts of Wimpole Street; Ruggles of Red Gap; Mutiny on the Bounty; The Suspect; etc. Married (1929) Elsa Lanchester, English actress and comedienne.

Launce. In Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona, the clownish servant of Proteus, one of the two "gentlemen of Verona." He is in love with JULIA. Launce is especially famous for soliloquies to his dog Crab, "the sourest-natured dog that lives."

Launcelot or Lancelot du Lac. In Arthurian romance, the most famous of the knights of the ROUND TABLE.

Sir Launcelot is the son of King Ban of Britanny, but is stolen in infancy by Vivien, the LADY OF THE LAKE. She plunges with the babe into the lake (whence the cognomen of du Lac), and when her protégé has grown to man's estate, presents him to King Arthur. Sir Launcelot goes in search of the GRAIL, and twice catches sight of it. Though always represented in the Arthurian romances as the model of chivalry, bravery, and fidelity, Sir Launcelot is the adulterous lover of GUINEVERE, wife of King Arthur, his friend, and it is through this love that the war, which results in the disruption of the Round Table and the death of Arthur, originates.

ELAINE, "the lily maid of Astolat," falls in love with Launcelot; the love is not returned, and she dies. By another Elaine, daughter of King PELLES, he (through a stratagem) unwittingly becomes the father of Sir GALAHAD. At the close of his life the repentant knight becomes a hermit, and dies in the odor of sanctity. Launcelot is an outstanding figure in all the old romances and in Tennyson's Idylls of the King. He is the hero of a narrative poem Lancelot by E. A. ROBINSON (1920). See also LANCELOT, OR THE KNIGHT OF THE CART.

Launcelot Greaves, The Adventures of Sir. A satiric novel by SMOLLETT (1760), a sort of English Don Quixote. The hero, Sir Launcelot Greaves, is a well-bred and noble-minded young English squire of the George II period, half crazed by love. He sets out attended by Captain Crow, an old sea-captain, to detect fraud and right the wrongs of the world. After sundry adventures which give the author opportunity for satiric treatment of English life, he is welcomed back by his Amelia.

Launfal, Sir. In Arthurian romance, one of the Knights of the Round Table. His story is told in a metrical romance written by Thomas Chestre in the reign of Henry VI. He is steward to King Arthur, and falls in love with Tryamour, who gives him an unfailing purse, telling him that if he ever wishes to see her, all he has to do is to retire into a private room, and she will instantly be with him. Sir Launfal attracts much attention at court by his great wealth, but when he tells Gwenivere (Guinevere), who solicits his love, that she is not worthy to kiss the feet of his lady love, the Queen accuses him, as Potiphar's wife did Joseph, of insulting her. Thereupon Arthur tells him that, unless he makes good his word by producing this paragon of women, he is to be burned alive. On the day appointed Tryamour arrives, Launfal is justified and set at liberty, and he accompanies his mistress to the isle of Oleron, after which he is never seen again.

Another legend is given in James Russell Lowell's poem The Vision of Sir Launfal (1848). On a beautiful day in June the knight (in a dream) goes in search of the Holy Grail, tosses a leper a gold coin, and learns that the leper is Christ.

Laura. The lady of this name immortalized by PETRARCH is generally held to have been Laure de Noves, who was born at Avignon in 1308, was married in 1325 to Hugues de Sede, and died of the plague in 1348, the mother of eleven children. It was Petrarch's first sight of her, in the church of St. Clara Avignon, that, he says, made him a poet.

In Byron's poem BEPPLO, a Venetian lady who marries Beppo, is also called Laura. So are, in emulation of Petrarch, many recipients and heroines of lyrical poems. Cf., for instance, Schiller's poems to Laura.

laureate, see POETS LAUREATE.

Laurence, Friar. In Shakespeare's ROMEO AND JULIET, the good friar who promises to marry Romeo and Juliet. He supplies Juliet with the sleeping draught, to enable her to quit her home without arousing scandal or suspicion.

Laurence, William L. (1888-). Lithuanian-born American journalist. Pulitzer prize for reporting the Harvard Tercentenary Conference of Arts and Sciences (1937). Fellow of the American Institute for "distinguished service in the interpretation of science." He reported exclusively the discovery that uranium 235 held the key to the utilization of atomic energy. Wrote the magazine article "The Atom Gives Up" (September 7, 1940). Pulitzer prize (1946) for his general reportage, but more specifically for his eye-witness account of the dropping of an atomic bomb on Nagasaki and ten articles in the New York Times on the development, production, and significance of the atomic bomb, reprinted, with additions, in Dawn Over Zero (1946).

Laurentian Library. A library that has grown out of the private collection of Cosimo and Lorenzo (that is, Laurentius; hence the name) de' Medici. The monks of San Marco in Florence acquired it after the expulsion of the Medici. It was purchased by Pope Leo X, taken to Rome, and enlarged. Pope Clement VII (of the Medici family) returned it to Florence.

Laurie, Annie (1682-1764). Subject of a famous Scottish song (ca. 1700). Daughter of Sir Robert Laurie of Maxwellton, Dumfriesshire. She married Alexander Ferguson. The song was written by the man she rejected, William Douglas. Revised and set to music by Lady John Scott (1855).

Laurier, Sir Wilfrid (1841-1919). Liberal Canadian-French statesman of Catholic parentage. One of the most eloquent Canadian orators of his day. Prime minister of Canada (1896-1911).

Laurin. The dwarf-king in the German folk-legend Laurin, or Der kleine Rosengarten. He possesses a magic ring, girdle, and cap, and is attacked in his rose garden, which no one may enter on pain of death, by Dietrich of Bern. The poem belongs to the late 13th century, and is attributed to Heinrich von Ofterdingen.

Lautréamont, Le Comte de. Real name Isidore Lucien Ducasse (1846-1870). French poet, born in Montevideo, Uruguay, settled in Paris (from ca. 1860), known for the despair, savagery, and violence of his poetry as represented in Les Chants de Maldoror (1868-1870). See also RIMBAUD, ARTHUR.

Lautrec, see TOULOUSE-LAUTREC.

Lavaine, Sir. A knight of Arthurian romance, brother of ELAINE, the "lily maid of Astolat." In Tennyson's Elaine (Idylls of the King), he accompanies Sir LAUNCELOT when he goes, incognito, to tilt for the ninth diamond. He is described as young, brave, and a true knight.

Laval, Pierre (1883-executed, October 15, 1945). French politician. Member of Chamber of Deputies (from 1914). In cabinet with various portfolios and as premier (1931-1936). Responsible with Sir Samuel Hoare of Britain for Western non-interference with Mussolini's Ethiopian venture. Since the outbreak of World War II, advocate of a separate French peace with the Axis. After the collapse of France, Laval was taken into the Vichy Government as Vice-Premier, but was removed from office (December 13, 1940) and temporarily interned. Released by German pressure. Shot and seriously wounded (August 27, 1941) by P. Colette who posed as one of the French Volunteers to Combat Bolshevism. Recovered and continued to conspire with the Germans who forced Marshal Pétain to make him chief of government. Announced a policy of complete collaboration with Germany. At the time of the American victory over Germany, Laval fled to Spain by airplane. He was returned to France, taken into custody by the Americans, tried by a French court, and executed by a firing squad.

Lavater, Johann Kaspar (1741-1801). Swiss theologian and author. Through his major work, Physiognomical Fragments for the Promotion of a Knowledge of Man and of Love of Man (1775-1778), he became the father of the modern science of characterology. Hampered in his work by the conflict of his Christian faith in free will with the apparent determinism of his physiognomic findings. The importance of his contribution should not be judged on the basis of amusing details as his suggestion that one might obtain an ideal "royal line" by shaving a queen bee in profile or his tirade on the physiognomically obvious inability of a bed bug to experience or inspire love.

La Vallière, Duchesse de. Françoise Louise de la Baume Le Blanc (1644-1710). One of the mistresses of Louis XIV (1661-ca. 1674), replaced by the Marquise de Montespan. She is the heroine of an episode in DUMAS' The Vicomte de Bragelonne, often published separately as Louise de la Vallière (see under THREE MUSKETEERS), and of Bulwer-Lytton's Duchess de la Vallière (1836).

Lavendar, Dr. The best known character of MARGARET DELAND's Old Chester novels and stories, a wise and kindly old clergyman who is the close friend of many of his parishioners, a counsellor in time of need. Dr. Lavendar can be stern when he conceives it his duty, but his sincerity and disinterestedness are never in question. He is a prominent character in THE AWAKENING OF HELENA RICHIE, Old Chester Tales, and Dr. Lavendar's People.

Lavengro: The Scholar, Gipsy, Priest. A famous romance by GEORGE BORROW (1851) which with its sequel, The Romany Rye (1857), gives a picturesque account of the author's wanderings among the gipsies.

Lavery, Sir John (1856-1941). British artist, chiefly known for his portraits and figures.

Polymnia; A Lady in Black; Spring; Game of Tennis; etc.

Lavinia. Daughter of LATINUS, betrothed to Turnus, King of the Rutuli. When AENEAS landed in Italy, Latinus made an alliance with the Trojan hero, and promised to give him Lavinia as his wife. This brought on a war between Turnus and Aeneas, which was decided by single combat, in which Aeneas was victor.

Shakespeare gives this name to the daughter of TITUS ANDRONICUS in the play of that name.

Palemon and Lavinia. A pair of lovers whose tale is told in Thomson's SEASONS.

Lavoisier, Antoine Laurent (1743-1794). French chemist. One of the founders of modern chemistry. Overthrew the phlogiston theory of combustion by the use in experimentation of scales. His reforms in chemical nomenclature are the basis of the system still in use. Guillotined by order of the Convention.

Lavransdatter, Kristin, see KRISTIN LAV-RANSDATTER.

Law, Andrew Bonar (1858-1923). Canadian-born British statesman. M.P. as Unionist member for a Glasgow division (1900). Succeeded A. J. Balfour as leader of the Unionist Party. Colonial Secretary (1915) and Chancellor of the Exchequer (1916-1918). Succeeded Lloyd George as Premier (October 22, 1922), but soon resigned because of ill health.

Law, John (1671-1729). Scottish financier. Condemned to death for having killed one Edward Wilson in a duel (1694), he fled to the continent cultivating various financial schemes including that of the issuance of paper money. He founded the first French bank (Banque Générale; 1716) and organized (1717) the so-called "Mississippi Scheme" or "System" which had control of colonization in Louisiana and soon absorbed the East India and China companies, the African Company, and the mint. It collapsed due to the overissue of paper money and governmental hostility (1720), and Law left the country. He declined Czar Peter's invitation to take charge of Russia's finances, returned to England for a while, and died poor and forgotten in Venice. Law's Louisiana venture, popularly known as the Mississippi Bubble, is alluded to in Goethe's Faust, Part II, when Mephistopheles proposes to the Emperor that paper money be issued on all the hidden treasures throughout the country.

Law, William (1686-1761). English devotional writer. Follower of the German mystic Jakob BÖHME. Author of the Serious Call to a Devout and Holy Life (1728) which influenced the Evangelical Revival. Especially remembered for his attack on Mandeville's Fable of the Bees (1723).

Lawes, Henry (1596-1662). English composer. Suggested to MILTON the subject of Comus. His music for it was performed in 1634. Cf. Milton's sonnet To Mr. H. Lawes, on his Aires, beginning, Harry, whose tuneful and well-measured song . . .

Lawes, Lewis E. (1883-1947). American penologist; warden of Sing Sing Prison, N.Y. (1920-1941). Author of works on prisons and penology, the best-known of which is 20,000 Years in Sing Sing (1932).

Lawless, Emily (1845-1913). Irish novelist and poet. Author of Hurriah (1886) and Grania (1892), novels; and With the Wild Geese (1902), a volume of verse.

Lawless Parliament, see under PARLIAMENTS.

Law of Moses, see PENTATEUCH.

Law of the Medes and Persians. Used as an expression of the irrevocable. Cf. Daniel vi. 15.

Lawrence, David Herbert (1885-1930). English poet, short-story writer, and novelist, known for his lifelong obsession with problems of sexual relations, his attraction to primitive religions and philosophies of nature mysticism and the hero (see also Robinson JEFFERS), his maladjustment to the 20th-century industrial world, his hatred of and attacks upon Puritanism and Anglo-Saxon social conventions, and his constant search for a way of life in which he could put his theories of sex, morals, and society into practice. His writings, of great volume and variety, are uneven in literary value and at their best are marked by intensity of feeling, color and a mystical lyricism in their descriptions of nature, and skill in both satirical and sympathetic portrayals of character. Critics also point out his overfondness for preaching, his ranting and ill-balanced attacks on people and institutions he regarded as his enemies, and his tendency in several of his works to sacrifice character and plot to the exposition of his moral theories.

Lawrence's novels include The White Peacock (1911); The Trespasser (1912); Sons and Lovers (1913), regarded as his masterpiece; The Rainbow (1915); The Lost Girl (1920); Women in Love (1920); Aaron's Rod (1922); Kangaroo (1923); The Boy in the Bush (1924), in collaboration with M. L. Skinner; St. Mawr (1925); The Plumed Serpent (1925); LADY CHATTERLEY'S LOVER (1928), probably his best-known work; The Virgin and the Gipsy (1930). Books of his poetry, which began in the school of IMAGISM, include Love Poems and Others (1913); Amores (1916); Look! We Have Come Through (1917); New Poems (1918); Tortoises (1921); Birds, Beasts, and Flowers (1923); Collected Poems (1928); Pansies (1929); Nettles (1930); Last Poems (1933). Among collections of his short stories are The Prussian Officer (1914); England, My England (1922); The Ladybird (1923), in the U.S. known as The Captain's Doll; Glad Ghosts (1926); The Woman Who Rode Away (1928); The Man Who Died (1929); The Lovely Lady (1933); Love Among the Haystacks (1933); Christ in the Tyrol (1933). Travel-sketches are: Twilight in Italy (1916); The Sea and Sardinia (1921); Mornings in Mexico (1927); Etruscan Places (1927). Essays and criticism are represented by Psychoanalysis and the Unconscious (1921); Movements in European History (1921), written under the pseudonym of Lawrence H. Davidson; Studies in Classical American Literature (1923); Pornography and Obscenity (1930); Apocalypse (1931); Phoenix: The Posthumous Papers of D. H. Lawrence (1937). The Widowing of Mrs. Holroyd (1914), Touch and Go (1920), and David (1926) are plays.

Lawrence had an extremely unhappy childhood, having been the son of a Puritan-minded schoolteacher and a coal miner who beat his wife and child when drunk. The author also suffered from tuberculosis during the latter part of his life, saw his books banned as obscene, and was continually disappointed in his quest for a homeland and congenial associates. At one time or another he traveled and lived in Italy, Australia, Ceylon, New Zealand, Tahiti, the French Riviera, Mexico, and the southwestern part of the U.S.; in Taos, New Mexico, an artist's colony, he once dreamed of setting up an ideal social community. Aldous HUXLEY, Katherine MANSFIELD, and J. M. MURRY were close friends of Lawrence, and his admirers included several women who called him "Lorenzo," regarded themselves as his disciples, and engaged in jealous quarrels over his attentions. After his death, a number of books and memoirs, both unfriendly and adulatory, attacking each other, were published about Lawrence by the people who had known him; among these were Murry, Mabel Dodge LUHAN, Dorothy BRETT, and his wife, Frieda von RICHTHOFEN. The characters of Mark and Mary RAMPION in Huxley's POINT COUNTER POINT are believed to have been drawn from Lawrence and Frieda.

More for his personality and his ideas and attitudes than for his actual writing, D. H. Lawrence is considered one of the outstanding literary figures of the 20th century.

Lawrence, Friar, see LAURENCE.

Lawrence, Gertrude. Originally Gertrud Alexandra Dagmar Lawrence Klasen (1901-). English actress of Danish-Irish parentage. In U.S. (from 1924) played opposite Noel Coward in his Private Lives (1930) and Tonight at Eight-Thirty (1936-1937). Leading rôles in Susan and God (1935), Lady in the Dark (1940); the Theatre Guild production of Shaw's Pygmalion (1946); etc. Cf. her autobiography, A Star Danced (1945). Married to the theatrical producer Richard S. Aldrich.

Lawrence, James (1781-1813). American naval officer; commanded the Chesapeake in an unsuccessful engagement with the British frigate Shannon (June 1, 1813) which was blockading Boston harbor. Mortally wounded, he shouted, "Don't give up the ship!" The British captured the Chesapeake, but Lawrence's last words became a popular slogan in the U.S. navy.

Lawrence, Josephine (1897?-). American novelist, author of Head of the Family (1932); If I Have Four Apples (1935); Sound of Running Feet (1937); Bow Down to Wood and Stone (1938); No Stone Unturned (1941); etc. Miss Lawrence calls herself "an old-fashioned conservative," and writes streamlined moral tales. Years Are So Long (1934) is considered her best book.

Lawrence, St., see under SAINTS.

lazy as Lawrence, see under SAINTS.

Lawrence, Sir Thomas (1769-1830). English portrait painter, known chiefly for his courtly and elegant canvases of contemporary notables, as the countess of Derby (1790); George III (1792); Mrs. SIDDONS; the Princess de Lieven; J. P. Kemble (as Hamlet); etc. Succeeded Sir Joshua REYNOLDS as principal painter to the king.

Lawrence, Thomas Edward (1888-1935). English soldier, archaeologist, and author, famous for his activities in arousing and directing a successful rebellion of the Arabs against the Turks during World War I. A long account of his adventures and his ideas on Arab politics was published as The Seven Pillars of Wisdom (1926) in an edition of eight copies for the author's friends; later the book was published in a shorter form as Revolt in the Desert (1927) and was a best-seller. Lawrence held several official positions of importance and received a number of honors after the war. He enlisted in the British air force as "Private Shaw" and in 1927 had his name legally changed to T. E. Shaw in order, he said, to avoid the publicity that had attended him as a result of his exploits. It is reported that he chose the name of Shaw because on one occasion he was mistaken for a son of George Bernard SHAW.

Lawson, John Howard (1895-). American playwright, known for his experiments in EXPRESSIONISM in the 1920's and his later plays expressing proletarian sympathies. See PROLETARIAN LITERATURE. His works include Roger Bloomer (1923) and Procesional (1925), examples of expressionism;

Loud Speaker (1927), on American politics; The International (1928), dealing with a world-wide revolution of the PROLETARIAT; Success Story (1932); The Pure in Heart (1934); Gentlewoman (1934); Marching Song (1937), dealing with a SIT-DOWN STRIKE. Convicted April 19, 1948, of contempt of Congress for refusing to tell House Committee on Un-American Activities whether or not he was a Communist.

Lawson, Robert (1892-). American illustrator. Best known for his collaboration with Munro LEAF as illustrator of The Story of Ferdinand (1936).

Lawson, Sam. A shiftless amusing Yankee who tells the stories related in Mrs. Harriet Beecher STOWE's Old Town Folks.

Layamon (fl. ca. 1200). English priest. Author of the Middle English chronicle in alliterative verse (with occasional rhymes), THE BRUF.

Lay of the Last Minstrel. A narrative poem by Sir Walter SCOTT (1805). Lady Margaret of Branksome Hall, "the flower of Teviot" is beloved by Baron Henry of Cranstown, but a deadly feud exists between the two families. The poem narrates how he wins both glory in arms and the hand of his fair lady.

Lays of Ancient Rome. A series of ballads of MACAULAY (1842). The chief ballads are Horatius, THE BATTLE OF THE LAKE REGILLUS, and Virginia.

Lays of the Scottish Cavaliers. Ballads by William Edmonstoune AYTOUN (1848). Ballad-romances in the style of Scott.

Laxdale Saga. An Icelandic saga of the early Middle Ages, dealing chiefly with the willful, selfish, and much-married GUDRUN who falls in love with KJARTAN. While Kjartan is at the court of King Olaf abroad, his cousin Bolli tells Gudrun that he, Kjartan, has become friendly with Olaf's sister Ingebjorg. Out of spite, Gudrun marries Bolli, and when Kjartan returns to Iceland and hears of the marriage, he, also out of spite, marries Hrefna. He gives to Hrefna an ornate coif which Ingebjorg had originally sent with him as a gift for Gudrun, and this causes Gudrun to precipitate a feud between the two families by having the coif stolen. There follows a series of raids and battles in which Kjartan is eventually killed through the machinations of the woman who loved him and whom he loved.

Lazarillo de Tormes. A romance by Diego Hurtado de Mendoza (Sp, 1553), which was the forerunner of a whole school of fiction known as gusto picaresco, the style of roguery or picaresque romance.

Lazarus. (1) Any poor beggar; so called from the Lazarus of the parable, who was laid daily at the rich man's gate (Luke xvi). Another form of the same word is lazar, "a diseased person," from which are derived lazar house, lazaretto, "a pest-house," and lazzarone, "one of the homeless idlers of Naples."

(2) Another better known Lazarus of the New Testament is the brother of Mary and Martha of Bethany, whom Jesus raised from the dead. In Browning's poem concerning KARSHISH, the speaker, a skeptical Arabic physician, tells of his encounter with Lazarus after his resurrection.

Lazarus, Emma (1849-1887). American poet of Portuguese-Jewish ancestry, early in her career influenced by R. W. EMERSON, best-known for her poetry dealing with Jewish nationalism and the persecution of Jews in Europe at the time. Her books include Admetus, And Other Poems (1871), dedicated to Emerson; Alide (1874), a romance on the life of GOETHE; The Spagnoletto (1876), a tragedy; Poems and Ballads of Heine (1881), translations; Songs of a Semite (1882); By the Waters of Babylon (1887); Poems (1889). She was the author of the lines carved on the base of the Statue of Liberty, entitled The New Colossus.

Lazarus Laughed. A drama by Eugene O'NEILL (1927), dealing with Lazarus after his resurrection by Jesus. The man to whom new life has been given goes about preaching a new religion of love and eternal life, symbolized by laughter. He eventually goes to Rome and causes a sensation there, finally being stabbed by Caligula in the great amphitheater of the city but affirming until the last his belief in the triumph of life. Seven masked choruses, symbolizing varying periods of life, are used in this play.

Lazy Susan. A (revolving) muffin stand or turntable for sugar bowl, saltcellar, etc., as used in restaurants.

Lea, Fanny Heaslip (1884-). Popular American novelist and short-story writer. Quicksands (1911); Wild Goose Chase (1929); Half Angel (1932); etc.

Lea, Homer (1876-1912). American soldier and author. Physically handicapped. General in Chinese army (1909); adviser to Sun Yat-Sen (1911-1912). Author of The Valor of Ignorance (1909); The Day of the Saxon (1912); etc. His warnings about war in the Far East were revived after Japan's attack on Pearl Harbor, notable through the publicity given them by Clare BOOTHE LUCE.

Leacock, Stephen Butler (1869-1944). Canadian humorist and professor of political science and economics at McGill University, Montreal (1903-1936). In addition to his professional works, he published studies of Mark Twain and Charles Dickens. His most famous books are his books of humor, as Literary Lapses (1910), Nonsense Novels (1911), Moonbeams from the Larger Lunacy (1915), Frenzied Fiction (1917); etc.

leader or leading article. A newspaper article in large type by the editor or one of the editorial staff; so called because it takes the lead or chief place in the summary of current topics, or because it is meant to lead public opinion. A short editorial article is called a leaderette.

The leading counsel in a case, the senior counsel on a circuit, the first fiddle of an orchestra, the first cornet of a military band, etc., is also called the leader.

Leaf, Munro (1905-). American humorist and illustrator of books for children. His best-known book, illustrated by Robert Lawson, is the best seller The Story of Ferdinand (1936). Inventor of the Watchbirds in A Picture Book of Behavior (1939), illustrated by himself.

League of Nations. A league with headquarters at Geneva, formed after the close of World War I, largely through the exertions of Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States (1913-1921). The United States, however, never was a member of the League. With this exception the members were the signatories of the Treaty of Peace at Versailles (June 28, 1919), on behalf of the Allies, with certain other States, including Germany and the U.S.S.R.

The territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members was guaranteed by the League, and in cases of dispute between members arbitration, with a time limit, was agreed upon. The League was founded on a Covenant and a Charter of XXVI Articles, the High Contracting Parties agreeing to the Covenant in order to promote International Co-operation and to achieve International Peace and Security, by the acceptance of obligations not to resort to War—by the prescription of open, just, and honourable relations between Nations:

by the firm establishment of the understandings of International Law as the actual rule of conduct among Governments: and by the maintenance of justice and a scrupulous regard for all Treaty Obligations in the dealings of Organized Peoples with one another.

The Council of the League consisted of the representatives of the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan, with four others elected from among the remaining members.

During the 1920's, the League was able to settle a few minor disputes between nations and its contributions in the fields of refugee rehabilitation, public health, and international labor problems became considerable, but it had no power to enforce its policies in cases of war waged by important nations. It failed especially to be effective at the invasion of China by Japan (1937) and of Ethiopia by Italy (1934), as also during the Civil War in Spain (1936-1939). Several nations, including Italy, Japan, and Germany, resigned from the League in the late 1930's. With the beginning of World War II (1939) its membership was lost entirely. It was formally dissolved on April 18, 1946, its material and moral heritage being taken over by the United Nations Organization.

Leah. In the Old Testament, the daughter of LABAN. She is one of the wives of JACOB.

Leahy, William Daniel (1875-). American fleet admiral. Commander of battle force (1936-1937); chief of naval operations (1937-1939); retired (1939). Governor of Puerto Rico (1939-1940); ambassador to France (1941). Chief of staff to President (1942-1949).

Leander Club. Oldest English open rowing club, dating from the early 19th century.

Léandre. (1) In Molière's Fourberies de Scapin (see SCAPIN), the son of GÉRONTE. During the absence of his father, he falls in love with Zerbinette, whom he supposes to be a young gipsy but who is in reality the daughter of Argante, his father's friend. Scapin manages to secure the money for her ransom.

(2) In Molière's MÉDECIN MALGRÉ LUI, the lover of Lucinde.

Leaning Tower. The famous Leaning Tower at Pisa, in Italy, the campanile of the cathedral, is 181 ft. high, 57½ ft. in diameter at the base, and leans about 14 ft. It was begun in 1174, and the sinking commenced during construction.

The Leaning Tower of Pisa continues to stand because the vertical line drawn through its centre of gravity passes within its base.—Ganot, Physics.

leap year. A year of 366 days, i.e., in the Julian and Gregorian calendars any year whose date is exactly divisible by four except those which are divisible by 100 but not by 400. Thus 1900 (though exactly divisible by 4) was not a leap year, but 2000 will be. It is an old saying that during leap year the ladies may propose, and, if not accepted, claim a silk gown. Fable has it that the custom was originated by St. Patrick.

Lear, Edward (1812-1888). English painter and writer, known for his LIMERICKS and nonsense verse, marked by absurd humor, whimsy, and fantasy. The Owl and the Pussy-Cat (1871) is his best-known set of verses. See also INCIDENTS IN THE LIFE OF MY UNCLE ARLY.

Lear, King, see KING LEAR.

learned. Coloman, King of Hungary (1095-1114), was called The Learned.

the learned blacksmith. Elihu Burritt (1811-1879), the linguist, who was at one time a blacksmith.

the learned painter. Charles Lebrun (1619-1690), so called from the great accuracy of his costumes.

the learned tailor. Henry Wild, of Norwich (1684-1734), who mastered, while he worked at his trade, the Greek, Latin, Hebrew, Chaldaic, Syriac, Persian, and Arabic languages.

the most learned fool in Christendom. James I of England, so called by the Duke of Sully.

Learned Ladies (Les Femmes savantes). A comedy by MOLIÈRE (1672). See FEMMES SAVANTES.

Learoyd, John. A Yorkshire private who appears in many of KIPLING's tales with his boon companions Terence Mulvaney and Stanley ORTHURIS. He is particularly prominent in Greenhow Hill, which relates the story of his youth.

Leatherstocking. The famous scout whose adventures bind together James Fenimore COOPER's five historical novels known as the Leatherstocking series. The novels in their chronological order (not as written but as regards their action) may be briefly summarized as follows. In THE DEERSLAYER (1841) are related the scout's adventures as a youth of twenty in the Lake Otsego settlement. THE LAST OF THE MOHICANS (1826) deals with the exploits of his prime under the name of Hawkeye in the French and Indian War. THE PATH-FINDER (1840) narrates how he surrenders the girl he loves to a more successful suitor. In THE PIONEERS (1823) the old scout, here known as Natty Bumppo, is back in his boyhood home in the Otsego region. In THE PRAIRIE (1826) he spends his last days as a trapper in the vast plains west of the Mississippi, to which he has come in despair because of the destruction of the forests.

The character of Leatherstocking was probably drawn in part from Daniel BOONE, the American frontiersman. This "philosopher of the wilderness," Cooper says of Leatherstocking, "was simple-minded, faithful, utterly without fear, and yet prudent. . . . His feelings appeared to possess the freshness and nature of the forest in which he passed so much of his time, and no casuist could have made clearer decisions in matters relating to right and wrong."

Although ignorant of books, the scout is thoroughly versed in all the lore of woodcraft, and no emergency finds him at a loss. He is the immortal type of the American frontiersman, hardy, self-reliant, passionately devoted to the free, open country, which has stamped him as her own. His bitter-hearted retreat before the encroachments of civilization gives him a touch of tragedy that only adds to his stature.

Leavenworth. City in northeastern Kansas, site of a federal penitentiary and of Fort Leavenworth.

Leavenworth Case, The. A mystery novel (1878) by Anna Katharine GREEN.

Leaves of Grass. A volume of poems in free verse by Walt WHITMAN, first issued under this title in 1855, and reissued with additional poems several times during his lifetime.

I lean and loafe at my ease, observing a spear of summer grass.

Walt Whitman, Song of Myself.

Le Beau. In Shakespeare's As You Like It, a courtier attending upon Frederick, the usurper of his brother's throne.

Leblanc, Maurice (1864-1941). French detective-story writer. Creator of the detective Arsène Lupin.

Lebrun, Mme Vigée-, see VIGÉE-LEBRUN, MARIE ANNE ELISABETH.

Lebyadkin, Captain. In Dostoyevsky's THE POSSESSED, an army captain, simultaneously crafty, comically pompous, and proud, who seeks to extort money from Nikolay STAVROGIN, his brother-in-law, for the support of his sister Marya, and also to blackmail Stavrogin. The captain writes poetry to Lizaveta Nikolaevna TUSHIN and, in a manner alternately cringing and insolent, offers to be her protector.

Marya Timofeyevna Lebyadkin. The captain's sister, a pathetic crippled idiot, one of the best examples of Dostoyevsky's studies of abnormal psychology. Stavrogin, in part to make a martyr of himself and in part as a weird joke, has married her secretly and continues to treat her, half-ironically, with the utmost gallantry and respect while his family and associates try to decide whether or not an actual marriage has taken place.

Le Charlier, Jean, see GERSON, JEAN.

Lecks, Mrs. One of the elderly New England heroines of F. R. STOCKTON's burlesque The Casting Away of Mrs. Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine.

left, right, center. In the amphitheater, where the French National Assembly of 1789 convened, the nobles still commanded sufficient respect to be given places of honor to the right of the president. The radicals moved naturally as far away from them to the left as they could. The moderates found themselves squeezed in between in the center. Hence the political connotations of these terms. Carlyle, in The French Revolution (1847), was one of the first to speak in English of "the extreme Left." Derivatives like leftist, leftism, etc., did not come into general use until after the Russian Revolution (ca. 1920).

Le Gallienne, Eva (1899-). Famous American actress, daughter of the English writer Richard Le Gallienne (1866-1947) who enjoyed considerable renown in the nineties. Her name is permanently associated with the Civic Repertory Theater in New York which she founded (1926) and directed, and where she appeared in leading parts in The Cherry Orchard, Peter Pan, Cradle Song, The Master Builder, etc. A later venture in repertory, 1946-1947, was not successful.

Legend, Sir Sampson. In Congreve's comedy, Love for Love, a foolish, testy, prejudiced, and obstinate old man. He tries to disinherit his elder son Valentine, for his favorite son Ben, a sailor, and he fancies Angelica is in love with him, when she only intends to fool him. He says, "I know the length of the Emperor of China's foot, have kissed the Great Mogul's slipper, and have rid a-hunting upon an elephant with the Cham of Tartary."

Valentine Legend. The hero of Love for Love, in love with Angelica.

Benjamin Legend. Valentine's sailor brother, known as Ben.

Legenda Aurea, see GOLDEN LEGEND.

Legend of Good Women, The. A poem by Geoffrey CHAUCER, written about 1386. It is in the form of a dream-vision. See also BOOK OF THE DUCHESS. The god of love appears to Chaucer in a dream and rebukes him for having aided in giving women a reputation for unfaithfulness by writing TROILUS AND CRISEYDE and translating The Romance of the Rose. In penance the poet is assigned to write a history of "good" women, or those who have been faithful according to the principles of COURTLY LOVE. See PALINODE. CLEOPATRA, THISBE, DIDO, MEDEA, LUCRECE, ARIADNE, and PHILOMELA are among the women so celebrated, their stories being taken chiefly from Virgil and Ovid.

The Prologue to The Legend of Good Women, containing a lyrical tribute to the daisy, is more famous than the narratives. The work is written in decasyllabic, or "heroic," COUPLETS, and is considered to be the first use of this form in English.

Legend of Montrose. A novel by Sir Walter SCOTT (1819), dealing with the struggle between the Royalists and Parliamentarians in the time of Charles I, culminating in the victory of the former in 1645 at Inverlochy under James Graham, Earl of Montrose. The heroine, Annot Lyle, the daughter of a Parliamentarian, is courted by two Royalist lovers and finally chooses one of them, the Earl of Monteith. The Rittmaster, Dugald DALGETTY, one of Scott's most famous characters, appears in this novel.

Léger, Alexis St. Léger. Pseudonym St.-J. Perse (1887-). French poet, born on a coral island off Guadeloupe. His nurse was a secret priestess of Shiva. While in China as Secretary of the Diplomatic Corps, his friends were Chinese philosophers. Traveled in the Gobi Desert and the islands of the South Seas. Intimate friend and "right arm" of the French "apostle of peace," Aristide BRIAND. During World War II, his apartment in Paris was looted and five volumes of unpublished poems in manuscript were destroyed. Léger now lives in the U.S.A. His reputation as a poet rests almost entirely on the long poem Anabase (1924), translated into English (by T. S. Eliot; 1930), German, Italian, Rumanian, and Russian. It is "a series of images of migration, of conquest of vast spaces in Asiatic wastes," an intense expression of barbaric civilization.

the Leonidas of Modern Greece. Marco Bozzaris, from his courageous feats at Kerpenisi in 1823.

Leonine city. The part of Rome which contains the Vatican. It was fortified by Pope Leo IV. Hence the name.

Leonine verse. So called from Leonius, a canon of the church of St. Victor, in Paris, in the 12th century, who first composed in such verse. It has a rhyme in the middle of the line; as:

Pepper is black, though it hath a good smack.
Est avis in dextra melior quam quattuor extra.

Léonor. In Molière's L'École des Maris, an orphan brought up by ARISTE.

Leonora. (1) In Verdi's opera IL TROVATORE, a princess who falls in love with Manrico.

(2) In Beethoven's opera entitled FIDELIO, the heroine, wife of Fernando Florestan, a state prisoner in Seville. In order to effect her husband's release, she assumes the attire of a man, and the name of Fidelio. For the rest of the tale, see FIDELIO.

(3) In Donizetti's opera LA FAVORITA, Leonora de Guzman was the "favorite" of Alfonso XI of Castile.

(4) For the Leonora celebrated for her relation to the Italian poet Tasso, see TASSO AND LEONORA.

Leonov, Leonid Maksimovich (1899-). Russian novelist. Called by Maxim Gorki "one of the chief representatives of the contemporary group of Soviet writers who continue the work of classical Russian literature." He lost one eye in the fighting before Leningrad and was one of the six script writers to contribute to the Soviet war film This Is the Enemy.

Leontes. In Shakespeare's WINTER'S TALE, King of Sicily, husband of Hermione.

leopard. So called because it was thought in medieval times to be a cross between the lion (leo), or lioness, and the pard, which was the name given to a panther that had no white specks on its body.

References to the impossibility of a leopard changing its spots are frequent. The allusion is to Jeremiah, xiii. 23.

Lions make leopards tame.

Yea; but not change his spots.

Shakespeare, Richard II, i. 1.

In Christian art, the leopard represents that beast spoken of in Revelation xiii. 1-8, with seven heads and ten horns; six of the heads bear a nimbus, but the seventh, being "wounded to death," lost its power, and consequently is bare.

And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion.—Rev. xiii, 2.

In heraldry, the leopard is supposed to typify warriors who have performed some bold enterprise with force, courage, promptitude, and activity. The lions in the royal coat of arms of England were formerly called and depicted as leopards, the idea being that no lion would permit another to remain on the same field.

the Knight of the Couching Leopard. Sir Kenneth, or rather, the Earl of Huntingdon, Prince Royal of Scotland, who followed, incognito, Richard I to the Crusade, and is the chief character of Scott's TALISMAN.

Leopardi, Conte Giacomo (1798-1837). Italian poet and philologist. Physically handicapped and deeply pessimistic in his work. Canzoni (1824); Versi (1826); Canti (1836); etc.

Leporello. In Mozart's opera DON GIOVANNI, the valet of Don Giovanni or Don Juan.

leprachaun. The fairy shoemaker of Ireland; so called because he is always seen working at a single shoe (leith, half, brog, a shoe or brogue). Another of his peculiarities is that he has a purse that never contains more than a single shilling at one time.

Do you not catch the tiny clamour,
Busy click of an elfin hammer,
Voice of the Leprachaun singing shrill,
As he merrily plies his trade?

W. B. Yeats, Fairy and Folk Tales.

He is also called lubrican, cluricaune, etc. In The Honest Whore (Pt. II, III, i) by DEKKER and MIDDLETON, Hippolito speaks of Bryan, the Irish footman, as "your Irish lubrican."

Le Queux, William Tufnell (1864-1927). English novelist, chiefly known for his mystery and detective stories.

Ler, King. The earliest known original of the King in Shakespeare's tragedy KING LEAR, an ocean god of early Irish and British legend. He figures in the romance The Fate of the Children of Lir as the father of FIONNUALA. On the death of Fingula, the mother of his daughter, he married the wicked Aoife, who, through spite, transformed the children of Lir into swans, doomed to float on the water for centuries till they hear the first mass-bell ring. This is the subject of one of Thomas MOORE's Irish Melodies.

Lermontov, Mikhail Yurievich (1814-1841). Russian poet and novelist. Known as "the poet of the Caucasus," where he was twice sent in exile (once for his impassioned ode to the Czar after the death of Pushkin), and where he was killed in a duel. Some of his best-known poems are The Demon, Ismail Bey, Hadji Abrek, and The Song of the Czar.

Ivan Vasilievich. His best known novel is A Hero of Our Time (1839).

Le Socur, Meridel. American author. Her North Star Country (1945) is a study of the region of Minnesota, Wisconsin, and the western shores of the Great Lakes. She has written many short stories, some of which appeared in the Best Short Stories of 1927 and 1932.

Lespinasse, Julie Jeanne Éléonore de (1732–1776). French letter-writer. Companion to the blind Mme. du Deffand (1754–1764), with whom she conducted a sparkling literary salon. Friend of D'Alembert, the Marquis de Mora, the Count de Guibert, etc. To Guibert were addressed the Lettres de Mlle de Lespinasse, published (1809) by Guibert's widow, giving a picturesque account of contemporary life.

Lesseps, Vicomte Ferdinand Marie de (1805–1894). French diplomat and engineer. Originator of the Suez-Canal plan (first conceived in 1832). Received concession from Said Pasha, Viceroy of Egypt (1854), and completed the canal in ten years (1859–1869). Also president of a French company that began work on cutting through the Isthmus of Panama (1881–1888). The scheme collapsed, and Lesseps was condemned for misappropriation of funds. Sentence not carried out.

Lessing, Gotthold Ephraim (1729–1781). German dramatist and critic, best known for his dramas Minna von Barnhelm (1763) and NATHAN THE WISE (1779) and his critical treatise entitled LAOKOÖN (1766). For a full statement of Lessing's rôle in the history of modern criticism, cf. Mary Colum, From These Roots (1937).

Lessways, Hilda. The heroine of Arnold Bennett's trilogy of novels, CLAYHANGER, Hilda Lessways (1911) and These Twain (1916).

L'Estrange, Sir Roger (1616–1704). English journalist and writer of political pamphlets. Surveyor of printing presses and licensor of the press under Charles II and James II (1663). Issued the Public Intelligence and The News (1663-1666). Perhaps also projected the City Mercury (1675). Edited the Observer (1681-1687), in which he attacked the Whigs. Notable linguist and translator.

Lestrigons. A fabulous race of cannibal giants who lived in Sicily. ULYSSES (Odys. x) sent two of his men to request that he might land, but the king of the place ate one for dinner and the other fled. The Lestrigons assembled on the coast and threw stones against Ulysses and his crew; they fled with all speed, but many men were lost. See also POLYPHEMUS.

Lethe (Gr. letho, latheo, lanthano, "to cause persons not to know"). In Greek mythology, one of the rivers of HADES, which the souls of all the dead are obliged to taste, that they may forget everything said and done when alive. See STRYX.

Lethean dew. Dreamy forgetfulness.

Letters from an American Farmer. A group of essays by Hector St. John de CRÉVECOEUR published in London in 1782. They deal with farm life on the American frontier in the 18th century, partly idealistic in the tradition of J. J. ROUSSEAU and partly realistic, with social life and customs in the American colonies, and with America as a refuge for the persecuted and oppressed peoples of the world.

letters patent. In American law, an open letter under seal of the government, granting some right, privilege or title. Specifically, an instrument issued by the Patent Office giving the patentee for a stated period a monopoly in the manufacture, use, and sale of an article he has patented.

lettre de cachet. See under CACHET.

Leucadia's Rock. A promontory, the south extremity of the island Leucas or Leucadia, in the Ionian Sea. SAPPHO leapt from this rock when she found her love for Phaon unrequited. At the annual festival of Apollo, a criminal was hurled from Leucadia's Rock into the sea; but birds of various sorts were attached to him, in order to break his fall, and if he was not killed, he was set free. The leap from this rock is called "the Lovers' Leap."

Leucothea (the white goddess). So Ino, the mortal daughter of Cadmus and wife of Athamas, was called after she became a sea goddess. Athamas in a fit of madness slew one of her sons; she threw herself into the sea with the other, imploring assistance of the gods, who deified both of them. Her son, Melicertes, then renamed Palemon, was called by the Romans Portunus, or Portumnus, and became the protecting genius of harbors.

Levana. A Roman goddess whose special province it was to watch over new-born babes. Her name was used as the title of an educational treatise by J. P. RICHTER.

Levant, Oscar (1906-). American pianist, formerly one of the experts on the radio program "Information Please." Author of A Smattering of Ignorance (1940). Also composer and conductor.

levant and ponent winds. The east wind is the levant, and the west wind the ponent. The former is from Lat. levare, "to raise" (sunrise), and the latter from ponere, "to set" (sunset).

Levelers. In English history, a body of ultra-Republicans in the time of Charles I and the Commonwealth, who wanted all men to be placed on a level, particularly with respect to their eligibility to office. John Lilburne was one of the leaders of the sect, which was active from 1647 to 1649, when it was suppressed by Cromwell's troops.

In Irish history the name was given to the 18th century agrarian agitators, afterwards called WHITEBOYS. Their first offences were leveling the hedges of enclosed commons; but their program developed into a demand for the general redress of all agrarian grievances.

Lever, Charles James (1806-1872). British novelist, born in Ireland. His song, "The pope he loved a merry life," is an adaptation of the German, "Der Papst lebt herrlich in der Welt," which he knew from the time when he had traveled as a student from Gottingen to Weimar. His novels include Harry Lorrequer (1837); Charles O'Malley (1841); etc.

Lewis, Mrs. Ethelreda (died 1946). English writer. "Discovered" Alfred Aloysius HORN, whose life story Trader Horn (1927) she rewrote in part and edited for him. The book sold 170,000 copies.

Lewis, Gilbert Newton (1875-1946). Collaborated with Dr. Ernest O. Lawrence in inventing the cyclotron, and was, with Dr. Irving Langmuir, co-author of the Lewis-Langmuir atomic theory. He developed the valence theory of chemical reaction. Cf. his Valence and the Structure of Atoms and Molecules (1923). With Dr. Harold C. Urey, a former student of his, he discovered "heavy water." He won many scientific awards and the Distinguished Service Medal in World War I.

Lewis, Harry Sinclair (1885-). American novelist, famous during the 1920's for his biting satires on the smugness, hypocrisy, bigotry, and vulgarity of American small-town life as he saw it in his time, especially in the Middle West and especially as embodied in the businessman and the Protestant clergyman. The best-known of these novels, in which Lewis is considered to have been influenced by the writings of H. L. MENCKEN, are MAIN STREET (1920); BABBITT (1922); ARROWSMITH (1925); and Elmer Gantry (1927), an attack on the hypocrisy of the church. They aroused a great deal of controversy on their first publication, and Lewis was denounced with the same vigor as Mencken. His works of the 1930's, however, considered to be inferior to his best-known books, tended to exalt the attitudes and institutions of the family, the middle-class businessman, and the small town that he had previously satirized; Work of Art (1934), praising the success of a small hotel-keeper, and The Prodigal Parents (1938), presenting rebellious and radical-minded children in an unsympathetic light, are notable examples of his change of viewpoint. Other works of Lewis are: Our Mr. Wienn (1914); The Trail of the Hawk (1915); The Innocents (1917); The Job (1917); Mantrap (1926); The Man Who Knew Coolidge (1928); Dodsworth (1929), dramatized in 1934; Ann Vickers (1933); It Can't Happen Here (1935), dramatized in 1936; Jayhawk (1934), a play; Bethel Merriday (1940); Angela Is Twenty-Two (1940), a play; Cass Timberlane (1945) and Kingsblood Royal (1947).

In 1926 Lewis was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for Arrowsmith, but refused it. In 1930 he won the Nobel prize, being the first American to be so honored, and did not refuse it. His second wife was Dorothy Thompson.

Lewis, Isaac Newton (1858-1931). American army officer. Invented among other military devices the Lewis machine gun (1911) and was the originator of the modern artillery corps organization of the U.S. army (1902).

Lewis, Matthew Gregory (1775-1818). English novelist, author of the famous Gothic novel The Monk (1796). He was known as "Monk Lewis."

Lewis, Meriwether (1774-1809). American explorer closely associated with William Clark on expedition (1804-1806) up Missouri River to source. Sent out by President Jefferson to explore the Louisiana Purchase. Governor of Louisiana Territory (1807-1809). Cf. Lewis & Clark; Partners in Discovery (1947), by John Bakeless.

Lewis, Percy Wyndham (1886-). American-born English painter, essayist, and novelist, not to be confused with the British journalist Dominic Bevan Wyndham Lewis. First known as the leader of a school of painting called vorticism which attracted a great deal of public attention in the period immediately preceding World War I. Later, during the 1920's, he became known for his bitter attacks on contemporary writers and social philosophy. His books include The Art of Being Ruled (1925), a long essay; The Lion and the Fox: A Study of the Rise of the Hero in the Plays of Shakespeare (1926); Time and Western Man (1928); The Childermass (1928), a prose "epic" on the judgment of sinners after death;

The Wild Body (1928), a collection of short stories; Paleface: The Philosophy of the Melting-Pot (1929); The Diabolical Principle (1930); Apes of God (1930), a satirical novel, ranked in novelty by some critics with James Joyce's Ulysses; The Snooty Baronet (1932); One-Way Song (1933); Men Without Art (1934), criticism; Blasting and Bombardiering (1937), an autobiography covering the years 1914-1926; The Revenge for Love (1937); The Mysterious Mr. Bull (1938). During the 1920's, he also edited for a time the little magazines Blast and The Enemy.

Lewis' writings are marked by iconoclasm and extreme individuality. Some critics denounced his ideas on social philosophy as Fascist in tendency. In the late 1930's he became the champion of a return to naturalistic, representational painting and attacked the abstract schools of the earlier part of the 20th century, especially the type of work represented by Picasso.

Lewis Baboon. Louis XIV of France is so called in Arbuthnot's History of John Bull (1712). See JOHN BULL. A play upon the word Bourbon.

libretto (It., "little book"). Originally, the booklet in which the text of an opera or any extended choral composition is printed. Now generally, the text itself.

Libya. Africa, or all the north of Africa between Egypt and the Atlantic Ocean. It was the Greek name for Africa in general. The Romans used the word sometimes as synonymous with Africa, and sometimes for the fringe containing Carthage.

Lichas. In Greek mythology, the friend of HERCULES who brought him Deianira's fatal tunic. He was thrown into the sea by Hercules.

lichwake, formerly likewake. Watch over a dead person. From like, "body" or "corpse."

A Lykewake Dirge is an old Scotch ballad.

Lick Observatory. An observatory on Mt. Hamilton, California, East of San José, founded by James Lick (1796-1876), and later transferred to the University of California (1888). In the twenties, when the 100-inch reflector was installed, the English poet Alfred NOYES, who was present, wrote in the "Prologue" to Watchers of the Sky:

This long battle for the light,
This little victory of the spirit of man
Doomed to defeat—for what was all we saw
To that which neither eyes nor soul could see?
Doomed to defeat and yet unconquerable,
Climbing its nine miles nearer to the stars.

licitor. In Roman antiquity, an officer attending a magistrate. A dictator had twenty lictors, a consul twelve, a praetor six, etc. The licitor bore the fusces as the insignia of his office. He cleared the way and enforced due respect for his superior and also arrested offenders and executed condemned criminals.

Liddell, Henry George (1811-1898). English classical scholar, Dean of Christ Church (1855-1891). Author with Robert Scott of the standard Greek-English Lexicon (1843; revised 1925 ff.). Also History of Ancient Rome (1855). His daughter Alice Liddell was the original of ALICE IN WONDERLAND and the child for whom Lewis CARROLL wrote his famous fantasy.

Liddell Hart, Basil Henry (1895-). English military writer. His The Defence of Britain (1939) is a book reputed to have influenced British military strategy at the outbreak of World War II. His theory concerning the character the war would assume was proved erroneous. Close friend of T. E. LAWRENCE.

Lido. A reef and sandbank outside the lagoon of Venice. Famous as a fashionable bathing resort on the Adriatic.

lie (A.S. lyge, from leogan, "to lie"). A falsehood.

a white lie. A conventional lie, such as telling a caller that Mrs. A or Mrs. B is not at home, meaning not "at home" to that particular caller.

the father of Lies. Satan (John viii. 44).

the greatest lie. In Heywood's FOUR P's, an INTERLUDE of about 1543, a Palmer, a Pardoner, a Poticary, and a Pedlar dispute as to which can tell the greatest lie. The Palmer says he has never seen a woman out of patience, whereupon the other three P's throw up the sponge, saying such a falsehood cannot possibly be outdone.

the lie circumstantial, direct, etc., see COUNTERCHECK.

to give one the lie. To accuse him to his face of telling a falsehood.

to give the lie to. To show that such and such a statement is false; to belie.

Lie, Jonas (1880-1940). Norwegian-born American painter. President, National Academy of Design (from 1934).

Lie, Trygve (1896-). Secretary general of the United Nations (1945). Formerly Norwegian minister for foreign affairs, and (since 1935) member of the Norwegian cabinet as minister of justice, minister of commerce, and minister of supply.

Lieberman, Elias (1883-). Russian-born American educator and poet. Teacher of English in New York City schools. Author of a volume of verse, Hand Organ Man (1930); etc.

Liebknecht, Wilhelm (1826-1900). German journalist and politician. Founder (with the assistance of Karl MARX) of the Social Democratic Labor party (1869). His son Karl Liebknecht (1871-1919) was a lawyer and Communist leader in the German Reichstag (1912) who violently opposed Germany's policies before World War I. After the collapse of the second Reich, he became one of the leaders of the Spartacus party and was arrested and murdered (with Rosa Luxemburg) during transfer to prison.

Lieschen. In Carlyle's SARTOR RESARTUS, the housekeeper of Diogenes Teufelsdröckh.

Lifar, Serge (1905-). Russian choreographer and ballet master. Friend and student of DIAGHILEV. Author of Serge Diaghilev: His Life, His Work, His Legend (1940).

Life. An American magazine, founded in 1883 and known for its humor and its serious editorial campaigns on general issues. It was extremely popular during the 1890's and the early 1900's, Charles Dana GIBSON being one of its outstanding contributors. It lost its foothold during the 1920's and in 1936 was sold in part to the magazine Judge and in part to Time, Inc. See LUCE, HENRY. The latter transformed it into a new Life, of enlarged size, consisting chiefly of photographs and descriptive text of current news events and special-interest stories, with a style and viewpoint similar to those of TIME.

Life and Death of Jason. A poem by William MORRIS.

Life and Death of Mr. Badman, The. An allegorical dialogue by John BUNYAN (1680), in which Mr. Wiseman tells of the vicious life and habits and the eventual death of Mr. Badman, using his story to point out the folly of wickedness.

Life-in-Death. A phantom in Coleridge's ANCIENT MARINER who throws dice with Death and wins the Mariner, though his comrades fall to Death's lot.

Her lips were red, her looks were free
Her locks were yellow as gold
The Nightmare Life-in-Death was she,
Who thicks man's blood with cold.

Pt. III. 190.

Life in the Iron Mills. A realistic short story of life among factory workers, written by Rebecca H. DAVIS and published in the Atlantic Monthly in 1861. It was the first of the author's works to attract attention.

Life on the Mississippi. A book by Mark TWAIN (1883) recording his own youthful adventures as a pilot on the Mississippi River. The second part of the book reports a later trip through the same territory.

Life's Handicap, Being Stories of Mine Own People. A volume of short stories of India by Rudyard KIPLING (1891). It includes several stories in which Terence MULVANEY, Stanley ORTHURIS, and John LEAROYD appear.

Life with Father. See under Clarence Shepard DAY.

Liffey. A river in Ireland on which the city of Dublin is located. In James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE it plays an important part, personified as Anna Livia Plurabelle. See also EARWICKER.

Lifted Veil, The. A story by George ELIOT (1859) dealing with clairvoyance.

Ligea. In classic myth, one of the three SIRENS.

Ligeia. Title and heroine of one of Edgar Allan POE's short stories. The beloved first wife of the narrator comes to him for a moment through the just-dead body of her successor, whom she has haunted into her death. See also LIGEA.

Light, Christina. A beautiful girl with whom the hero is infatuated in Henry James' RODERICK HUDSON. She reappears as the Princess CASAMASSIMA in James' novel of that title (1886; reprinted in 1948).

Light-Horse Harry. A nickname given to General Henry LEE with reference to his quick movements of cavalry in the campaigns of the Revolutionary War.

Lightnin'. A play by Winchell SMITH and Frank Bacon (Am., 1918), which owed its success to the homely, lovable character of the hero, Lightnin' Bill Jones. It had 1291 performances.

Light of Asia, The. An exposition of Buddhism in verse by Sir Edwin ARNOLD (1878).

Light that Failed, The. A novel by Rudyard KIPLING (1890). Through his experience as an illustrator in the Sudan, the hero, Dick Heldar, wins both professional success and a firm friend in the war correspondent Torpenhow. He is in love with his foster sister Maisie, now also an artist, but Maisie is shallow and selfish and does not appreciate his devotion. Dick gradually goes blind from a sword cut received in the Sudan, working courageously against time on his painting, Melancholia. Although Maisie is summoned by Torpenhow, she heartlessly leaves Dick to his fate, and he carries out his plan of dying at the front. In a later edition a happy ending is provided.

Lightwood, Mortimer. In Dickens' novel OUR MUTUAL FRIEND, a solicitor who conducts the "Harmon murder" case. He is the great friend of Eugene Wrayburn, barrister-at-law, and it is the great ambition of his heart to imitate the nonchalance of his friend.

Li Hung-chang (1823-1901). Chinese statesman. Founded Chinese navy. Prime minister (1895-1898); visited Europe and U.S. (1896). Commissioned to restore peace after the Boxer uprising (1900). Often referred to as "the BISMARCK of Asia."

Lilburne, John (ca. 1614-1657). A contentious LEVELER in the Commonwealth who was so rancorous against rank that he could never satisfy himself that any two persons were exactly on the same level; hence the phrase, if no one else where alive, John would quarrel with Lilburne.

Is John departed? and is Lilburne gone?
Farewell to both—to Lilburne and to John.
Yet, being gone, take this advice from me.
Let them not both in one grave buried be.
Here lay ye John, lay Lilburne thereabout;
For if they both should meet, they would fall out.
Epigrammatic Epitaph.

Liliencron, Baron Detlev von (1844-1909). German poet and novelist. His first volume of verse, Adjutantenritte (1883) established him at the age of forty as a leader of the youngest generation of poets (naturalists, impressionists).

Lilienthal, David Eli (1899-). Director (1933-1946) and chairman (1941-1946) of the Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA). Member of American Bar Association. Chairman (since 1946) of U.S. Atomic Energy Commission.

Liliom. A drama by Ferenc MOLNÁR (1909), produced in New York in 1921. The hero is a disreputable but fascinating side-show barker. One act shows him before the judges of the other world; another, on earth again with a single chance to redeem himself. The play was made into a charming and touching musical under the title Carousel in 1944, with music by Richard Rodgers.

Lilith. A Semitic (in origin probably Babylonian) demon supposed to haunt wildernesses in stormy weather, and to be specially dangerous to children and pregnant women. She is referred to in Is. xxxiv. 14, as the "screech-owl" (Revised Version, "night monster," and in margin "Lilith") and the Talmudists give the name to a wife that Adam is fabled to have had before Eve, who, refusing to submit to him, left Paradise for a region of the air, and still haunts the night. In Arabic legend, she married the Devil and became the mother of the Jinn. Superstitious Jews put in the chambers occupied by their wives four coins inscribed with the names of Adam and Eve and the words "Avaunt thee, Lilith!" GOETHE introduced her in his FAUST, and D. G. ROSSETTI in his Eden Bower adapted the Adamitic story, making the Serpent the instrument of Lilith's vengeance.

It was Lilith, the wife of Adam . . .
Not a drop of her blood was human,
But she was made like a soft sweet woman
D. G. Rossetti, Eden Bower.

Liliuokalani, Lydia Kamekeha (1838-1917). Queen of the Hawaiian Islands, sister of King Kalakaua, after whose death she succeeded to the throne. Deposed (1893). Married to the American governor of Oahu, John O. Dominis.

Lillibulero. A political song, popular during the English revolution of 1688 and still the most savagely thunderous of British marching songs. The music is by Henry PURCELL. The text by Lord Wharton (?) satirizes James II and the Catholics, using the refrain "lillibulero bullen a la" which is said to have been used as a watchword by the Irish Catholics in their massacre of the Protestants (1641). The song was included by Bishop Percy in his Reliques.

Lillie, Beatrice (1898-). Canadian-born satirical comedienne. On London stage since 1914; first appearance in New York in 1924, with Gertrude LAWRENCE, in Charlot's Revue. Also in moving pictures. In private life, she is Lady Peel.

Lilliput. The country of pigmies (Lilliputians) to whom Lemuel GULLIVER was a giant.

Lilly, William (1602-1681). English astrologer and prophet. Issued prophetic pamphlets and almanacs (1644-1680). Author of Christian Astrology (1647); etc. As Sidrophel he is satirized in Butler's Hudibras.

Lillyvick. In Dickens' NICHOLAS NICKLEBY, the collector of water-rates, and uncle to Mrs. KENWIGS. Mr. Lillyvick looks on himself as one of the élite of society. "If ever an old gentleman made a point of appearing in public shaved close and clean, that old gentleman was Mr. Lillyvick. If ever a collector had borne himself like a collector, and assumed a solemn and portentous dignity, as if he had the whole world on his books, that collector was Mr. Lillyvick."

lily. There is a tradition that the lily sprang from the repentant tears of Eve as she went forth from Paradise.

In Christian art, the lily is an emblem of chastity, innocence, and purity. In pictures of the Annunciation, Gabriel is sometimes represented as carrying a lily-branch, while a vase containing a lily stands before the Virgin, who is kneeling in prayer. St. Joseph holds a lily-branch in his hand, indicating that his wife Mary was a virgin.

lily of France. The device of CLOVIS was three black toads, but the story goes that an aged hermit of Joye-en-valle saw a miraculous light stream one night into his cell, and an angel appeared to him holding an azure shield of wonderful beauty, emblazoned with three gold lilies that shone like stars, which the hermit was commanded to give to Queen Clotilde. She gave it to her royal husband, whose arms were everywhere victorious, and the device was thereupon adopted as the emblem of France. Cf. Les Petits Bollandistes, vol. vi, p. 426. Tasso, in his JERUSALEM DELIVERED, terms the French gigli d'oro (golden lilies). It is said the people were commonly called Liliarts, and the kingdom Likum in the time of Philippe le Bel, Charles VIII, and Louis XII.

the city of lilies. Florence.

Lily Maid of Astolat, see ELAINE.

Lily of the Valley, The (Le Lys dans la vallée). A novel by BALZAC (1836), the heroine of which is Mme de MORTSAUF.

Limbus (Lat., "border, fringe, edge"). The borders of Hell; the portion assigned by the schoolmen to those departed spirits to whom the benefits of redemption did not apply through no fault of their own. According to DANTE, Limbo is between Hell and that borderland where dwell "the praiseless and the blameless dead."

Limbus Fatuorum. The Paradise of Fools. As fools or idiots are not responsible for their works, the old schoolmen held that they are not punished in Purgatory and cannot be received into Heaven, so they go to a special "Paradise of Fools."

Then might you see
Cows, hoods, and habits, with their wearers tossed
And fluttered into rags; then relics, beads,
Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds. All these, upwhirled aloft,
Into a Limbo large and broad, since called The Paradise of Fools.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iii, 489

See also FOOL'S PARADISE under FOOL.

Limbus of the Moon. ARIOSTO, in his ORLANDO FURIOSO, xxxiv. 70, says that in the moon are treasured up the precious time misspent in play, all vain efforts, all vows never paid, all counsel thrown away, all desires that lead to nothing, the vanity of titles, flattery, great men's promises, court services, and death-bed alms.

Limbus Patrum. The half-way house between earth and heaven, where the patriarchs and prophets who died before the death of the Redeemer await the Last Day, when they will be received into Heaven. Some hold that this is the "Hell" into which Christ descended after He gave up the ghost on the cross.

Shakespeare uses limbo patrum for "quod," jail, confinement.

I have some of them in limbo patrum, and there they are like to dance these three days.—Henry VIII, v 4.

Limbus Puerorum. The Child's Paradise, for children who die before they are baptized or are responsible for their actions.

Limehouse. Violent and vitriolic abuse of one's political opponents; so called out of compliment to an oratorical display by Mr. Lloyd George at Limehouse, London, on July 30, 1909, when he poured forth scorn and abuse on dukes, landlords, financial magnates, etc., many of whom, in the course of later events, became his best friends. Also, name of London's Chinatown.

Limerick. A nonsense verse in the meter popularized by Edward LEAR in his Book of Nonsense (1846), of which the following is an example:

There was a young lady of Wilts,
Who walked up to Scotland on stilts;
When they said it was shocking
To show so much stocking,
She answered, "Then what about kilts?"

The name was not given till much later, and comes from the chorus, "We'll all come up, come up to Limerick," which was interposed after each verse as it was improvised and sung by a convivial party.

In the 20th century, especially in the U.S., the composition of limericks became a popular parlor game, with the products often tending toward the ribald and the off-color.

limey. Short for lime-juicer. In slang, a British sailor. In the British navy the consumption of lime juice was compulsory as a protection against scurvy. Also, an Englishman.

Lin, Leslie Charles Bowyer, see CHARTERIS, LESLIE.

Linacre, Thomas (1460?-1524). English physician and classical scholar; one of the founders of the College of Physicians in London (1518). Among his students were Sir Thomas MORE and ERASMUS. Physician to Henry VIII; ordained priest (1520). Author of a Latin grammar Rudimenta Grammatica (1523) for Princess Mary; a Latin translation of GALEN's works; etc. One of the earliest representatives of British humanism.

Lincoln, Abraham (1809-1865). Sixteenth president of the United States. Lincoln appears in a number of historical novels of the Civil War period and previous, notably Edward Eggleston's novel, The Graysons, which introduces him in his early career, Winston Churchill's CRISIS, Irving Bacheller's Man for the Ages (1919) of which he is the hero, and its sequel, Father Abraham (1925). John Drinkwater treated Lincoln's life dramatically in his play, Abraham Lincoln (Eng., 1918), and Robert E. SHERWOOD also wrote a popular play on the Civil War president, entitled ABE LINCOLN IN ILLINOIS (1938). Biographies by Carl SANDBURG and Edgar Lee MASTERS are well known, and many American poets wrote poems to and concerning Lincoln, most notably Walt WHITMAN in WHEN LILACS LAST IN THE DOORYARD BLOOMED. Other memorable poems concerning Lincoln have been written by Edwin Markham, Edwin Arlington Robinson, James Oppenheim, and John Gould Fletcher.

Lincoln, Joseph Crosby (1870-1944). American novelist, born on Cape Cod, Massachusetts, which furnishes the setting of his novels and short stories. Cap'n Err (1902); Shavings (1918); Rugged Water (1924); The Big Mogul (1926); All Alongshore (1931); Storm Signals (1935); etc.

Lincoln Memorial. A memorial erected in Potomac Park, Washington, D.C., dedicated to the memory of Abraham LINCOLN. Construction work began on Lincoln's Birthday, 1914. It is in the general form of a classic Greek temple, having one large enclosed hall of oblong shape which is surrounded by a Doric colonnade, with a large seated statue of Lincoln by Daniel Chester French, within.

Lincoln's Inn. AN INN OF COURT in London, taking its name from the 14th-century town house of the Earl of Lincoln which once stood on the site.

Lind, Johanna Maria. Known as Jenny Lind or Madame Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt (1820-1887). Swedish coloratura soprano called "the Swedish Nightingale." Made her debut as Agatha in Der Freischütz (1838); introduced to America by P. T. Barnum (1850-1852). Married in Boston (1852) Otto Goldschmidt, German-born composer and pianist; toured continent. Resident in her last years of England; British subject (1859) and professor of singing at the Royal College of Music (1883-1886).

Lindabrides. The heroine of the romance entitled The Mirror of Knighthood, one of the books in DON QUIXOTE's library. Lindabrides became later a common name for a loose woman, a courtesan.

Linda Condon. A novel by Joseph HERGESHEIMER (1919), the story of a child brought up by a devoted but not too respectable mother in the uncongenial atmosphere of fashionable hotels. She becomes a beautiful, self-contained, elusive, fastidious being who fascinates men but can never give them anything of herself. Even when she marries and has a family, she remains essentially aloof. She is the life-long inspiration of a great sculptor, Pleydon, who sees her seldom, but is able through his imagination to glimpse in her elusive spirit the unattainable ideal he is always seeking.

Lindau. An old German Socialist in Howells' HAZARD OF NEW FORTUNES. Whittier spoke of him as "that saint of the rather godless sect of dynamiters and atheists—a grand figure."

Lindbergh, Mrs. Anne Spencer, née Morrow (1907–). American poet and essayist. Wife of Charles LINDBERGH. Her best books concern flights taken with her husband. North to the Orient (1935); Listen, the Wind (1938); etc. Her prose has a distinctly poetic vein. Her sharply criticized essay, The Wave of the Future (1940), was influenced by her husband's isolationism, and was regarded in some quarters as an apologia for FASCISM.

Lindbergh, Charles Augustus (1902–). American aviator of Swedish descent. Began his career as airmail pilot. First solo non-stop transatlantic flight from Roosevelt Field, N.Y., to Le Bourget Air Field, Paris (May 20–21, 1927) in monoplane The Spirit of St. Louis. Promoted aeronautics, made physiological experiments with Dr. Alexis Carrel in Paris. Awarded Congressional Medal of Honor. Joined "America First," opposing U.S. entry into war in Europe. Contributed to U.S. war effort in the laboratory and on airplane production lines. As a technical observer flew P-38's in a large number of missions against Japan and engaged in combat with Japanese planes. Author of We (1927).

Lindon, Mr. and Mrs. Fred. Characters in Clyde Fitch's drama THE TRUTH.

Lindsay, Howard (1880–). American actor and playwright. Collaborated with Russell CROUSE on musical comedies, the stage adaptations of Life with Father by Clarence Day, Jr. (1939; with title rôle played by Lindsay); Arsenic and Old Lace; and the Pulitzer prize play State of the Union (1946).

Lindsay, Nicholas Vachel (1879–1931). American poet, known for the vivid imagery and striking dramatic and auditory effects of his poetry, which he read from the lecture platform with theatrical gestures and intonation, in an effort to cultivate a love of poetry in the populace. His work dealt with American subjects and heroes, patriotism, and a mystic faith in nature and the soil. His books include The Tree of Laughing Bells (1905); Rhymes to be Traded for Bread (1912); General William Booth Enters into Heaven, And Other Poems (1913); The Congo, And Other Poems (1914); The Chinese Nightingale, And Other Poems (1917), considered to contain his best work; The Daniel Jazz (1920); The Golden Whales of California (1920); The Candle in the Cabin (1926); and Johnny Appleseed (1928). He also wrote a number of books of essays on politics, his adventures, and his "gospel of beauty." Among his most famous single poems are GENERAL WILLIAM BOOTH ENTERS INTO HEAVEN, THE CONGO, Abraham Lincoln Walks at Midnight, and The Chinese Nightingale.

Lindsay was a striking personality and lived an adventurous life, during the first years of his career lecturing on temperance and art in the winter and in the summer vagabonding about the country, frequently trading his poems for food and shelter. He was a friend of Edgar Lee MASTERS.

Lindsay, Norman Alfred William (1879–). Australian artist excelling in pen drawings and water color. Also known as a novelist of rebellious irony. Co-sponsor of the Endeavor Press and founder, with his three sons, of the magazine Vision (1924). "A sort of healthy, roistering Aubrey Beardsley."

Lindsay, Jack (1900–). Australian novelist and classical scholar. Son of Norman LINDSAY. He is associated with fine presses in London, doing translations from Greek and Latin. He says that in his historical novels he has tried "to stabilize a world-view based subjectively on Freud and objectively on Frazer's Golden Bough." He has also experimented with "mass-declamation poems." A prolific writer and an active anti-Fascist.

Linnet, see LYNETTE.

ling. The common heather.

Where the pewit wheels and dips
On heights of bracken and ling
Sir William Watson, Ode in May.

Lingard, Captain. In Conrad's OUTCAST OF THE ISLANDS and Almayer's Folly (1895), a powerful white trader, the "Rajah Laut" of an entire district of the Dutch East Indies. He is the hero of another novel, THE RESCUE, which deals with his youth.

lingua franca. A species of Italian mixed with French, Greek, Arabic, etc. spoken especially in medieval times on the coasts of the Mediterranean as an international trade language. Hence, any natural international language of the mixed type, as Pidgin, Sabir, etc. The term means properly "language of the Franks," but it is often associated (erroneously but appropriately) with the idea of free: a language free from national boundaries.

linkboy or linkman. An attendant bearing a link (torch) to light passengers in the streets of a city at night. An institution that disappeared with the introduction of street lighting.

Linkinwater, Tim. In Dickens' NICHOLAS NICKLEBY, confidential clerk to the brothers Cheeryble, a kind-hearted old bachelor, fossilized in ideas, but devoted to his masters almost to idolatry. He is much attached to a blind blackbird called "Dick," which he keeps in a large cage. The bird has lost its voice from old age; but, in Tim's opinion, there is no equal to it in the whole world. The old clerk marries Miss La Creevy, a miniature-painter.

Punctual as the counting-house dial . . . he performed the minutest actions, and arranged the minutest articles in his little room in a precise and regular order. Paper, pens, ink, ruler, sealing-wax, wafers, . . . Tim's hat, Tim's scrupulously folded gloves, Tim's other coat . . . all had their accustomed inches of space. . . . There was not a more accurate instrument in existence than Tim Linkinwater.—Nicholas Nickleby, xxxvii.

Linklater, Eric (1899–). Scottish novelist, best known in U.S. for his novel Juan in America (1931).

Lin McLean. A volume of short stories by Owen Wister (Am., 1897), concerning the Wyoming cowboy, Lin McLean.

Linnaeus, Carolus. Swedish form, Carl von Linné (1707–1778). Swedish botanist. In his Systema Naturae (1735) he outlined what was largely adopted as the Linnaean classification or system of plants. It is also known as the sexual system. It differs from Jussieu's system (1789), by which it was superseded, in that it made no attempt to show the relationship of species and genera. Hence the name artificial system as opposed to Jussieu's natural system. Linnaeus' Species Plantarum (1753) is considered the foundation of modern botanical nomenclature.

Linne, The Heir of. The hero of an old ballad, given in Percy's Reliques, which tells how he wastes his substance in riotous living, and, having spent all, sells his estates to John o' the Scales, his steward, reserving only a "poor and lonesome lodge in a lonely glen." When no one will lend or give him money, he retires to the lodge, where there is found dangling a rope with a running noose. He puts it round his neck and springs aloft, but he falls to the ground. When he comes to, he sees two chests of beaten gold and a third full of white money, over which is written—

Once more, my sonne, I sette thee clere;
Amend thy life and follies past;
For but thou amend thee of thy life,
That rope must be thy end at last.

The heir of Linne now returns to his old hall, where he is refused the loan of 40 pence by his quondam steward. One of the guests tells John o' the Scales he ought to have lent it, as he bought the estate cheap enough. "Cheap call you it?" exclaims John. "Why, he shall have it back for 100 marks less." "Done," says the heir of Linne, and thus recovers his estates.

linotype. A type-setting machine which produces castings (or slugs) representing complete lines of type. Introduced by the German-American inventor Ottmar Mergenthaler (1854–1899). First patent (1884).

Lin Yutang (1895–). Chinese-American author and philologist. Inventor of a system that permits the indexing of material written in Chinese ideographs. Collaborated in the official plan to adopt the Roman alphabet and Roman characters. Author of My Country and My People (1936); The Importance of Living (1937); A Leaf in the Storm (1941); etc. Editor of the anthology The Wisdom of China and India (1942).

lion. The king of beasts, an animal that figures perhaps more than any other in legend, symbolism and heraldry.

The lion an emblem of the Resurrection. According to tradition, the lion's whelp is born dead, and remains so for three days, when the father breathes on it and it receives life. Another tradition is that the lion is the only animal of the cat tribe born with its eyes open, and it is said that it sleeps with its eyes open. This is not a fact, but undoubtedly it sleeps watchfully and lightly.

St. Mark the Evangelist is symbolized by a lion because he begins his gospel with the scenes of St. John the Baptist and Christ in the wilderness. For the story of St. Jerome and the lions befriended by him, see under SAINTS. See also ANDROCLES, HERCULES, and UNA for legends of lions.

Ever since 1164, when it was adopted as a device by Philip I, Duke of Flanders, the lion has figured largely and in an amazing variety of positions as an heraldic emblem, and, as a consequence, in public-house signs. The earliest and most important attitude of the heraldic lion is rampant (the device of Scotland), but it is also shown as passant, passant gardant (as in the shield of England), salient, sejant, etc., and even dromant. For these terms, see HERALDRY. The device of Venice is the winged Lion of St. Mark.

In Story and Legend.

Cybele is represented as riding in a chariot drawn by two tame lions.

Pracriti, the goddess of nature among the Hindus, is represented in a similar manner.

Hippomenes and Atalanta (fond lovers) were metamorphosed into lions by Cybele.

Hercules is said to have worn over his shoulders the hide of the NEMEAN lion, and the personification of Terror is also arrayed in a lion's hide.

The lions in the arms of England. They are three lions passant gardant, i.e., walking and showing the full face. The first was that of Rollo, Duke of Normandy, and the second represented the country of Maine, which was added to Normandy. These were the two lions borne by William the Conqueror and his descendants. Henry II added a third lion to represent the Duchy of Aquitaine, which came to him through his wife ELEANOR. Any lion not rampant is called a lion leopardé, and the French heralds call the lion passant a leopard; accordingly Napoleon said to his soldiers, "Let us drive these leopards (the English) into the sea."

Since 1603, the royal arms of Britain have been supported as now by (dexter) the English lion and (sinister) the Scottish UNICORN. Prior to the accession of James I, however, the sinister supporter was a family badge. Edward III, with whom supporters began, had a lion and eagle; Henry IV, an antelope and swan; Henry V, a lion and antelope; Edward IV, a lion and bull; Richard III, a lion and boar; Henry VII, a lion and dragon; Elizabeth, Mary, and Henry VIII, a lion and greyhound.

The lion in the arms of Scotland is derived from the arms of the ancient Earls of Northumberland and Huntingdon, from whom some of the Scotch monarchs were descended. The treasure is referred to the reign of Acharius (d. ca. 819), who made a league with Charlemagne, "who did augment his arms with a double trace formed with Floure-de-lyces, signifying thereby that the lion henceforth should be defended by the ayde of Frenchmen." (Holinshed, Chronicles.)

A lion at the feet of crusaders or martyrs, in effigy, signifies that they died for their magnanimity.

the Lion of St. Mark or of Venice. A winged lion sejant, holding an open book with the inscription Pax tibi, Marce, Evangelista Meus. A swordpoint rises above the book on the dexter side, and the whole is encircled by an aureola.

lions. The lions of a place are sights worth seeing, or the celebrities; so called from the ancient custom of showing strangers, as chief of London sights, the lions at the Tower. Hence, a lion-hunter is one who hunts up a celebrity to adorn or give prestige to a party. Mrs. LEO HUNTER, in Pickwick, is a good satire on the name and character of a lion-hunter.

lion's mouth. To place one's head in the lion's mouth. To expose oneself needlessly and foolhardily to danger.

lion's share. The larger part: or all, nearly all. In Aesop's Fables, several beasts joined the lion in a hunt, but, when the spoil was divided, the lion claimed one quarter in right of his prerogative, one for his superior courage, one for his dam and cubs, "and as for the fourth, let who will dispute it with me." Awed by his frown, the other beasts yielded and silently withdrew.

to beard the lion in his den. Vehemently to contradict one either on some subject he has made his hobby, or on his own premises; to defy personally or face to face.

Lion of God. Ali-Ben-Abou-Thaleb (602-661), the son-in-law of Mahomet, was so called because of his zeal and his great courage. His mother called him at birth Al Haidara, "the Rugged Lion."

Lion of Sweden. General Johan von Baner (1596-1641).

Lion of the North. The Swedish King, Gustavus Adolphus (1594-1632).

lion of the tribe of Judah. A lion is emblem of the tribe of Judah; Christ is so called.

Judah is a lion's whelp . . . he couched as a lion, and as an old lion; who shall rouse him up?—Gen xli. 9.

Lion Rouge. (Fr., "red lion.") Marshal Ney (1769-1815), so called from his red hair. the Lion's Heart. Richard I of England (1157-1199), called Coeur de Lion.

the British Lion. A personification of Great Britain. See under BRITISH.

the Nemean Lion, see NEMEAN.

the Winged Lion. The Lion of St. Mark, the heraldic device of Venice.

Lionel. A leading character in Flotow's opera, MARTHA.

Liones, Lionesse, etc., see LYONNESSE.

Li Po or Li T'ai-po or Li Tai-peh (d. 762 A.D.). Sobriquet "Banished Angel." Probably the greatest Chinese poet of all time. Lived a dissipated life at court and in exile on the road. He was one of a group of eight hard-drinking boon companions, "The Eight Immortals of the Wine Cup." Legend insists that he drowned from a boat when he tried to embrace the moon mirrored in the water.

Lippi, Fra Filippo or Lippo (1406?-1469). Florentine painter and Carmelite monk. Protégé of Cosimo de' MEDICI. His chief works are the frescoes in Prato cathedral. For Brown-ing's poem on Lippi, see FRA LIPPO LIPPI.

Lippmann, Walter (1889-). American editor and journalist. Column in New York Herald Tribune (since 1931). Author of A Preface to Politics (1913); Drift and Mastery (1914); The Method of Freedom (1934); The New Imperative (1935); etc.

Lipton, Sir Thomas Johnstone (1850-1931). British merchant and yachtsman. Built up a large chain of grocery stores through Great Britain; known in U.S. chiefly for Lipton's Tea. Competed for America's Cup, symbol of international yachting championship, with five yachts (1899, 1901, 1903, 1920, 1930).

They were all named Shamrock. Lipton had Irish parents.

Lirriper, Mrs. Heroine of Dickens' tale Mrs. Lirriper's Lodgings (1863). It recounts her troubles with her lodgers, and with Miss Wozenham, an opposition lodging-house-keeper. The central point of interest is the adoption of poor Jemmy by Mayor Jackman, and his education at home and in a boarding-school. A sequel, called Mrs. Lirriper's Legacy, appeared in 1864.

Lisa. The heroine of a poem by George ELIOT (1859), How Lisa Loved the King, which retells a story from Boccaccio's DE-CAMERON. Because she loves the King, Lisa will have nothing to do with any of her lovers until the King himself, touched by her story sung by a poet for his diversion, searches her out in her bourgeois quarters and urges her to marry the man who loves her.

Lisa, Dame. In Cabell's JURGEN, Jurgen's ill-tempered wife to whom he returns with relief after his year of youth and adventure with fairer ladies is over.

Lisa, Mona, see MONA LISA.

Lismahago, Captain. In Smollett's novel The Expedition of Humphry Clinker, a super-annuated officer on half-pay, who marries Miss Tabitha Bramble for the sake of her £4000. He is a hard-featured, forbidding Scotchman, singular in dress, eccentric in manners, conceited, disputatious, and rude. Though most tenacious in argument, he can yield to Miss Tabitha, whom he wishes to conciliate.

Lissauer, Ernst (1882-1937). German poet and playwright. Internationally remembered for his HYMN OF HATE.

Lister, Joseph. 1st Baron Lister of Lyme Regis (1827-1912). English surgeon. Influenced by the discoveries of PASTEUR; he used carbolic acid to prevent septic infection and became the founder of antiseptic surgery. A commercial antiseptic containing benzoic and boric acids is called after him "Listerine."

Liszt, Franz (1811-1886). Hungarian composer and one of the greatest of pianists. A child prodigy, he gave his first public performance at the age of nine. Studied in Vienna (1821-1823) under Czerny and Salieri, in Paris under Reicha. Lived at Geneva (1835-1839) with the Comtesse d'Agoult, by whom he had three children, one of whom was Cosima. See under Richard WAGNER. Court Kapellmeister at Weimar (1848-1859). Entered the Franciscan order at Rome (1865) and was henceforth known as Abbé Liszt. Died at Bayreuth (1886) in the midst of a Wagner festival.

Liszt is considered the creator of the modern style of piano playing. He deeply influenced modern music by his daring innovations in form and harmonic relations. His works include Hungarian Rhapsodies; Legends (among them St. Francis Preaching to the Birds); 2 concertos for piano and orchestra; the symphonic poems Dante, Hamlet; etc.

Literary Guild. See under SUBSCRIPTION BOOK.

litotes. Understatement for the sake of effect, as "a citizen of no mean city." See HYPERBOLE.

littérateur (Fr.). Also litterateur. A man of letters. One who makes of literature and writing a profession or a job.

Littimer. In Dickens' DAVID COPPERFIELD, the painfully irreproachable valet of STEERFORTH, in whose presence David Copperfield feels always most uncomfortably young. Though as a valet he is propriety in Sunday best, he is nevertheless cunning and deceitful. Steerforth, tired of "Little Em'ly," wishes to marry her to Littimer, but from this lot she is rescued, and emigrates to Australia.

Little.

Little Corporal. Napoleon Bonaparte. So called after the battle of Lodi, in 1796, from his low stature, youthful age, and amazing courage. He was barely 5 ft. 2 in. in height.

Little Englanders. An opprobrious name which became popular about the time of the last Boer War for those who refused to "think imperially," upheld the doctrine that the English should concern themselves with England only, and were opposed to any extension of the Empire.

Little Father. The Czar of Russia was so called.

little gentleman in velvet, i.e., the mole, was a favorite Jacobite toast in the reign of Queen Anne. The reference was to the mole that raised the molehill against which the horse of William III stumbled at Hampton Court. By this accident the King broke his collar-bone, a severe illness ensued, and he died early in 1702.

Little Giant. Stephen A. Douglas (1813-1861) American politician, so called from his small stature and formidable nature.

Little Paris. (1) Brussels; (2) Milan.

Little Parliament. See under PARLIAMENTS.

Little Venice. Arendal, Norway.

Little, Henry. The inventor hero of Charles Reade's PUT YOURSELF IN HIS PLACE.

Little, Thomas. Pseudonym under which Thomas MOORE's Poetical Works of 1801 were published. Moore is called by this name in Byron's ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS.

Little Billee. A comic ballad by THACKERAY, telling how three sailors of Bristol city go to sea, and, having eaten all their food, resolve to make a meal of Little Billee; but the lad eludes his fate.

There was gorging Jack, and guzzling Jimmy,
And the youngest he was little Billee.
Now, when they got as far 's th' equator,
They'd nothing left but one split pea.
To gorging Jack says guzzling Jimmy,
"We've nothing left, us must eat we."

Little Billee or William Bagot. The hero of Du Maurier's TRILBY. The author borrowed the nickname from Thackeray's ballad.

Little Boy Blue. The hero of an old nursery rhyme:

Little Boy Blue, come blow your horn
The sheep's in the meadow, the cow's in the corn
Where is the boy who looks after the sheep?
He's under the haystack fast asleep.

Eugene Field (Am., 1850-1895) has a well-known poem, Little Boy Blue, commemorating the faithfulness with which the toys of a little boy who has died await his return.

Little Breeches. One of John Hay's PIKE COUNTY BALLADS.

Little Buttercup, see BUTTERCUP.

Little Clay Cart, The (Sans. Mrichchhakatika). A Sanskrit comedy ascribed to a certain King Sudraka and variously assigned to the 8th to 10th centuries. The hero is Charudatta, an impoverished Brahmin merchant, the heroine the lovely courtesan Vasantasena. The villain of the play, the King's brother-in-law, smothered Vasantasena in a remote garden and accuses Charudatta of the crime, but Vasantasena recovers and appears just in time to save her lover from execution. An important subplot is concerned with a successful conspiracy to overthrow the reigning monarch. GOETHE paraphrased the drama in his poem The God and the Bayadere, and it was made the basis of a popular ballet Le Dieu et la bayadère which was staged throughout Europe about the year 1830. The drama itself was produced in New York by the Neighborhood Playhouse players in 1924-1925.

Little Dorrit. The heroine and title of a novel by Charles DICKENS (1855). Little Dorrit was born and brought up in the Marshalsea prison, Bermondsey, where her father was confined for debt; and when about fourteen years of age she used to do needlework, to earn a subsistence for herself and her father. The child was idolized by the prisoners, and when she walked out, every man in Bermondsey who passed her touched or took off his hat out of respect to her good works and active benevolence. Her father, coming into a property, was set free at length, and Little Dorrit married Arthur Clennam, the marriage service being celebrated in the Marshalsea, by the prison chaplain.

Little Em'ly. See under PEGGOTTY.

Little Endians. In Swift's Gulliver's Travels (see GULLIVER) (Voyage to Lilliput) the faction which insists on interpreting the vital direction contained in the 54th chapter of the Blundecral: "All true believers break their eggs at the convenient end," as meaning the little end, and wage a destructive war against those who adopted the alternative. See BIG ENDIANS. The godfather of the emperor happens to cut his finger while breaking his egg at the big end, and publishes a decree commanding all his subjects to break them in future at the small end. This leads to a terrible war, and to the publication of many hundreds of large treatises. Today the terms are still used in connection with hostilities or arguments arising out of trifling differences of opinion, etc., especially in matters of doctrine. In Swift's satire the Big Endians typify the Catholics, and the Little Endians the Protestants.

Little Entente, see ENTENTE.

Little Eohippus, The. Title of story by Eugene Manlove RHODES; the "dawn-horse," subject of a humorous poem by Charlotte Perkins Gilman Stetson, "Similar Cases."

Little Eva. In Uncle Tom's Cabin by Harriet Beecher Stowe, the daughter of the wealthy Mr. St. Clare. Uncle Tom saves her life; her early death is an important event in the plan of the book.

Little Eyolf. A drama by Henrik IBSEN (1894). Little Eyolf, the crippled son of Mr. and Mrs. Allmers, is lured and tormented by a mysterious old hag known as the Rat-wife, while Allmers, impervious to his son's needs, is writing a book on Human Responsibility. Allmers suddenly awakes to his parental responsibility, but his wife feels only jealousy of his devotion to the drowned child as she has of his devotion to the book.

little-go. A preliminary examination of a general nature which all Cambridge undergraduates must pass (unless excused on account of having passed certain other examinations) before proceeding to take any examination for a degree. The little-go is almost invariably taken in or before the first term. There is no examination at Oxford corresponding with this, but respondents is much on its level.

Little John. See JOHN, LITTLE.

Little Lord Fauntleroy. A story by Frances Hodgson BURNETT (1886), illustrated by Reginald BIRCH. The seven-year-old hero, Cedric Errol, is the son of a disinherited English father and an American mother. His title of Lord Fauntleroy he would normally inherit from his grandfather, an English earl, who has, however, never forgiven the boy's father for marrying an American. On the death of the father the boy is summoned to England, leaving his mother, whom he calls "Dearest" in the poverty-stricken quarters where they have been living in New York. He so completely wins the hearts of his English relatives that they are soon persuaded to extend to "Dearest" a cordial welcome. Little Lord Fauntleroy is a striking figure, dressed in black velvet with lace collar and yellow curls, and the phrase passed into common usage as referring either to a certain type of children's clothes or to a beautiful, but spoiled or effeminate small boy. The novel was successfully dramatized.

little magazine. Term applied to a periodical whose aim is the promotion of literary experiment and reform and the encouragement of obscure and hitherto unpublished authors, frequently in accordance with a definite editorial viewpoint in the matter of aesthetics or politics, rather than high sales and financial profit. THE GERM (1850) and THE YELLOW BOOK (1894-1897) foreshadowed the form in England, and The Babelot (1895-1915) and The Chap-Book (1894-1898) were the first characteristic representatives of it in the U.S., although the Transcendentalist DIAL (1840-1844) must also be considered a forerunner. The little magazine was most prominent in the U.S. in the years immediately preceding and following World War I and during the 1920's. Outstanding examples were POETRY: A MAGAZINE OF VERSE (1912-); THE LITTLE REVIEW (1914-1929); THE SEVEN ARTS (1916-1917); THE DIAL (1917-1929); The Frontier (1920-1939); The Fugitive (see FUGITIVES) (1922-1925); Broom (1921-1924); Secession (1922-1924); TRANSITION (1927-1938); This Quarter (1925-1932); HOUND AND HORN (1927-1934); The Symposium (1930-1933); STORY (1931-); THE SOUTHERN REVIEW (1935-); Kenyon Review (1939-); Partisan Review (1934-). English little magazines of the same period were The Blue Review (1911-1913); Signature (1915); The transatlantic review (1924); CRITERION (1922-1939); Life and Letters Today (1928-1939); Horizon (1940-1949).

A number of the outstanding writers of the 20th century were first known through their publications in little magazines, including Katherine MANSFIELD, Edgar Lee MASTERS, Sherwood ANDERSON, T. S. ELIOT, Ezra POUND, D. H. LAWRENCE, James JOYCE, Gertrude STEIN, Ernest HEMINGWAY, E. E. CUMMINGS, Hart CRANE, William FAULKNER, Erskine CALDWELL, Wallace STEVENS, Allen TATE, John Crowe RANSOM, Edmund WILSON, Dylan THOMAS. Cf. The Little Magazine (1946) by Frederick J. Hoffman and others. See also MARXISM IN LITERATURE; NEW DIRECTIONS.

Little Minister, The. A novel by J. M. BARRIE (1891). The hero, Gavin Dishart, is a young preacher in the Scotch village of Thrums. He struggles in vain against his love for the irresistible upsetting "gypsy" Babbie. The parish is scandalized at the romance; Babbie gives him up to marry her elderly fiancé, Lord Rintoul; but a false rumor of Gavin's death brings them together and on impulse they are married by a gypsy ceremony "over the tongs" in the woods. The two are separated, but after many vicissitudes, the Little Minister regains both his prestige and his bride.

Little Nell. A child character in Dickens' OLD CURIOSITY SHOP whose death scene, like that of LITTLE EVA, has become famous.

Little Orphant Annie. The title and heroine of a well-known dialect poem by James Whitcomb RILEY (1885), which relates how Orphant Annie tells hair-raising tales about the goblins and is finally carried off by them. Later Little Orphan Annie became the title of a popular comic strip.

Little Pierre, see PIERRE.

Little Review, The. An American literary periodical, founded in 1914 and considered one of the most outstanding of the LITTLE MAGAZINES. It was published in Chicago, New York, and Paris, under the editorship of Margaret C. Anderson, and championed all the 20th-century experimental movements, publishing the work of the outstanding English, American, and European writers of the period. James Joyce's ULYSSES appeared as a serial in this magazine, and nearly resulted in its suppression. It ceased publication in 1929.

Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come, The. A once popular novel by John Fox, Jr. (Am., 1903) dealing with the life of the Kentucky mountaineers. The hero is Chad Buford, a waif who grows up in the mountains but is later proved a relative of Major Buford of Lexington who had befriended him. During the Civil War he fights in the Union Army and so alienates himself from Major Buford and his daughter Margaret, whom he loves, but after peace is declared, all ends happily.

little theater. A name given to an amateur or semi-professional theatrical group that aims to produce plays as a sort of community venture, with primary emphasis on artistic rather than commercial success; also, the theater of such an organization. The little theater movement was a movement to organize such groups throughout the United States, especially strong in the 1920's.

Outstanding little theater groups, a number of which later became professional, included the following: the Moscow Art Theater in Russia (1890); the Abbey Players and the Irish National Theater in Ireland (1899); the Washington Square Players (1915); the PROVINCE-TOWN PLAYERS (1915); the Theater Guild (1918); the Group Theater (1931); the W.P.A.

Theater Project (1935). CHERKOV, YEATS, SYNGE, Sean O'CASEY, Eugene O'NEILL, Paul GREEN, Philip BARRY, Thornton WILDER, and Clifford ODETS are among the authors whose plays became known through little theaters or organizations which were once little theaters. The 47 Workshop (see HARVARD WORKSHOP) was also associated with the little theater movement.

Little Women. A widely read story for young people by Louisa May ALCOTT (1868). The heroine is Jo March, the tomboyish and literary member of the MARCH family, who returns to the attic when "genius burns" and is usually in hot water the rest of the time. Her three sisters, Meg, Beth and Amy, figure almost as prominently. Beth, the good and gentle one of the family, does not live long. Meg marries a young tutor, John Brooke, and reappears in the sequel, Little Men, with her twins Daisy and Demi. The fashionable and artistic Amy finally marries Laurie, a high-spirited boy who had long been Jo's boon companion but who failed to persuade her to marry him. Jo herself becomes the wife of a kindly old German professor, Mr Bhaer; in Little Men (1871) she and the professor turn their home into a school for a few boys. Jo's Boys (1886) is a second sequel.

Litvinov. The hero of Turgenev's SMOKE.

Litvinov, Maksim Maksimovich (1876-). Russian Communist statesman. Most important mediator between his country and the bourgeois world. People's commissar for foreign affairs (1930-1939), succeeded by MOLOTOV. Russian ambassador to U.S. (1941-1943). Author of The Bolshevik Revolution.

Live Oak State. Florida. See under STATES.

Liveright, Horace Brisbin (1886-1933). American publisher and theatrical producer; with Albert Boni headed publishing firm of Boni and Liveright (1918-1936). In theatrical field produced Hamlet in Modern Dress, Dreiser's An American Tragedy; Dracula, etc.

Livingstone, David (1813-1873). Scottish missionary and explorer in Africa. Discovered Lake Ugami (1849); Zambesi River (1851); Victoria Falls of the Zambesi (1855); Lakes Shirwa and Nyasa (1859); etc., etc. Was rescued from an expedition into cannibal country by Henry M. Stanley (1871), who is reputed to have greeted the exhausted explorer with a bow and the words, "Dr. Livingstone, I presume?" Livingstone died during a second expedition to discover the sources of the Nile. He was buried in Westminster Abbey. Author of Missionary Travels in South Africa (1858); Narrative of an Expedition to the Zambesi (1865); etc.

Livy. Latin name Titus Livius (59 B.C.-17 A.D.). Roman historian, protégé of Emperor Augustus, and greatest prose writer of the AUGUSTAN AGE. Author of The Annals of the Roman People (142 books), of which about one third is extant.

the Livy of France. Juan de Mariana (1537-1624).

the Livy of Portugal. João de Barros (1496-1570), the best of the Portuguese historians the Russian Livy. Nicholas Karamzin (1765-1826).

Liza. Heroine of Turgenev's Nest of Nobles (1858), translated under the title Liza. The hero, Fyodor Lavretsky, unhappily mated with a woman who is false to him, is strongly drawn to Liza, whom he feels is representative of genuine womanhood. When he receives news of his wife's death, they confess their mutual love. His wife, however, is not dead, and wishes him to return to her. The two lovers renounce their happiness and Liza enters a convent.

Liza of Lambeth. The first novel of W. S. MAUGHAM (1897), written in the tradition of NATURALISM and presenting a study of life in the slums of London in the late 19th century, with emphasis on the psychological and physical illnesses of the characters. The book, written while the author was a medical student at St. Thomas Hospital in London, was considered shocking because of its technique and subject matter.

Lizaveta Nikolaevna, see TUSHIN, LIZAVETA NIKOLAEVNA.

LL.D. Doctor of Laws—i.e., both civil and canon. The double L is the plural, as in MSS., the plural of MS. (manuscript), pp., pages, etc.

Llewellyn, Richard. Nom de plume of Richard David Vivian Llewellyn Lloyd (1907?-). British novelist and playwright of Welsh descent. Author of How Green Was My Valley (1940), None But the Lonely Heart (1943), novels that were successfully dramatized in motion pictures.

Lloyd George, David (1863-1945). British statesman of Welsh descent. Succeeded Asquith as prime minister (1916-1922) and directed British policies during World War I and in the negotiation of peace terms. Instituted negotiations resulting in the establishment of the Irish Free State. Author of War Memoirs (6 vols., 1933-1936) and The Truth About the Peace Treaty (2 vols., 1938). Created Earl Lloyd-George of Dwfour (1945).

Lloyd's. An association of underwriters, merchants, shipowners, brokers, etc., principally dealing with ocean-borne commerce, marine insurance, and the publication of shipping intelligence. It was so called because the society was founded (1688) at a coffee-house kept in Lombard Street by one Edward Lloyd. In 1774 the offices, or Lloyd's Rooms, were removed to the Royal Exchange, where they still are.

Lloyd's books. Two enormous ledger-like volumes, placed on desks at the entrance (right and left) of Lloyd's Rooms. They give the principal arrivals, and all losses by wrecks, fire, or other accidents at sea. The entries are written in a fine, bold Roman hand, legible to all readers.

Lloyd's List. A periodical, in which the shipping news received at Lloyd's Rooms is published. It has been issued regularly from 1726, and since 1800 as a daily.

Lloyd's Register. A register of ships, British and foreign, published yearly.

Llyr. In the Welsh Mabinogion, a mythical king of Britain, father of BRAN and BRANWEN. See KING LEAR.

loan translation. A FOREIGN WORD or phrase naturalized by the translation of all its parts, as English badlands from French mauvaises terres.

loan word. A FOREIGN WORD partly naturalized, as French fuselage in English. See also LOAN TRANSLATION.

Loathly Lady. A stock character of the old romances who is so hideous that everyone is deterred from marrying her. When, however, she at last finds a husband, her ugliness—the effect of enchantment—disappears, and she becomes a model of beauty. Her story—a very common one, in which sometimes the enchanted beauty has to assume the shape of a serpent or some hideous monster—is the feminine counterpart of that of BEAUTY AND THE BEAST.

lob. Archaic. A clown, country bumpkin; a Puckish fairy.

Farewell, thou lob of spirits . . .
Shakespeare, Midsummer Night's Dream

Here Puck is spoken to. Hence lob's pound, also cob's pound, hob's pound (pound = prison), a jail or lock-up. Cf. Lob-Lie-By-the-Fire, a book of tales for children (1873) by Juliana Horatia EWING.

Lobaba. In Southey's THALABA THE DESTROYER, one of the sorcerers in the caverns of Dondaniel, "under the roots of the ocean."

lobsters. English soldiers used to be called lobsters because they were "turned red" when enlisted into the service. But the term was originally applied to a troop of horse soldiers in the Great Rebellion, clad in armor which covered them as a shell.

died for want of lobster sauce. Sometimes said of one who dies or suffers severely because of some trifling disappointment, pique, or wounded vanity. At the grand feast given by the great Condé to Louis XIV, at Chantilly, Vatel, the chef, was told that the lobsters intended for sauce had not arrived, whereupon he retired to his private room, and, leaning on his sword, ran it through his body, unable to survive such a dire disappointment. A great number of hotels and restaurants in France are named "Le Grand Vatel."

local color. In reference to drama or fiction, the concrete details of natural scenery, architecture, peculiarities of dialect, local customs and traditions, etc., that give an impression of authenticity to a particular setting. Thus an author who wishes to lay the scene of his novel in a certain region may perhaps spend some time in the vicinity or read its history "to soak up local color." Any spot rich in unique traditions that make it different from the rest of the world is said to have "plenty of local color."

During the 19th century in the U.S., a widespread school of local-color writing grew up, emphasizing chiefly individualities of background, dialect, and custom in the various parts of the nation, combined with the standardized humor, sentiment, or melodrama of the time. The Far West was depicted by Bret HARTE and Joaquin MILLER; New England, by Rose Terry COOKE and Sarah Orne JEWETT; the Middle West, by Edward EGGLESTON and John HAY; the South, by George Washington CABLE, Lafcadio HEARN, Charles Egbert CRADDOCK, Joel Chandler HARRIS, Thomas Nelson PAGE, and Grace Elizabeth KING. Realism was added to the local color tradition in the portrayals of Middle Western life by Edgar Watson HOWE, Joseph KIRKLAND, Hamlin GARLAND, and the Edgar Lee MASTERS of Spoon River Anthology. Among descendants of the early local-color writers in at least part of their work might be listed the following 20th-century authors: New England, Mary E. Wilkins FREEMAN, Joseph C. LINCOLN, J. P. MARQUAND, and E. A. ROBINSON; New York City, Henry Cuyler BUNNER, O. HENRY, Edith WHARTON, Damon RUNYON, Jerome WEIDMAN, and Arthur KOBER; Pennsylvania, Margaret DELAND; the South, Kate CHOPIN, Du Bose HEYWARD, Paul GREEN, Julia PETERKIN, William FAULKNER, Erskine CALDWELL, T. S. STRIBLING, Ellen GLASGOW, Elizabeth Madox ROBERTS, and Jesse STUART; Chicago, Carl SANDBURG, James T. FARRELL, Ben HECHT, Meyer LEVIN, Albert HALPER, Nelson ALGREN; the Middle West, Carl SANDBURG, Sinclair LEWIS, Sherwood ANDERSON, Theodore DREISER, Ruth SUCKOW, Zona GALE, Bess Streeter ALDRICH, Phil STONG, Willa CATHER; the Southwest, Mary AUSTIN, Willa CATHER, Oliver LA FARGE; the Far West, Gertrude ATHERTON, John STEINBECK, William SAROYAN;

the Northwest, H. L. DAVIS and Archie BINNS.

In Great Britain, writers who might be classed in the local-color school include the following: Ireland, J. M. SYNGE, Sean O'CASEY, Séan O'FAOLÁIN, and Lady GREGORY; Scotland, the KILLYARD SCHOOL; Wessex, Thomas HARDY; the Five Towns, ARNOLD BENNETT; Shropshire, A. E. HOUSMAN; Yorkshire, Winifred HOLTYBY. In all of the novels of James JOYCE the atmosphere of Dublin is vividly present. In France, many of the works of Guy de MAUPASSANT deal with life in Normandy, and Alphonse DAUDET, Frédéric MISTRAL, and Jean GIGNO have written of Provence.

local-option law. In the U.S., a law whose enforcement is contingent upon local acceptance by popular vote. The phrase local option is commonly applied to regulations of the liquor traffic.

Locarno Pact or Treaty. A series of five treaties concluded by Germany with Belgium, France, Great Britain, Italy, Poland and Czechoslovakia (October 1925), negotiated at Locarno in Switzerland with the purpose of guaranteeing peace and the existing territorial boundaries.

Lochaber ax. A long ax head on a pole with a hook on its end used by Scottish Highlanders. Named from the district of Lochaber in Scotland.

Lochiel. The title of the head of the clan Cameron.

And Cameron, in the shock of steel,
Die like the offspring of Lochiel.
Scott, The Field of Waterloo

The hero of Campbell's poem, Lochiel's Warning (1802) is Donald Cameron, known as The Gentle Lochiel. He was one of the Young Pretender's staunchest adherents, and escaped to France with him after Culloden (1746). He took service in the French army, but died two years later.

Lochinvar. A young Highlander, hero of an episode in Scott's poem MARMION. Being in love with a lady at Netherby Hall, he persuaded her to dance one last dance. She was condemned to marry a "laggard in love and a dastard in war," but her young chevalier swung her into his saddle and made off with her, before the "bridegroom" and his servants could recover from their astonishment.

Locke, Alain LeRoy (1886-). American Negro educator and essayist. Rhodes scholar at Oxford University (1907-1910). Ph.D. at Howard (1918). Teacher of philosophy at Howard University (from 1917). Corresponding member of the Académie des Sciences Coloniales, Paris. Author of books on the cultural contributions made by the Negro race and (in collaboration with B. J. Stern) When Peoples Meet: A Study in Race and Culture Contacts (1942); etc.

Locke, Alton, see ALTON LOCKE.

Locke, David Ross (1833-1888). Pseudonym Petroleum V. Nasby. American journalist, native of Vestal, N.Y. Going to Ohio at the age of nineteen, Locke became editor of the Jeffersonian at Findlay. On March 21, 1861, the first of his "Petroleum V. Nasby letters" appeared in that paper, starting a series which continued through 1887 (after 1865 in the Toledo, Ohio, Blade). Locke's fame began in the Civil War years. The "V" of his pseudonym stood for "Vesuvius," and he was envisaged as a dissolute country preacher, a Copperhead arguing for the South in an illiterate fashion. He used grotesque spelling and equally grotesque logic, after the fashion of Artemus Ward. It is said that Lincoln read some of the letters to his Cabinet.

Locke, John (1632-1704). English philosopher, known as "the father of English empiricism." Interested in experimental science and philosophy rather than in Aristotelean subtleties. His best-known work, An Essay Concerning Human Understanding (1690), took him seventeen years to complete and was the result of a promise given during a talk with friends about morality and religion to try to determine what questions the understanding of man was qualified to resolve and what others exceeded its powers. Suspected of complicity in the plots of Shaftesbury, whose confidential adviser he had been (from 1667), he went to Holland (1684) but returned during the Revolution. Became adviser on coinage to new government.

Locke, William John (1863-1930). British novelist. Author of The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne (1905); The Beloved Vagabond (1906); etc.

Locke Amsden, or The Schoolmaster. A once popular novel by D. P. Thompson (Am., 1847) portraying the life of the old district school.

Locker-Lampson, Frederick. Before 1885, Frederick Locker (1821-1895). English poet; noted for his light verse. London Lyrics (1857); editor of Lyra Elegantiarum (an anthology of light verse; 1867). Lampson was the maiden name of his second wife.

Lockhart, John Gibson (1794-1854). Scottish editor and novelist. Biographer of BURNS (1828) and his father-in-law, Sir Walter SCOTT (7 vols.; 1837-1838). His sketches of Edinburgh society, Peter's Letters to his Kinsfolk (1819), were published under the pseudonym Peter Morris. Translator of Ancient Spanish Ballads (1823). At the age of twenty-three he wrote a series of four articles signed "Z," concerning a supposed "Cockney School" of poetry, in which he excoriated John Keats after principally attacking Leigh Hunt. The tone of these articles is ruffianly, but his work on Scott ranks second only to Boswell's Johnson among the great biographies in English.

Lockit. The jailer in Gay's BEGGAR'S OPERA. He is an inhuman brute, who refuses to allow Captain MACHEATH any more candles in his cell, and threatens to clap on extra fetters unless he supplies him with more "garnish" (jail fees). Lockit loads his prisoners with fetters in inverse proportion to the fees which they pay ranging "from one guinea to ten."

Lucy Lockit. The daughter of Lockit the jailer, a foolish young woman, who, decoyed by Captain Macheath under the specious promise of marriage, effects his escape from jail. The Captain, however, is recaptured and condemned to death. After being reprieved, he confesses himself married to Polly PEACHUM, and Lucy is left to seek another mate.

How happy could I be with either [Lucy or Polly]
Were t'other dear charmer away!
Gay, The Beggar's Opera, ii. 2.

Lockridge, Richard (1898-). American drama critic and novelist. Best known for the adventures of Mr. and Mrs. North, begun as a series of stories in the New Yorker, and continued in collaboration with his wife. They were used as the basis for a popular radio program. Also author of biography of Edwin BOOTH.

Locksley. In Scott's IVANHOE, a name assumed by Robin Hood, who appears as an archer at the tournament. It is said to have been the name of the village where the outlaw was born.

Locksley Hall. Tennyson's poem of this name (1842) deals with an imaginary place and an imaginary hero. The Lord of Locksley Hall falls in love with his cousin Amy; she marries a rich clown, and he, indignant at this, declares he will wed a savage. He changes his mind, however, and decides, "Better fifty years of Europe than a cycle of Cathay."

In 1886 Tennyson published Locksley Hall Sixty Years After, another dramatic poem.

Lockyer, Sir Joseph Norman (1836-1920). British astronomer. Initiated (1866) the spectroscopic observation of sun-spots. Investigated the chemistry of the sun and determined the presence in its atmosphere of an unknown element (1868) which was called helium (from Greek helios, "the sun"), a name which it has kept although it was later discovered in the atmosphere of the earth as well.

Locofocos. A trade-name coined in America as that of a self-igniting cigar (patented in New York, 1834), but quickly transferred to lucifer matches, and then to the extreme Radicals, or Equal Rights faction, in America, because, so the story goes, at a meeting in Tammany Hall (1835), when the chairman left his seat, and the lights were suddenly extinguished, with the hope of breaking up the turbulent assembly, those in favor of extreme measures drew from their pockets their loco-focos, re-lighted the gas, and got their way.

Lochrine. Father of Sabrina and eldest son of the mythical Brutus, King of ancient Britain. On the death of his father he became king of Loegria. His story is told in Geoffrey of Monmouth's British History, ii. 5.

Virgin daughter of Lochrine,
Sprung from old Anchises' line.
Milton, Comus, 942-3.

An anonymous tragedy, based on HOLINSHED and GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH, was published under this name in 1595. As the words "Newly set foorth, overseene and corrected, By W. S." appear on the title-page, it was at one time ascribed to Shakespeare. It has also been ascribed to Marlowe, Greene, and Peele—the weight of evidence being rather in favor of the latter.

locum tenens (Lat.). Literally, a lieutenant or place-holder. A substitute or deputy, especially one acting for a doctor or clergyman.

Locusta. One who murders those she professes to nurse, or those whom it is her duty to take care of. The original Locusta was a professional poisoner living in Rome about 54 A. D. She poisoned Claudius and Britannicus, and attempted to destroy Nero. She was put to death in the reign of the Emperor Galba. Locusta in Scotland is an essay by William ROUGHHEAD.

lodge. In Masonic and similar orders, the meeting place of a local branch or its membership. So called from the lodges which served in the Middle Ages as workshops for groups of (free) masons.

Lodge, Henry Cabot (1850-1924). American legislator and author. U.S. Senator (1893-1924). As chairman of the foreign affairs committee after World War I, he led the opposition to the Peace Treaty and the League of Nations (1919). Author of biographies of Hamilton, Webster, and Washington. His son, George Cabot Lodge (1873-1909), was a poet, and his grandson, Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. (1902-), was on the editorial staff of the New York Herald Tribune (1924-1936) and U.S. Senator from Massachusetts (1937-1944; 1946-).

Lodge, Sir Oliver Joseph (1851-1940). English physicist and author. Became absorbed in psychical research and published his belief in the possibility of communication between the living and the dead. His writings include

Life and Matter (1905); The Substance of Faith (1907); Man and the Universe (1908); The Survival of Man (1909); Raymond, or Life and Death (an account of his communication with his dead son Raymond; 1916); Relativity (1925); the autobiography Past Years (1931); etc.

Lodge, Thomas (1558-1625). English poet, playwright, and prose-writer of the Elizabethan period, one of the "UNIVERSITY WITS." He was influenced by John LYLY and the style of EUPHUISM. His best-known work, and the one most popular in his own day, is Rosalynde: Euphues' Golden Legacy (1590), a pastoral romance, based on The Tale of Gamelyn (see GAMELYN) and used by Shakespeare as the source of his As You Like It. Lodge also wrote a number of plays, two of which have survived: A Looking Glass for London and England (1594), written with Robert GREENE, and The Wounds of Civil War (1594). His poetry includes Scilla's Metamorphosis (1589), a mythological poem; Philis (1593), a sonnet-sequence; a large number of lyrics in the Elizabethan miscellany The Phoenix Nest (see TOTTEL'S MISCELLANY; 1593); and A Fig for Momus (1595), one of the first satires in verse.

Lodge in the course of his lifetime was successively a law student, a soldier, a traveler and adventurer, and, after studying medicine at Avignon and Oxford, a well-known London physician.

Lodovico. In Shakespeare's OTHELLO, kinsman to Brabantio, the father of DESDEMONA.

Lodowick. In Shakespeare's MEASURE FOR MEASURE, the name assumed by the Duke of Vienna when he retired for a while from State affairs and dressed as a friar to watch the carrying out of a law recently enforced against prostitution.

Loeb, James (1867-1933). American banker and philanthropist. Founder (1912) of the Loeb Classical Library, a series of publications of about 300 volumes of Greek and Latin authors, giving the original text and its translation on opposite pages. Founder of Institute of Musical Art (1905) in New York City, later absorbed by the Juilliard Musical Foundation.

Loegria or Logres. England is so called by Geoffrey of Monmouth, from LOCRINE, the son of the mythical King Brut.

Loewi, Otto (1873-). See under DALE, HENRY HALLETT.

Lofoten. A group of precipitous islands off the northwest coast of Norway. The MAELSTROM is located at their southwest end.

Lofting, Hugh (1886-1947). British-born American writer and illustrator of children's books, including the "Dr. Dolittle" series, one of which was awarded the Newbery Medal (1922).

Loftus, Cissie. Stage name of Marie Cecilia McCarthy (1876-1943). Scottish actress of stage and early motion pictures. Known for her sparkling impersonations of stage and screen stars.

Lofty Jack. In Goldsmith's comedy THE GOODNATURED MAN, a character whose foible is modesty. See also BEAU TYBBS.

Log, King. A roi fainéant, a king who rules in peace and quietness, but never makes his power felt. This is in allusion to the fable of the frogs asking for a king. Jupiter first threw them down a log of wood, but they grumbled at so spiritless a king. He then sent them a stork, which devoured them eagerly.

logbook. On board ship, the journal in which the "logs" are entered by the chief mate. It contains also all general transactions pertaining to the ship and its crew, such as the strength and course of the winds, the conduct and misconduct of the men, and, in short, everything worthy of note.

Logi. In Norse mythology, one of Utgard-Loki's men, actually Fire in disguise, who managed in a contest at Utgard to eat more and faster than Loki.

Logris or Locris. Same as Locrin or LOCRINE, eldest son of Brut, the mythical king of Britain.

log-rolling. The combination of different interests, on the principle of "Scratch my back; I'll scratch yours." It was applied in politics to the "give and take" principle, by which one party will further certain interests of another in return for assistance given in passing their own measures, and in literary circles to mutual admiration criticism. The mutual admirers are called "log-rollers," and the allusion is to neighbors who assist a new settler to roll away the logs of his clearing.

Lohengrin. A son of Percival or PARSIFAL in German legend, the Knight of the Swan. He appears at the close of Wolfram von Eschenbach's Parzival (ca. 1210), and in other German romances, where he is the deliverer of Elsa, a princess of Brabant, who has been dispossessed by Telramund and Ortrud. He arrives at Antwerp in a skiff drawn by a swan, champions Elsa, and becomes her husband on the sole condition that she shall not ask his name or lineage. She is prevailed upon to do so on the marriage-night, and he, by his vows to the Grail, is obliged to disclose his identity, but at the same time disappear. The swan returns for him, and he goes, but not before retransforming the swan into Elsa's brother Gottfried, who, by the wiles of the sorceress Ortrud, had been obliged to assume that form. Richard WAGNER has an opera based on the subject, composed (words and music) in 1847.

Loki. The god of strife and spirit of evil in Scandinavian mythology, son of the giant Fjalar and Laufey, or Nal, the friend of the enemy of the gods, and father of the Midgard Serpent Fenris, and Hel. It was he who artfully contrived the death of BALDER. He was finally chained to a rock with ten chains, and—according to one legend—will so continue till the Twilight of the Gods appears, when he will break his bonds. The heavens will disappear, the earth will be swallowed up by the sea, fire will consume the elements, and even Odin, with all his kindred deities, shall perish. Another story has it that he was freed at Ragnarok, and that he and Heimdall fought until both were slain.

Lokman. A fabulous personage, the supposed author of a collection of Arabic fables. The name is founded on Lugman, the title of the 31st Surah of the Koran, in which occur the words "We gave to Lugman wisdom." Like Aesop, he is said to have been a slave, noted for his ugliness.

Lola. In Mascagni's opera, CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA, the beautiful young woman for whom TURIDDU leaves his sweetheart SANTUZZA.

Lola Montez, see MONTEZ, LOLA.

Lollards. The early German reformers and the followers of WYCLIF were so called. An ingenious derivation is given by Bailey, who suggests the Latin word lolium (darnel), because these reformers were deemed "tares in God's wheat-field," but the name is from Mid. Dut. lollaerd, a mutterer, one who mumbles over prayers and hymns.

Gregory XI, in one of his bulls against Wyclif, urged the clergy to extirpate this lolium.

Lollius. In Chaucer's TROILUS AND CRISYDE, claimed by the English poet as the original author of the story, although internal evidence shows that Chaucer's source for the romance was Boccaccio. Lollius is also mentioned in Chaucer's House of Fame.

Lomax, John Avery (1872-1948). American folklorist; editor of Cowboy Songs and Other Frontier Ballads (1910); Plantation Songs of the Negro (1916); etc.

Lombard. A banker or money-lender, so called because the first bankers were from Lombardy, and set up in Lombard Street (London), in the Middle Ages. The name Lombard (according to Stow) is a contraction of Longobards. Among the richest of these Longobard merchants was the celebrated Medici family, from whose armorial bearings the insignia of three golden balls has been derived. The Lombard bankers exercised a monopoly in pawn-broking till the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

Lombard fever. Laziness. Pawn-brokers are called Lombard brokers, because they retain the three golden balls of the Lombard money-changers, and lazy folk will pawn anything rather than settle down to steady work.

Lombard Street to a China orange. Long odds. Lombard Street, London, is still the center of great banking and mercantile transactions. To stake the Bank of England against a common orange is to stake what is of untold value against a mere trifle.

Lombroso, Cesare (1836-1907). Italian physician and criminologist; professor of criminal anthropology at Turin. Taught that a criminal is a distinct anthropological type, the product of heredity and degeneracy rather than of social environment.

London, Jack. In full John Griffith London (1876-1916). American novelist, journalist, and wanderer, known for his stories of adventure and violence, chiefly laid in the Far North or the South Seas. He was strongly influenced by his conception of the ideas of both MARX and NIETZSCHE, and his work is marked by sympathy with the poor, prophecies of world revolution and a future Socialist state, and emphasis upon the primitive, the powerful, the cruel, and the violent, usually embodied in an animal or a "superman." Among his works are The Son of the Wolf (1900); The Cruise of the Dazzler (1902); The People of the Abyss (1903, on slum conditions in London); Tales of the Fish Patrol (1905); THE CALL OF THE WILD (1904); The War of the Classes (1905); a treatise on Socialism; The Game (1905), dealing with prize-fighting; Before Adam (1907); White Fang (1907), about a wild dog; The Iron Heel (1907), concerning a revolution and a Utopia; Martin Eden (1909), an account of a Socialist author, considered to be partly autobiographical; Revolution (1910); Burning Daylight (1910), about a gold-miner in Alaska; THE CRUISE OF THE SNARK (1911); South Sea Tales (1911); SMOKE BELLEW (1912); The Abysmal Brute (1913); The Valley of the Moon (1913); John Barleycorn (1913), an autobiography; The Mutiny of the Elsinore (1914); The Scarlet Plague (1915); Jerry of the Islands (1917); The Human Drift (1917); On the Makalooa Mat (1919).

As a boy and youth, London lived a dissolute life on the California waterfront, went to sea, was a tramp for awhile, did menial jobs, and went to Alaska during the Gold Rush. His writing became extremely popular during the early 1900's, and he lived extravagantly on his royalties. He had been a member of the Socialist party, but resigned in 1916, accusing it of lacking "fire and fight." He was twice married.

Lone Ranger, The. Hero of a popular American radio series of "cowboy" dramas of the late 1930's and early 1940's, appealing chiefly to children. The Lone Ranger is a "mysterious masked rider of the plains in the days when the West was young," who canvasses frontier settlements, saving lives, restoring lost husbands and sweethearts, promoting courtships, and in general defeating injustice. He is a combination Robin Hood and Deadwood Dick—quick on the trigger, but beneficent. The Lone Ranger was also a prominent character in the comic strips.

Lone Star State. Texas. See under STATES.

Long, Gabrielle Margaret Vere, née Campbell. Pseudonyms Marjorie Bowen, George Runnel Preedy, Joseph Shearing, etc. (1886–). Prolific English novelist and playwright. Author of many biographical accounts of famous people. Her novels with Dutch and Italian backgrounds are the most successful. Her General Crack (1928) made an effective motion picture, starring John Barrymore. Her "Shearing" romances are remarkable, macabre reconstructions of famous crimes. See CLÉRY, L.

Long, Haniel (1888–). American journalist, teacher and poet. Organized (1933) a cooperative publishing business, Writers' Editions, in Santa Fé, New Mexico. His most famous poem is Wild Plum. He has written a book on Walt Whitman.

Long, Huey Pierce (1893–1935). American lawyer and politician. As governor of Louisiana (1928–1931) and U.S. Senator (1931–1935) he acquired the reputation of a miniature replica of Hitler. Assassinated in 1935. His brother, Earl Kemp Long (1895–), became governor of Louisiana upon the retirement of governor Richard W. Leche (1939) but was defeated (1940). Reelected governor (1947).

Long, John Luther (1861–1927). American novelist and playwright. Especially remembered for his short story Madame Butterfly (Century Magazine, January, 1898), which was adapted for the stage by David Belasco and served as the basis for Puccini's opera.

Longville. In Shakespeare's Love's Labor's Lost, a young lord attending on Ferdinand, King of Navarre. He promises to spend three years in study with the King, during which time no woman is to approach the court. No sooner has he signed the compact than he falls in love with MARIA.

Longfellow, Henry Wadsworth (1807–1882). American poet and college professor, extremely popular and almost universally respected during his lifetime. His work is simple, mild, conventional, and kindly, marked by skill in metrics and influenced by the German lyric poets of the romantic period. His works include Outre-Mer: A Pilgrimage Beyond the Sea (1834–1835), prose sketches; Hyperion (1839), a romance; Voices of the Night (1839), poems; Ballads and Other Poems (1842); Poems on Slavery (1842), expressing the poet's interest in ABOLITIONISM; The Spanish Student (1843), a drama; The Belfry of Bruges, And Other Poems (1845); EVANGELINE (1847); Kavanagh (1849), a tale in prose, said to be partly autobiographical; The Seaside and the Fireside (1849), poems; THE GOLDEN LEGEND (1851); Hiawatha (1855); THE COURTSHIP OF MILES STANDISH (1858); TALES OF A WAYSIDE INN (1863); The Masque of Pandora (1875); Kéramos (1878); Ultima Thule (1880); In the Harbor (1882). Among his best-known single poems are: A Psalm of Life, The Village Blacksmith, The Wreck of the Hesperus (see HESPERUS), Excelsior, The Children's Hour, and PAUL REVERE'S RIDE.

Longfellow, who was a classmate of Hawthorne at Bowdoin College, studied in France, Spain, Germany, and Italy. He was one of the first teachers of modern languages in an American university, teaching for six years at Bowdoin (1829–1835) and for eighteen at Harvard (1836–1854). By the 20th century his verse was known principally among grammar-school pupils.

long house. A communal dwelling of the Iroquois Indians. By extension, in the form Long House the name of the Iroquois Confederacy of Five Nations.

Longinus, or Longius. The traditional name of the Roman soldier who smote our Lord with his spear at the Crucifixion. In the romance of King ARTHUR, this spear is brought by JOSEPH OF ARIMATHEA to Listenise, when he visits King Pellam, "who was nigh of Joseph's kin." Sir Balin the Savage, being in want of a weapon, seizes this spear, with which he wounds King Pellam. "Three whole countries" are destroyed by that one stroke, and Sir Balin sees "the people thereof lying dead on all sides."

Longinus, Dionysius Cassius (fl. 3rd century A. D.). Greek philosopher, to whom is attributed a famous treatise on poetry On the Sublime, which exalts a mystic inspiration from without as the chief factor in poetic composition.

Long Meg of Westminster. A noted virago in the reign of Henry VIII, round whose exploits a comedy (since lost) was performed in London in 1594. Her name has been given to several articles of unusual size. Thus, the large blue-black marble in the south cloister of Westminster Abbey, over the grave of Gervasius de Blois, is called Long Meg of Westminster. Fuller says the term is applied to things of

"hop-pole height, wanting breadth proportionable therunto," and refers to a great gun in the Tower so called, taken to Westminster in troublous times; and in the Edinburgh Anti-quarian Magazine (September, 1769) we read of Peter Branan, aged 104, who was 6 ft. 6 in. high, and was commonly called Long Meg of Westminster.

Long Parliament. See under PARLIAMENTS.

Long Roll, The. A historical novel of the Civil War by Mary Johnston (Am., 1911). The chief romantic interest is in the love affair of Judith Cary and Richard Cleave, a Confederate officer who is disgraced through a trick of his rival, Maury Stafford, but finally given another trial through the good offices of Stonewall JACKSON.

Longstreet, Augustus Baldwin (1790–1870). American clergyman, educator and humorous writer. Practiced law in Georgia and wrote about the Georgia Crackers, as in Georgia Scenes (1835 and 1840). President, University of Mississippi (1849–1856), University of South Carolina (1857–1865).

Longstreet, James (1821–1904). American army officer; in Confederate service (from 1861); lieutenant general in command of a corps under LEE at Gettysburg (July, 1863), where his delayed attack was partly responsible for the defeat of the Confederacy. Surrendered with Lee at Appomattox Court House (April 9, 1865). Cf. his autobiography, From Manassas to Appomattox (1896). During the Reconstruction he became a champion of Grant Held government offices at home and in diplomatic service abroad.

Long Tom. A large field gun of long range. Originally the name of a 42-pound gun on the French man-of-war Hoche. It was captured by the British (1798), sold to America, transferred to the General Armstrong which ran the British blockade of New Orleans, and finally had to be abandoned in the Azores. It was rescued, however (1893), and brought back to New York.

Longus (4th or 5th century A. D.). Greek writer, supposed author of DAPHNIS AND CHLOE.

Long Valley, The. A collection of short stories by John STEINBECK (1938).

Lonigan, William, called Studs. Hero of James T. Farrell's trilogy STUDS LONIGAN, a youth of moderate pride and ambition in early adolescence, certain that he will accomplish great things in the world when he grows up, who is defeated in life under the combined influence of his family background, his associates, and his economic environment. He is shown throughout the novel as a commonplace young man, repelled by viciousness but unable to avoid drifting into it, dissatisfied by his way of life but unable to escape from it, uncertain of what he wants from life, easily swayed by the preachings of the Roman Catholic Church and the practices of his friends, without being able to think out his problems rationally for himself, occasionally prompted by impulses of decency but unable to carry them through, given to concealing his sense of frustration from himself by identifying himself with the bold and ruthless heroes of the gangster motion pictures he goes to see. He is exceptional in neither sensitivity nor essential viciousness of character, in accordance with the author's plan to make him representative of a class of youth in the U.S. of the 1920's and early 1930's.

Lonsdale, Frederick (1881–). British playwright of sophisticated comedies. His best-known play is The Last of Mrs. Cheyney (1925).

Look Homeward, Angel: A Story of the Buried Life. A novel by Thomas WOLFE, autobiographical in character, published in 1929. It describes the childhood and youth of Eugene GANT in the town of Altamont, state of Catawba (said to be Asheville, North Carolina), as he grows up, becomes aware of the relations among his family, meets the eccentric people of the town, goes to college, discovers literature and ideas, has his first love affairs, and at last sets out alone on a mystic and romantic "pilgrimage." OF TIME AND THE RIVER is a sequel to this novel.

Looking Backward 2000–1887. A romance by Edward BELLAMY (1888), describing a Utopian, Communistic Boston in the year 2000. It caused widespread discussion.

Lookout Mountain. See under MISSIONARY RIDGE.

Loomis, Charles Battell (1861–1911). American humorist. Author of Just Rhymes (1899); A Bath in an English Tub (1907); A Holiday Touch (1908); Just Irish (1909); etc.

Loop. The "downtown" district of Chicago, the business and theatrical center, so called from the "loop" made by the elevated tracks running in to the center of the city.

Loos, Anita (1893–). American humorous writer, best known for her Gentlemen Prefer Blondes (1925), and scenarios for moving pictures.

Lope de Vega, see VEGA, LOPE DE.

L'Oracolo (Ital., The Oracle). An opera (1905) by Camillo Zandoni. The libretto is based on the story, The Cat and the Cherub (1896) by Chester Bailey Fernald.

Lorbrulgrud. The capital of Brobdingnag in Swift's Gulliver's Travels. See GULLIVER, LEMUEL. The word is humorously said to mean "Pride of the Universe."

Lorca, Federico García (1899-1936). Spanish poet and playwright of Andalusian stock. Deeply indebted to the popular song tradition of his native province. Organized the first cante hondo ("deep-song") festival at the Alhambra (1922). Cf. the superb ballads in Romancero Gitano (1928). Came to New York (1929-1930) where he was struck by the affinity of Negro spirituals to the cante hondo. The result was his Oda al Rey de Harlem, available in English in the collection The Poet in New York (1940). His career as a dramatist reached a climax with the rural tragedy Bitter Oleander (1935), reissued as Blood Wedding (1939). García Lorca was a friend of Salvador DALÍ's. His own drawings remind of Cocteau. He was also an accomplished musician. He was murdered at the start of the Spanish Civil War, and his books were suppressed by the Franco government.

Lord Jim. A novel by Joseph CONRAD (1900), dealing with a man's lifelong efforts to atone for an act of instinctive cowardice. As a young man, Jim is one of the officers of the Patna who frantically take to the boats when she hits a derelict in the Red Sea, leaving their eight hundred native passengers, as they suppose, to certain death. After years of wandering from place to place pursued by the disgrace, he wins a measure of satisfaction and self-respect from a busy, useful life among the natives of Patusan, who put complete confidence in Tuan Jim (Lord Jim). Finally, however, a gang of intrusive white men whom he has persuaded the natives to allow to go free repay his trust by murdering Dain Maroola, his best friend, the son of Chief Doramin. Lord Jim immediately gives himself up to Doramin and is killed. The story is told by Conrad's favorite character, MARLOW.

Lord of Burleigh, The. A ballad by TENNYSON (1842). In the guise of a village painter the noble-born hero courts and wins a simple country maiden, but when he takes her home to his castle, she feels out of place and pines away and dies.

Lord of Misrule, The. Formerly, the master of revels or officer in charge of courtly entertainment in Great Britain. In Scotland he is called the Abbot of Unreason. Also, the title of a poem by Alfred Noyes.

Lord of the Isles. Donald of Islay, who in 1346 reduced the Hebrides under his sway. The title of Lord of the Isles had been borne by others for centuries before, was borne by his (Donald's) successors, and is now one of the titles of the Prince of Wales. Sir Walter Scott has a metrical romance entitled The Lord of the Isles (1815).

Lord Ormont and His Aminta. A novel by George MEREDITH (1894) based on the career of the Earl of Peterborough, who rendered distinguished service at Valencia but in later life nourished resentment against the government which had recalled him (1707) for high-handedness. He married Anastasia Robinson, the singer, but made no public acknowledgment of the marriage for many years. In the novel the names are changed, and Aminta remedies her equivocal position by eloping with Matthew Weyburn and opening a school in the Alps.

Lord's (cricket ground). Headquarters of the Marylebone Cricket Club in London, named from Thomas Lord. England's most famous cricket ground.

Lord Ullin's Daughter. A ballad by Thomas CAMPBELL (1809). The lady elopes with the Chief of Ulva's Isle, and is pursued by her father with a party of retainers. The lovers reach a ferry, and promise to give the boatman "a silver pound" to row them across Lochgyle. The waters are very rough, and the father reaches the shore just in time to see the boat capsize, and his daughter drowned.

'Twas vain; the loud waves lashed the shore,
Return or aid preventing;
The waters wild went o'er his child,
And he was left lamenting.

Lorelei or Lurlei. A siren of German legend, who haunted a rock of the same name on the right bank of the Rhine, half-way between Bingen and Coblenz. She combed her hair with a golden comb, and sang a wild song, which enticed fishermen and sailors to destruction on the rocks and rapids. Heinrich HEINE has a well-known poem on the Lorelei.

Lorentz, Pare (1905-). American scenario writer and motion-picture director, famous for his script The River.

Lorenz, Adolf (1854-1946). Austrian orthopedic surgeon, widely known for his "bloodless surgery," particularly in the treatment of congenital hip-disease by manipulation and subsequent use of a cast. Visited U.S. more than twenty times.

Lorenzo. (1) A young man in Shakespeare's MERCHANT OF VENICE with whom Jessica, the daughter of the Jew Shylock, elopes.

(2) In Edward YOUNG's Night Thoughts, the embodiment of evil and atheism.

(3) The name by which D. H. LAWRENCE was known to his admirers and disciples.

Lorenzo The Magnificent. See under MEDICI.

Loretto, The house of. The Santa Casa, the reputed house of the Virgin Mary at Nazareth. It was "miraculously" translated to Fiume in Dalmatia in 1291, thence to Recanati in 1294, and finally to a plot of land belonging to a certain Lady Lauretta, situated in Italy, 3 m. from the Adriatic, and about 14 S.S.E. from Ancona, round which the town of Loretto sprang up. The chapel contains bas-reliefs showing incidents in the life of the Virgin, and a rough image which is traditionally held to have been carved by St. Luke.

Our house may have traveled through the air, like the house of Loretto, for aught I care.—Goldsmith, The Good-natured Man, iv, 1.

Father Malachy's Miracle, by Bruce Marshall (1934), is a humorous variation on this legend.

Lorge, De. The hero of a legend retold by SCHILLER in his ballad The Glove (Der Handschuh) and the subject of poems by Leigh HUNT and BROWNING. According to the tale, De Lorge's lady love threw her glove into the arena of wild beasts, purely to test his devotion. He recovered it, threw it in her face, and scornfully left her. Browning's version presents a unique justification of the motives behind the lady's act. See GLOVE, THE. The tale is to be found in Froissart's Chronicles, attributed to the period of Francis I of France.

Lorimer, George Horace (1868–1937). American man of letters. Author of Letters of a Self-made Merchant to his Son and Old Gorgon Graham, books of rugged individualism. Editor of Saturday Evening Post (1899–1936). Cf. George Horace Lorimer (1948), by J. W. Tebbel.

Lorna Doone, a Romance of Exmoor. A historical novel by R. D. Blackmore (1869). At the age of fourteen, the young hero, John Ridd, falls into the hands of the robber Doones, a band of high-born Devonshire outlaws. He is saved by Lorna Doone, a mere child, and when he is of age, he sets out to find her again. Because the Doones have killed his father he hates them; he protects Lorna against them and finally marries her.

Lorrain, Claude (1600–1682). French landscape painter and engraver. Original name, Claude Gellée, changed after his native province Lorraine. The Claude Lorraine mirror is a black, slightly convex mirror, in which landscapes appear changed in fancied resemblance to Lorrain's canvases.

Lorraine, Mrs. Felix. A clever intriguing woman in Disraeli's Vivian Grey. This is one of the numerous characters of fiction for whom Lady Caroline Lamb was the model.

Lorrequer, Harry, see HARRY LORREQUER.

Lorris, Guillaume de, see GUILLAUME DE LORRIS.

Lost Chord, The. A poem, once very popular, by Adelaide Ann PROCTER. It begins, "Seated one day at the organ . . ." and was set to music by Sir Arthur SULLIVAN.

Lost Generation. A term used to refer to the generation of men and women who came to maturity during World War I and as a result of their experiences in the war itself and of the social dislocations following it were rootless, disillusioned, and neurotic. Gertrude STEIN is said to have first used the term in a conversation with Ernest HEMINGWAY, whose early novels are considered to typify the attitudes and behavior of the Lost Generation. Malcolm COWLEY has a book on the post-war period entitled The Lost Generation (1931). See also FITZGERALD, F. SCOTT; JAZZ AGE; WAR IN LITERATURE.

Lost Lady, A. A novel by Willa CATHER (1923). Concerns graceful, charming, and passionate Marian Forrester, and the course of her life in a new country.

Lost Leader, The. A poem by Robert BROWNING (1845), reproaching a former liberal poet, once admired by the author, for deserting his cause.

Just for a handful of silver he left us,
Just for a riband to stick in his coat.

The change made by WORDSWORTH from liberalism to conservatism was the inspiration for the poem.

lost tribes. The members of the ten tribes of the Jews who seceded after the death of Solomon and established the separate kingdom of Israel. In 722 B. C. it was overthrown by Sargon of Assyria; 27,000 Jews were displaced to various parts of the Assyrian Empire and never returned to Palestine. The theory now is that the lost tribes were absorbed by neighboring nations.

Lot. (1) In the Old Testament, the nephew who accompanied ABRAHAM to Canaan and divided the land with him. Lot was one of the inhabitants of the wicked city of Sodom and escaped by the intervention of an angel just before the city was destroyed by fire and brimstone. Lot's wife was turned to a pillar of salt for looking back at the city (Gen. xix. 26).

(2) In Arthurian romance, King of Orkney, one of the kings subdued by ARTHUR. Malory makes Lot's wife Margawse or MORGause, but Tennyson in his Idylls calls her Bellicent. Lot was the father of GAWAIN, AGRAWAIN, GAHERIS, GARETH, and, according to Tennyson's account, of MODRED.

Lothair. A novel by DISRAELI (1871). The hero, Lothair, is a young English nobleman who, upon coming of age, inherits a great fortune. The plot centers about the struggle between the Anglican Church, the Church of Rome, and the revolutionary societies of Italy to secure his money and support. One of the most interesting characters of the book is the witty Lord St. ALDEGONDE. A primary cause for the popularity of the book was the interest taken by the English public in identifying the characters who were prominent people under slight disguise, generally supposed to represent the following:

The Oxford Professor, Goldwin Smith
Grandison, Cardinals Manning and Wiseman
Lothair, Marquis of Bute
Catesby, Monseigneur Capel
The Duke and Duchess, the Duke and Duchess of Abercorn.
The Bishop, Bishop Wilberforce.
Corisande, one of the Ladies Hamilton.

Lothario. (1) A gay libertine, a seducer of women, a debauchee. The character is from Rowe's tragedy The Fair Penitent (1703), which is founded on Massinger's Fatal Dowry (1632), though Rowe probably got the name from Davenant's Cruel Brother (1630), where is a similar character with the same name.

Is this that haughty, gallant, gay Lothario?
Fair Penitent, v. 1.

(2) A character in Cervantes' story "The Curious Impertinent" told in Don Quixote.

(3) The patron of WILHELM MEISTER in Goethe's Wilhelm Meister's Lehrjahre.

Loti, Pierre. Real name Louis Marie Julien Viaud (1850-1923). French novelist, known for his exotic tales of the sea and foreign lands, characterized by sensuous and impressionistic description and an attitude of consistent melancholy. Among these works are Aziyodé (1879), published anonymously; Le Mariage de Loti (THE MARRIAGE OF LOTI; 1880); Roman d'un Spahi (1881); Fleurs d'Ennui (1882); Mon Frère Yves (My Brother Yves; 1883); Pêcheur d'Islande (AN ICELAND FISHERMAN; 1886); MADAME CHRYSANTHÈME (1887); Le Roman d'un Enfant (A Child's Romance; 1890); Fantôme d'Orient (A Phantom from the East; 1892); Le Livre de la Pitié et de la Mort (The Book of Pity and Death; 1891); Jérusalem (1895) and La Galilée (1895), dealing with a journey to the Holy Land; Ramuntcho (1897); Madame Prune (1905); Les Désenchantées (Disenchanted; 1906); Un Jeune officier Pauvre (1923).

In his youth, Loti was a French naval officer and traveled extensively about the world. He was widely celebrated for his writings, and in 1892 was elected to the French Academy, defeating Émile ZOLA. In the days of his success and prosperity, he lived in a palace which contained several halls decorated elaborately and authentically in Gothic, Renaissance, Turkish, Chinese, and 19th-century bourgeois French styles.

Lot Sap Sago, see SAGO.

Lotte. The heroine of Goethe's Sorrows of Young Werther. See WERTHER.

lotus. A name given to many plants, e.g., by the Egyptians to various species of water-lily, by the Hindus and Chinese to the Nelumbo (a water-bean, Nymphaeaceae specio- sum), their "sacred lotus," and by the Greeks to Zizyphus Lotus, a north African shrub of the natural order Rhamnaceae, the fruit of which was used for food.

According to Mahomet a lotus-tree stands in the seventh heaven, on the right hand of the throne of God, and the Egyptians pictured God sitting on a lotus above the watery mud. One of the most familiar of Buddhist prayers begins "Hark the jewel in the lotus." See OM.

The classic myth is that Lotus, a daughter of Neptune, fleeing from Priapus was changed into a tree, which was called Lotus after her. Another story goes that Dryope of Oechalia was one day carrying her infant son, when she plucked a lotus flower for his amusement, and was instantaneously transformed into a lotus.

Lotus-eaters or Lotophagi. In Homeric legend, a people who ate of the lotus-tree, the effect of which was to make them forget their friends and homes, and to lose all desire of returning to their native country, their only wish being to live in idleness in Lotus-land (Odyssey, ix).

Hence, a lotus-eater is one living in ease and luxury. Tennyson wrote one of his best-known poems on this subject.

Loubet, Émile (1838-1929). French statesman and 7th president of the Third French Republic (1899-1906). Sought revision of the DREYFUS case.

Loudon, Joe. The hero of Tarkington's CONQUEST OF CANAAN.

Louis. In Virginia Woolf's THE WAVES, the son of an Australian banker, staying in England for his education; he is proud, vain, and ashamed of being a colonial at the same time that he resents the English children with whom he associates. He does not go to college but goes to work in business and eventually becomes wealthy, although he still retains the feelings of inferiority of his childhood. At one time he and RHODA, drawn together by their personal uncertainties and the sense of isolation they both share, become lovers, but later she leaves him.

Louis de Conte. In Mark Twain's JOAN OF ARC, the friend who tells the story.

Louis XI of France (1423-1483) is introduced by Scott in two of his novels, QUENTIN DURWARD and ANNE OF GEIERSTEIN. In Quentin Durward, he appears disguised as Maitre Pierre, a merchant. He is the hero of a drama by Casimir de la Vigne and appears in Hugo's NOTRE DAME DE PARIS and Theodore de Banville's play of Guinguette.

Louis XIV. Often called Louis the Great or in French le Grand Monarque and le Roi Soleil (the great monarch, the sun king) (1638-1715). The greatest autocratic monarch of France whose extravagances and wars made his country great and almost bankrupt. Reputed to have summed up his political creed in the phrase, L'état, c'est moi, "I am the state." His reign of 73 years was the longest in European history; his court was the indisputable model for almost all the lesser princes in Europe. By revoking the Edict of NANTES he caused thousands of Huguenots to flee France. He had famous mistresses; the end of his reign was made religious by Madame de Maintenon, the best-known of them.

Louis Quatorze. As an adjective, applied to the style of architecture, decorative art, furniture, etc., that prevailed during the reign of Louis XIV. The architecture is cold and regular with richness of interior decoration. The furniture had elaborate carving and gilding, buhlwork inlay and Roman motives in ornamentation with a tendency toward the rococo. Similarly, Louis Quinze style (Louis XV, 1715-1774), is characterized in interior ornamentation by an irregular curved line and surface replacing the straight. Louis Seize style (Louis XVI, 1774-1793) in architecture is more antique yet lighter. Decoration again takes up the straight line. Interior ornamentation shows the influence of the recently discovered frescoes of Pompeii and Herculaneum and pastoral motives.

Louis Philippe. Known as Citizen King or in French Roi citoyen (1773-1850). Eldest son of Philippe Égalité; elected King of the French (1830), at the instance of LAFAYETTE, after the deposition of Charles X; was himself deposed after the July Revolution (1848). A partisan of the Revolution in his youth, democratic in the first years of his reign, he became more and more a typical Bourbon and absolutist. Died in exile in Claremont, England.

Louise, the Glee-maiden. In Scott's FAIR MAID OF PERTH.

Louise de la Vallière. A historical romance by Alexandre Dumas which forms a part of his Vicomte de Bragelonne. See under THREE MUSKETEERS. It is also a drama by BULWER LYTTON.

Louisiana Purchase. The vast territory (885,000 square miles) purchased (April 30, 1803) by the United States during Jefferson's administration for $15,000,000 from France under the consulate of Bonaparte. It extended from the Mississippi to the Rocky Mountains and from the Gulf of Mexico to British America. See also Meriwether LEWIS.

Lounsbury, Thomas Raynesford (1838-1915). American scholar and educator. His History of the English Language (1879) has been called a masterpiece. One of the original members of the American Academy of Arts and Letters, and fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. Edited Chaucer's minor poems; a biography of J. Fenimore Cooper; wrote a book on Tennyson which was completed after his death by Wilbur L. Cross; etc.

Loupgarou (Fr., "werewolf"). In Rabelais' GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, a leader of the giants. When Pantagruel grew angry with him, he picked him up by his ankles and used him like a quarter-staff.

Lourdes. A town on the Gave de Pan in the department Hautes-Pyrénées, France; one of the chief centers of Roman Catholic pilgrimages because of a grotto located there in which the Virgin Mary, according to tradition, appeared (1858) to the local peasant girl Bernadette Soubirous and revealed to her the miraculous properties of a spring. See also St. Bernadette under SAINTS. Lourdes is the title of a novel by Émile ZOLA (1894). FRANZ WERFEL made Bernadette Soubirous and her visions the subject of his best-selling novel The Song of Bernadette (Das Lied von Bernadette; 1942), made into a successful moving picture.

Louvre. The former royal palace of the French kings in Paris. Dagobert is said to have built here a hunting-seat, but the present magnificent pile of buildings was begun by Francis I in 1541. After the French Revolution the greater part of the Louvre was used for the national museum and art gallery.

Louys, Pierre (1870-1925). French man of letters. Author of Les Chansons de Blutis (prose poems; 1894); Aphrodite (novel; 1896); etc.

Lövborg. A leading character in Ibsen's HEDDA GABLER.

love feast. A banquet in token of love and friendship. Among the early Christians, the love feast (called agape) preceded the Lord's Supper.

Love for Love. A famous comedy by CONGREVE (1695). The heroine, Angelica, the ward of Sir Sampson LEGEND, is courted by her guardian but is in love with his son Valentine and finally agrees to marry him. Angelica is said to represent the famous actress, Mrs. Bracegirdle, to whom Congreve addressed numerous attentions.

Lovel, Lord. Hero of Bayley's song, THE MISTLETOE BOUGH.

Lovelace. The principal male character of Richardson's novel CLARISSA HARLOWE. He is a selfish voluptuary, a man of fashion, whose sole ambition is to seduce young women. He is rich, proud, handsome, brave and gay, a type of the most unscrupulous but polished libertine.

Lovelace, Richard (1618-1658). English poet, with CAREW and SUCKLING classified in the Cavalier group or the "sons of Ben." See JONSON, BEN. He was known for his grace, his handsome appearance, and his aristocratic gallantry. His poetry includes a number of graceful and facile songs among which To Althea, from Prison and To Lucasta, Going to the Wars are the best-known. Collections of the poems to "LUCASTA" were published in 1649 and 1659. Lovelace was in the royal army during the Civil War and was imprisoned on two occasions for his connections with the Royalists.

Loveless, Edward and Amanda. Husband and wife, the chief characters in Love's Last Shift or the Fool in Fashion by Colley CIBBER (1695), in its sequel The Relapse or Virtue in Danger by Sir John Vanbrugh (1696) and in A Trip to Scarborough, an adaptation of The Relapse by Sheridan. The plays center about Amanda's successful schemes to win back her husband's roving affections.

Lovell, Charlotte. The "old maid" in Edith WHARTON's novel of that title. Actually a mother but forced for propriety's sake to seem an old-maid aunt to her daughter.

Loveman, Amy (1881-). Associate editor, SATURDAY REVIEW OF LITERATURE; head of editorial department, Book-of-the-Month Club. I'm Looking for a Book (1936); co-author, Saturday Papers (1921), Designed for Reading (1934). C. L. Skinner Award (1946).

Love Me Little, Love Me Long. A novel by Charles READE (1859). See DODD, DAVID.

Lover, Samuel (1797-1868). Irish novelist, song writer and painter. His novel Rory O'More (1839) was dramatized with the original Tyrone Power (1797-1841) in the leading role. His best-known songs are Rory O'More, The Four-leaved Shamrock, The Low-Backed Car, etc.

Lovers' Leap, see LEUCADIA'S ROCK.

Love's Labor's Lost. A comedy by Shakespeare (ca. 1594). Ferdinand, King of Navarre, with three lords named Biron, Dumain, and Longaville, agrees to spend three years in study, during which time no woman is to approach the court. Scarcely have they signed the compact, when the Princess of France, attended by Rosaline, Maria, and Katharine, seeks an interview respecting certain debts said to be due from the King of France to the King of Navarre. The four gentlemen fall in love with the four ladies: the King with the Princess, Biron with Rosaline, Longaville with Maria, and Dumain with Katharine. In order to carry their suits, the four gentlemen, disguised as Muscovites, present themselves before the ladies, but they, being warned of the masquerade, have disguised themselves also, so that each gentleman in every case addresses the wrong lady. However, it is at length arranged that the suits be deferred for twelve months and a day, and if, at the expiration of that time, they remain of the same mind, the matter is to be taken into serious consideration.

Loves of the Angels. The stories of three angels, in verse, by Thomas MOORE (1822). The stories are founded on the Eastern tale of Harut and Marut, and the rabbinical fictions of the loves of Uzziel and Shamchazai.

(1) The first angel falls in love with Lea, whom he has seen bathing. She returns love for love, but his love is carnal, hers heavenly. He loves the woman, she loves the angel. One day, the angel tells her the spell-word which opens the gates of heaven. She pronounces it, and rises through the air into paradise, while the angel becomes imbruted, being no longer an angel of light, but "of the earth, earthy."

(2) The second angel is Rubi, one of the seraphs. He falls in love with Liris, who asks him to come in all his celestial glory. He does so, and she, rushing into his arms, is burnt to death; but the kiss she gives him becomes a brand on his face forever.

(3) The third angel is Zaraph, who loves Nama. It is Nama's desire to love without control, and to love holily, but as she has fixed her love on a creature, and not on the Creator, both she and Zaraph are doomed to live among the things that perish, until this mortal is swallowed up by immortality, when Nama and Zaraph will be admitted into the realms of everlasting love.

Lovett, Robert Morss (1870-). American educator and author. Professor of English at the University of Chicago (1909-1936). Author (with William Vaughn MOODY) of books on English literature. Government secretary of the Virgin Islands (1939). Member, National Institute of Arts and Letters. Edited Selected Poems of William Vaughn Moody. All Our Years (1948), is an autobiography.

Lovey Mary. A novel by Alice Hegan Rice, a sequel to MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH.

Low, David (1891-). British cartoonist. Created the character of Colonel BLIMP. His best-known collections of political cartoons are Europe at War (1940) and A Cartoon History of the War (1941).

Low, Seth (1830-1916). American politician and educator. President of Columbia University (1890-1901). As mayor of New York City (1901-1903) he was a civic reformer.

Low, Will Hicok (1853-1932). American illustrator and painter; friend of Robert Louis STEVENSON. His works include murals and stained glass windows.

Low Countries. Holland, Belgium and sometimes Luxembourg; so called from the point of view of other regions of Central Europe which enjoy higher elevation above sea level.

Lowe, Sir Hudson (1769-1844). British soldier; as governor of St. Helena, custodian of Napoleon Bonaparte (1815-1821).

Lowell, Abbott Lawrence (1856-1943). American political scientist and educator. Brother of Amy Lowell and Percival Lowell. President of Harvard University (from 1909), emeritus (from 1933). Author of Governments and Parties in Continental Europe (1896); Conflicts of Principle (1932); etc.

Lowell, Amy Lawrence (1874-1925). American poet and critic, of a wealthy and distinguished New England family which included James Russell Lowell in the 19th century. She is known for her association with and leadership of the movement of IMAGISM, in accordance with which she wrote numerous poems in free verse and "POLYPHONIC PROSE," many showing the influence of Chinese and Japanese poetry. Among her books of poetry are A Dome of Many-Colored Glass (1912); Sword-Blades and Poppy-Seeds (1914); Men, Women, and Ghosts (1916); Can Grande's Castle (1918); Pictures of the Floating World (1919); Legends (1921); Fire-Flower Tablets (1921), a collection of adaptations and translations of Chinese poetry; What's O'Clock? (1925); East Wind (1926); Ballads for Sale (1927). Her works of criticism include: Six French Poets (1915); Tendencies in Modern American Poetry (1921); A Critical Fable (1922), an imitation of J. R. Lowell's A FABLE FOR CRITICS; and John Keats (1925), an exhaustive and sympathetic study of the English poet.

Amy Lowell tended to be celebrated more for her personality than for the artistic value of her work. She was eccentric in behavior, keeping a large troupe of dogs, smoking large black cigars, treating servants and waiters with great arrogance, and using language of extreme frankness. She was interested in painting and sculpture and frequently traveled abroad. A number of the well-known writers of her day attended her literary salons at her home in Brookline, Mass., Sevenels. Cf. Amy Lowell: a Chronicle (1935), by S. Foster Damon.

Lowell, James Russell (1819-1891). American literary critic, poet, and humorist, a professor of French and Spanish at Harvard University after the retirement of LONGFELLOW. He was first editor of the ATLANTIC MONTHLY and was also on the editorial staff of the North American Review, strongly influencing the taste of his time. His verse is ingenious and clever but is not considered among the best of 19th-century America, and his views were conservative except with respect to ABO-

LITIONISM and the Union cause during the Civil War, which he strongly advocated. Among his works are A FABLE FOR CRITICS (1848); The Vision of Sir Launfal (see LAUNFAL; 1848); BIGLOW PAPERS (1846-1848; 1867); Fireside Travels (1864), literary essays; Among My Books (1870, 1876); My Study Windows (1871); Latest Literary Essays and Addresses (1891); The Old English Dramatists (1892). He was minister to Spain (1877-1880) and to England (1880-1885). Amy LOWELL was a descendant.

Lowell's wife, Maria White Lowell (1821-1853), was an ardent abolitionist in her poetry and her convictions and influenced her husband while she was alive.

Lowell, Orson (1871-). American illustrator with a distinctive style of draughtsmanship. Did much illustration of magazine stories and helped illustrate The Court of Boyville by William Allen WHITE; A Bicycle of Cathay by Frank R. STOCKTON; etc.

Lowell, Percival (1855-1916). American astronomer. Brother of Amy LOWELL. Founder of Lowell Observatory near Flagstaff, Arizona (1893-1894). Best known for his studies of the planet Mars. By mathematical calculations he determined the existence of a planet X (finally observed, January, 1930, by C. W. Tombaugh and named Pluto). Author of Mars (1895); Mars as the Abode of Life (1908); The Genesis of the Planets (1916); etc.

lower case. The printer's name for the small letters (minuscules) of a font of type, as opposed to the capitals; these are, in a hand-operated type-setter's "case," on a lower level than the others.

Lower Depths, The. A drama by Maxim GORKI. The characters are the poor and wretched inmates of a fourth-rate boarding house.

Lowes, John Livingston (1867-1945). American scholar and educator. Professor of English at Harvard (from 1918). Author of Convention and Revolt in Poetry (1919); The Road to Xanadu (1927), a unique study of Coleridge; The Art of Geoffrey Chaucer (1931); etc. Responsible (with G. L. Kittredge) for analyses of synonyms in Webster's New International Dictionary.

Lowestoft. Seaport in Suffolk, England, where high-grade pottery, known as Lowestoft ware, was manufactured (1775-1802).

Low Heels and High Heels. Two factions in the Lilliput of Swift's Gulliver's Travels. See GULLIVER, LEMUEL. The High Heels were opposed to the Emperor, who wore low heels.

Lowndes, Mrs. Belloc. Pen name of Marie Adelaide Lowndes, née Belloc (1868-1947).

English historical novelist and mystery story writer. Sister of Hilaire BELLOC. Her mystery novels include The Chink in the Armour (1912); The Lodger (1913), a fictionized presentation of the JACK-THE-RIPPER murders; Who Rides on a Tiger (1936); etc.

Lucia, St. See under SAINTS.

Lucia di Lammermoor. An opera by Donizetti (1835) based on Scott's BRIDE OF LAMMERMOOR. In the opera Lucy Ashton is Lucia, Arthur Bucklaw, Arturo, and Edgar of Ravenswood, Edgardo. Bucklaw does not recover from the wound given him by his bride, as he does in the novel, and Edgardo, instead of being swallowed up in the quicksands, kills himself.

Lucian. The chief character in the Golden Ass of Apuleius (2nd century A.D.), a work which is in part an imitation of the Metamorphoses by LUCIAN. In the Golden Ass, Lucian, changed into an ass, is the personification of the follies and vices of the age.

Lucian (ca. 120-200 A.D.). Greek satirist and humorist, the most brilliant wit of Greek letters under the Roman Empire. A free-thinker, often referred to in his time as "the Blasphemer" and later compared with SWIFT and VOLTAIRE. Author of rhetorical, critical, and biographical works, of romances, dialogues, poems, etc. His Veracious History, a mock narrative of travel, is the archetype of books like Swift's Gulliver's Travels. His Dialogues of the Dead have been called brilliant satires of the living.

Lucifer. The morning star; also a name for SATAN.

proud as Lucifer. Very haughty and overbearing. Lucifer is the name given by Isaiah to Nebuchadnezzar, the proud but ruined king of Babylon: "Take up this proverb against the King of Babylon, and say . . . How art thou fallen, from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning!" (Isa. xiv. 4, 12). The poets declare that Satan, before he was driven out of heaven for his pride, was called Lucifer. Milton introduces him as the demon of Sinful Pride in his PARADISE LOST.

Lucifera. In Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE (I. iv), the typification of pride, luxury, and worldliness, and chief of the Seven Deadly Sins. She lives in a splendid palace, only its foundation is of sand; the door stands always open, and she gives welcome to every comer. Her carriage is drawn by six different animals—viz., an ass, swine, goat, camel, wolf, and lion, on each of which rides one of the Sins, Satan himself being coachman. While here, the Red Cross Knight is attacked by SANSJOY, who would have been slain if Duessa had not rescued him.

Lucile. A narrative poem by Robert, Lord Lytton, published (1860) under the pseudonym of Owen MEREDITH. The heroine, Lucile, is beloved by two bitter rivals, the English Lord Alfred Hargrave and the French Duke of Luvois. She loves Alfred, but misunderstanding keeps them apart. Long years after, Alfred's son and the Duke's niece fall in love, are separated by the old feud but finally reunited through the efforts of Lucile, who has become a nursing nun, under the name of Soeur Seraphine. The book went through more than ninety editions in America.

Lucina. In Roman mythology, the goddess of childbirth; hence, a midwife.

Lucinde. (1) Heroine of Molière's L'Amour médecin (Love As a Doctor), the daughter of SGANARELLE. As she has lost her spirit and appetite, her father sends for four physicians, who all differ as to the nature of the malady and the remedy to be applied. Lisette, her waiting-woman, sends in the meantime for Clitandre, the lover of Lucinde, who comes under the guise of a mock doctor. He tells Sganarelle the disease of the young lady must be reached through the imagination, and prescribes the semblance of a marriage. As his assistant is in reality a notary, the mock marriage turns out to be a real one.

(2) Heroine of Molière's MÉDECIN MALGRÉ LUI (Physician In Spite of Himself), daughter of Géronte. Her father wants her to marry Horace, but as she is in love with Léandre, she pretends to have lost the power of articulate speech, to avoid a marriage which she abhors. SGANARELLE, the faggot-maker, is introduced as a famous dumb doctor, and soon sees the state of affairs. He takes with him Léandre as an apothecary, and the young lady receives a perfect cure.

Lucio. A character in Shakespeare's MEASURE FOR MEASURE, not absolutely bad, but vicious and dissolute. He is "like a wave of the sea, driven by the wind and tossed," and has no abiding principle.

Lucius. One of the mythical kings of Britain, placed as the great-great-grandson of CYMBELINE, and fabled as the first Christian king. He is supposed to have died about 192.

Luck of Roaring Camp, The. A short story by Bret HARTE in his volume by that name (1870). "The Luck," a baby born into a crude California mining camp where his mother is the only woman, soon makes his influence felt and the miners vie with one another in providing for his welfare. His death is very keenly felt by these rough men.

Lucrece, see LUCRETIA, LUCREZIA.

Lucretia. (1) In Roman legend, the daughter of Spurius Lucretius, prefect of Rome, and wife of Tarquinius Collatinus. She was dishonored by Sextus, the son of Tarquinius Superbus. Having avowed her dishonor in the presence of her father, her husband, and their friends Junius Brutus and Valerius, she stabbed herself. The outcome was an insurrection which changed the magistracy of kings to that of consuls. This subject has been dramatized in French by Ant. Vincent Arnault in a tragedy called Lucrece (1792); and by François Ponsard in 1843; in Italian by Alfieri in Brutus; in English by Thomas Heywood, in a tragedy entitled The Rape of Lucrece (1630); by Nathaniel Lee, in Lucius Junius Brutus (17th century); and by John H. Payne, in Brutus or The Fall of Tarquin (1820). Shakespeare selected the same subject for his poem entitled The Rape of Lucrece (1594).

(2) The titular heroine of a romance by BULWER LYTTON.

Lucretius. In full Titus Lucretius Carus (96?-55 B.C.). Roman philosophical poet. Author of the unfinished De Rerum Natura (On the Nature of Things), a didactic poem in six books setting forth a complete cosmology on the basis of the philosophy of Democritus and Epicurus. Committed suicide in a fit of insanity induced, according to popular tradition, by a love-potion given him by his wife.

Lucrezia. See under BORGIA.

Lucrine Lake. A lake in Campania, famed in Roman times for its oysters.

Lucullus. (1) A wealthy Roman (110-57 B.C.) noted for his banquets and self-indulgence. On one occasion, when a superb supper had been prepared, being asked who were to be his guests, he replied, "Lucullus will sup to-night with Lucullus."

(2) A false friend in TIMON OF ATHENS referred to as "thou disease of a friend."

Lucy, St. See under SAINTS.

Lucy, Sir Thomas (1532-1600). English squire and justice of the peace, who prosecuted Shakespeare, according to Nicholas Rowe (1710), for stealing deer from Charlecote Park (1585). Shakespeare retaliated by caricaturing him as Justice Shallow in The Merry Wives of Windsor and 2 Henry IV.

Lucy and Colin. A ballad by Thomas Tickell (1720), called by Goldsmith "the best ballad in our language." Colin was betrothed to Lucy, but forsook her for a bride "thrice as rich as she." Lucy was sad, but was present at the wedding; when Colin saw her, "the damps of death bedewed his brow, and he died." Both were buried in one tomb, and many a hind and plighted maid resorted thither, "to deck it with garlands and true-love knots."

Lud. A mythical king of Britain, founder of London. The account of his reign is given in the history of GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH (1142). He was buried near what is still known as Ludgate.

Lud's Town. London; so called from King Lud.

General Lud. Leader of the distressed and riotous artisans in the manufacturing districts of England, who, in 1811, endeavored to prevent the use of power-looms. His followers were called Luddites.

Ludendorff, Erich Friedrich Wilhelm (1865-1937). German general and politician. Responsible with Hindenburg for defeat of Russia in World War I; brought about collapse of Italy at Caporetto (1917). After German defeat fled to Sweden. Took part in Hitler Beer Hall Putsch (1923). In his last years, adulated and influenced by his wife Mathilde Ludendorff, he led various crusades against the Jews, the Catholics, the Masons, the Protestants, etc. He supported Hitler for a while and wound up as a militant pacifist. Author of several books on World War I.

Ludgate. A gate in the old wall of London, west of St. Paul's Cathedral, so-called possibly from the legendary British King LUD, who was supposedly buried near it. Before Newgate was built it was used as a prison and was destroyed in 1760.

Ludlow Strike. A strike of coal miners (beginning in September, 1913) against the Rockefeller-controlled Colorado Fuel and Iron Company. The fatal "Battle of Ludlow" (April, 1914) caused much loss of life. Federal troops were sent and could not be recalled until early the following year. The strikers were forced to return to work without satisfaction of their demands.

Ludovico. A character in Shakespeare's OTHELLO.

Ludwig, Emil. Originally Emil Ludwig Cohn (1881-1948). German writer, especially known for his numerous biographies. Goethe (1920); Napoleon (1924); Wilhelm II (1925); etc. He also wrote The Nile (1939), The Mediterranean (1942), etc., and (in his younger years) a number of quite effective plays.

Lufbery, Raoul (1885-1918). French-American aviator in World War I; member of Escadrille Lafayette (1916-1918). Seventeen air victories. Killed in combat.

Luftwaffe (German, "air weapon"). The German air force in World War II.

Luggnagg. In Swift's Gulliver's Travels (see GULLIVER, LEMUEL), an island where people live for ever. Swift shows the evil of such a destiny, unless accompanied with eternal youth. See STRULDBRUGS.

Luhan, Mabel Dodge, née Mabel Ganson (1879-). American heiress, known for her salons in Italy and New York which were attended by the leading artists and writers of the early 20th century, and for her association with such personalities as Lincoln STEFFENS, John REED, Max EASTMAN, Carl VAN VECHTEN, and D. H. LAWRENCE. Lawrence spent some time on her estate in Taos, New Mexico, and her book Lorenzo in Taos (1932) is an account of their relations. She also wrote Winter in Taos (1935) and an autobiography, Intimate Memories, in the following volumes: Background (1933); European Experiences (1935); Movers and Shakers (1936); and Edge of Taos Desert (1937). She was married four times, her fourth husband being Tony Luhan, an Indian of the Taos country. She is said to appear as a character in Carl Van Vechten's Peter Whiffle, Max Eastman's Venture, D. H. Lawrence's The Woman Who Rode Away, Gertrude Stein's A Portrait of Mabel Dodge, and other novels; she also posed for a number of well-known painters, including Maurice Sterne, her third husband. During the 1920's, she sponsored the movements of CUBISM and Freudian psycho-analysis. See also FREUD, SIGMUND.

Lukas, Paul (1895-). Hungarian-born actor, associated with the Comedy Theatre in Budapest (1918-1927); also in motion pictures. Starred in Lillian Hellman's play Watch on the Rhine (1941).

Luke. The mean and hypocritical hero of Massinger's comedy The City Madam (1639), the type of the man in whom sudden acquisition of wealth releases his worst qualities.

Luke, Dr., see DR. LUKE OF THE LABRADOR.

Luke, St. See under SAINTS.

Luke Havergal. A poem by Edward Arlington ROBINSON.

Luks, George Benjamin (1867-1933). American painter. Also creator of the comic strip The Yellow Kid in the New York World.

Lully, Jean Baptiste (1632-1687). French composer born in Italy. Founder of the French grand opera. Court composer to Louis XIV (from 1653). Wrote the music to several of MOLIÈRE's comedy-ballets (1664-1670); created the "Académie Royale de Musique" (1672), now the Grand Opéra, in Paris. His operas, originally staged by himself, include Alceste (1674); Proserpine (1680); Amadis de Gaule (1684); etc. They "held the stage for nearly a century, until GLUCK's grander creations overshadowed them." Many of his ballets and masques were performed by members of the court, including himself and occasionally the king.

Lully, Raymond. In Catalan Ramón Lull (1235?-1315). Spanish (Catalan) scholastic and missionary in Mohammedan North Africa. Taught Arabic in the Franciscan monastery at Miramar (1275-1285); author of Blanquerna, a novel dealing with a religious Utopia, containing the famous The Book of the Lover and the Beloved; a system of logic known as Lully's Ars Magna; etc. He was stoned to death near Bougie, North Africa, while preaching the gospel to Mohammedan Arabs.

Lummis, Charles Fletcher (1859-1928). American author and editor, authority on ethnology and folklore of the Pueblo Indians in New Mexico. Author of books on their life and customs; editor of volumes of Pueblo folk tales and old California Spanish songs.

Lumpenproletariat (Ger., "proletariat of scamps"). A word used in the COMMUNIST MANIFESTO to designate the social scum, "that passively rotting mass thrown off by the lowest layers of old society" which, rather than join in a workers' world would probably become "a bribed tool of reactionary intrigue."

Lumpkin, Grace. American novelist of the proletarian school, author of novels dealing chiefly with sharecroppers and mill-workers in the South. These include To Make My Bread (1932), dramatized as Let Freedom Ring (1936); A Sign for Cain (1935); The Wedding (1939). See also PROLETARIAN LITERATURE.

Lumpkin, Tony. In Goldsmith's SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER, a sheepish, mischievous, idle, cunning lout, "with the vices of a man and the follies of a boy," fond of low company, but giving himself the airs of the young squire. He is described (Act I. 2) as "an awkward booby, reared up and spoiled at his mother's apron-string."

Luna, Count of. In Verdi's opera IL TROVATORE, the rival of MANRICO.

Lunacharski, Anatoli Vasilievich (1875-1933). Russian Communist leader and writer. As commissar for education (1917-1929) originator of widespread educational reforms. Author of Religion and Socialism (2 vols.; 1911); Culture and the Working Class (1919).

lunar month. From new moon to new moon, i.e., the time taken by the moon to revolve round the earth, about 29½ days. Popularly, the lunar month is 28 days. In the Jewish and Mohammedan calendars, the lunar month commences at sunset of the day when the new moon is first seen after sunset, and varies in length, being sometimes 29 and sometimes 30 days.

lunar year. Twelve lunar months, i.e., about 354¾ days.

Lundy's Lane. A road leading westward from a point near Niagara Falls. Known as the site of a battle, Battle of Lundy's Lane or of Bridgewater, in which (July 25, 1814) inferior American forces first repulsed but then gave way to a British corps of 4,500 men. American losses 852, British, 878.

Lunsford.

Make children with your tones to run for't,
As bad as Bloodybones or Lunsford.
Butler, Hudibras, iii, 2.

Sir Thomas Lunsford was governor of the Tower, a man of most vindictive temper, and the dread of everyone.

Lunt, Alfred (1893-). Notable American actor. With his wife, Lynn FONTANNE, appeared on the stage in The Guardsman, Elizabeth the Queen, Design for Living, Taming of the Shrew, Idiot's Delight, Amphitryon, The Sea Gull, O Mistress Mine, etc.

Lupercal. (1) A grotto near Rome, sacred to Lupercus. See below.

(2) Now generally Lupercalia. In ancient Rome, an annual festival held on the spot where Romulus and Remus were suckled by the wolf (lupus), on February 15, in honor of Lupercus, the Lycaean Pan (so called because he protected the flocks from wolves). It was on one of these occasions that Antony thrice offered Julius Caesar the crown, and Caesar refused, saying, "Jupiter alone is king of Rome."

You all did see that on the Lupercal,
I thrice presented him a kingly crown,
Which he did thrice refuse.
Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, iii, 2.

Lupescu, Magda (1904?-). Rumanian adventuress, whose original name was probably Wolff. Mistress (later wife) of Prince (later King) Carol. Exerted great political influence. Forced to flee with Carol to Spain (1940) and Cuba (1941).

Lupin, Arsène. See under LEBLANC, MAURICE.

Luria. In Browning's tragedy of that title (1846), a noble Moor employed by the Florentines to lead their army against the Pisans. Luria is entirely successful, but meantime the Florentines have distrusted him and summoned him to trial. Overwhelmed by their ingratitude, he ends his life with poison. He was a historical character of the 15th century.

Lusiad, The (Port., Os Lusíadas). The Portuguese national epic, written by Luis de Camoëns, and published in 1572. It relates the stories of illustrious actions of the Lusians, or Portuguese, of all ages, but deals principally with the exploits of Vasco da Gama and his comrades in their "discovery of India." Gama sailed three times to India. It is the first of these voyages (1497) which is the groundwork of the epic, but its wealth of episode, the constant introduction of mythological "machinery," and the intervention of Bacchus, Venus, and other deities, make it far more than a mere chronicle of a voyage. Bacchus is the guardian power of the Mohammedans, and Venus, or Divine Love, of the Lusians. The fleet first sails to Mozambique, then to Quiloa, then to Melinda in Africa, where the adventurers are hospitably received and provided with a pilot to conduct them to India. In the Indian Ocean, Bacchus tries to destroy the fleet, but the "silver star of Divine Love" calms the sea, and Gama arrives in India in safety.

Lusitania. (1) The ancient name for Portugal.

(2) The name of a passenger ship sunk by a German submarine (May 7, 1915). This event did much to solidify feeling against the German war policy and to make possible the entrance of the United States into World War I.

Luska, Sidney, see Henry HARLAND.

Lutetia (from Lat. lutum, "mud"). The ancient name of Paris, which, in Roman times, was merely a collection of mud hovels. Caesar called it Lutetia Parisiorum (the mud-town of the Parisii), which gives the present name Paris.

Luther, Martin (1483-1546). German religious reformer. Professor of Biblical exegesis at Wittenberg (1511-1546). Nailed to the churchdoor (October 31, 1517) his ninety-five theses questioning the value of indulgences. Publicly defended his position and went further by denying the supremacy of the Pope. He was excommunicated (1520), his writings were burned publicly, and he retaliated by burning in public the bull of excommunication. Appeared before the Diet of Worms (1521) which put him under the ban of the empire. At this occasion he made the famous statement, "There I take my stand. I can do naught else. So help me God, Amen." Hidden at the Wartburg, he wrote his pamphlet On Monastic Vows and translated the New Testament into German (1521; the Old Testament followed, 1532). Returned to Wittenberg and devoted himself to the organization of the new church he had inaugurated. His version of the Bible became the most important factor in the consolidation of the German dialects in a common literary language. His Tischreden (Table-Talk) are a valuable source of historical and theological detail. He wrote and composed or adapted many hymns, the best-known of which is Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott (A mighty fortress is our God).

Luther, Seth (fl. 1817-1846). Pioneer in American labor reform who attacked child labor in the cotton mills.

lutin. A goblin in the folklore of Normandy; similar to the house-spirits of Germany. The name was formerly netun, and is said to come from the Roman sea-god Nepune. When the lutin assumes the form of a horse ready equipped it is called le cheval Bayard.

to lutin. To twist hair into elf-locks. These mischievous urchins are said to tangle the mane of a horse or head of a child so that the hair must be cut off.

Franz Liszt wrote a piano solo, Ronde des Lutins.

Lvov, Aleksei Fëdorovich (1794-1870). Russian composer. Commissioned by Czar (1833) to write the music for the Russian national anthem by Vasilii Zhukovski. Composer of operas, including Undine (1846); etc.

Lycaon. In classical mythology, a king of Arcadia, who, desirous of testing the divine knowledge of Jove, served up human flesh on his table, for which the god changed him into a wolf. His daughter, Callisto, was changed into the constellation the Bear, whence this is sometimes called Lycaonis Arctos.

lycanthropy. Literally, wolfmanhood. See WEREWOLF. The term is also used in psychopathology for a form of insanity in which the patient thinks of himself as a wolf.

Lyceum. A gymnasium on the banks of the Ilissus, in Attica, where Aristotle taught philosophy as he paced the walks.

Lycidas. The name under which Milton celebrates the untimely death of Edward King, Fellow of Christ College, Cambridge, who was drowned in his passage from Chester to Ireland, August 10, 1637. He was the son of Sir John King, secretary for Ireland. In Virgil's Eclogue III, Lycidas is the name of a shepherd, and Milton borrowed the connotations as well as the name. Lycidas is one of the most famous elegies in the English language.

Lycurgus. A legislator, from the legendary Spartan lawgiver of antiquity.

Lydford law. Punish first and try afterwards. Lydford, in the county of Devon, was a fortified town, where were held the courts of the Duchy of Cornwall. Offenders against the statutory laws were confined before trial in a dungeon so loathsome and dreary that the prisoners frequently died before they could be brought to trial.

I oft have heard of Lydford law,
How in the morn they hang and draw,
And sit in judgment later.

A Devonshire Poet

Lydgate, John (ca. 1370-ca. 1451). English poet, a Benedictine monk of Bury-St. Edmund's, believed to have had as patrons such important figures of the time as Duke Humphrey of Gloucester, Henry VI, and the Earl of Warwick. He was an extremely prolific writer, making use principally of allegorical forms. Among his works are: The Court of Sapience, The Temple of Glass, and The Court of Venus, all written ca. 1400-1403 and showing the influence of CHAUCER; Reason and Sensuality (ca. 1403-1412), dealing with social duties and functions; Troy Book (ca. 1420) based on the Historia Troiana of GUIDO DELLE COLONNE;

The Story of Thebes (ca. 1420-1422); The Pilgrimage of the Life of Man (ca. 1424), a translation of a work by Guillaume de Deguileville; and FALLS OF PRINCES (ca. 1430-1438), based on Boccaccio's De Casibus Virorum Illustrium.

Lydgate, Dr. In George Eliot's MIDDLEMARCH, a doctor whose medical ideals gradually became dulled and tainted with a commercial spirit.

Lydian mode. One of the four principal modes of ancient Greek music, a minor scale appropriate to soft pathos.

Lap me in soft Lydian airs.

Milton.

Lygia. In Sienkiewicz' QUO VADIS, a beautiful Christian maiden who undergoes many trials for her faith.

Lying Traveler, The. So Sir John MANDEVILLE, an explorer of the 14th century, has been called.

Lyly, John (1554?-1606). English poet, dramatist, novelist, and prose-writer of the Elizabethan period, one of the "UNIVERSITY WITS." He was associated with the court of Elizabeth for a number of years and served to popularize there both the balanced, elegant, and artificial prose style called Euphuistic (see EUPHUES) and the dramatic form of comedy, which he refined and intellectualized and raised from its former crude state. Lyly, who has been called a novelist and dramatist of social manners, took his plots from Greek and Roman classic literature and transformed them into charming, ornate allegories of court flirtations and intrigues and the political affairs of the time. His most famous works are the romances Euphues: The Anatomy of Wit (1579) and Euphues and His England (1580). His plays include Alexander and Campaspe (1584); ENDIMION (1579), an allegory of the marriage of Lord Leicester to the Countess of Essex, disapproved by Elizabeth; Sappho and Phaon (1584); and Midas (ca. 1588).

Lynceus. One of the ARGONAUTS. He was so sharp-sighted that he could see through the earth, and distinguish objects nine miles off.

lynch law. Mob-law, law administered by private persons. The origin of the term is unknown; old editions of Webster's Dictionary referred it to James Lynch, a farmer of Piedmont, Virginia, saying that, as Piedmont was seven miles from any law court, the neighbors, in 1686, selected him to pass sentence on offenders for the nonce. Other conjectures father the phrase on a certain James Lynch Fitz-Stephen, said to have been warden of Galway in 1526, and to have passed sentence of death on his own son for murder; on Charles Lynch, a Virginian justice of the peace who was indemnified in 1782 for having imprisoned political opponents on his own responsibility, and on Lynche's Creek, South Carolina, where, in 1786, a body of men known as Regulators used to meet and try cases themselves because the regular administration of justice in those parts was lacking.

The term is first recorded in 1817, and is certainly American in origin, though there is an old northern English dialect word linch, meaning to beat or maltreat. In the states of the South in the U.S., lynch law came to be widely invoked in the punishment of Negroes accused or suspected of committing crimes. It is occasionally referred to by re-personification as Judge Lynch.

Lynd, Robert (1879-). Irish journalist and man of letters; his wife, Sylvia Lynd (1888-), English novelist and poet.

Lynd, Robert Staughton (1892-). American professor of sociology at Columbia University. With his wife wrote comprehensive sociological studies of a typical small Middle Western city (Muncie, Indiana): Middletown (1929); Middletown in Transition (1937); etc.

Lyndall. The heroine of Olive Schreiner's STORY OF AN AFRICAN FARM.

Lyndon, Barry, see BARRY LYNDON.

Countess Lyndon. The wife of BARRY LYNDON.

Lynette or Linet. A heroine of Arthurian romance (the first spelling is Tennyson's, the second Malory's), whose story Tennyson has told in his GARETH AND LYNETTE. Tennyson, however, makes a radical departure from the old romances by marrying Gareth to Lynette instead of her sister Lyonors or Liones.

Tennyson describes Lynette thus:

A damsel of high lineage; and a brow
May-blossom; and a cheek of apple-blossom;
Hawk-eyes; and lightly was her tender nose,
Tip-tilted like the petal of a flower.

Lyon, Harris Merton (1883-1916). American short-story writer. Sardonic: Sixteen Sketches (1908); Graphics (1913), sixteen stories published by William Marion REEDY.

Lyon, Rufus. A lovable old Independent clergyman in George Eliot's FELIX HOLT THE RADICAL, said to have been drawn from Rev. Francis Franklin, a Baptist minister, the pastor of the Cow Lane Chapel in Coventry.

At the first glance, every one thought him a very odd-looking rusty old man; the free-school boys often hooted after him and called him "Revelations"; and to many respectable church people old Lyon's little legs and large head seemed to make Dissent additionally preposterous. But he was too shortsighted to notice those who tittered at him—too absent from the world of small facts and petty impulses in which titters live.—Ch. IV.

Esther Lyon. Rufus Lyon's adopted daughter, the heroine of the novel.

Lyonors or Liones. A heroine of Arthurian romance (the first spelling is Tennyson's, the second Malory's) who was held captive in Castle Perilous by several knights until rescued by GARETH. See also LYNETTE.

Lyonnesse. "That sweet land of Lyonnesse"—a tract of land fabled to stretch between the Land's End and the Scilly Isles, now submerged full "forty fathoms under water." ARTHUR came from this mythical country. The battle of Lyonnesse was the "last great battle of the West," and the scene of the final conflict between Arthur and Sir Modred. For variant spellings, see under LEONESSE; LIONES.

Lyons, Eugene (1898-). Russian-born American journalist and author. In his earlier years, in sympathy with the radical labor movement. Mustered world protest (1921-1922) against the conviction of Sacco and Vanzetti. Associated with Soviet news agencies. Became disillusioned with Soviet Russia. Editor American Mercury (1939-1944). Author of Assignment in Utopia (1937); Stalin: Czar of All the Russias (1940); The Red Decade (1941); etc. The Red Decade was such a "detailed invective" as to bring a law suit against Lyons and his publisher from Corliss LAMONT, settled out of court (1942) to Mr. Lamont's satisfaction. In 1948 he published a flattering biography of Herbert HOOVER.

Lyrical Ballads. A volume of poems by S. T. COLERIDGE and William WORDSWORTH, first published in 1798, in a second edition in 1800, and in a third in 1802. It was the first important publication of the poetry of the new romantic period in English literature, and is considered one of the landmarks of literature. Wordsworth's contributions were his simple poems of country scenes and country people, written in plain language and style, and his Tintern Abbey. Coleridge contributed principally The Rime of the Ancient Mariner. See ANCIENT MARINER. The second edition of Lyrical Ballads contains a preface by Wordsworth explaining his theory of poetry.

Lysander (died 395 B.C.). Spartan naval and military commander.

Some talk of Alexander
And some of Hercules,
Of Hector and Lysander
And such great names as these.

British Grenadiers

Lysander. In Shakespeare's MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, a young Athenian, in love with Hermia, daughter of Egeus.

Lysistrata. The title and heroine of a comedy by ARISTOPHANES (ca. 415 B.C.), dealing with an effective women's peace organization. In the twenty-first year of the Peloponnesian War Lysistrata persuades the wives of Athens to shut themselves up in the Acropolis away from their husbands until peace shall be concluded. She has the satisfaction of dictating the terms. There is a modern version by Gilbert SELDES.

Lys rouge, Le, see RED LILY.

Lytton, Edward George Earle Lytton Bulwer-Lytton, 1st Baron (1803-1873). English novelist, short-story writer, poet, and playwright. His best-known novels are The Last Days of Pompeii; EUGENE ARAM; RIENZI, ERNEST MALTRAVERS; The Last of the Barons, HAROLD, the Last of the Saxon Kings, KENELM CHILLINGLY; and The Caxtons. His dramas are THE LADY OF LYONS; RICHELIEU; and Money. His poem The New Timon jeered at Tennyson who successfully replied to it.

Maat. Egyptian goddess of truth, justice, law. Associated with Ra and Thoth. Her symbol is a feather which appears in judgment scenes balanced in the scales against a heart.

Mab (perhaps the Welsh mab, "a baby"). In 15th-century English and Welsh legend, Queen of the fairies, an honor later given to Titania. She is described in Shakespeare's ROMEO AND JULIET as the "fairies' midwife"—i.e., employed by the fairies as midwife to deliver man's brain of dreams. Excellent descriptions of Mab are given by Shakespeare (Romeo and Juliet, i. 4), by Ben Jonson, by Herrick, and by Drayton in Nymphidia.

Queen Mab. A speculative poem by Shelley (1810) written when he was about eighteen. Ianthe falls asleep, visits the court of Queen Mab in her dreams and hears of the scheme of the universe from AHAESVNERUS, the Wandering Jew.

Mabbott, Thomas Ollive (1898-). American scholar and leading authority on Poe.

Mabie, Hamilton Wright (1845?-1916). American editor and critic. Frank Moore COLBY said of him that he "conducted young women into the suburbs of literature and left them there."

Mabinogion. A series of Welsh tales, chiefly related to ARTHUR and the ROUND TABLE. These tales were long inaccessible because of the difficulties in the language, but are now available. Many interesting variations from the legends of Arthur and his court as given in Malory's Morte d'Arthur, etc., are to be found in the Welsh version.

Mac. In Dos Passos' U.S.A. See McCREARY, FAINY.

Macaire, Robert. The typical villain of French comedy; from the play of this name (a sequel to L'Auberge des Adrets) by Frédéric Lemaître and Benjamin Antier (1834). Macaire is le type de la perversité, de l'impudence, de la friponnerie audacieuse, le héros fanfaron du vol et de l'assassinat.

Macaire is the name of the murderer of Aubrey de Montdidier in a famous old French legend. He is brought to justice by the sagacity of Aubrey's dog, Dragon, the Dog of MONTARGIS, who shows such an aversion to Macaire that suspicion is aroused, and the man and dog are pitted to single combat. The result is fatal to the man, who dies confessing his guilt.

McAllister, Samuel Ward (1827-1895). American socialite. Arbiter of New York and Newport society. Introduced the term "the Four Hundred" for the crème de la crème of New York's social register.

Macapa, Maria. In Frank Norris's McTEAGUE, an insane charwoman who is murdered by ZERKOW through greed.

macaroni (Ital. maccherone). A coxcomb. The word is derived from the Macaroni Club, instituted in London about 1760 by a set of flashy men who had traveled in Italy, and introduced at Almack's subscription table the new-fashioned Italian food, macaroni. The Macaronies were the most exquisite fops that ever disgraced the name of man; vicious, insolent, fond of gambling, drinking, and dueling, they were (ca. 1773) the curse of Vauxhall Gardens.

There is a tradition that an American regiment raised in Maryland during the War of Independence was called The Macaronies from its showy uniform. This presumably explains the allusion in the American song, Yankee Doodle:

Yankee Doodle went to town
A-riding on a pony
Stuck a feather in his hat
And called it macaroni.

macaronic Latin. Dog LATIN, modern words with Latin endings, or a mixture of Latin and some modern language. From the Italian macheroni (macaroni), originally a medley or mixture of coarse meal, eggs, and cheese. The law pleadings of G. Steevens, as Daniel v. Dishclout and Bullum v. Boatum, are excellent examples.

macaronic verse. Verses in which foreign words are ludicrously distorted and jumbled together, as in Porson's lines on the threatened invasion of England by Napoleon or J. A. Morgan's "translation" of Canning's The Elderly Gentleman, the first two verses of which are—

Prope ripam fluvii solus
A senex silently sat
Super caput ecce his wig
Et wig super, ecce his hat
Blew Zephyrus alte, acerbus,
Dum elderly gentleman sat;
Et a capite took up quite torve
Et in rivum projectit his hat.

It seems to have been originated by Odaxius of Padua (born ca. 1450), but was popularized by his pupil, Teofilo Folengo (Merlinus Coccaius), a Mantuan monk of noble family, who published a book entitled Liber Macaronicorum, a poetical rhapsody made up of words of different languages, and treating of "pleasant matters" (1520). A. Cunningham in 1801 published Delectus Macaronicorum Carminum, a history of macaronic poetry.

MacArthur, Charles (1895-). American playwright. Married Helen HAYES. Wrote with Ben Hecht The Front Page (1928; also adapted for moving picture) and the scenario for Wuthering Heights.

Macaulay, Fannie (1863-1941). American author. The Lady of the Decoration (1906); etc. Pseudonym Frances Little.

Macaulay, Rose (1889?-). English novelist. The satirical novel Pottersm (1920) is a sort of English Babbitt. Told by an Idiot (1923) and Staying with Relations (1930) are two other ironic and amusing books out of many.

Macaulay, Thomas Babington (1800-1859). English statesman, poet, historian, essayist, and biographer, best-known for his History of England (1855, 1859), a work extremely popular in his day, marked by a colorful style and vivid presentation. His LAYS OF ANCIENT ROME (1842), narrative poems dealing with Roman heroes, were also very popular with the public. He wrote in addition a number of well-known historical and biographical essays under the guise of book reviews for the Edinburgh Review and a series of biographies of literary figures for the Encyclopaedia Britannica. Macaulay was the son of a philanthropist, believed in the democratic ballot and other popular Victorian ideas of reform, and was elected a Whig representative in the House of Commons in 1830, 1839, and 1852. He was also legal adviser to the Supreme Council of India, Secretary of War in the English cabinet, and Lord Rector of Glasgow, and in 1857 was made Baron Macaulay of Rothley. Critics usually oppose Macaulay to Thomas CARLYLE, Matthew ARNOLD, and John RUSKIN as an ardent enthusiast for the Victorian age in England, rather than a critic of its policies and values.

Macaulay's schoolboy. An imaginary schoolboy. The phrase "Every schoolboy knows" was so frequently used by T. B. Macaulay to refute and put to shame his opponents that the boy became proverbial.

Macaulay's New Zealander. In Macaulay's essay on von Ranke's History of the Popes, a man from "down under" visiting London in the distant future when it is a ruined city.

Macbeth. A tragedy by Shakespeare (ca. 1606), based on an episode in Scottish history as recorded in HOLINSHED's Chronicles. The victorious general Macbeth is hailed by three mysterious witches as thane of Glamis, thane of Cawdor (to be) and future King of Scotland. To his companion, Banquo, the witches promise that his children shall be kings. Macbeth is soon made thane of Cawdor, and, urged by his own and Lady Macbeth's ambition, he murders King Duncan, is proclaimed king and accomplishes the murder of Banquo. Banquo's ghost appears at a great banquet unseen by any but Macbeth, and one disaster now follows another. Lady Macbeth, tormented by conscience, walks in her sleep, washing from her hands imaginary blood stains, and finally takes her own life. Macbeth had been promised by the witches that none of woman born should kill him and that he should not die till Birnam Wood removed to Dunsinane. He is finally slain in battle by MACDUFF, who was "from his mother's womb untimely ripped"; as for the moving wood, the soldiers of Macduff, in their march to Dunsinane, are commanded to carry boughs of the forest before them, to conceal their numbers. Duncan's son Malcolm is proclaimed king.

Maccabaeus. The surname given to Judas (the central figure in the struggle for Jewish independence, about 170-160 B. C.), third son of Mattathias, the Hasmonaeus, and hence to his family or clan. LONGFELLOW wrote a poem called Judas Maccabaeus.

Maccabees, The. The family of Jewish heroes, descended from Mattathias the Hasmonaeus (see under MACCABAEUS) and his five sons, John, Simon, Judas, Eleazar and Jonathan, which delivered its race from the persecutions of the Syrian king Antiochus Epiphanes (175-164 B. C.), and established a line of priest-kings which lasted till supplanted by Herod in 40 B. C. Their exploits are told in the two Books of the Maccabees, the last books in the Apocrypha.

McCarthy, Justin Huntly (1861-1936). Son of English writer and politician. Playwright, novelist, and historian. Best-known for his novel If I Were King (1901; also adapted by him for the stage) which is concerned with François VILLON. His wife was Cissie LOFTUS.

McFingal. An early American satire in verse by John TRUMBULL. The first canto was published shortly after Lexington and Concord in 1775 and greatly aided the Revolutionary cause. "Great Squire McFingal" is a Scotch-American Tory who exercises his oracular talents at a New England town meeting. After he is tarred and feathered, he repents his sins and prophesies final victory for the Whigs.

Thus stored with intellectual riches
Skilled was our Squire in making speeches,
Where strength of brain united centers
With strength of lungs surpassing Stentor's.

MacFlecknoe. In Dryden's famous satire so called (1682), he is meant for Thomas Shadwell, who was promoted to the office of poet laureate. The design of Dryden's poem is to represent the inauguration of one dullard as successor of another in the monarchy of nonsense. Flecknoe was an Irish priest and hackney poet of no reputation, and Mac is Celtic for son; MacFlecknoe, therefore, means the son of the poet so named. Flecknoe, seeking for a successor to his own dullness, selects Shadwell to bear his mantle.

Shadwell alone my perfect image bears,
Mature in dullness from his tender years; . . .
The rest to some faint meaning make pretence,
But Shadwell never deviates into sense.

MacFlecknoe.

M'Flimsey, Miss Flora. The heroine of W. A. Butler's humorous poem NOTHING TO WEAR.

MacGill, Patrick (1890-). Irish poet and novelist. Best-known for Songs of the Dead End.

Macheath, Captain. A highwayman, hero of The Beggar's Opera, by John GAY. He is a fine, gay, bold-faced and dissolute ruffian, game to the very last. He is married to Polly PEACHUM, but finds himself dreadfully embarrassed between Polly, his wife, and Lucy LOCKIT to whom he has promised marriage. Betrayed by eight women at a drinking bout, the Captain is lodged in Newgate, but Lucy effects his escape. He is recaptured, tried, and condemned to death; upon being reprieved, he acknowledges Polly to be his wife, and promises to remain constant to her in the future.

Machen, Arthur (1863-1947). Welsh novelist and essayist, noted as master of the ghostly and supernatural. Early London career wretched. His first "romance of the soul," The Hill of Dreams, published 10 years after he wrote it, has become practically a classic. His work is "caviar to the general."

Machiavelli, Niccolò (1469-1527). The celebrated Florentine statesman, author of Il

Principe, whose name was long used as an epithet or synonym for an unscrupulous politician. Political cunning and overreaching by diplomacy and intrigue came to be known as Machiavellianism or Machiavellism. The general trend of his treatise, Il Principe (The Prince) (1513), is to show that rulers may resort to any treachery and artifice to uphold their arbitrary power, and whatever dishonorable acts princes may indulge in are fully set off by the insubordination of their subjects.

In the 20th century, some critics began to react against the traditional conception of Machiavelli, inherited from the Elizabethan period, which presented him as a diabolical villain, and to interpret him instead as an early political idealist, seeking to unify Italy by appealing to the ambitions of the Renaissance princes, especially of the Medici family.

Somerset Maugham's novel, Then and Now (1946), is based on Machiavelli's comedy, The Mandrake, the plot of which is treated by Maugham as an incident in Machiavelli's life. the Imperial Machiavelli. Tiberius, the Roman emperor (42 B.C.–37 A.D.).

MacLeish, Archibald (1892-). American poet, influenced successively by a number of figures and movements in the poetry of his lifetime, including T. S. Eliot, Ezra Pound, St.-J. Perse, and the writers of proletarian sympathies. See PROLETARIAN LITERATURE; MARXISM IN LITERATURE. As an expatriate in France during the 1920's he wrote disillusioned lyrics, considered his best work, expressing a hope for salvation in love and beauty. Later he became preoccupied with the wars and the social customs of ancient, primitive civilizations. After his return to the U.S. he was influenced by the revolutionary and reform movements of the time and criticized in his poetry the society of his day, later coming to affirm faith in the future of America. These later poems, which achieved a measure of popularity, are considered by critics to be inferior to his earlier work, tending to be formulaized. Among his works are Tower of Ivory (1917); The Happy Marriage (1924); The Pot of Earth (1925); Nobodaddy (1926), a play; Streets in the Moon (1926); The Hamlet of A. MacLeish (1928); New Found Land (1930); CONQUISTADOR (1932), winner of the Pulitzer prize in 1932; Frescoes for Mr. Rockefeller's City (1933); Union Pacific (1934), a ballet; Panic (1935), a play; Public Speech (1936); The Fall of the City (1937) and Air Raid (1938), radio plays; The Land of the Free (1938); America Was Promises (1939).

MacLeish was one of the editors of the magazine FORTUNE. In 1939 he was appointed U.S. Librarian of Congress, and during the early years of World II he was for a time director of the Office of Facts and Figures, a government information agency. After his official appointments he published essays on public issues, including The Irresponsibles (1940), an attack on the disillusioned writers of the 1920's for shirking political responsibility; The American Cause (1941); and A Time to Speak (1941), a collection of his previous prose writings.

MacLennan, (John) Hugh (1907-). Canadian novelist. Barometer Rising (1941); Two Solitudes (1945); The Precipice (1948).

MacLeod, Fiona. Pseudonym of William SHARP.

McLeod, Irene Rutherford (1891-). English poet. Author of Songs to Save a Soul (1915); etc.

MacMahon, Comte Marie Edme Patrice Maurice de (1808-1893). Marshal of France (1859) and second president of the Third Republic (1873-1879). Successful as commander in three wars, but defeated by the Prussians in the fourth (1870).

MacManus, Seumas (1869-). Irish poet, novelist, and playwright.

MacMonnies, Frederick William (1863-1937). American sculptor. Examples of his work in City Hall Park, New York; Boston Public Library; Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York; etc.

MacNeice, Frederick Louis (1907-). Irish-born English poet, associated with W. H. Auden, Stephen Spender, C. Day-Lewis, and Christopher Isherwood during the 1930's, but not as definitely committed to Marxist (see MARXISM) sympathies and theories as were the first three members of the group at that time. His poetry is marked by a greater preoccupation with psychological problems than that of his associates, and by a skillful use of the symbols of 20th-century British life in the manner of Auden. Occasionally his work suggests the influence of his studies of Latin and Greek classic literature. His books include Blind Fireworks (1929); Roundabout Way (1932), published under the pseudonym of Louis Malone; Out of the Picture (1937), a play; Letters from Iceland (1937), travel sketches in verse, written in collaboration with W. H. Auden; The Earth Compels (1938); I Crossed the Minch (1938), travel sketches of the Hebrides Islands; Modern Poetry (1938), a critical essay; Autumn Journal (1939); Poems, 1925-1940 (1940); The Poetry of W. B. Yeats (1941), criticism.

McNeile, Herman Cyril (1888-1937). English writer of crime and adventure fiction, under the pseudonym "Sapper." Creator of Bulldog Drummond, who was later impersonated on the stage by Sir Gerald du MAURIER in London and by A. E. Matthews in New York.

Macpherson, James (1736-1796). Scotch poet, known for the poems dealing with the epic deeds of ancient Gaelic tribes which he published as translations from old works of OSSIAN collected in the Scotch Highlands, although they were actually a literary hoax. See also CHATTERTON, THOMAS. Fragments of Ancient Poetry Collected in the Highlands (1760), FINGAL (1762), and Tesmara (1763) aroused a great deal of interest, and the author collected funds from a number of well-known literary figures to make a tour through the Highlands in search of more epic material. The London critics, especially Samuel JOHNSON, soon became suspicious, however, and Macpherson ceased making further Ossianic "discoveries." These pseudo-Gaelic works are actually written in a poetic prose and are marked by rhapsodic nature descriptions and an atmosphere of vague mystery and melancholy. Although critics do not consider them to be of much literary value, they had an important influence on the development of ROMANTICISM in France and Germany as it appeared in such figures as CHATEAUBRIAND, GOETHE, and SCHILLER.

Macpherson's later writing was historical and political, including Introduction to the History of Great Britain (1771); History of Great Britain from the Restoration to the Accession of the House of Hanover (1775); and Original Papers, Containing the Secret History of Great Britain (1775). All three showed a bias against Britain and the ruling house of the time. For a while, the author was secretary to the governor of Florida, in the U.S., and in the last years of his life held a number of comfortable political sinecures at home.

Macquart, Nana. The heroine of Zola's Nana. Nana's mother Gervaise and other of the Macquarts and their offspring appear in other novels of the ROUGON-MACQUART series, which deals with the complete history of the family.

Macready, William Charles (1793-1873). English tragedian, well known for his interpretation of Shakespearean rôles. Manager, Covent Garden Theatre (1837-1839), producing plays by Shakespeare, Browning, and Bulwer-Lytton; etc.

Macreons. The island of the Macreons in Rabelais' GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL (Bk. IV. ch. xxv), has been taken by some commentators—rather unconvincingly—to be intended for Great Britain. The word is Greek, and means long-lived. Rabelais describes a terrible storm at sea (possibly a typification of the persecutions of the Reformers), in which Pantagruel and his fleet are tempest-tossed but contrive to enter one of the harbors of this island, which is so called because no one is put to death there for his religious opinions. It is full of antique ruins, which may be taken as a symbol of decayed Popery and ancient superstitions.

MacSwiney, Terence (1879-1920). Irish nationalist and revolutionary; identified with Sinn Féin from its beginning; leader in Easter Rebellion (1916); elected Lord Mayor of Cork. Died of starvation on hunger strike in Brixton Jail in London (October 25, 1920).

MacSycophant, Sir Pertinax. In Macklin's comedy The Man of the World (1764), the hot-headed, ambitious father of Charles Egerton. His love for Scotland is very great, and he is continually quarreling with his family because they do not hold his country in sufficient reverence.

McTeague. A novel by Frank NORRIS (1899), dealing with a dentist, McTeague by name, who is prevented from carrying on his practice by an enemy's having informed the authorities of his lack of a license and diploma. Greed comes to dominate his life, and he murders his wife, Trina, while stealing her savings, which were originally based on a lottery prize. He tries to escape across Death Valley and is pursued by Marcus Schouler, Trina's cousin and the man responsible for his being prohibited from practicing dentistry. The two men fight, and Schouler is killed, but since McTeague is handcuffed to the corpse he is faced with a horrible death from thirst and madness in the desert. A fine silent motion picture, Greed, was based on the novel. See also MACAPA, MARIA; ZERKOW.

MacTurk, Captain Mungo or Hector. (1) In Scott's ST. RONAN'S WELL, "the man of peace."

(2) A seaman in stories by Cutcliffe HYNÉ.

Macy, John Albert (1877-1932). American critic and biographer. Married Anne Sullivan, Helen Keller's companion, and edited Helen Keller's Story of My Life (1903). Joined Socialist party (1911). Literary editor, Boston Her- ald (1913-1914) and The Nation (1922-1923). Literary adviser to William Morrow & Co. Teacher at the Rand School of Social Science. His best-known book is The Spirit of American Literature (1913).

Mad.

Mad as a hatter. The probable origin of this phrase is "Mad as an adder" (A.S. naeddre, A.S. atter being "poison"), but evidence is wanting. It was popularized by Lewis CARROLL (Alice in Wonderland, 1865), but was well known earlier, and was used by THACKERAY (Pendennis, Ch. x) in 1849.

mad as a March hare, see under HARE.

the Mad Cavalier. Prince Rupert (1619-1682), noted for his rash courage and impatience of control.

Madame la Duchesse. Wife of Henri-Jules de Bourbon, eldest son of Prince de Condé.

Madame la Princesse. Wife of the Prince de Condé, and natural daughter of Louis XIV. See MONSIEUR.

Madame Bovary. A novel by FLAUBERT (1856), tracing with grim, realistic detail the affairs of Emma BOVARY, wife of a good-hearted but stupid village doctor. Unhappy in her marriage, finding her pathetic dreams of romantic love unfulfilled, she has one lover, then another, piles up enormous debts, and, when she can see no other way out, commits suicide. Madame Bovary exerted a great influence as one of the first novels of the realistic school, and is considered one of the masterpieces of 19th-century literature.

Madame Butterfly. An opera by Giacomo PUCCINI (1904), based on a drama of the same title by Belasco and Long. The scene is laid in Japan. Lieutenant Pinkerton, U.S.N., contracts a temporary "Japanese marriage" with the gay and affectionate Cho-Cho-San, who thus becomes Madame Butterfly. She, on her part, believing the marriage a permanent one, cuts herself off from her religion and her people. Pinkerton is recalled to America and later returns with an American wife. The American consul, Sharpless, has vainly tried to fulfill Pinkerton's request and break the news to the trusting Cho-Cho-San, but she stands the shock bravely, plays her rôle with dignity and agrees to give her child into Mrs. Pinkerton's care. On Mrs. Pinkerton's departure, she kills herself with her father's sword.

Madame Chrysanthème. A novel by Pierre LOTI (1887), dealing with the love life of a French naval officer and a Japanese geisha.

Madame de Treymes. Title of a novelette by Edith WHARTON.

Madame Sand. Title of a comedy by Philip MOELLER (1917).

Madame Sans Gêne. (Mistress Don't Care.) A drama by SARDOU and MOREAU (later made into an opera by Giordano), with Napoleon as its central character. The heroine is Caterina Hubscher, a spirited French washwoman, and the first act takes place in her laundry before the French Revolution. Nineteen years later the laundress has become the Duchess of Danzig, and she and her bourgeois friends are prominent at Napoleon's court. Of them all, Madame Sans Gêne alone retains and rejoices in her old blunt crudities, and Napoleon finally orders her to divorce her husband and retire from court. With all the old fire and spirit she reminds him of the days of military struggle and triumph which she shared, and flaunts before him his unpaid laundry bill of bygone years, at which the Emperor relents and reinstates her.

The real Madame Sans Gêne was Marie Therese Figueur (1774-1861), who fought through all the Napoleonic wars, and later, by her marriage to Marshal Lefebvre, became the Duchess of Danzig.

Madame Tussaud's, see TUSSAUD, Mme MARIE GROSHOLTZ.

Mad Anthony. A sobriquet of General Anthony WAYNE.

Madariaga y Rojo, Salvador de (1886-). Spanish publicist and literary critic. Honorary M.A. from Oxford (1928). Professor of Spanish studies at Oxford. Mad Mullah. Mohammed ibn Abdullah (died 1920), a Somali dervish and religious agitator against the British (1902-1920).

Madog ab Owain Gwynedd. A legendary Welsh prince, youngest son of Owain Gwynedd, king of North Wales, who died in 1169. According to tradition, he sailed to America, and established a colony on the southern branches of the Missouri. About the same time the Aztecs forsook Aztlan, under the guidance of Yuhidthiton, and founded the empire called Mexico, in honor of Mexitli, their tutelary god. Southey's poem, Madoc (1805), harmonizes these two events. In the poem Madog is called "The Perfect Prince," "The Lord of Ocean," and is the very beau-ideal of a hero.

Mador, Sir. In Arthurian legend, the Scottish knight slain in single combat by Sir LAUNCELOT of the Lake in defense of the reputation of Queen Guinevere.

Madras House, The. A play by Harley GRANVILLE-BARKER (Eng., 1910). The Madras House is a great business concern, and the characters are the various members of the family that controls it and the employees to whom it provides a means of livelihood. Philip Madras and his wife, Jessica, the central figures, represent the new generation.

Maeonides or the Maeonian Poet. HOMER, either because he was the son of Maeon, or because he was born in Maeonia (Asia Minor).

Maerlant, Jacob van (1235?-after 1291). Flemish poet. Often called "the father of Dutch poets."

Maestricht. Capital of the province of Limburg, Holland. When Germany invaded the Lowlands in 1940, the capture of Maestricht and the breaking of the Maestricht-Hasselt line exposed all of Belgium.

maestro (Ital., "master"). Term used to refer to a master in any art in which Italians have excelled, especially in music, as a composer, conductor, eminent teacher, etc.

Maeterlinck, Maurice (1862-1949). Belgian poet and dramatist, in his early career influenced by the school of SYMBOLISM and known for the delicate fantasy, mystery, and dreamy melancholy of his most famous plays, which deal chiefly with historical and legendary material and make wide use of moral and psychological symbolism. Among his works are La Princesse Maleine (1889); Les Aveugles (The Sightless; 1890); ARIANE ET BARBE BLEU; PELLÉAS ET MÉLISANDE (1892), later set to music by Claude DEBUSSY and produced as an opera; Aglavaine et Sélysette (1896); SISTER BEATRICE (Soeur Béatrice; 1901); MONNA VANNA (1902); THE BLUE BIRD (L'Oiseau bleu; 1909), his most famous work; Mary Magdalene (see under SAINTS; 1909); La Mort (Death) (1913); Les Fiançailles (Betrothal) (1918); The Burgomaster of Stilemonde (1918); The Miracle of St. Anthony (1919); The Cloud that Lifted (1923); The Power of the Dead (1923). Maeterlinck also wrote essays on Shakespeare, and, in later life, a number on nature and death, including The Life of the Bee (1901); Life and Flowers (1907); The Life of the Ant (1930); Before the Great Silence (Avant le Grand silence; 1934); La Grande porte (1939); L'Autre monde (1942). He was also interested in astrology and carefully recorded and catalogued his dreams.

Maffia or Mafia (It.). In Sicily and hence elsewhere, the name of a supposed or real secret society of Italian members prone to acts of violence, such as murder, blackmail, etc. The word maffia (of unknown origin) signifies in Sicily hostility to the law implying refusal to bear witness to crimes, etc. See also CAMORRA.

maffick. To celebrate an event, especially an occasion of national rejoicing, with wild and extravagant exuberance. From the uproarious scenes and unrestrained exultation that took place in London on the night of May 18, 1900, when the news of the relief of the South African town of Mafeking (besieged by the Boers since the previous November) became known.

Magda. (1) Heinrich's forsaken wife in Hauptmann's drama THE SUNKEN BELL.

(2) Heroine of Magda (Die Heimat) by Sudermann (Ger., 1893).

Magdalene. An asylum for the reclaiming of prostitutes; so called from Mary Magdalene or Mary of Magdala, "out of whom He had cast seven devils" (Mark xvi. 9). See St. Mary Magdalene under SAINTS.

Magellan, Ferdinand. In Portuguese Fernando de Magalhães (1480?-1521). Portuguese navigator. Emperor Charles V allowed him to set sail for the Spice Islands (Moluccas) by the western route. Sailed from Spain (September 20, 1519) with five ships, passed through what is now known as the Strait of Magellan (October 21–November 28, 1520), discovered the Philippines, and was killed (April, 1521) by treacherous natives. One of his vessels, the Concepción under Juan Sebastián del Cano, completed the circumnavigation of the globe after a voyage of three years.

Maggie: A Girl of the Streets. A novel by Stephen CRANE, published privately in 1893 under the name of Johnston Smith, issued to the public in 1896. It deals with the life of Maggie Johnson, daughter of a brutal father and drunken mother in the slums of New York City. Maggie goes to work in a collar factory, falls in love with Pete, a bartender who is a friend of her brother Jimmie, and is seduced by him. Her mother disowns her, she becomes a prostitute, and in despair she finally kills herself.

Magi (Lat., pl. of magus). Literally "wise men"; specifically, the Three Wise Men of the East who brought gifts to the infant Savior. Tradition calls them Melchior, Gaspar, and Balthazar, three kings of the East. The first offered gold, the emblem of royalty; the second, frankincense, in token of divinity; and the third, myrrh, in prophetic allusion to the persecution unto death which awaited the "Man of Sorrows."

Melchior means "king of light," Gaspar, or Caspar "the white one," Balthazar, "the lord of treasures."

Medieval legend calls them the Three Kings of Cologne, and the Cathedral there claims their relics. They are commemorated on January 2, 3, and 4, and particularly at the Feast of the Epiphany.

Henry Van Dyke in his story The Other Wise Man published in The Blue Flower (Am., 1902) tells of a fourth wise man, Artaban, who stopped at crucial moments to respond to appeals for help and so failed to reach his goal. The tale is a modern addition to the old legend.

Among the ancient Medes and Persians the Magi were members of a priestly caste credited with great occult powers, and in Camoëns' LUSIAD the term denotes the Indian Brahmins.

Magic. A play by Gilbert K. CHESTERTON (1913).

Magic Flute, The (Die Zauberflöte). An opera by MOZART (1791), with a libretto by Emmanuel Schikaneder. The "flute" was bestowed by the Powers of Darkness, and has the power of inspiring love. Unless purified, love is only lust, but, being purified by the Powers of Light, it subserves the holiest purposes. PAMINA AND TAMINO are guided by it through all worldly dangers to the knowledge of Divine Truth, or the mysteries of Isis.

Magic Mountain, The. English translation of Der Zauberberg, a symbolic novel by Thomas MANN and the author's most famous work, published in 1924. In it, Hans CASTORP comes to HAUS BERGHOF, a tuberculosis sanatorium in the Swiss Alps, to visit his cousin, Joachim ZIEMSEN for three weeks, but stays seven years. He comes under the influence of the diseased atmosphere of the sanatorium, which is interpreted as a symbol of pure aestheticism, and falls in love with Clavdia CHAUCHAT, a beautiful and mysterious Russian. SETTEMBRINI, symbolizing humanism and political liberalism, tries to recall to Hans's mind his duty to society and thereby rescue him from the fatal debility of the mountain; he also carries on long and eloquent philosophic arguments with his intellectual opponent, the schoolmaster Leo NAPHTA. Hans, however, is held under the spell of the mountain and Claudia, his thralldom being symbolized strikingly by a scene in which he wanders alone among the crags, becomes fascinated by the whiteness and silence of the snow, and finds he has lost his way. Mynheer PEEPERKORN, a former Dutch planter, regarded as representing animal sensuality, comes to the sanatorium, and his personality immediately overshadows both Naphta and Settembrini. He tends to influence Hans towards a return to the normal and the human, but, finding himself weakened in physical vigor by oncoming old age, he commits suicide, and his influence is removed. Claudia leaves the sanatorium soon after this event, and Hans falls into a stupor, interested only in operating a phonograph and listening to its music; this is seen by critics as symbolic of the rôle played by music in the psychological effects of aestheticism. His almost death-like inactivity is broken at last by the outbreak of the European war of 1914-1918, and Hans is suddenly released from the enchantment of the mountain. He leaves the sanatorium and becomes a soldier in the German army—apparently once more a normal, "practical" man, fulfilling what would be generally regarded as his duty to the society in which he lives. He remains a dreamer nonetheless and goes into battle singing Schubert's Lindenbaum, the song of which he was most fond at the Berghof. He is shown at the conclusion of the novel as maintaining a balance between the aesthetic and the practical tendencies of his nature, not yielding completely to one or the other, with his dilemma still unresolved.

The Magic Mountain, with James Joyce's ULYSSES and Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, is considered one of the great novels of the 20th century. It contains elaborate symbolism throughout, often bordering on allegory, and there are numerous striking and dramatic scenes and characters against the background of the sanatorium and the mountain, including the Walpurgisnacht revel, weighing-day and X-ray examinations in the clinic, Mynheer Peeperkorn's speech and his suicide, and the séance.

Although it emphasizes political interpretations, an adequate introductory study of The Magic Mountain is contained in Harry Slochower's Three Ways of Modern Man, on which the above summary is based.

magician.

The Great Magician or Wizard of the North. Sir Walter Scott (1771-1832).

Magician of the North. The title assumed by Johann Georg Hamann, of Prussia (1730-1788).

Maginn, William (1793-1842). Irish poet and contributor of prose pieces to various periodicals. Prototype of Captain Shandon in Pendennis by Thackeray.

Maginot, André (1877-1932). French politician. Minister of colonies (1917), of war (1922-1924), etc.; advocate of military preparedness. The Maginot Line, named in his honor, was a supposedly impregnable defense against Germany, having been erected with a series of forts, etc., at a cost of two million dollars a mile. At the beginning of World War II, the French, feeling safe behind the Maginot Line, intended to fight a comfortable war of attrition. They suffered from what became known as the "Maginot mentality." Neither the line nor the mentality proved fit in the modern warfare of air power and armor.

magliabecchi. A book-worm; from Antonio Magliabecchi (1633-1714), librarian to Cosmo III, Grand Duke of Tuscany. He never forgot what he had once read, and could turn at once to the exact page of any reference.

Magnetic Mountain. A mountain of medieval legend which drew out all the nails of any ship that approached within its influence. It is referred to in MANDEVILLE'S TRAVELS and in many stories, such as the tale of the Third Calender and one of the voyages of Sinbad the Sailor in the Arabian Nights. Also the title of a book of poems by Cecil DAY LEWIS (1933).

Magnificat. The hymn of the Virgin (Luke i. 46-55) beginning "My soul doth magnify the Lord" (Magnificat anima mea Dominum), used as part of the daily service of the Catholic Church since the beginning of the sixth century, and at Evening Prayer in England for over 800 years.

to correct Magnificat before one has learnt Te Deum. To try to do that for which one has no qualifications; to criticize presumptuously.

to sing the Magnificat at matins. To do things at the wrong time, or out of place. The Magnificat belongs to vespers, not to matins.

Magnificent Ambersons, The. A novel by Booth TARKINGTON (1918). The Ambersons for years have been the most prominent family of the "Midland town" in which the story is laid, and the impressive Amberson Mansion, built by Major Amberson, the founder of the family fortune, is the pride of the inhabitants. The story is concerned chiefly with the Major's grandson, George Amberson Minafer, a spoiled young cub whose high and mighty scorn for people he disposes of as "riff-raff" is unendurable to the city that once worshiped at the Amberson shrine. He has, however, an adorer in Lucy Morgan, in spite of the fact that she sees through his pretensions. Eventually George becomes somewhat subdued and adopts a more wholesome attitude toward life. This novel was awarded the Pulitzer prize in 1918 and made into a successful motion-picture, with Orson WELLES directing and producing (1942).

Magnifico, see MEDICI, LORENZO DE'.

Magnitogorsk. A city in the Soviet Union at the source of the Ural River, made into an enormous steel-producing center (1929) as part of STALIN's second Five Year Plan. American engineers were engaged to install the plants.

When Pip is twenty-three years old, Magwitch who has become a successful sheep-farmer in Australia, returns to England under the assumed name of Provis and makes himself known to Pip. He is tracked down by Orlick and Compeyson, arrested, and condemned to death, and dies in jail.

Mah-abadean Dynasty. The first dynasty of Persian mythology. Mah (the great) Abad and his wife were the only persons left on the earth after the great cycle, and from them the world was peopled. Azer Abad, the fourteenth and last of this dynasty, left the earth because "all flesh had corrupted itself," and a period of anarchy ensued.

Mahabharata. One of the two great epic poems of ancient India, the other being the RAMAYANA, about eight times as long as the Iliad and Odyssey together. Its main story is the long struggle between the five Pandavas, or sons of Pandu, and the Kauravas, a name applied, from their ancestor Kuru, to the family of Dhritarashtra, Pandu's brother, who refuses to give up the throne to his nephews, the rightful heirs. Of the five Pandavas, the most heroic are Yudhishtira, the eldest, who finally gains the kingdom, and Arjuna, who wins the hand of the lovely Draupadi in open contest and brings her home as the wife of all five brothers. Friendly to the Pandavas and very prominent throughout a large part of the epic is the man-god KRISHNA, an avatar of Vishnu. After the death of Krishna, Yudhishtira tires of his throne and the five Pandavas, accompanied by their loyal wife and dog, start out to seek admission to the heaven of Indra on MOUNT MERU. Only Yudhishtira and the dog succeed in completing the long journey; when the dog is refused admittance, Yudhishtira will not enter. The dog turns out to be the god of justice, and all of the Pandavas eventually gain their just reward in heaven. The epic contains an immense number of episodes, among them the well-known story of Nala and DAMAYANTA.

Mahadeva (Sans., "great god"). A widely used name of SIVA, one of the Hindu Triad.

Mahaffy, Sir John Pentland (1839-1919). Irish classical scholar and professor of ancient history at Dublin (1869-1901). Author of books on life and letters in ancient Greece. Directed defense of Trinity college in Easter Rebellion (1916).

Mahan, Alfred Thayer (1840-1914). United States admiral. Most famous for his work on The Influence of Sea Power upon History, 1660-1783 (1890).

Maharajah (Sans., "great king"). The title of certain native rulers of India whose territories are very extensive. The wife of a Maharajah is a Maharanee. See also RULERS, TITLES OF.

mahatma (Sans., "great soul"). Max Müller tells us that mahatma is a well known Sanskrit word applied to men who have retired from the world, who, by means of a long ascetic discipline, have subdued the passions of the flesh, and gained a reputation for sanctity and knowledge. That these men are able to perform most startling feats, and to suffer the most terrible tortures, is perfectly true.—Nineteenth Century, May, 1893.

By the Esoteric Buddhists and by Theosophists the name is given to one who has reached perfection spiritually, intellectually and physically. As his knowledge is perfect he can produce effects which, to the ordinary man, appear miraculous.

Mahbub Ali. In Kipling's KIM, an Afghan horsedealer who befriends Kim. He is in the "Great Game," that is, the British secret service in India, and plays a prominent rôle in the book.

Mahdi (Arab., "the divinely directed one"). The expected Messiah of the Mohammedans; a title often assumed by leaders of insurrection in the Sudan, especially Mohammed Ahmed (1843-1885), who led the rising of 1883, and who, say some, is not really dead, but sleeps in a cavern near Bagdad, and will return to life in the fullness of time to overthrow Dejal (Antichrist). The Shi'ahs or Shīrites believe that the Mahdi has lived, and for the most part maintain that he is in hiding and will reappear at the appointed time as ruler of the Moslem world.

mah-jongg. An ancient Chinese game, played by two to four persons with 144 "tiles," similar to dominoes. The object is to secure by drawing and discarding four complete combinations of tiles.

Mahler, Gustav (1860-1911). Austrian composer and conductor, born in Bohemia. Director, Imperial Opera in Vienna (1897-1907). Conducted in the U.S. (1907-1910). Composed ten symphonies, the last unfinished. His biography, Gustav Mahler, Memories and Letters (1946), was written by his widow, Alma Maria Mahler, then the wife of Franz WERFEL. BRUNO WALTER has conducted Mahler's symphonies in the U.S. where he has tried to make him popular.

Mahomet or Mohammed (Arab., "the praised one"). The titular name of the founder of ISLAM, or Mohammedanism (born at Mecca about 570, died at Medina, 632) which was adopted by him about the time of the Hegira to apply to himself the Messianic prophecies in the Old Testament (Haggai ii, 7, and elsewhere). His original name is given both as Kotham and Halabi.

VOLTAIRE was the author of a drama Mahomet (1738), an English version of which, by James Miller, called Mahomet the Imposter, was produced in 1740. The plot centers about Mahomet's love for the captive Palmira, and he is pictured as making utterly unscrupulous use of his religious authority to dispose of his rivals and secure his own ends.

Mahomet's coffin. Legend used to have it that Mahomet's coffin is suspended in mid-air at Medina without any support. The story probably arose from the rough drawings sold to visitors.

Mahomet's dove. Mahomet had a dove which he fed with wheat out of his ear. When it was hungry it used to light on the prophet's shoulder, and thrust its bill into his ear to find its meal. Mahomet thus induced the Arabs to believe that he was divinely inspired.

Was Mahomet inspired with a dove?

Shakespeare, 1 Henry VI, i. 2.

Mahomet and the spider, see under SPIDER.
if the mountain will not come to Mahomet, Mahomet must go to the mountain. When Mahomet introduced his system to the Arabs, they asked for miraculous proofs. He then ordered Mount Safa to come to him, and as it did not move, he said, "God is merciful. Had it obeyed my words, it would have fallen on us to our destruction. I will therefore go to the mountain, and thank God that He has had mercy on a stiffnecked generation." The phrase is often used of one who, not being able to get his own way, bows before the inevitable.

Mahon, Christie. The Irish hero of Synge's drama THE PLAYBOY OF THE WESTERN WORLD.

Mahony, Francis Sylvester. Pseudonym Father Prout (1804-1866). Irish humorist. Contributed to Fraser's Magazine and Bentley's Miscellany translations from Horace and various French writers. Best-known for his own poem The Bells of Shandon. Member of the Jesuit order until he was expelled (1830) and embarked on his literary career.

Mahoun, Mahound. Names of contempt for Mahomet, a Moslem, a Moor, particularly in romances of the Crusades. The name is sometimes used as a synonym for "the Devil."

mahout. In the East Indies, the keeper and driver of an elephant. He sits on the elephant's neck and guides him with a goad called an ankus. Cf. Kipling's stories, Toomai of the Elephants and The King's Ankus.

Mahu. One of the fiends whose names Shakespeare got from Harsnett (see HOBBLIDANCE) and introduced into King Lear:

Five fiends have been in poor Tom at once: of lust, as Obidicut; Hobbididance, prince of dumbness; Mahu, of stealing; Modo, of murder; Flibbertigibbet, of mopping and mowing. (iv. 1)

Maia. In Greek mythology, originally a mountain nymph in Arcadia who became the mother of Hermes.

maid.

Maid Marian. A female character in the old May games and morris dances, in the former usually being Queen of the May. In the later Robin Hood ballads she became attached to the cycle as the outlaw's sweetheart, probably through the performance of Robin Hood plays at May-Day festivities. The part of Maid Marian both in the games and the dance was frequently taken by a man dressed as a woman.

Maid of Athens. A poem by BYRON, said to refer to Theresa Macri.

Maid of Norway. Queen Margaret of Scotland (1283-1290), so called because she came from Norway.

Maid of Orleans. JOAN OF ARC.

Maid of Perth, see FAIR MAID OF PERTH.

Maid of Saragossa. Augustina Zaragoza, distinguished for her heroism when Saragossa was besieged in 1808 and 1809, and celebrated by BYRON in his Childe Harold (I. liv-lvi).

Maid of the Mist. The steamboat on the Niagara River which takes passengers through the spray from the Falls.

Maiden.

Maiden King. Malcolm IV of Scotland. (b. 1141, reigned 1153-1165).

"Malcolm . . . son of the brave and generous Prince Henry . . . was so kind and gentle in his disposition, that he was usually called Malcolm the Maiden."—Scott, Tales of a Grandfather, iv.

Maiden or Virgin Queen. Elizabeth, Queen of England, who never married. (b. 1533, reigned 1558-1603.)

Maiden Town. Edinburgh. So called (1) because it was never captured by a siege; or (2) because some maiden daughters of a Pictish monarch found a retreat there.

Maid's Tragedy, The. A famous drama by BEAUMONT and FLETCHER (1619). The titular heroine is ASPASIA, the principal character EVADNE.

mailed fist, the. Aggressive military might; from a phrase (Ger. gepanzerte Faust) made use of by William II of Germany when bidding adieu to Prince Henry of Prussia as he was starting on his tour to the Far East (December 16, 1897):

Should any one essay to detract from our just rights or to injure us, then up and at him with your mailed fist.

Maimonides or Rabbi Moses ben Maimon (1135-1204). Jewish philosopher who attempted to reconcile Rabbinic Judaism with Aristotelianism in its Arabic form.

Main, see SPANISH MAIN.

Maine. An American battleship destroyed by an explosion of undetermined cause in the harbor of Havana (1898). The incident was important in carrying on the Spanish-American War. The slogan, "Remember The Maine!", became current. The hulk was raised in 1911.

Mainsail Haul, A. Title of a book of short stories of the sea by John MASEFIELD.

Main Street. A novel by Sinclair LEWIS (1921) which attained such popularity that "Main Street" and "GOPHER PRAIRIE" passed almost immediately into the language as expressions of small town provincialism and prejudice. The heroine, Carol Kennicott, is very much bored with the narrow round of her duties and interests as wife of the doctor of Gopher Prairie, Minn., and finally breaks away to lead her own life. Small town life is very minutely and realistically described. HAWTHORNE had used the phrase "Main Street" previously as the title of a sketch in his Snow Image dealing with the history of Salem.

Maintenon, Marquise de. Françoise d'Aubigné (1635-1719). Mistress and second wife of Louis XIV. Exercised strong religious influence over the king in his later years. Founded the Convent of St. Cyr. Originally wife of the poet Scarron (1652).

Main-Travelled Roads. Title of a collection of short stories (1890) by Hamlin GARLAND.

Maironi, Piero. The hero of Antonio FOGAZZARO's novels, The Sinner (Piccolo Mondo Moderno) and The Saint (Il Santo). The first novel of this trilogy, The Patriot (Piccolo Mondo Antico; 1896), is the story of Piero's father, Franco Maironi, one of the patriots who fought for the cause of a United Italy. The struggle between his father's deeply religious nature and his mother's skepticism, as depicted in The Patriot, prepares the way for an understanding of Piero's own inner struggle in The Sinner and The Saint. In The Sinner (1901) he has an insane wife, Elisa, and is passionately in love with Jeanne Dessalle, a married woman who is living apart from her worthless husband. Elisa recovers her sanity just before she dies. At the end of the novel Piero renounces his property and all thought of Jeanne; in The Saint (1901) she finds him as Benedetto, a lay brother in a Benedictine monastery. The news that her husband has died has little effect on him; he has become the spokesman of a new Christianity which will accept and make use of the findings of modern science. As such he arouses tremendous opposition from within the Catholic Church. Jeanne, whose love can find no other outlet, manages to ward off much of this opposition through her powerful friends. He sends for her on his death bed. A fourth novel, Leila (1910) deals primarily with the love affair of the titular heroine and Massimo Alberti, a young doctor and a disciple of Benedetto, "the Saint."

Maisie. The heroine of Kipling's LIGHT THAT FAILED.

Maison Rouge, Chevalier de, see CHEVALIER DE MAISON ROUGE.

Maitland, Sarah. The "IRON WOMAN" in Margaret Deland's novel of that title. Her children, Blair and Nannie Maitland, are also leading characters in the novel.

Major, Charles (1856-1913). American romantic novelist. When Knighthood Was in Flower (1898); etc.

Major Barbara. A play by George Bernard SHAW (1907), presenting the theme that poverty is "the worst of crimes." The titular heroine, the granddaughter of an earl, becomes a Salvation Army lass. Undershaft, the other leading character, is the head of a great munitions factory.

Majorca. The largest of the Balearic Islands (Spain) in the Mediterranean. A favorite resort of writers.

make-up. The materials used by an actor for painting his face and otherwise transforming his appearance to suit a character on the stage; the manner in which he is made up; hence, in colloquial use, the sum of one's characteristics, idiosyncrasies, etc. In printing, the make-up is the arrangement of the printed matter in columns, pages, etc.

Making of an American, The. An autobiography by Jacob RUIS (1901), an immigrant of Danish birth who attained distinction in America.

Making of Americans, The. A novel by Gertrude STEIN, written in 1906-1908, published in 1926. It presents the history of the author's own family, extended to represent also the history of everyone in the past, present, and future. It is written in a simpler style than much of the author's later work and is marked by frequent verbal repetition to suggest repetition in time.

Malachi. The last book of the Old Testament, a book of prophecy.

Malade imaginaire, Le (The Imaginary Invalid). A comedy by MOLIÈRE (1673), a satire on the medical profession. The titular rôle is taken by ARGAN.

Malagigi. In Carolingian legend, the Italian form of the name of a great magician, one of Charlemagne's paladins; the same as the French MAUGIS.

Malagrowther, Malachi. The signature of Sir Walter SCOTT to a series of letters contributed in 1826 to the Edinburgh Weekly Journal upon the lowest limitation of paper money to £5. They caused an immense sensation, similar to that produced by DRAPIER's LETTERS, or BURKE's Reflections on the French Revolution.

Malagrowther, Sir Mungo. In SCOTT's FOR-TUNES OF NIGEL, a crabbed old courtier, soured by misfortune, and peevish from infirmities. He tries to make everyone as sour and discontented as himself.

Malambruno. A giant in Cervantes' DON QUIXOTE (II. iii. 45); he enchants Antonomasia and her husband, and Don Quixote effects their disenchantment by mounting the wooden horse, Clavigo.

Malaprop, Mrs. (from Fr. mal à propos, "out of place.") A famous character in Sheridan's comedy, THE RIVALS, noted for her blunders in the use of words. "As headstrong as an allegory on the banks of the Nile," is one of her grotesque misapplications. She has given us the word malapropism to denote such mistakes.

Malbecco. A "cankered, crabbed carle" in Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE (III. x), wealthy, very miserly, and the impersonation of self-inflicted torments. His young wife, Helenore, sets fire to his house and elopes with Sir Parnel, whereupon Malbecco casts himself from a rock, and his ghost is metamorphosed into Jealousy.

Malbrouk or Marlborough. The old French song, Malbrouk s'en va-t-en guerre (Marlborough is off to the wars), is said to date from 1709, when the Duke of Marlborough was winning his battles in Flanders, but did not become popular till it was applied to Charles Churchill, third Duke of Marlborough, at the time of his failure against Cherbourg (1758), and was further popularized by its becoming a favorite of Marie Antoinette about 1780, and by its being introduced by BEAUMARCHAIS into Le Mariage de Figaro (1784). The air, however (the same as "We won't go home till morning"), is of far older date, was well known in Egypt and the East, and is said to have been sung by the Crusaders. According to a tradition recorded by CHATEAUBRIAND, the air came from the Arabs, and the tale is a legend of Mambon, a crusader.

Malbrouk s'en va-t-en guerre;
Miron-ton, miron-ton, miron-taine;
Malbrouk s'en va-t-en guerre,
Nul sait quand reviendra.
Il reviendra z'à pâques—
Miron-ton, miron-ton miron-taine . . .
Ou à la Trinité.

One of the arias sung by George du Maurier's TRILBY is an elaboration of this song.

Malchus. In the New Testament, the servant of the high priest whose ear was cut off by Peter. Cf. John xviii. 10.

Malcolm. In Shakespeare's MACBETH, the eldest son of Duncan, King of Scotland. When Duncan is murdered, the two young princes flee—Malcolm to the English court, and his brother Donalbain to Ireland. Later, when Macduff slays Macbeth in the battle of Dunsinane, the son of Duncan is set on the throne of Scotland, under the name and title of Malcolm III.

Maldon, The Battle of. A poem in Old English dealing with a raid of the Danes on Essex in 991.

Malebolge. The eighth circle of Dante's INFERNO (Canto xviii), containing ten bolgi or pits. The name is used figuratively of any cesspool of filth or iniquity.

Malecasta. The impersonation of lust in Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE, III. i. She is mistress of Castle Joyous.

Maleger. The incarnation of evil passions in Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE, II. xi. He is "thin as a rake," and cold as a serpent, and attacks the Castle of Temperance with a rabble in twelve troops, typifying the seven deadly sins and the lusts of the five senses. Prince Arthur stabs him again and again, but it is like stabbing a shadow, and finally the Prince calls to mind that every time the carl touches the earth his strength is renewed, so he squeezes all his breath out and tosses the body into a lake. See also ANTAEUS.

Malesherbes, Chrétien Guillaume de Lamignon de (1721-1794). French statesman, instrumental in securing publication of the Encyclopédie (1751-1772). Defended Louis XVI during the French Revolution. Was himself arrested and executed.

Malet, Lucas. Pseudonym of Mary St. Leger Kingsley.

Malfi or Malfy, Duchess of, see DUCHESS OF MALFI.

Malengin. The typification of guile in Spenser's Faerie Queene, V. ix. Being attacked by Sir Artegall and his iron man, he turns himself first into a fox, then to a bush, then to a bird, then to a hedgehog, then to a snake; but Talus is a match for all his deceits and kills him.

Malherbe, François de (1555-1628). French poet and critic of the neo-classical period (see NEO-CLASSICISM), insisting on order, balance, simplicity, clarity, rationality, and "common sense" in poetry, opposed to the PLÉIADE. His most famous poems are Consolation de Monsieur du Périer sur la mort de sa fille (1598) and an Ode to Marie de Medici (1600). He was official court poet under Henry IV of France, and was literary dictator of France until his death. Mathurin Régnier, his contemporary, said of his poetry, "C'est proser de la rime et rimer de la prose."

Malikites. One of the four sects of SUNNITES.

Malinowski, Bronislaw Kasper (1884-1942). Polish anthropologist; lecturer in England and United States. Author of books on the sexual life of savages.

Mallarmé, Stéphane (1842-1898). French poet and teacher, leader of the school of SYMBOLISM and formulator of its aesthetic theories. Influenced by the work of BAUDELAIRE, POE, VERLAINE, and the PRE-RAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD, Mallarmé's poetry is marked by elliptical phrases, unusual syntax, and condensed figures, each poem being built about a central symbol, idea, or metaphor and consisting of subordinate images that illustrate and help to develop the idea. THE AFTERNOON OF A FAUN (L'Après-midi d'un faune), THE SWAN (Le Cygne), HÉRODIADÉ, and Le Tombeau d'Edgar Poe (The Tomb of Edgar Poe) are outstanding examples of Mallarmé's method. A volume of Poems by him was translated into English by Roger Fry in 1936.

Malleus Maleficarum. The "Hammer of Witches" (1484) published at Cologne, "the text-book of the day on witch-craft."

Mallinger, Sir Hugo. A wealthy aristocrat in George Eliot's DANIEL DERONDA.

Mallock, William Hurrell (1849-1923). English writer, author of The New Republic (1877), an elaborate ROMAN À CLEF.

Malmaison. A hamlet near Paris, where the Empress Joséphine had a palace. Also, the title of a poem by Amy Lowell.

Malmesbury, the Philosopher of. Thomas Hobbes (1588-1679), author of LEVIATHAN, so called from his birthplace.

Malone, Edmund (1741-1812). Irish Shakespearean scholar and literary critic. His conclusions regarding the order in which Shakespeare's plays were written is still for the most part accepted.

Malone, Louis, see MACNEICE, LOUIS.

Malory, Sir Thomas (1394?-1471). English author famous for his MORTE D'ARTHUR, completed in 1469 and printed in 1471. Little is known of Malory except his authorship of the famous romance and his escapades in the later years of his life. After having been a soldier in the Hundred Years' War and a member of Parliament (1445), he suddenly (in 1451) made his name notorious by raiding a monastery occupying land that had once belonged to him. When he was captured, he was charged with a number of crimes, including robbery and rape, and imprisoned for the remainder of his life. The Morte d'Arthur was written while he was in prison.

Malraux, André (1895-). French novelist, known for his Marxist beliefs (see MARXISM; MARXISM IN LITERATURE; PROLETARIAN LITERATURE) and his novels dealing dramatically with Communists in Europe and Asia in the 1920's and 1930's, considered to be written with greater technical skill and insight into character than most revolutionary fiction of the time. Among his books are La Tentation de l'Occident (1926), dealing with Chinese civilization; The Royal Way (La Voie royale; 1930), on archaeology in Cambodia; La Condition humaine (1933), translated in the U.S. as MAN'S FATE and in England as Storm in Shanghai; Le Temps du Mépris (1935), translated as Days of Wrath in the U.S., set against a background of concentration camps for political prisoners in Nazi Germany (see NAZISM); L'Espoir (1937), translated as Man's Hope in the U.S. and as Days of Hope in England, dealing with the Civil War in Spain (1936-1939).

Malthus, Thomas Robert (1766-1834). English economist. See MALTHUSIAN DOCTRINE.

Malthusian doctrine. A doctrine, promulgated by T. R. Malthus, especially in An Essay on the Principle of Population (1798), holding that population increases more than the means of increasing subsistence does, so that in time, if no check is put upon the increase of population, many must starve or all be ill fed. Applied to individual nations, it intimates that something must be done to check the increase of population, as all the land would not suffice to feed its inhabitants. The doctrine became obsolete, when—in the wake of the industrial revolution—the productive power of agriculture assumed undreamed-of dimensions.

Maltravers, Ernest, see ERNEST MALTRIVERS.

Maltz, Albert (1908-). American dramatist and novelist. His short story, The Happiest Man on Earth, is a study of unemployment, and won first prize in the 1938 O. Henry Memorial Volume.

Malvin, Roger, see ROGER MALVIN'S FURNERAL.

Malvolio. In Shakespeare's TWELFTH NIGHT, Olivia's steward, against whom Sir Toby Belch and Sir Andrew Aguecheek join MARIA in a trick. Maria forges a letter in the handwriting of OLIVIA, leading Malvolio to suppose that his mistress is in love with him, telling him to dress in yellow stockings and to smile on the lady. Malvolio falls into the trap, and when Olivia shows astonishment at his absurd conduct, he keeps quoting parts of the letter he has received until he is shut up in a dark room as a lunatic.

Mamamouchi. A "spoof" Turkish title or dignity invented by MOLIÈRE in his comedy Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, which M. Jourdain is told has been conferred upon him by the Grand Signior. Hence, the term was sometimes used in England of a mock honor or a fantastic piece of buffoonery.

Mamba's Daughters. See under Du Bose HEYWARD.

Mambrino. A pagan king of old romance, introduced by Ariosto into ORLANDO FURIOSO. He had a helmet of pure gold which rendered the wearer invulnerable and which was taken possession of by Rinaldo. This is frequently referred to in Cervantes' DON QUIXOTE, and we read that when the barber is caught in a shower and claps his brazen basin on his head, Don Quixote insists that this is the enchanted helmet of the Moorish king.

Mamelukes (Arab. mamluc, "a slave"). The slaves brought from the Caucasus to Egypt, and formed into a standing army, who, in 1254, raised one of their body to the supreme power. They reigned over Egypt until 1517, when they were overthrown by the Turkish sultan, Selim I, and the country, though nominally under a Turkish viceroy, was subsequently governed by twenty-four Mameluke beys. In 1811 the Pasha of Egypt, Mohammed Ali, by a wholesale massacre annihilated the Mamelukes.

Mamillius. A young prince of Sicilia in Shakespeare's WINTER'S TALE.

mammet or maumet. An idol; hence, a puppet or doll (as in Romeo and Juliet, iii. 5, and 1 Henry IV, ii. 3). The word is a corruption of Mahomet. Mohammedanism being the most prominent non-Christian religion with which Christendom was acquainted before the Reformation, it became a generic word to designate any false faith. Even idolatry is called mammetry, and in a 14th century MS. Bible (first edited by A. C. Paues, 1904) 1 John v. 21 reads—

My smale children, kepe ye you from mawmetes and symulacris.

Mammon. The god of this world. The word, in Syriac, means "riches," and it occurs in the Bible (Matt. vi. 24, Luke xvi. 13): "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Spenser (Faerie Queene, II. vii) and Milton (who identifies him with Vulcan or Mulciber, Paradise Lost, i. 738-751) both make Mammon the personification of the evils of wealth and miserliness.

Mammon led them on—
Mammon, the least erected Spirit that fell From Heaven; for even in Heaven his looks and thoughts
Were always downward bent, admiring more
The riches of Heaven's pavement, trodden gold,
Than aught divine or holy.

Paradise Lost, i, 678.

the Mammon of unrighteousness. Money; cf. Luke xvi. 9.

Sir Epicure Mammon. A worldly sensualist in Ben Jonson's Alchemist.

man. For titles beginning with man, see also below under separate entries.

Man Friday. A useful and faithful servant, like the Man Friday in Robinson Crusoe.

the Man in the Iron Mask. A mysterious individual held for over forty years as a state prisoner by Louis XIV at Pignerol and other prisons, ultimately dying in the Bastille (November 19, 1703) with his identity still undisclosed. His name was given as "Marchiali" when he was buried. Subsequently many conjectures as to the real identity of Marchiali were advanced. One possibility was General du Bulonde, who, in 1691, raised the siege of Cuneo against the order of Catinat. In 1891

Captain Bazeriès published in Le Temps translations of some cipher dispatches, apparently showing that this is the solution; but if it is, it can be only part of it, and Bulonde must have taken the place of some earlier masked prisoner, for l'homme au masque de fer was at Pignerol in 1666 and was transferred to the island of St. Marguerite twenty years later, that is well before the siege of Cuneo.

Other persons who have been suggested are:

A twin brother of Louis XIV, or, perhaps, an elder brother, whose father is given both as Cardinal Mazarin and the Duke of Buckingham.

Louis, Duc de Vermandois, natural son of Louis XIV by De la Vallière, who was imprisoned for life because he gave the Dauphin a box on the ears.

Among the less likely names that have been put forward are the Duke of Monmouth; Avedick, an Armenian Patriarch; Fouquet, the disgraced Minister of Finance; the Duc de Beaufort, who disappeared at the siege of Candia in 1669; and Mattioli's secretary, Jean de Gonzague.

Since the private papers of Louis XIV and the correspondence of his minister Louvois and Barbezieux were made available to Franz Funck-Brentano, it has become apparent that the man in the iron mask was Count Girolamo Mattioli, Minister to the Duke of Mantua, a theory now widely accepted. In 1678 he acted treacherously towards Louis in refusing to give up the fortress of Casale—the key of Italy—after signing a treaty promising to do so, and in consequence was lured on to French soil, captured, and imprisoned at Pignerol.

In 1790 the Abbé Soulavie put forth the theory that the mysterious personage was a twin brother of Louis XIV. This supposition was accepted in tragedies on the subject by Zschokke in German and Fournier in French, and in DUMAS' romance The Iron Mask, sometimes published separately, but originally a part of his Vicomte de Bragelonne (see THREE MUSKETEERS), a conspiracy to substitute the Man in the Iron Mask for his royal brother which is all but successful.

Man in the Moon. See MOON.

Man of Belial. Any wicked man. Shimei so called David (2 Sam. xvi. 7). The ungodly are called "children of Belial," or "sons of Belial." The word belial means "worthlessness."

Man of Blood. David is so called (2 Sam. xvi. 7). The Puritans applied the term to Charles I, because he made war against his Parliament. It is applied to any man of violence.

man of blood and iron. Otto Prince von Bismarck (1815-1898), for many years chancellor of Prussia and Germany, called "man of blood" from his great war policy, and "iron" from his indomitable will.

man of brass. TALUS.

man of December. Napoleon III. He was made President of the French Republic December 11, 1848; made his coup d'état December 2, 1851; and was made emperor December 2, 1852. See also MAN OF SEDAN and MAN OF SILENCE below.

Man of Destiny. Napoleon Bonaparte (b. 1761, reigned 1804-1814, d. 1821). He looked on himself as an instrument in the hands of destiny. Bernard SHAW has a play so called (1897), dealing with Napoleon.

man of letters. An author.

man of remnants. A tailor.

Man of Ross. A name given to John Kyrle (1637-1724), a native of Whitehouse in Gloucestershire. He resided the greater part of his life in the village of Ross, Herefordshire, and was famous for his benevolence and for supplying needy parishes with churches.

Who taught that heaven-directed spire to rise?

"The Man of Ross," each hissing babe replies.

Pope, Moral Essays

Man of Sedan. Napoleon III was so called, because he surrendered his sword to William, King of Prussia, after the battle of Sedan (Sept. 2, 1870).

Man of Silence. Napoleon III (b. 1808, reigned 1852-1870, d. 1873).

Man of Sin (2 Thess. ii. 3). The Roman Catholics say the Man of Sin is Antichrist. The Puritans applied the term to the Pope of Rome; the Fifth-Monarchy men to Cromwell; many modern theologians apply it to that "wicked one" (identical with the "last horn" of Dan. vii.) who is to immediately precede the second advent.

Man of Sorrows. Jesus Christ. Cf. Is. liii. 3.

man of straw. A person without capital. It used to be customary for a number of worthless fellows to loiter about the English law courts to become false witness or surety for anyone who would buy their services. Their badge was a straw in their shoes.

man of the sea, see under OLD.

Man of the Third Republic. Napoleon III.

man of the world. One "knowing" in world-craft; no greenhorn. Charles Macklin brought out a comedy (1704), and Henry Mackenzie a novel (1773) with the same title.

man of wax. A model man like one fashioned in wax. Horace speaks of the "waxen arms of Telephus," meaning model arms, or of perfect shape and color, and the nurse says of Romeo, "Why, he's a man of wax" (i. 3), which she explains by saying, "Nay, he's a flower, i' faith a very flower."

man of whipcord. A coachman.

"He would not have suffered the coachman to proceed while the horses were unfit for service. . . . Yet the man of whipcord escaped some severe . . . reproach."—Sir W. Scott, The Antiquary, 1.

sick man of the East, see under sick.

Man Against the Sky, The. Book and title poem by Edwin Arlington ROBINSON (1916).

Man and Superman. A comedy by George Bernard SHAW (1903), on the theme that man is the pursued, woman the pursuer. The hero is Jack Tanner. Warned by 'Enery, his chauffeur, he makes every effort but is powerless to escape the schemings of the heroine, Ann Whitfield, the instrument of the Life Force, who marries him in triumph. One act of this play presents DON JUAN in Hell.

manatee. An aquatic, herbivorous mammal. American species in waters of West Indies and near-by coasts from Florida to Yucatán. The Manatee is the title of a sensational novel by Nancy Bruff (1945).

Manchester. A manufacturing city of England.

the Manchester of America. Lowell, Mass., from its cotton mills.

the Manchester of Belgium. Ghent.

the Manchester of Japan. Osaka.

the Manchester of Prussia. Elberfeld.

the Manchester poet. Charles Swain (1801-1874).

Manchester Guardian, The. Famous liberal newspaper in England. Founded as a weekly in 1821.

Manchester school. A group of free-trade advocates led by Cobden and Bright, originally meeting at Manchester, England. First so called by DISRAELI in 1848.

Mancini. Family of Roman patricians. The best-known members are Marie Mancini (1640?-1714), the early love of Louis XIV, who became a patroness of men of letters, and her sister Hortense Mancini (1646?-1699), who had a liaison with Charles II of England. They were nieces of Cardinal Mazarin, who introduced them together with three other sisters to the French court. Hortense took the name and arms of Mazarin.

Manciple's or Maunciples Tale. One of Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES. A manciple is a purveyor of food, a steward, or clerk of the kitchen. (Lat. manceps, mancipis, "a buyer, manager.") The tale is as follows: Phoebus had a crow which he taught to speak. It was white as down, and as big as a swan. He had also a wife, whom he dearly loved. One day, when he came home, the crow cried, "Cuckoo, cuckoo, cuckoo!" and Phoebus asked the bird what it meant; whereupon it told the god that his wife was unfaithful to him. Phoebus, in his wrath, seized his bow, and shot his wife through the heart, but to the bird he said,

"Curse on thy telltale tongue! never more shall it brew mischief." So he deprived it of the power of speech, and changed its plumage from white to black. Moral—

My sone, bewar and be noon auctour newe,
Of tydyngs, whether they ben fals or trewe;
Wherso thou comest, amongst high or lowe,
Kep wel thy tonge and think upon the crowe.

Canterbury Tales, 17, 291-4.

The basis for this tale can be found in Ovid's Coronis in the Metamorphoses, ii. 543.

Manco Capak or Manco Inca (1500?-1544). Indian sovereign in Peru. Recognized by Pizarro after death of former sovereigns. Assassinated by his followers in the course of an unsuccessful revolt against the Spaniards. Named after Manco Capak (11th century), the traditional founder of the Peruvian Inca dynasty.

Mandalay. Title of a very popular poem by Rudyard Kipling, first published in 1892 in Barrack-Room Ballads.

By the old Moulmein Pagoda, lookin' eastward to the sea,

There's a Burma girl a-settin', and I know she thinks o' me;

For the wind is in the palm-trees, and the temple-bells they say—

"Come you back, you British soldier; come you back to Mandalay!" . . .

Oh, the road to Mandalay, where the flyin'-fishes play,

An' the dawn comes up like thunder outer China cross the Bay!

Mandane. The heroine of Mlle de Scudéry's romance CYRUS THE GREAT.

mandarin is not a Chinese word, but one given by the Portuguese colonists at Macao to the officials called by the natives kwan. It is from Malay and Hindu mantri, counsellor, which is related to Sans. mantra, counsel (man, to think).

the nine ranks of mandarins in China were distinguished by the button in their cap:—1, ruby; 2, coral; 3, sapphire; 4, an opaque blue stone; 5, crystal; 6, an opaque white shell; 7, wrought gold; 8, plain gold; and 9, silver.

The whole body of Chinese mandarins consists of twenty-seven members. They are appointed for (1) imperial birth; (2) long service; (3) illustrious deeds; (4) knowledge; (5) ability; (6) zeal; (7) nobility; and (8) aristocratic birth—Gutzlay.

The word is sometimes used derisively for over-pompous officials.

mandate (Lat. mandatum, mandare, "to command"). An authoritative charge or command; in law, a contract of bailment by which the mandatory undertakes to perform gratuitously a duty regarding property committed to him. After World War I it was decided by the victorious powers that the former extra-European colonies and possessions of Germany and Turkey should be governed under mandate by one or other of the powers. Thus, the German colonies in West Africa and parts of the Turkish possessions became mandatory spheres under Great Britain, Syria under France, etc.

Manders, Parson. In Ibsen's Ghosts, the adviser of Mrs. Alving. He has been called "the consummate flower of conventional morality."

Mandeville, Sir John (ca. 1300-1372). An explorer whose Travels (ca. 1357), despite their lack of veracity, or perhaps because of it, are one of the classics of travel literature. Hence, anyone who tells an exaggerated story is a Sir John Mandeville.

Mandrakul's offering, from gold to nothing. Mandrakul, having found a gold-mine in Samos, offered to Juno a golden ram for the discovery; the next year he gave a silver one, then a brazen one, and in the fourth year nothing.

mandrake. The root of the mandrake, or mandragora, often divides in two, and presents a rude appearance of a man. In ancient times human figures were cut out of the root, and wonderful virtues ascribed to them, such as the production of fecundity in women (Gen. xxx. 14-16). It was also thought that mandrakes could not be uprooted without producing fatal effects, so a cord used to be fixed to the root and round a dog's neck, and the dog, being chased, drew out the mandrake and died. Another fallacy was that a small dose made a person vain of his beauty, and a large one made him an idiot; and yet another, that when the mandrake is uprooted it utters a scream, in explanation of which Thomas Newton, in his Herball to the Bible, says, "It is supposed to be a creature having life, engendered under the earth of the seed of some dead person put to death for murder." "Ferdie," by F. Anstey GUTHRIE, is a short story on this theme.

Shrieks like mandrakes, torn out of the earth.
Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, iv. 3.

From the old notion that they excited amorous inclinations, mandrakes were also called love apples, hence, Venus is called Mandragoritis, and the Emperor Julian, in his epistles, tells Calixenes that he drank its juice nightly as a love-potion.

MACHIAVELLI wrote a comedy with the title Mandragola (Mandrake).

he has eaten mandrake. Said of a very indolent and sleepy man, from the narcotic and stupefying properties of the plant, well known to the ancients.

Mandricardo. In Boiardo's and Ariosto's ORLANDO poems, the son of Agrican, who laid siege to Albracca because he was in love with Angelica. He was slain by Orlando.

manes, to appease his. To do, when a person is dead, what would have pleased him or was due to him when alive. The spirit or ghost of the dead was by the Romans called his manes. It never slept quietly in the grave so long as survivors left its wishes unfulfilled. February 19 was the day when all the living sacrificed to the shades of dead relations and friends—a kind of non-Christian ALL SOULS' DAY.

Manet, Édouard (1832-1883). French painter, originator and leader of IMPRESSIONISM in painting.

Manetho. Egyptian priest and historian of the third century B. C. Wrote in his (Greek) history of Egypt the most accurate annals of that ancient civilization, down to the arrival of Alexander the Great. Only fragments of his work are extant.

Manette, Dr. A character in Dickens' TALE of Two CITIES. He has been imprisoned eighteen years, and has gradually lost his memory. After his release he somewhat recovers it, but any train of thought connected with his prison life produces a relapse. While in prison, the doctor made shoes, and whenever the relapse occurs, his desire for cobbling returns.

Lucie Manette. The heroine of the novel, daughter of Dr. Manette. She marries Charles DARNAY.

Lucie Manette had a forehead with the singular capacity of lifting and knitting itself into an expression that was not quite one of perplexity, or wonder or alarm, or merely of bright fixed attention, though it included all the four expressions.—A Tale of Two Cities, I. 4.

Manfred. (1) Count Manfred, the hero of Byron's dramatic poem of this name (1817), sells himself to the Prince of Darkness, is wholly without human sympathies, and lives in splendid solitude among the Alps. He once loved the Lady ASTARTE, who dies. Manfred goes to the hall of Arimanes to see her, and is told that he will die the following day. This prophecy is fulfilled.

(2) Prince of Otranto and the central figure in Horace Walpole's CASTLE OF OTRANTO.

Man from Glengarry, The. A novel by Ralph Connor (Can., 1901). The hero, Ranald Macdonald, grows up in a Canadian lumber camp, whose feuds he inherits but learns to overcome. He becomes at last the manager of a great coal and lumber company.

Mangan, James Clarence (1803-1849). Irish poet. Dark Rosaleen and the autobiographical ballad The Nameless One with its tragic theme are his best-known poems.

Mangin, Charles Marie Emmanuel (1866-1925). French general. Commanded defense of Verdun (1916), and the offensive along Chemin des Dames (1917) which halted the German advance.

Manhattan. The island on which the city of New York was first founded, purchased in 1626 by the Dutch from the Manhattan Indians for $24. It is one of the boroughs of New York City and contains the leading banking and commercial organizations of the city, as well as fashion and art centers, the chief theatrical district of the nation, wealthy residential sections, and such well-known districts as BROADWAY, the BOWERY, GREENWICH VILLAGE, HARLEM, and WALL STREET. Manhattan is usually taken to symbolize the complexity and teeming activity of New York City as a whole.

Manhattan Transfer. A novel by John Dos Passos (1925), making early use of a technique later developed and used to great effect in U.S.A. It presents a picture of life in New York City during the 1920's through passages of impressionistic description and the simultaneous stories of several people from varying levels of society. Among these characters are Bud Korpenning, a young man from the country who fails in the city and commits suicide; Joe Harland, a Wall Street gambler, who loses his fortune and becomes a beggar; Jimmy Herf, Harland's nephew, who is a journalist, is divorced by his actress wife, and leaves the city to begin over elsewhere; Ellen Thatcher Ogelthorpe, Jimmy's former wife, who is a successful actress but loses the man she loves and is unable to find happiness; Joe O'Keefe, a labor organizer; Congo Jake, a bootlegger; George Baldwin, a politician; and others.

Mani. The moon, in Scandinavian mythology, the son of Mundilfoeri, taken to heaven by the gods to drive the moon-car. He is followed by a wolf, which, when time is no more, will devour both Mani and his sister Sol.

Mani, Manes, or Manichaeus. The founder of Manichaeism, born in Persia probably about 216, prominent at the court of Sapor I (240-272), but crucified by the Magians in 277.

Manichaeans or Manichees. The followers of MANI, who taught that the universe is controlled by two antagonistic powers, viz., light or goodness (identified with God), and darkness, chaos, or evil. The system was the old Babylonian nature-worship modified by Christian and Persian influences, and its own influence on the Christian religion was, even as late as the 13th century, deep and widespread. The headquarters of Manichaeism were for many centuries at Babylon, and later at Samarkand.

manifest destiny. A slogan used by the politicians in the imperialistic wave that swept the U.S. after the Spanish War. Under pressure of this philosophy of "expansion willed by destiny," the U.S. acquired the Philippines, Puerto Rico, and Cuba. The phrase as such can be traced back at least as far as 1845. Its use at the close of the nineteenth century inspired such poems (not in its favor) as Richard Hovey's Unmanifest Destiny and William Vaughn Moody's On a Soldier Fallen in the Philippines.

Manilius, Marcus or Gaius. Roman poet of the time of the beginning of the Christian era, reputedly the author of the learned astrological poem Astronomica in five books. A. E. HOUSMAN was an authority on Manilius.

Man in Black. A character in Goldsmith's Citizen of the World (1759), said to be meant for Goldsmith's father. He is a true oddity, with the tongue of a Timon and the heart of an Uncle Toby. He declaims against beggars, but relieves everyone he meets; he ridicules generosity, but would share his last cloak with the needy. Washington IRVING wrote a tale called The Man in Black. A clergyman is frequently so called.

manitou. A great spirit of the American Indians. The word is Algonquin, and means either the great good spirit or the great evil spirit. The former they call Gitché-Manito, and the latter Matche-Manito. The good spirit is symbolized by an egg, and the evil one by a serpent. (Longfellow, Hiawatha, xiv.)

Manley, Mary de la Rivière (1663?-1724). English playwright and political pamphleteer of doubtful reputation. Remembered as author of Secret Memoirs and Manners of Several Persons of Quality of Both Sexes from the New Atalantis, usually known as The New Atalantis. Succeeded Swift as editor of Examiner (1711). Author of plays and an autobiography.

Manly. The chief character of Wycherly's PLAIN DEALER (1674), a comedy based to some extent upon Molière's MISANTHROPE. Manly is an honest, surly sea-captain, who thinks everyone a rascal, and believes himself to be no better. "Counterfeit honors," says Manly, "will not be current with me. I weigh the man, not his titles. 'Tis not the king's stamp can make the metal better or heavier."

Mann, Horace (1796-1859). American educator. Introduced new methods and ideas in public-school organization and teaching. Elected to American Hall of Fame (1900). The Horace Mann School in New York City is named in his honor.

Mann, Thomas (1875-). German scholar and novelist, known for his studies of the psychology of the artist and the artist's relation to society, especially the industrial society of the 20th century, and for his extensive use of philosophic symbolism. His writings show a strong influence from 19th-century German romanticism, especially as expressed in the intellectual systems of NIETZSCHE, SCHOPENHAUER, RICHARD WAGNER, and Sigmund FREUD. The decadence of the 20th-century world, the artist regarded as an abnormality or a social aberration, and death as a symbol of the aesthetic life, play an important part in Mann's works, which include BUDDENBROOKS (1901); Fiorenza (1905), a play; Royal Highness (Königliche Hoheit; 1909); DEATH IN VENICE (Der Tod in Venedig, 1913); A Man and His Dog (Herr und Hund; 1919); THE MAGIC MOUNTAIN (Der Zauberberg, 1924); Children and Fools (1928); Tristan (1903); MARIO AND THE MAGICIAN (Mario und der Zauberer; 1930); TONIO KROGER (1903); Past Masters (1933), a collection of essays; a series of novels dealing symbolically with the Biblical character of JOSEPH, including Die Geschichten Jakobs (1933; translated as Joseph and His Brothers), Young Joseph (Der Junge Joseph; 1934), and Joseph in Egypt (Joseph in Ägypten; 1936); Stories of Three Decades (1936), a collection of short stories from earlier sources; Freud, Goethe, and Wagner (1937), critical essays; The Coming Victory of Democracy (1938), a lecture on politics delivered on a nation-wide tour of the U.S.; This Peace (1938), an essay on European politics of the period following the MUNICH CRISIS; Lotte in Weimar (1939), translated as THE BELOVED RETURNS; This War (1940), an essay on World War II; The Transposed Heads (Die vertauschten Köpfe, 1940), a novel on a Hindu theme; Order of the Day (1942), a collection of political speeches; Dr. Faustus (1948).

With James JOYCE and Marcel PROUST, Thomas Mann is considered among the greatest novelists of the 20th century. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1929. In 1933, after a political disagreement with the National Socialist government of Germany, he decided to stay in Switzerland where he happened to be on a visit. He came to the U.S., where he taught at Princeton University and endorsed a variety of liberal causes; during the 1930's he was a particular favorite among American liberal groups and wrote a number of essays denouncing FASCISM and NAZISM. Later he took up residence in Hollywood.

Heinrich Mann (1871-), elder brother of Thomas Mann, liberal in political views at an earlier period than Thomas and long international in his viewpoint, also became known as a novelist, devoting himself especially to a portrayal of social life in Germany before and after World War I.

Erika Mann (1905-) and Klaus Mann (1906-1949), two of Thomas Mann's children, also fled from Germany to the U.S. and were active in liberal causes and writings attacking Nazism.

Mannerheim, Baron Carl Gustaf Emil von (1867-). Field Marshal of Finland

(1933). Supervised construction of the Mannerheim Line. Commanded Finnish army against Russia (1939). Made alliance with Germany (1941). Armistice with U.S.S.R. and Great Britain (1944). Acting president of Finland (Nov., 1945); resigned for reasons of ill health (March, 1946).

Mannerling, Guy, see GUY MANNERING.

Julia Mannerling. Heroine of Scott's Guy Mannerling, the daughter of Guy. She marries Captain Bertram.

Mannerling, Mary. Stage name of Florence Friend (1876-). English actress. Appeared under Daniel Frohman's management. Married James K. Hackett.

Manners, Dorothy. The heroine of Churchill's RICHARD CARVEL.

Mannes, David (1866-). American violinist. Brother-in-law of Walter DAMROSCH. Director, David Mannes Music School.

Mannin, Ethel (1900-). English novelist and essayist. Joined Independent Labor Party (1932). One of her best-known novels, Venetian Blinds (1933), is a study of working class life.

Manning, William Thomas (1866-). English-born Protestant Episcopal bishop of New York (1921-1946).

Mannon, Ezra, Christine, Lavinia, Orin. See MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA.

Mannyng, Robert or Robert de Brunne (fl. 1288-1338). English chronicler and poet. Author of Handlyng Synne (ca. 1300), a free version of a French original, of great linguistic importance.

Manoa. The fabulous capital of EL DORADO, the houses of which were roofed with gold.

Man of Feeling, The. The title of a novel (1771) by Henry Mackenzie (1745-1831), also used as a nickname for the author. His "man of feeling" is named Harley—a sensitive, bashful, kind-hearted, sentimental hero. It is said that this novel was a particular favorite with Robert BURNS.

Man of Law's Tale or Mannes Tale of Lawe. One of Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES. See also CUNSTANCE. The Man of Law is perhaps best described in the following well-known lines:

A Sergeant of the Lawe, war and wys. . . .
No-wher so busy a man as he ther was,
And yet he seemed bisier than he was.
Chaucer, Prologue to the Canterbury Tales.

man-of-war bird, see FRIGATE BIRD.

Man on Horseback. General Boulanger (1837-1891); so called because he usually appeared mounted. See BOULANGISM. Hence, any unexpected leader.

Manon Lescaut. A novel by the Abbé Prévost (1731). It is the history of a young man, the Chevalier des Grieux, possessed of many brilliant and some estimable qualities, but, being intoxicated by a fatal attachment to Manon, a girl who prefers luxury to faithful love, he is hurried into the violation of every rule of conduct. The novel is the basis of an opera by PUCCINI entitled Manon Lescaut (1893) and Massenet's more frequently performed Manon.

Manrico. In Verdi's opera, IL TROVATORE, the supposed son of Azucena the gipsy, but in reality the son of Garzia.

Mansart or Mansard, François (1598-1666). French architect. Designer of many buildings in Paris. Credited with invention of the mansard roof, which at any rate owes its general use to him.

Man's Fate. American translation of La Condition Humaine, the best-known novel of André MALRAUX (1933). It deals with revolutionary and counter-revolutionary activities in China in 1926 and dramatically portrays the psychology of the revolutionists, who live and die in violence, forcing from each moment as much as they can and eschewing all thought of a personal future, in accordance with their belief that their acts of terrorism and their individual sacrifices will win a better future for society.

Mansfield, Katherine. Pseudonym of Kathleen, née Beauchamp, Murry (1888-1923). British short-story writer, born in New Zealand, a cousin of the novelist ELIZABETH and wife of J. M. MURRY. She is considered one of the most important short-story writers of the 20th century. Her work, influenced by that of Anton CHEKHOV, is marked by psychological penetration, sensitivity of perception, a particular sympathy for and understanding of children, irony and pathos, a subtlety of technique by which the significance of the story is compressed in and often implied by a single incident, and a precise, delicate style at times suggestive of the poetry of IMAGISM. It has been pointed out that the popular type of "sketch" standardized by the magazine THE NEW YORKER is derived in large degree from the work of Katherine Mansfield. Her books of short stories include: In a German Pension (1911); Bliss (1920); The Garden Party (1922); The Doves' Nest (1923); Something Childish (1924), known in the U.S. as The Little Girl; The Aloe (1930). BLISS, THE DOVES' NEST, and THE GARDEN PARTY are among her best-known single stories. Novels and Novelists (1930) is a collection of her criticism, and her Journal (1927), Letters (1929), and Scrapbook (1939) were edited by her husband.

Katherine Mansfield was extremely sensitive and at times morbid in temperament and suffered from tuberculosis, from which she eventually died, during the latter years of her life. She never fully recovered from the shock of her brother's death in World War I. She was associated with Murry in editing a number of LITTLE MAGAZINES, including The Blue Review, Signature (for which she wrote under the name of Matilda Barry), and the Athenaeum. She was also a friend of D. H. LAWRENCE, Aldous HUXLEY, and Virginia WOOLF, and is said to be represented by the characters of Gudrun in Lawrence's Women in Love and Beatrice Gilray in Huxley's POINT COUNTER POINT.

Mansfield, The Miller of. The old ballad (given in Percy's Reliques) tells how Henry II, having lost his way, meets a miller, who takes him home to his cottage. Next morning the courtiers reach the King, and the miller discovers the rank of his guest, who, in merry mood, knights his host as "Sir John Cockle." On St. George's Day, Henry II invites the miller, his wife and son, to a royal banquet, and after being amused by their rustic ways, makes Sir John "overseer of Sherwood Forest, with a salary of £300 a year."

Mansfield, Richard (1854-1907). English actor, born in Berlin. On English stage (1877-1882); on American stage (from 1882). Famous as Cyrano in Rostand's CYRANO DE BERGERAC and the dual rôles in Stevenson's DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE.

Mansfield Park. A novel by Jane AUSTEN (1814). Due to the persuasions of the hateful bullying "Aunt Norris," perhaps the most celebrated character in the book, the heroine, Fanny Price, is adopted into the family of her rich uncle, Sir Thomas Bertram. Here she falls in love with her cousin, Edmund Bertram, a young clergyman. Fanny's life as a poor relation is anything but agreeable; she becomes accustomed to the comforts of life but is constantly patronized and taken advantage of. Edmund is uniformly kind to Fanny, but is irresistibly drawn to Mary Crawford, a girl of decidedly worldly interests who mocks at the church, but nevertheless returns his love. Her brother Harry Crawford makes love to Maria Bertram and, after Maria's marriage, to Fanny, but finally elopes with Maria. This incident causes Edmund to break away from Mary Crawford, and he and Fanny are now happily married.

Manship, Paul (1885-). American sculptor. Bronze statue of Lincoln as a young man in Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Mantolini, Madame. A fashionable milliner in Dickens' NICHOLAS NICKLEBY, near Cavenish Square. Her husband, whose original name was "Muntle," noted for his white teeth, minced oaths, and gorgeous morning gown, is an exquisite man-doll, who lives on his wife's earnings, and ultimately goes to "the demnition bow-wows." Hence a husband supported in luxury by his wife is a Mantalin.

Mantegna, Andrea (1431-1506). Italian historical painter and engraver of great influence on Raphael and the entire subsequent development of Italian renaissance art as also on Dürer and Holbein. Decorated the Belvedere Chapel in Rome at the behest of Pope Innocent VIII; executed murals at Padua; etc. Some of his cartoons are in Hampton Court, the Louvre, the National Gallery in London, the Vienna Museum, the Venice Academy, the New York Historical Society collection, and the Metropolitan Museum of New York.

Mantell, Robert Bruce (1854-1928). Scottish-born actor. In American melodramas (from 1884) and later in Shakespearean rôles.

Man that Corrupted Hadleyburg, The. A story by Mark TWAIN (1899), in which greed corrupts an entire town.

Mantle, (Robert) Burns (1873-1948). American journalist and dramatic critic. Editor (from 1919) of Best Plays and Year Book of the Drama in America.

Mantle of Fidelity. A curious garment described in the old ballad The Boy and the Mantle in PERCY's Reliques "which would become no wife that was not leal." Queen GUINEVERE tries it, but it changes from green to red, and red to black, and seems rent into shreds. Sir Kay's lady tries it, but fares no better; others follow, but only Sir Cradock's wife can wear it. The theme is a very common one in old story, and was used by Spenser in the incident of FLORIMEL's girdle.

Mantrap. A novel by Sinclair LEWIS (1926).

Mantuan Bard. See under BARD.

Manu. Literally, "man." In Hindu mythology, one of a class of progenitors of mankind. The seventh Manu, from whom stem all men now living, is comparable to Noah in that he survived the deluge in an ark.

Manuel, Count. The hero of Cabell's FIGURES OF EARTH. In the Preface the author quotes an imaginary historian as commenting, "Where Manuel faces the world, JURGEN considers the universe . . . Dom Manuel is the Achilles of Poictesme as Jurgen is its Ulysses." Manuel is the father of Melicent, the heroine of DOMNEI, of Dorothy la Desirée, beloved by Jurgen in the novel of that title, and of Ettare, the heroine of THE CREAM OF THE JEST, as well as of Emmerich, his successor in POICTESME; through his love affair with ALIANORA he is supposedly the ancestor of the Plantagenet kings of England.

Manutius, Aldus. Italian form Aldo or Teobaldo Manucci (1450-1515). Italian printer and classical scholar. Credited with twenty-eight editions of classical authors and extensive introductions to each. Brought out the first book printed in Greek letters and was the first to use Italic type. See ALDINE EDITIONS.

Man Who Died Twice, The. Long blank-verse poem by Edwin Arlington ROBINSON (1924).

Man Who Laughs, The (L'Homme qui Rit). A historical romance by Victor HUGO (1869). In childhood the hero, Gwynplaine, was deliberately disfigured by cuts made upward from both sides of his mouth as far as the ears, which left him a monster with a horrible grin. Strangely enough, it is his very deformity that appeals to the fancy of the Duchess Josiana, a wilful, temperamental being who scorns the love of ordinary men and desires "either a god or a monster." Gwynplaine is loved also by the blind Dea whom he found in the snow in her infancy and who has grown up to trust and adore him. Only in her love does he find the wholesome element he needs to withstand Josiana; when she dies, he takes his own life.

Man Who Was, The. One of KIPLING's best-known short stories, published in Life's Handicap (1891) and later dramatized. The man is a mere "limp heap of rags" who responds to a number, speaks in disconnected fashion of life in Siberia, and seems vaguely to recognize the regiment of the White Hussars. In the regimental records under date of "Sebastopol 1854," Lt. Austin Limmason is marked missing. The man recognizes his name but lives only a few days.

Man Who Would Be King, The. A short story by Rudyard KIPLING in his volume called The Phantom Rickshaw (1889). By natural white man's shrewdness Daniel Dravot sets himself up as god and king in Kaftristan, dividing the kingdom with his servant, Peachey Carnehan. A woman discovers that he is human and betrays him. Peachey escapes to tell the tale, but Dravot is killed.

Man with the Hoe, The. The best-known poem of Edwin MARKHAM inspired by MILLET's celebrated painting of that title.

Man Without a Country, The. A story by E. E. HALE (1863), concerning Philip Nolan, an apocryphal U.S. Navy officer involved in the treason of Aaron Burr. His expressed desire never to hear the name of his country again is carried out, and for fifty-five years Nolan goes from one vessel to another in his lonely exile, never permitted to see a newspaper or book containing any reference to the United States or to hear it mentioned in conversation. There is a sequel entitled Philip Nolan's Friends. Walter DAMROSCH composed an opera on this subject and with this name.

Manxman, The. A novel by Sir Hall CAINE (1894). A Manxman is a native of the Isle of Man.

Manzoni, Alessandro Francesco Tommaso Antonio (1785-1873). Italian poet, novelist and dramatist of the romantic school. Best-known for his novel I Promessi Sposi (1825-1826; translated into English as The Betrothed Lovers), a historical study of 17th-century Milan, which Sir Walter Scott called "the best ever written." Giuseppe VERDI honored his memory in his Manzoni Requiem (1874).

Maori. Literally, "native, indigenous." One of the aborigines of New Zealand, a brave and warlike people, noted for their poetic nature myths. The Maori were formerly cannibals.

Mao Tse-tung (1893-). Chinese scholar and Communist leader. President of the first Chinese Peasants' Union (1927); took part in the "Long March" (1934-1936); leader of drive against Nationalists.

Map, Walter (1140?-?1209). English medieval author and satirist. Member of the court of Henry II and archdeacon of Oxford (from 1197). Author of De Nugis Curialium (Courtiers' Triflings; ca. 1182-1192), a satirical notebook of daily events and court gossip. He has been credited with the linking of the Arthurian legends to the stories of the Holy Grail and is reputed to be the author of a lost Latin romance of Lancelot du Lac on which later accounts are based. Also an older version of the drinking song, "Meum est propositum in tabernam mori," is attributed to him.

Maqueda. One of the names of the Queen of SHEBA.

maquis. French guerrilla fighters in the underground resistance movement in France during the German occupation in World War II. The word stands properly for the copselike growths of shrubs along the Mediterranean coasts, which are like our chaparral and suggest hiding.

Mar, Helen. Heroine of Jane Porter's SCOTISH CHIEFS. She is carried off to France but is rescued by Bruce and William Wallace.

Marah, (Heb., "bitter"), the waters of. Bitterness of spirit, from the spring into which the powdered dust of the GOLDEN CALF was put as a punishment for the Children of Israel.

maranatha (Syriac, "the Lord will come"—i.e., to execute judgment). A word which, with ANATHEMA, occurs in 1 Cor. xvi. 22, and has been erroneously taken as a form of anathematizing among the Jews; hence, used for a terrible curse.

Marat, Jean Paul (1743-1793). Swiss-born French politician. At the beginning of the Revolution he published the paper L'Ami du Peuple (1798), in which he advocated a republican form of government. With DANTON and ROBESPIERRE he overthrew the GIRONDISTS. Assassinated in his bath by Charlotte CORDAY (July 13, 1793).

Marathon. A plain in Attica, northeast of Athens. Site of the Greek victory over the Persians (490 B. C.) which ended Darius' Greek ambitions. According to tradition, the news of the victory was brought back to Athens by a runner whose feat is commemorated in the modern marathon races, usually fixed at 26 miles, 385 yards.

Marble, Alice (1913-). American tennis champion.

Marble Faun, The. A novel by Nathaniel HAWTHORNE (1860). The scene is laid in Rome. The "faun" is Count Donatello, a happy care-free being who resembles the Faun of Praxiteles and who might, the author half suggests, be found to have furry ears if the wind should blow his curls aside. Enraged because the beautiful and mysterious art student, Miriam, is constantly annoyed by a monk named Antonio, who seems to have some evil hold on her, in an impulsive moment Donatello throws Antonio over the Tarpeian rock. The secret knowledge of crime slowly changes the light-hearted Donatello into a wretched victim of conscience, and he finally gives himself up to justice. Meantime another art student, Hilda, who has accidentally witnessed the murder which she can neither reveal nor forget, endures untold torments from her New England conscience and finds it impossible to work until she at last seeks relief in the Catholic confessional. Hilda marries Kenyon, a New England sculptor who has been a spectator of much of the drama, and Miriam disappears.

Marc, Franz. See BLAUE REITER.

Marcella. (1) A fair shepherdess whose story forms an episode in DON QUIXOTE (II. ii. 4, 5). She is "the most beautiful creature ever sent into the world," and every bachelor who sees her falls madly in love with her, but she declines every suit. One of her lovers, Chrysostom, the favorite of the village, dies of disappointed hope, and the shepherds write on his tombstone: "From Chrysostom's fate, learn to abhor Marcella, that common enemy of man, whose beauty and cruelty are both in the extreme."

(2) A novel by Mrs. Humphry WARD (1894). The heroine refuses to marry the young nobleman Aldous Raeburn because of her ardor for social reform, but changes her mind after some years spent in London. In a sequel, Sir George Tressady (1896), Aldous Raeburn has become a prominent statesman. Tressady falls in love with Marcella, but she succeeds in keeping the relationship one of friendship only.

Marcellus. In Shakespeare's HAMLET, an officer of Denmark, to whom the ghost of the murdered King appears before it presents itself to Prince Hamlet.

march. Boundary. Cf. German Ostmark, etc. In English history, the Welsh marches.

March, Basil and Isabel. Prominent characters in several of the novels of W. D. HOWELLS, notably in THEIR WEDDING JOURNEY, A HAZARD OF NEW FORTUNES and THEIR SILVER WEDDING JOURNEY. According to D. G. COOKE, "Howells has incarnated in them his ideal of the normal male and female." Basil March is an American journalist of pleasant, kindly, unassuming nature with a dryly humorous outlook on life. His wife, Isabel, for all her illogical and "contrary" feminine traits and her dangerous love of match-making, is a warm-hearted woman, combining both idealism and common sense. The Marches are sufficiently detached in temper to allow the author to use them, for the most part, as observers and commentators on the life about them, but they assume a somewhat more active rôle in A Hazard of New Fortunes, in which Basil goes to New York to become the editor of Every Other Week.

March, Fredric (1897-). American actor. Married (since 1927) to the actress Florance Eldridge (1901-). Acted in The Skin of Our Teeth; A Bell for Adano; also in motion pictures. Received award of Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences (1932).

March, Joseph Moncure (1899-). American poet; author of the "hard-boiled" staccato stories in verse The Wild Party (1928) and The Set-Up (1928).

March, Meg, Jo, Beth and Amy. The four girl heroines of Louisa May Alcott's LITTLE WOMEN.

March, Ursula. The heroine of Craik's JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN.

March, William. Pseudonym of William Edward March Campbell (1894-). American novelist and short-story writer. Company K (1933); Some Like Them Short (1939); etc.

Marchbanks, Eugene. An ardent young poet in Shaw's CANDIDA.

March hare. See under HARE.

Marchioness, the. The half-starved girl-of-all-work in Dickens' OLD CURIOSITY SHOP. As she has no name of her own Dick Swiveller calls her the "Marchioness" when she plays cards with him, because it seems "more real and pleasant" to play with a Marchioness than with a domestic slavey. When Dick Swiveller is turned away and falls sick, the Marchioness nurses him, and he afterwards marries her.

Marcia. Heroine of Addison's drama Cato (1713), beloved both by Sempronius and by Juba.

Marck, William de la. In Scott's QUENTIN DURWARD, a French nobleman, called "The Wild Boar of Ardenne" (Sanglier des Ardenne).

Marco Bozzaris. A heroic ballad by Fitz-Greene Halleck (Am., 1790-1820) on the last battle of the Greek hero, Bozzaris. It begins:

At midnight, in his guarded tent
The Turk was dreaming of the hour
When Greece, her knee in supplication bent
Should tremble at his power.

Marco Millions. A play concerning Marco Polo by Eugene O'NEILL (1928).

Marconi, Marchese Guglielmo (1874-1937). Italian electrical engineer and inventor. First successful experiments with wireless telegraphy (1895); erected first wireless station near La Spezia, Italy (1897); sent and received signals across English Channel (1898) and across the Atlantic (1901). Nobel prize for physics (1909; with K. F. Braun).

Marco Polo. See MESSER MARCO POLO; POLO, MARCO.

Marcus Aurelius. Original name Marcus Annianus Verus (121-180). Roman emperor (161-180) and stoic philosopher. Author (in Greek) of the collection of philosophical precepts The Meditations of Marcus Antoninus.

Mardi. An allegorical romance by Herman MELVILLE (1849).

Mardi Gras (Fr., "fat Tuesday"). The last day of the Lent carnival in France, Shrove Tuesday, which is celebrated with all sorts of festivities. In Paris a fat ox used to be paraded through the principal streets, crowned with a fillet, and accompanied by mock priests and a band of tin instruments in imitation of a Roman sacrificial procession. In the U.S., New Orleans is famed for its Mardi Gras celebration.

mare clausum (Lat., "a closed sea"). A sea that is closed by a certain political power or certain political powers to the unrestricted trade of other nations, as the Black Sea; the free and open sea is called mare liberum. John SELDEN in 1635 published a treatise with the title Mare Clausum.

Mare Nostrum. A novel by Vicente BLASCO IBÁÑEZ (1918). The title means "our sea," a phrase used by Italians of the Mediterranean.

Margaret. The heroine of Goethe's FAUST. Faust first encounters her on her return from church, falls in love with her, and seduces her. Overcome with shame, Margaret destroys the infant to which she gives birth, and is condemned to death. Faust attempts to save her, and, gaining admission to her cell, finds her huddled up on a bed of straw, singing wild snatches of ancient ballads, her reason faded, and her death at hand. Faust tries to persuade the mad girl to flee with him, but in vain. MEPHISTOPHELES, passionless and grim, arrives to hurry them both to their spiritual ruin, but Margaret calls upon the judgment seat of God. When Mephistopheles says, "She is judged," voices from above answer, "Is saved." She ascends to heaven, as Faust disappears with Mephistopheles. Margaret is often called by the pet diminutive Gretchen, and in Gounod's opera, Faust (1859), and Boito's opera, Mefistofele (1868), both based on Goethe's Faust, she appears as Marguerite.

Margaret, Lady. Heroine of Scott's LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL.

Margaret, St. See under SAINTS.

Margaret of Anjou (1430-1482). Queen of King Henry VI of England. She appears in Scott's ANNE OF GEIERSTEIN and presents herself, disguised as a mendicant, to Philipson, i.e., the Earl of Oxford.

Margaret of Valois. Known as Queen Margot (1553-1615). Daughter of Henry II of France and Catherine de Médicis. Married (1572) Henry of Navarre (later Henry IV of France) just before St. Bartholomew's day. Divorced (1599). Known as much for her beauty and learning as for her loose living. Author of Mémoires (first published 1628) and Lettres.

Margaret Ogilvy. A biography of his mother by J. M. BARRIE (1896). He calls her by her maiden name, according to the old Scotch custom.

Margause, see MORGAUSE.

Marguerite. Heroine of Gounod's opera Faust and Boito's Mefistofele; the same as MARGARET in Goethe's Faust.

marguerite des marguerites (the pearl of pearls). So François called his sister, Marguerite de Valois (1492-1549), authoress of the Heptameron. She married twice: first, the Duc d'Alençon, and then Henri d'Albret, king of Navarre, and was the grandmother of Henry IV of France. She is a prominent character in Meyerbeer's opera, THE HUGUENOTS.

Sylvius de la Haye published (1547) a collection of her poems with the title Marguerites de la marguerite des princesses, etc.

Margutte. In Pulci's MORGANTE MAGGIORE, a low-minded, vulgar giant, ten feet high, with enormous appetite and of the grossest sensuality. He dies of laughter on seeing a monkey pulling on his boots. Leigh HUNT refers to him as the first unmitigated blackguard in history and the greatest no less than the first.

Maria. (1) In Sterne's SENTIMENTAL JOURNEY, a fair, quick-witted, amiable maiden, whose banns were forbidden by the curate who published them, in consequence of which she lost her reason, and used to sit by the roadside near Moulines, playing vesper hymns to the Virgin all day long.

(2) In Shakespeare's LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST, a lady in attendance on the Princess of France. Longaville, a young lord in the suite of Ferdinand, King of Navarre, asks her to marry him, but she defers her answer for twelve months.

(3) In Shakespeare's TWELFTH NIGHT, the waiting-woman of the Countess Olivia.

(4) In Cervantes' DON QUIXOTE, Sancho Panza's wife, Maria Theresa, is sometimes called Maria and sometimes Theresa.

(5) In Ernest Hemingway's FOR WHOM THE BELL TOLLS, a young Spanish girl accompanying the band of guerrilla soldiers in the mountains who cannot forget her horrifying experiences in the war, during which her mother and father were killed and she herself was raped by the Fascist soldiers. She and Robert JORDAN fall in love, and she is completely devoted to him, responding intensely to his slightest desire.

Maria, Black. See under BLACK.

Maria Chapdelaine. See HÉMON, LOUIS.

Maria Cristina (1858-1929). Austrian princess, wife of Alfonso XII of Spain, and queen regent (1885-1902) for her son Alfonso XIII. During her regency the Spanish-American War (1898) deprived Spain of her American possessions.

Maria d'Aquino. Object of the love of BOCCACCIO, who first saw her in church and whom she later betrayed. All of his works up to the Ninfale Fiesolano were inspired in one way or another by this love affair, and the character of Criseida in IL FILOSTRATO, the source of Chaucer's version of the TROILUS legend, is considered to have been drawn to a great extent from Maria herself. See also FIAMMETTA.

Mariage de Figaro, Le, ou La folle Journée à la Mode. A comedy by Beaumarchais (1784), the story of which is a continuation of THE BARBER OF SEVILLE and forms the basis of Mozart's Nozze di Figaro. See FIGARO.

Mariage forcé, Le (The Enforced Marriage). A comedy by MOLIÈRE (1664) in which Louis XIV appeared as a gipsy. The chief character is SGANARELLE.

Mariamne. A Jewish princess, daughter of Alexander and wife of HEROD THE GREAT. Mariamne was the mother of Alexander and Aristobulus, with both of whom she was put to death in a fit of jealousy by Herod, who then fell into a state of morbid madness in which he fancied he saw Mariamne and heard her asking for her sons. This story has been made the subject of several tragedies: Alexandre Hardy's Mariamne (1610); Pierre Tristan l'Ermite's Mariamne (1637); Voltaire's Mariamne (1724); and in more modern times, Friedrich Hebbel's Herodes und Mariamne (Gen., 1850); and Stephen Phillips' Herod and Mariamne (Engl., 1900).

Mariana. In Shakespeare's MEASURE FOR MEASURE, a lovely and lovable lady, married to Angelo, deputy Duke of Vienna, by civil contract, but not by religious rites. After he abandons her, she passes her sorrowful hours "at the moated grange." Thus the Duke says to Isabella, Haste you speedily to Angelo. . . . I will presently to St. Luke's. There, at the moated grange, resides the dejected Mariana — Act iii. sc. 1.

TENNYSON wrote a poem in two parts, Mariana and Mariana in the South (1830-1832) enlarging upon the woes of the dejected Mariana at the moated grange.

Marianne or Mary Anne. The French republic personified. Mary Anne associations were secret republican societies in France. The name comes about thus: Ravaillac, the assassin of Henri IV, was honored by the red republicans as "patriot, deliverer, and martyr." This regicide was incited to his deed of blood by reading the celebrated treatise De rege et regio institutione by Mariana the Jesuit, published 1599, about ten years previously. As Mariana inspired Ravaillac "to deliver France from her tyrant" the name was attached to the republican party generally. Marianne was also a statuette to which the republicans of France paid homage. It symbolized the republic, and was arrayed in a red Phrygian cap. This statuette was sold at earthenware shops, and in republican clubs, enthroned in glory, and sometimes carried in procession to the tune of the MARSEILLAISE.

Marianne. (1) In Goethe's WILHELM MEISTER, an actress with whom Wilhelm is in love.

(2) The heroine of Turgenev's VIRGIN SOIL.

Marianne Dashwood. In Jane Austen's SENSE AND SENSIBILITY.

Maria Theresa. In German Maria Theresia (1717-1780). Archduchess of Austria and queen of Hungary and Bohemia; daughter of Emperor Charles VI; married (1736) Francis Stephen, Duke of Lorraine (from 1745 to 1765 Francis I, Holy Roman Emperor). Her claim to the hereditary Hapsburg estates on the basis of the PRAGMATIC SANCTION involved her with France, Prussia and Spain in the War of Austrian Succession (1740-1748), which ended with her losing only Silesia to Frederick the Great of Prussia (1748). She strengthened Austria by financial and other reforms, and sought in vain to recover Silesia in the Seven Years' War (1756-1763). Joseph II, Holy Roman Emperor (1765-1790), and MARIE ANTOINETTE were among her numerous children. Maria Theresa conceived of her duties as a ruler in a spirit of maternal benevolence. Her peoples reacted by conceiving of her as a great empress. Her memory is alive in innumerable songs.

Marie Antoinette (1755-1793). Queen of France, wife of Louis XVI. As daughter of Maria Theresa of Austria, sought Austria's aid against French Revolutionaries, and counseled Louis XVI to attempt the flight from France (1791). Imprisoned with the king and their children, found guilty of treason, and guillotined (October 16, 1793). Her personal charm, her naive ignorance of practical life, her extravagance, and her frank and courageous honesty contributed to her unpopularity at court and with the masses of the French people. When she was told that a revolution was threatening because the people had no bread, she is said to have replied, "Why don't they eat cake?" On the part she played in the famous necklace affair, see under DIAMOND. She is a much-treated subject in world literature. Cf., e.g., Marie Antoinette (1932) by Stefan Zweig.

Marie de France (fl. ca. 1165). French medieval author, thought to have been a half-sister of King Henry I. She is famous for her LAIS, or short tales of courtly tone, each of which presents a simple situation chosen from classical, romance, or folklore sources, in clear, graceful, and charming style. Her best-known lais are The Lai of Gugemar; The Lai of Yonec; The Lai of Eliduc; The Lai of the Thorn; The Lai of the Nightingale. Marie also wrote a collection of Fables and L'Espurgatoire de Saint Patrice, a French version of ST. PATRICK'S PURGATORY. With HÉLOISE and ROSWITHA she is regarded as one of the few outstanding women writers of the Middle Ages.

Marie de Médicis (1573-1642). Italian princess, second wife of Henry IV of France (from 1600). After his murder, regent for her son Louis XIII (1610-1617). Forced to leave France (1631) by RICHELIEU, against whom she continued plotting until her death.

Marie de Verneuil, see VERNEUIL, MARIE DE.

Marigold, Dr., see DR. MARIGOLD'S PRESCRIPTIONS.

marimba. A kind of xylophone used in Africa and Central America. Also, a modern concert xylophone developed from it.

Marina. The heroine of an Elizabethan drama, PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE, the daughter of Pericles, long mourned by him as dead.

Marinel. In Spenser's Faerie Queene, the beloved of FLORIMEL the Fair.

Marinetti, Emilio Filippo Tommaso (1876-1944). Italian poet who founded the futurist movement in literature (1911). Joined the Fascist party (1919). Wrote Futurismo e Fascismo (1924); etc.

Marinism. Excessive literary ornateness and affectation. So named from Giambattista Marino (1569-1625), the Neapolitan poet, famous for his whimsical comparisons, pompous and overwrought descriptions, and "conceits."

Marino Faliero. A tragedy by BYRON (1820). Historically, Faliero was the forty-ninth doge of Venice, elected 1354. He joined a conspiracy to overthrow the republic, under the hope and promise of being made a king, but was betrayed by Bertram, one of the conspirators, and was beheaded on the "Giant's Staircase," the place where the doges were wont to take the oath of fidelity. In Byron's tragedy we are told that the patrician, Michel Steno, having behaved indecently to women at a civic banquet, was kicked off the solajo by order of the doge. In revenge he wrote a scurrilous libel against the dogaressa; and the doge joined the conspiracy because he was furious with the Council of Forty for condemning the young patrician to only one month's imprisonment.

Mario and the Magician (Mario und der Zauberer). A novelette by Thomas MANN (1930) which tells of the visit made by a crippled magician to an Italian seaside resort and the tragic events that take place when he hypnotizes a young peasant. The story is considered to be an allegory of the effects of the system of Fascism on the Italian people.

Marion, Francis (1732?-1795). American Revolutionary general; known as "the Swamp Fox" because of his skill in retreating—Indian fashion—to swamps and forests after quick and effective raids on the British forces. Participated in the battle of Eutaw Springs. See also KATHERINE WALTON.

Marion Delorme. A tragedy by Victor Hugo (1831). The titular heroine, Marion, was a courtesan in the reign of Louis XIII. In the drama, she is shown in the throes of a genuine love for a young man named Didier, who is ignorant of her past. Many complications arise from the interventions of the Marquis de Saverney, a former lover, and the affair ends tragically.

Maritain, Jacques (1882-). French philosopher. Strongly attracted by the philosophy of St. Thomas Aquinas, he became a Roman Catholic (1906) and is recognized as the leading neo-Thomist of the contemporary world. He has played a leading role in the Catholic renaissance in France and has been called "the most interesting living revivalist." After the fall of France (1940) he came to America as professor at the Institute of Medieval Studies in Toronto and visiting professor at Columbia and Princeton.

Marius. Cosette's lover and husband in Hugo's LES MISÉRABLES.

Marius the Epicurean. A philosophic romance by Walter PATER (1885). The hero is a young Roman noble of the time of Marcus Aurelius, and the book records his "sensations and ideas" rather than outward events. Though he makes no formal profession of Christianity, Marius is greatly drawn to it through his friend Cornelius and his own high principles and deeply religious nature. His death is of such a nature that the Christian Church looks upon him as a martyr.

Marivaux, Pierre Carlet de Chamblain de (1688-1763). French novelist and playwright. Best-known for his novel La Vie de Marianne (The Life of Marianne; 1731-1741) in 11 volumes, in which, as Crébillon describes it, "the characters not only say everything that they have done and everything that they have thought, but everything that they would have liked to think but did not." His peculiar style gave rise to the term "marivaudage," now used chiefly in a derogatory sense.

Marjorie Daw. A celebrated short story by T. B. ALDRICH (1873). To amuse his sick friend, John Flemming, Edward Delaney writes letter after letter about the charms of his neighbor, Marjorie Daw. Flemming recovers and comes to pay court to the lady with surprising consequences. (She proves to be nonexistent).

Mark, King. A king of Cornwall in the Arthurian romances, Sir Tristan or TRISTRAM's uncle. He lived at Tintagel, and is principally remembered for his treachery and cowardice, and as the husband of Iseult or Isolde the Fair, who was passionately enamored of his nephew, Tristan.

Mark, St. See under SAINTS.

Markham, Edwin Charles (1852-1940). American poet, best known for his poem The Man with the Hoe, published in The Man with the Hoe, And Other Poems (1899), which presents in social protest a picture of a farmer made brutal by hard work and was suggested by a painting by MILLET. This poem was extremely popular. Lincoln, And Other Poems (1901) is another popular collection of Markham's work, which is not considered by critics to be distinguished by any important literary value.

Markham, Gervase (1568?-1637). English writer on war, horsemanship, forestry, cookery, hawking, etc., and author of poems and plays. Remembered especially for his versified account (1595) of Sir Richard Grenville's heroic naval battle against the Spanish fleet—a theme also treated by TENNYSON—and his continuation of Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia in The English Arcadia (1607).

Markheim. A short story by R. L. STEVENSON in his volume, The Merry Men (1887), a tale of gradual degeneration and of last-minute repentance. The hero, Markheim, is driven by conscience to confess that he murdered a man for his money in cold blood.

Markievicz, Countess de. Constance Georgine, née Gore-Booth (1876-1927). Irish politician, orator, and leader. Involved in the Irish Easter Rebellion (1916); sentenced to death but later amnestied (1917). Supporter of Eamon de Valera and Minister of Labor in his cabinet, member of Dail Eireann (1922, 1923, 1927).

Markleham, Mrs. In Dickens' DAVID COPPERFIELD, the mother of Annie. Devoted to pleasure, she always maintained that she indulged in it for "Annie's sake." Mrs. Markleham is generally referred to as "the old soldier."

Marko, Prince. In George Meredith's TRAGIC COMEDIANS, a rival of Dr. Alvan for the affections of the heroine Clotilde von Rüdiger.

Marko Kraljevic. Literally, "Marko, son of the king." Serbian national hero, prominent also in Bulgarian and Rumanian folklore, who lived, according to popular tradition, 300 years fighting all the time against foreign oppressors, especially the Turks. Historians give him about sixty years (1335?-1394).

Mark Rutherford, The Autobiography of. A novel by William Hale White ("Reuben Shapcott") (1881) which, with its sequel Mark Rutherford's Deliverance (1885), presents the story of an honest, idealistic young minister tormented by intellectual scepticism, his break with the church, and the gradual working out of his ideals in a life of social service.

Marks, Jeannette Augustus (1875-). American poet, playwright, and educator. Established (1916) at Mt. Holyoke the Play and Poetry Shop Talk, a forum for American poets and dramatists. Her Welsh plays have been performed in the United States, Great Britain, and even in Japan.

Marks, Percy (1891-). American novelist and educator. Noted for The Plastic Age (1924), a somewhat outspoken novel of college life; etc.

Marlborough, 1st Duke of, see CHURCHILL, JOHN.

Marlbrough, see MALBROUK.

Marley, Jacob. In Dickens' CHRISTMAS CAROL, the partner of SCROOGE, the grasping, cheating "old sinner." He was dead before the story begins, but his ghost contributes to the conversion of Scrooge.

Marlow. The narrator in several of Joseph CONRAD's tales and novels, notably LORD JIM, Youth, CHANCE and Heart of Darkness. The reader sees the events of the story through the eyes of this detached yet keenly interested observer and shares his effort to understand what is behind mere externals and his concern over the happiness of the human beings involved.

Marlow, Sir Charles. In Goldsmith's SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER, the kind-hearted old friend of Squire HARDCASTLE.

Young Marlow. Son of Sir Charles. "Among women of reputation and virtue he is the modestest man alive; but his acquaintances give him a very different character among women of another stamp" (Act i. sc. 1). Having mistaken HARDCASTLE's house for an inn, and Miss HARDCASTLE for the barmaid, he is quite at his ease, and makes love freely. When fairly caught, he discovers that the supposed "inn" is a private house, and the supposed barmaid is the Squire's daughter, but as the ice of his shyness is broken, he has no longer any difficulty in loving according to his station.

Marlowe, Christopher (1564-1593). English poet and playwright, considered the greatest figure in Elizabethan drama before Shakespeare. His contributions to the drama are considered to have been the molding of the BLANK VERSE line, formerly stiff and wooden, into a "mighty line" of eloquence and dignity and dramatic power, and the raising of the conventional, academic tragedy of his time, rigidly held within the limitations of the Senecan form, to a level of serious and emotionally gripping art. His dramas usually lack love scenes and comic interest and are concerned with the overweening ambition and desire and subsequent downfall of a single hero. His dramatic poetry is dignified and passionate, his lyric poetry graceful, musical, and warmly sensuous. His plays are TAMBURLAINE THE GREAT (1587); The Tragical History of Doctor Faustus (see FAUST; ca. 1592), the earliest known published version of which is 1604; THE JEW OF MALTA (ca. 1590); EDWARD II (1594); The Tragedy of Dido (1594), written with Thomas NASH; and The Massacre at Paris (ca. 1600). Marlowe is also believed by some scholars to have written parts of Shakespeare's plays Titus Andronicus, Henry VI, and Edward III, the last being attributed to Shakespeare. Marlowe's lyric and narrative poetry includes a translation of Ovid's Amores (ca. 1597); a paraphrase of Musaeus' Hero and Leander, left unfinished at the time of the English poet's death and completed by George Chapman, being published in 1598; a translation of the first book of Lucan's Pharsalia, published in 1600; and the famous Elizabethan lyric Come Live with Me and Be My Love.

Marlowe was the son of a shoemaker, a graduate of Cambridge, and a member of the Earl of Nottingham's theatrical company. He had a wild life and was accused of atheism, being arrested in 1593, although some scholars believe he was in some capacity a spy for the Crown. He was killed by a man named Ingram Frisar in a London tavern during a quarrel about a drinking score.

Marlowe, Julia. Stage name of Sarah Frances Frost (1866–). American actress, noted for her vivid portrayals of Shakespearean heroines. Starred in dramatic rôles (from 1888). Retired (1924). Her second husband was Edward Hugh Sothern. (Her first was Robert Taber.)

Marmion, a Tale of Flodden Field. A romantic narrative poem by Sir Walter Scott (1808). Lord Marmion is betrothed to Constance de Beverley, but he jilts her for Lady Clare, an heiress. Lady Clare is in love with Ralph de Wilton, and therefore rejects Marmion's suit and takes refuge from him in the convent of St. Hilda in Whitby. Constance takes the veil in another convent, but after a time she makes her escape, is captured, and is taken back and buried alive in the walls of a deep cell. Eventually Marmion is slain in the battle of Flodden Field, and Lady Clare is released from the convent and marries her old love, Ralph de Wilton.

Marmontel, Jean François (1723–1799). French author of tragedies, librettos for light operas, the philosophical novel Bélisaire (1767), the historical novel Les Incas (1777), etc. Protégé of Voltaire and contributor to the Encyclopédie.

Call Tullia's ape a marmosyte
And Leda's goose a swan
Thomas Weelkes, Avis or Fantastic Spirits (1608).

Marne. French river. Scene of two important battles in World War I (September 6–10, 1914 and July 15, 1918). For a poetic account of the German defeat at the Marne, cf. G. K. Chesterton's Ballad of St. Barbara.

Marneffe, Mme Valère. One of Balzac's most heartless coquettes, a prominent character in his Cousin Betty. She is used by her friend Lisbeth Fischer to bring unhappiness to the relatives whom Lisbeth secretly hates.

Marnier, Silas, see SILAS MARNER.

Marnix, Philip van. Baron Sint Aldegonde (1538–1598). Flemish writer and statesman, active in the liberation of the Netherlands and the propagation of Protestantism. His De Byencorj der h. Roomscher Kercke (The Beehive of the Holy Church of Rome; 1569) is a fierce and Rabelaisian attack on Catholicism. Putative author of the Dutch national song Wilhelmus van Nassouwen.

Maro. Virgil (70–19 B.C.), whose full name was Publius Virgilius Maro; born on the banks of the river Mincio, at the village of Andes, near Mantua.

Sweet Maro's muse, sunk in inglorious rest,
Had silent slept amid the Mincian reeds
Thomson, Castle of Indolence.

Marocco or Morocco. The name of BANKS' HORSE.

Marot, Clément (1496?–1544). French poet, known for his light and graceful lyrics. He was the first to introduce the SONNET into the French language, and is considered to have helped end the influence of the medieval RHÉTORIQUEURS on French poetry. His best-known works are Temple de Cupido (1515), addressed to Francis I; Enfer (1540); and Saint Cancionnaire (1542), a translation of a number of Biblical psalms, intended to be sung to popular tunes played on the spinet. The Saint Cancionnaire was considered sacrilegious in Roman Catholic France, but was later made a part of the liturgy of the Protestants and became extraordinarily popular. Marot was attached to the court of King Francis I, but because of his Protestant beliefs, half-hearted though they were, he fluctuated in the royal favor, finally being forced to flee to Geneva in 1542.

Marotte. Footman of Gorgibus, in Molière's PRÉCIEUSES RIDICULES, a plain bourgeois, who hates affectation. When the fine ladies of the house try to convert him into a fashionable flunky, and teach him a little grandiloquence, he bluntly tells them he does not understand Latin.

Marpessa. In Greek legend, daughter of Evenus, courted by both Idas and Apollo. When Idas opposed his mortal strength to that of the god and carried her off, Zeus intervened to insure Marpessa the lover of her own choice. Fearing that Apollo would tire of her when she lost her youth, she decided in favor of Idas. Stephen PHILLIPS (1868–1915) wrote a poem called Marpessa.

Marphurius. In Molière's MARIAGE FORCÉ, a doctor of the Pyrrhonian school. SGANARELLE consults him about his marriage, but the philosopher replies, "Perhaps; it is possible; it may be so; everything is doubtful," until at last Sganarelle beats him, and Marphurius says he will bring action for assault and battery. "Perhaps," replies Sganarelle; "it is possible; it may be so," etc., using the philosopher's own words.

Marplot. The hero of two comedies by Mrs. CENTLIVRE, The Busy Body (1709) and Marplot in Lisbon (1711). The character is to some extent based on the heroes in Sir Martin Marfall, by Dryden, and Sir Martin Marplot, by William Cavendish, Duke of Newcastle, both in turn adapted from Molière's L'Étourdi. Marplot is a blundering, good-natured, meddling young man, very inquisitive, too officious by half, and always bungling whatever he interferes with:

That unlucky dog Marplot . . . is ever doing mischief, and yet (to give him his due) he never designs it. This is some blundering adventure, wherein he thought to show his friendship, as he calls it.—The Busy Body, III 5.

Marprelate controversy. The name given to the vituperative paper war (1589), in which Puritan pamphleteers attacked the Church of England under the pseudonym of "Martin Marprelate." Thomas Cooper, Bishop of Winchester, defended the Church; the chief of the "Martinists" were Udall, Throckmorton, Penry, and Barrow.

Marquand, John Phillips (1893–). American novelist, best-known for his satirical studies of upper-class New Englanders struggling to maintain their aristocratic, Puritan standards in the 20th century. These are contained in The Late George Apley (1937), awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1938; Wickford Point (1939); and H. M. Pulham, Esq. (1941), dramatized as a successful motion picture. Marquand also wrote a number of popular detective stories in which Mr. Moto is the keen-witted hero. Other books are The Unspeaking Gentleman (1922); Four of a Kind (1923); Black Cargo (1925); Lord Timothy Dexter (1925); Warning Hill (1930); Haven's End (1933); Ming Yellow (1935); No Hero (1935); So Little Time (1944).

Marquette, Jacques. Known as Père Marquette (1637–1675). Jesuit missionary in America. Accompanied Jolliet down Wisconsin and Mississippi Rivers and back via Lake Michigan (1673). Voyage et découverte de quelques pays et nations de l'Amérique Septentrionale (1681).

Marquis, Donald Robert Perry (1878–1937). American journalist and humorist, known for his columns The Sun Dial in the New York Sun and The Lantern in the New York Tribune. Among his best-known humorous and satirical books are THE OLD SOAK (1921), a comedy; ARCHY AND MEHITABEL (1927), and several sequels, a satire on life in the 1920's in terms of a cockroach and a cat; HERMIONE AND HER LITTLE GROUP OF SERIOUS THINKERS (1916); The Revolt of the Oyster (1922), A Variety of People (1929), and Chapters for the Orthodox (1934), collections of stories; The Old Soak's History of the World (1924); The Almost Perfect State (1927); Off the Arm (1930), a novel. He also wrote books of humorous verse and several serious works, including volumes of poetry, dramas, and an autobiographical novel left incomplete at the time of his death, Sons of the Puritans (1939). Cf. Christopher Morley's essay in his Letters of Askance.

Marriage of Figaro, The. See FIGARO.

Marriage of Heaven and Hell, The. The chief prose work of William BLAKE (1790), which presents his negativistic ideas, including the denial of the right of authority, of eternal punishment for sins, and of matter as reality.

Marriage of Loti, The (Le Mariage de Loti). A novel by Pierre LOTI (1880), first published as Rarahu, the name of the Tahitian heroine. The story is the favorite one, with Loti, of a transitory love affair between a European and a beautiful and passionate young native. The pseudonym, Pierre Loti, later adopted by the author, is the name of the hero of this book.

Marriage of the Adriatic. See BRIDE OF THE SEA.

Marriage of William Ashe, The. A political novel by Mrs. Humphry WARD (1905), dealing with the married life of William Ashe and his turbulent, unconventional wife, Kitty. Lady Caroline Lamb is said to have been in some measure the original of Kitty, Lord Melbourne of her devoted husband and Byron of her ardent lover, Geoffrey Cliffe.

Marrow controversy. A memorable struggle in Scotland about 1719 to 1722, between Puritanism and Presbyterianism; so called from Edward Fisher's Marrow of Modern Divinity (1644), a book of ultra-evangelical tendency, which was condemned by the General Assembly in 1720.

Marryat, Captain Frederick (1792–1848). English novelist of the sea, best known for his Mr. Midshipman Easy (1836), Peter Simple (1834) and Masterman Ready (1841).

Mars. The Roman god of war, identified in certain aspects with the Greek Ares. He was also the patron of husbandmen. Camoëns introduces him in the Portuguese epic, THE LUSIAD, as typifying divine fortitude. As Bacchus, the evil demon, is the guardian power of Mohammedanism, so Mars is the guardian of Christianity.

The planet of this name was so called from early times because of its reddish tinge, and under it, says the Compost of Ptholomeus, "is borne thieves and robbers . . . nyght walkers and quarell pykers, bosters, mockers, and skoffers; and these men of Mars causeth warre, and murther, and batayle. They will be gladly smythes or workers of yron . . . lyers, gret swerers . . . He is red and angry . . . a great walker, and a maker of swordes and knyves, and a shedder of mannes blode . . . and good to be a barboure and a blode letter, and to drawe tethe." Among the alchemists, Mars designated iron.

the Mars of Portugal. Alfonso de Albuquerque, Viceroy of India (1452-1515).

Marsay, Count Henri de. A nobleman who appears in several of the novels of Balzac's COMÉDIE HUMAINE, is involved in numerous love affairs with women of the world, and becomes finally the prime minister of Louis Philippe. He has been described as "one of the finest gentlemen and most utter cads in fiction." He was a member of the CÉNACLE.

Marse Chan. A short story by Thomas Nelson PAGE (1884) in Negro dialect. The narrator is a faithful old Southern slave who tells of the effects of the Civil War on the household to which he is attached.

Marseillaise, La. The hymn of the French Revolution. Claude Joseph Rouget de Lisle (1760-1835), an artillery officer in garrison at Strasburg, composed both the words and the music (April 24, 1792) with the title Chant de guerre pour l'armée du Rhin. On July 30, 1792, volunteers from Marseilles entered Paris singing the song, and the Parisians, enchanted with it, called it the Chant des Marseillais and later La Marseillaise. It has often been made use of by later composers, as for instance by Schumann in his music for Heine's poem, The Two Grenadiers.

Marsh, Ngaio (1899-). New Zealand detective-story writer. Her first name is the Maori word for "flowering tree," pronounced Ny-o.

Marsh, "Pink." A city Negro, the hero of George ADE's humorous volume, Pink Marsh (1897). "Pink" made his first appearance in the columns of the Chicago Record.

Marsh, Reginald (1898-). American painter. His paintings of New York City scenes are noteworthy. Illustrator for New York journals.

Marshall, Archibald (1866-1934). English novelist, publisher, and humorist. Author of the Trollopean "Squire Clinton" series (1909-1915). Simple Stories (1927) first appeared in Punch.

Marshall, George Catlett (1880-). American army officer. Chief of staff, U.S. army (1939-1945). Served with A.E.F. in France in World War I. Sent to China on special mission by President Truman (1946). Secretary of State (1947-).

Marshall, John (1755-1835). Chief justice, U.S. Supreme Court (1801-1835). His major decisions established principles of constitutional interpretation.

Marshall, Sylvia. The heroine of Dorothy Canfield's BENT TWIG.

Marshalsea. A prison in Southwark, London, long used as a debtors' prison but abolished in 1842. It is described in Little Dorrit by Charles Dickens whose father had once been consigned to it. The spelling of the name is a folk-etymological interpretation of marshalcy.

Marsh City. Leningrad. See under CITY.

Marshes of Glynn, The. A poem by Sidney LANIER.

Marsiglio, Marsile, or Marsilius. In Carolingian romance, a Saracen king who with the Christian traitor GANELON plots the attack upon ROLAND, under "the tree on which Judas hanged himself." With a force of 600,000 men, divided into three armies, he attacks the paladin and overthrows him, but is in turn overthrown by CHARLEMAGNE, and hanged on the very tree beneath which he arranged the attack. Of the spellings given above, the first is the Italian, the second the French, and the third the English form.

Marston, John (1575?-1634). English Elizabethan dramatist and satirist. Known for his entertaining comedies, as The Malcontent (1604), and his melodramatic tragedies, as The Wonder of Women, or the Tragedy of Sophonisba (1606); etc. Ben JONSON ridiculed him as Crispinus in his Poetaster (1601) for his overlaid melodramatic style.

Marston, Philip Bourke (1850-1887). English poet, blind from early youth. All in All (1875) and Wind Voices (1883) are collections of his poems. He is the subject of an elegy by Swinburne and of Philip My King by Dinah Maria Craik.

Marston Moor. A plain in Yorkshire, England, scene of a decisive battle (July 2, 1644) between the Royalist and Parliamentary and Scotch armies. Prince Rupert, in command of the Royalists, defeated the Scots and was in turn defeated by Oliver Cromwell's picked troops, the Ironsides.

Marsyas. The Phrygian flute-player who challenged Apollo to a contest of skill, and, being beaten by the god, was flayed alive for his presumption. From his blood arose the river so called.

Martano. A braggart in Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, who decoys Origilla from Gryphon. He is a great coward, and flees from the tournament amid the jeers of the spectators. While Gryphon is asleep he steals his armor, goes to King Norandino to receive the honors due to Gryphon, and then quits Damascus with Origilla. Another knight encounters them and brings them back to Damascus, where Martano is committed to the hangman's mercies.

Martel, Charles, see CHARLES MARTEL.

Martello tower. A circular masonry fort.

A-top the cracked martello tower.
Thomas Bailey Aldrich, An Old Castle.

The Italian word martello means hammer, but in Martello tower it is a plausible misinterpretation of the original Mortella, from Cape Mortella in Corsica where a Martello tower repulsed an attack by the British fleet in 1794.

Martext, Sir Oliver. A vicar in Shakespeare's comedy of As You Like It.

Martha. (1) A light opera by FLOTOW (1847), libretto by St. Georges and Friedrich. Disguised as servants, Lady Henrietta, a maid of honor to Queen Anne, and her maid Nancy go to a Country Fair and in fun unwittingly bind themselves out to service for a year with two rich farmers, Lionel and Plunkett by name. When the sheriff decrees that the contract is legal, Henrietta takes the name of Martha, but the two are not very successful as servants. After a gay comedy of errors, they escape. Later, when the love-stricken Lionel becomes the Earl of Derby, another Country Fair is staged, the mystery is cleared up, and all ends happily for the two couples.

(2) In Goethe's FAUST, a friend of Margaret. She makes love to Mephistopheles with great worldly shrewdness. She also appears in Gounod's opera Faust.

Martha, St. See under SAINTS.

martyr (Gr.), simply means a witness, but is applied to one who witnesses a good confession with his blood.

the martyr king. Charles I of England, beheaded January 30, 1649. He was buried at Windsor, and was also called "the White King."

martyr to science. Claude Louis, Count Berthollet (1748-1822), who determined to test in his own person the effects of carbolic acid on the human frame, and died under the experiment.

the first martyr. St. Stephen. See under SAINTS.

the Book of Martyrs, see under ACTS AND MONUMENTS; JOHN FOXE.

Martyrs, Les. A prose epic by CHATEAUBRIAND (1809), dealing with the conversions of the early Christians of the Roman Empire, and their subsequent struggles and martyrdom. The hero is Endore, a young man who travels through the various provinces of the Empire, finding adventure where he goes.

Marvel, Ik. The pseudonym under which Donald Grant Mitchell issued his Reveries of a Bachelor and Dream Life (Am., 1850-1851).

Marvell, Andrew (1621-1678). English poet, a late representative of the METAPHYSICAL POETS, known for his combination of intellectual conceits with lyric grace. During the rule of the Cromwell government, Marvell was assistant to John MILTON, then Latin Secretary of the Commonwealth, and was first elected to Parliament, after which he held public office until his death. Among his best-known poems are The Garden, To His Coy Mistress, and Bermudas, in his early manner; Horatian Ode upon Cromwell's Return from Ireland; and The Last Instructions to a Painter, a verse satire on the Dutch War. In his later years he wrote a number of pamphlets and verse-satires attacking the Restoration government. He was also a defender and admirer of Milton.

Interest in Marvell was revived in the 20th century among English and American poets, largely through the influence of the essays of T. S. ELIOT.

marvellous boy, the. THOMAS CHATTERTON (1753-1770), the poet.

I thought of Chatterton, the marvellous boy,
The sleepless soul, that perished in his pride.
Wordsworth, Resolution and Independence.

Marwood, Alice. In Dickens' DOMBEY AND SON, daughter of an old woman who calls herself Mrs. Brown. When a mere girl, she was concerned in a burglary and was transported. CARKER, manager in the firm of Dombey and Son, seduces her, and both she and her mother determine on revenge. Alice bears a striking resemblance to Edith, Mr. Dombey's second wife.

Marx, Karl (1818-1883). German political philosopher. Expelled from Prussia (1845), he settled in London and developed his theory of socialism; aided the elder LIEBKNECHT and his associates in founding the German Social Democratic Labor Party (1869). His great work Das Kapital (3 vols.; 1867, 1885, 1895) was completed by his collaborator Friedrich ENGELS.

Marxism. The doctrine of philosophical socialism taught by Karl MARX and its modern developments.

Marxism in literature. With the stabilization and prosperity of the Soviet Union, the growth and increasing influence of COMMUNISM and COMMUNIST PARTIES, and the interest in social and economic reform in a period of widespread depression and unemployment, Marxism came to be reflected in the literature of Europe and especially the U.S. during the 1930's. Its most outstanding manifestation was to be found in PROLETARIAN LITERATURE, but a fuller use of its philosophical concepts was made in the fields of criticism and scholarship, where authors of both the past and the present were interpreted in terms of their economic and social backgrounds, systems of technical aesthetics and theories of "ART FOR ART'S SAKE" were attacked, and contemporary authors were estimated according to their treatment of the "class struggle" in their works. In England, leading critics making use of Marxist ideas included Herbert READ, C. DAY LEWIS, and Stephen SPENDER; in the U.S., V. F. CALVERTON, Granville HICKS, Michael Gold, Joseph Freeman, Bernard Smith, and David Daiches. As in proletarian literature, some but by no means all of the critics expressing Marxist ideas were themselves Communists in their political affiliation. The socio-historical method of interpretation, which had a development parallel to Marxism, was applied in their studies of literature by a number of critics and scholars without partisan aims or associations.

In addition to their portrayals of the proletariat, a few poets of the 1930's attempted to embody in their work accurate statements of Marxist theories on history, revolution, and class relationships, which gave their poetry a didactic ring; chief among these were C. DAY LEWIS, W. H. AUDEN, and Hugh MACDIARMID.

Most of the Marxist LITTLE MAGAZINES in the U.S. were organs for proletarian literature, but some were devoted to discussion of the philosophical aspects of Marxism and to the application of its concepts to literature, science, history, and sociology. Included among these and representing opinion of the followers of both TROTSKY and STALIN were Modern Monthly, Partisan Review, Science and Society, and The New Internationalist.

Mary. The mother of Jesus. See under SAINTS.

Little Mary. A euphemism for the stomach; from the play of that name by Sir J. M. BARRIE (1903).

the four Marys. Mary Beaton (or Beathune), Mary Livingston (or Leuson), Mary Fleming (or Flemyng), and Mary Seaton (or Seyton); called the "Queen's Marys," that is, the ladies of the same age as Mary, afterwards Queen of Scots, and her companions. Mary Carmichael was not one of the four, although introduced in the well-known ballad.

Yestre'en the queen had four Marys,
This night she'll hae but three:
There was Mary Beaton, and Mary Seaton,
Mary Carmichael, and me.

Mary Barton. A novel by Mrs. GASKELL (1848), dealing with labor problems among the weavers of Manchester.

Mary Magdalene, St. See under SAINTS.

Mary, Mary quite contrary. The heroine of an old nursery rhyme. St. John ERVINE wrote a play entitled Mary, Mary Quite Contrary (1923).

"Mary, Mary quite contrary,
How does your garden grow,
With silver bells and cockle shells
And pretty maids all in a row?"

Mary Olivier. A novel by May SINCLAIR (1919). It is a psychological study of a brilliant, sensitive girl, a member of a family tainted with insanity. Most of her life is devoted to the care of her mother. Intellectual interests, always strong with her, result in her becoming an author in later years. Although she considers marriage out of the question, she finds happiness in a very intense love affair.

Mary Queen of Scots. This ill-fated queen who was executed in 1587, is a prominent character in Scott's ABBOT, which has for its subject her flight to England. She is the heroine of SCHILLER's tragedy Maria Stuart (1800), of Swinburne's trilogy of poetic tragedies, CHASTELARD, BOTHWELL and Mary Stuart, and of John Drinkwater's Mary Stuart (1921). The Norwegian poet and dramatist Bjørnstjerne BJORNSON made his dramatic reputation with a play entitled Mary, Queen of Scots.

Maurice Hewlett's QUEEN'S QUAIR also tells her story. Cf. also Stefan Zweig's biography, Mary, Queen of Scotland (1935).

Mary the Virgin, St. See under SAINTS.

Mary I or Mary Tudor. Also known as Bloody Mary (1516-1558). Victor HUGO wrote a tragedy called Mary Tudor (1833), and TENNYSON in 1878 published a play called Queen Mary, an epitome of her reign. It centers about her love for Philip of Spain, her marriage, and her hopeless yearning for a son who might inherit the crown of Great Britain and of Spain. Mary Tudor is also the heroine of Charles Major's historical novel, WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER.

Maryland! My Maryland! A well-known song of Civil War times by James R. Randall.

Thou wilt not cower in the dust, Maryland,
Thy beaming sword shall never rust, Maryland,
Remember Carroll's sacred trust,
Remember Howard's warlike thrust,
And all thy slumbers with the just,
Maryland! My Maryland!

Masaniello. A corruption of Tommaso Aniello, a Neapolitan fisherman, who led the revolt of July, 1647. The great grievance was heavy taxation, and the immediate cause of Masaniello's interference was the seizure of his property because his wife had smuggled flour. He obtained a large following, was elected chief of Naples, and for nine days ruled with absolute control; then he was betrayed by his own people, was shot, and his body flung into a ditch. Next day, however, it was reclaimed and interred with a pomp and ceremony never equaled in Naples. AUBER's opera Masaniello, or La Muette de Portici (1828) takes the story for its groundwork. The libretto is by SCRIBE.

Masaryk, Jan Garrigue (1886-1948). Son of the famous Czechoslovak statesman and philosopher Tomáš Garrigue Masaryk (1850-1937). Foreign minister (1940) and vice-premier (1941) of the Czechoslovak provisional government in London. Committed suicide in Prague after Communist coup (1948).

Mascagni, Pietro (1863-1945). Italian composer. Famous for his one-act opera Cavalleria Rusticana (1890).

Mascarille. A valet who appears in Molière's PRÉCIEUSES RIDICULES (1659). Molière had already introduced the same name in two other of his comedies, L'Étourdi (1653) and Le Dépit Amoureux (1654). In his devotion to his master Mascarille will go to any extreme of trickery.

Masefield, John (1878–). English poet, dramatist, novelist, and short-story writer, best known for his popular poems and ballads dealing with the sea. His works include Salt-water Ballads (1902); Ballads (1903); A Main-sail Haul (1905), a collection of short stories; THE TRAGEDY OF NAN (1909), a play; Multitude and Solitude (1909), a novel; Poems and Ballads (1910); THE EVERLASTING MERCY (1911); THE WIDOW IN THE BYE STREET (1912); DAUBER (1912); The Daffodil Fields (1913); REYNARD THE FOX (1919); KING COLE (1921); The Dream (1922); The Midnight Folk (1927), a novel; The Coming of Christ (1928), a drama; Minnie Maylow's Story, and Other Tales and Scenes (1931); The Bird of Dawning (1933); The Box of Delights (1935); Eggs and Baker (1936); Basilissa (1940), a historical novel; Conquer (1941), a historical novel; Dead Ned (1938); Love and Kicking Ned (1941); Gautama the Enlightened, And Other Verse (1941); In the Mill (1941), autobiographical; Natalie Maisie and Pavlastukey: Two Tales in Verse (1942).

Masefield's work combines romantic and realistic elements and is marked by an extensive later use of the long narrative poem, influenced by his admiration for CHAUCER. He ran away from home at the age of fourteen and spent a number of years wandering about the world. For a time he was in the U.S., serving as a bartender's assistant in New York City and working in a carpet factory in Yonkers, N.Y. In 1930 he was made Poet Laureate of England.

Masham, Lady Abigail (d. 1734). Daughter of the London merchant Francis Hill and an aunt of the Duchess of Marlborough. As favorite of Queen Anne, replacing the Duchess of Marlborough, she exercised much influence at court.

Mask, Man in the Iron, see under MAN.

Maskwell. In CONGREVE's comedy, The Double Dealer (1694), the titular hero. He pretends to love Lady Touchwood, but it is only to make her a tool. Maskwell pretends friendship for Mellefont merely to throw dust in his eyes respecting his designs to carry off Cynthia, to whom Mellefont is betrothed. Cunning and hypocrisy are his substitutes for wisdom and honesty.

Maslova. The heroine of Tolstoi's RESURRECTION. She is also called Katusha.

masochism. Sexual abnormality in which pleasure is derived from abuse and cruelty suffered at the hands of one's associate. Opposite of SADISM. The word was formed from the name of the Austrian novelist Leopold von Sacher-Masoch (1835–1895), who depicted the abnormality now so called in some of his works (Venus in Furs, etc.).

Mason, Alfred Edward Woodley (1865–1948). English romantic novelist and playwright. Best-known for his novel of contemporary life, The Four Feathers (1902). Several of his novels were dramatized, notably Fire Over England (1936), which was also successful as a moving picture. In At the Villa Rose (1910), Mason introduced the detective M. Hanaud, a Gallic counterpart of Sherlock Holmes.

Massenet, Jules Émile Frédéric (1842–1912). French composer of oratorios, operas, cantatas, biblical dramas, etc. Best known operas Manon and Thais.

Masses, The. An American weekly magazine founded in New York in 1912 to express a broadly liberal and Socialist viewpoint. Max EASTMAN was one of the founders and editor, and such writers as Floyd DELL, Randolph BOURNE, and John REED were also associated with it. It is best known for its issues appearing during the years of World War I. Until its publication was suspended by the U.S. government in 1917, its viewpoint was definitely Socialist and pacifist. The magazine The Liberator was founded by Eastman almost immediately after the suspension of The Masses, and, growing increasingly radical in its opinions, it became associated with the COMMUNIST PARTY in 1922.

New Masses, The. A later form of The Liberator (which ceased publication in 1924), founded in 1926. Its editorial viewpoint continued in accordance with the policies of the Communist party, and from time to time it crusaded for American civil liberties, the trade union movement, amelioration of the conditions of Southern sharecroppers, Negro rights, etc. It also contained literary features, and during the 1930's published short stories and poems of a number of the leading proletarian writers of the time, as well as satirical cartoons by such figures as William GROPPER. It ceased publication in 1947.

Massinger, Philip (1583-1640). English dramatist of the period of Jacobean drama following Shakespeare. His plays express his ideas on the politics of the time and his advocacy of Roman Catholicism. Among his works are The Virgin Martyr (1622), in collaboration with DEKKER; The Duke of Milan (1623); The Bondman (1624); The Parliament of Love (1624); The Roman Actor (1629); The Renegado (1630); The Maid of Honor (1632); A NEW WAY TO PAY OLD DEBTS (1633), a comedy and Massinger's best-known work; The Emperor of the East (1632); The Great Duke of Florence (1636); The Guardian (1655); The Bashful Lover (1655); The City Madam (1658). He also wrote several plays in collaboration with John Fletcher (see under BEAUMONT) and Nathan Field.

Massingham, Henry William (1860-1924). English journalist. Editor of The Nation (1907-1923), which became under him an influential periodical of liberalism. His son, Harold John Massingham (1888-) is a prolific writer.

Master, the Old. A character who figures in O. W. HOLMES' Poet at the Breakfast Table. The Poet says that "he suspects himself of a three-story intellect, and I don't feel sure that he isn't right."

Master Builder, The. A drama by Henrik IBSEN (1892). Intoxicated by his success as a builder and fearful of the rivalry of younger, better trained men, Halvard Solness "the Master Builder," outdoes himself and falls from the heights of one of his own towers. The tragedy is largely due to the young heroine, Hilda Wangel, who has relentlessly urged him on.

Master Humphrey's Clock. A proposed series of tales by Charles Dickens, purporting to be told by Master Humphrey, an old deformed clockmaker, who appears in OLD CURIOSITY SHOP. This novel and Barnaby Rudge were the only two included in the series (1840-1841), and according to its author, Master Humphrey's Clock "as originally constructed became one of the lost books of the earth, which, we all know, are far more precious than any that can be read for love or money."

Master Leonard. In medieval demonology, the grand master of the witches' Sabbaths. He had the shape of a goat with three horns and a black human face.

Master of Ballantrae, The. A romance by Robert Louis STEVENSON (1889), the tale of a bitter hatred between two Scotch brothers. In the Stuart uprising of 1745 the elder brother, James, supports the Pretender, while the younger, Henry, is for King George. When James, the Master, does not come back, Alison Graeme, who has been betrothed to him, marries Henry instead. James, however, returns to subject Henry to persecutions of every imaginable sort. Eventually, after years of enmity, the end comes in a lonely American wilderness. The Master has been buried alive by Secundra Dass, his East Indian attendant, to deceive his foes, and Henry finds the Indian digging him up. James is only able to open his eyes, but at this dreadful portent Henry falls dead, and the two brothers are buried together. Much of the tale is told by the old steward of Ballantrae, John MacKellar.

Masters, Edgar Lee (1869-). American poet and author, a lawyer by training, famous for his SPOON RIVER ANTHOLOGY (1915), giving a dramatic and realistic picture of life in the Middle West. See LOCAL COLOR. His later books of poetry, not considered as successful as Spoon River, include Songs and Satires (1916); Toward the Gulf (1918); Starved Rock (1919); Domesday Book (1920); The New Spoon River (1924); Lee (1926); Jack Kelso (1928); and Godbey (1931), dramatic poems; The Fate of the Jury (1929), a sequel to Domesday Book; Lichee Nuts (1930), pseudo-Chinese philosophy; Invisible Landscapes (1935); The New World (1937). Among his works in prose are Mitch Miller (1920), Sheeters Kirby (1923), and Mirage (1924), a trilogy of novels; Children of the Market Place (1922) and The Tide of Time (1937), also novels; The Tale of Chicago (1933), a history of the midwestern city; Lincoln, the Man (1931), Vachel Lindsay (1935), Walt Whitman (1937), and Mark Twain (1938), biographies; Across Spoon River (1936), an autobiography. Masters wrote in the tradition of E. W. HOWE, Joseph KIRKLAND, and Hamlin GARLAND, depicting the Middle West, and later 20th-century America also, in a realistic, pessimistic, and iconoclastic light. His aims in his best-known poetry were similar to those of Sherwood ANDERSON in prose.

Mata Hari (died 1917). Danced on French stage. Executed by the French as a spy. There is a word matahari in Malayan. It means sun and may have suggested the stage name Mata Hari to Gertrude Margarete Zelle, as her real name ran.

Matali. In Hindu mythology, the charioteer of Indra.

materialism. Term applied to those systems of philosophy which assert reality to consist only of matter, opposed to IDEALISM. Materialist systems flourished among the Greeks in the period before PLATO (see ATOMISTS; MILESIANS), and with the development of the mechanistic science of the late 18th century and the 19th century they came into prominence again. MARXISM is the outstanding modern materialist philosophy, although as a system it remained incomplete on the death of Marx. UTILITARIANISM, PRAGMATISM, and instrumentalism are based on materialist assumptions.

In a popular and less accurate sense, materialism is used to refer to a system of values, on the part of a period of history or a nation, class, or individual, which emphasizes commerce, money, comfort, power, and possessions and minimizes art, culture, ethics, and religion; thus the 20th century is often called a materialistic era and the U.S. a materialistic nation.

dialectical materialism. See under DIALECTIC.

historical materialism. A concept regarded as the cornerstone of the philosophy of MARX-

ISM, best known through its statement in Karl Marx's COMMUNIST MANIFESTO. It maintains that "the history of all hitherto existing society is the history of class struggles"—that is, that historical change takes place with the overthrowing of a previously dominant economic and social class (such as Roman patricians or medieval feudal lords) by a previously subservient class (such as Roman plebeians or medieval serfs), which then become the dominant class (as the merchant bourgeoisie of the Renaissance, whose ancestors were serfs and whose descendants were modern industrial capitalists). On the basis of this assumption, all the institutions and values of a given society or a given period of history—all law, art, culture, ethics, logic and philosophy, politics, social conventions, ideas of freedom, justice, honor, and the like—are considered to be, not eternal, but merely the social reflections of prevailing modes of production, forms of property, and property relations, subject to change with the rise to power of a new economic class. Historical materialism came to play an important rôle in literary and cultural criticism in the 20th century. See MARXISM IN LITERATURE.

Mather, Cotton (1663–1728). American Puritan theologian, son of Increase MATHER and grandson of Richard MATHER and John COTTON, regarded as the epitome of the New England Puritan spirit. He is known for his vanity and arrogance, his precocity as a child (having entered Harvard at the age of 12), his prodigious learning, and his priggishness, bigotry, and fanaticism. He attempted to tyrannize over all of Massachusetts and held great power in the Second (Congregational) Church in Boston, playing an important part in the famous witchcraft trials of Salem. Attacked by a number of his contemporaries, Mather is considered to represent an effort of the old Puritanism to retain its power in the American colonies at a time when ideas and mores were changing. His works include The Present State of New England (1690); Eleutheria: Or an Idea of the Reformation in England (1698); La Fé del Christiano (1699), a work in Spanish; Reasonable Religion (1700); Le Vrai Patron des saines Paroles (1704), a work in French; The Negro Christianized (1706); The Good Education of Children (1708); Bonifacius (Essays to Do Good) (1710); Christian Philosopher (1721), a philosophical work regarded as tending toward DEISM; An Account . . . of Inoculating the Small-Pox (1722); The Angel of Bethesda (1722), a manual on medicine; Parentator (1724), a biography of Increase Mather; Manductio ad Ministerium (1726). His most famous works are his MAGNALIA CHRISTI AMERICANA (1702) and his works on witchcraft, Memorable Providences, Relating to Witchcrafts and Possessions (1689) and The Wonders of the Invisible World (1693).

Mather wrote more than 450 volumes on a variety of subjects, had a library of about 2000 books, and spoke seven languages. He was a member of the ROYAL SOCIETY, being elected in 1714, and was influenced by the scientific spirit of his age sufficiently to endorse inoculation for smallpox, for which he was severely criticized in New England.

Mather, Frank Jewett, Jr. (1868-). American art critic. One of the school of humanism represented by Irving Babbitt and Paul Elmer More.

Mather, Increase (1639-1723). American Puritan theologian, son of Richard Mather and father of Cotton MATHER. He was a well-known preacher in England and Boston, served as president of Harvard College (1685-1701), and took an important part in the famous Salem witchcraft trials. He wrote over 130 books on numerous subjects, the best-known of which are Cases of Conscience Concerning Evil Spirits (1693), on the witchcraft trials; A Brief History of the War with the Indians (1676); Life and Death of That Reverend Man of God, Mr. Richard Mather (1670), a biography of his father; and An Essay for the Recording of Illustrious Providences (REMARKABLE PROVIDENCES), (1684). Like his son, he proved himself to be under the influence of the growing scientific spirit of his time by upholding inoculation as a precaution against infection during a smallpox epidemic, and by favoring scientific courses at Harvard.

Richard Mather (1596-1669), his father, was a Puritan preacher in England before coming to New England and was an important leader in the establishment of the Congregational Church in America. He wrote numerous works and was one of the authors of the BAY PSALM BOOK.

Mathew, Father. Theobald Mathew (1790-1856), called The Apostle of Temperance. He was an Irish priest, and in his native country the success of his work in behalf of total abstinence was almost miraculous.

O Father Mathew!
Whatever path you
In life pursue
God grant your Reverence
May brush off never hence
Our mountain dew.

W. S. Landor, An Irishman to Father Mathew.

Mathewson, Christopher. Known as Christy Mathewson (1880-1925). American baseball pitcher for New York Giants (1900-1916); Manager of Cincinnati team (1916-1918).

Mathurin, St. See under SAINTS.

Matilda. Heroine of Scott's poem ROKEBY, daughter of Rokeby, and niece of Mortham. Matilda is loved by Wilfred, son of Oswald; but she herself loves Redmond, her father's page, who turns out to be Mortham's son.

Matisse, Henri (1869-). French painter and sculptor. Leader of post-impressionism. A number of his works are in the Museum of Modern Art, New York City.

Matiwan. Mother of Oconestoga in Simms' novel THE YEMASSEE.

Matriarch. Woman who rules a family or group. The Matriarch is the American title of the novel Tents of Israel (1924) by G. B. STERN, one of a series of novels.

Matson, Norman Hågeheim (1893-). American novelist and journalist. Best-known for Flecker's Magic (1926), which E. M. Forster praised highly. Once married to SUSAN GLASPELL.

Matsuoka, Yosuke (1880-1946). Japanese foreign minister (1940-1941). From the age of 13, American-educated, working his way through school and college. Diplomatic career in Japan (from 1904). Head of Japanese delegation at League of Nations' sessions (1932-1933) when his country was condemned for the "Manchurian incident." As prime minister concluded Tripartite Pact with Germany and Italy (Sept. 27, 1940) and Neutrality Pact with Russia. After Germany's attack on Russia, replaced in reorganization of Japanese cabinet. Died while on trial accused as war criminal.

Matsya, see AVATAR.

Matterhorn. The German name of the mountain in the Pennine Alps, known to the French as Mont Cervin and to the Italians as Monte Silvio; so called from its peak (horn) and the scanty patches of green meadow (matter) which hang around its base. Above a glacier-line 11,000 feet high, it rises in an almost inaccessible obelisk of rock to a total elevation of 14,703 feet. It was first scaled in 1865 by Whymper, when four of his party lost their lives.

Figuratively, any danger, desperate situation threatening destruction, or leap in the dark, as "the matrimonial Matterhorn."

Maud. A dramatic poem by TENNYSON (1855). Maud is described as a young lady—

Faultily faultless, icily regular, splendidly null.

Tennyson, Maud, I. ii.

Maude, Aylmer (1858-1938). English writer, best known as leading translator of Tolstoy.

Maude, Cyril (1862-). English actor and manager. Founded The Playhouse (London, 1907). Married Winifred Emery (1862-1924), actress and descendant of several generations of actors.

Maud Muller. A narrative poem by J. G. WHITTIER (1854). It records a chance meeting between the Judge and Maud, a rustic beauty who laid aside her rake and gave him a drink from the spring. Each married another, in a more suitable station of life, but was tormented by regretful illusions:

For of all sad words of tongue or pen
The saddest are these: "It might have been."

Maufrigneuse, the Duchess of, see CADIGAN, DIANE DE.

Maugham, William Somerset (1874-). English novelist, short-story writer, and playwright, educated to be a physician. His work is marked by satire, skillful craftsmanship, a frequent ironical detachment on the part of the author, and the use of plots and material of intended popular appeal; his subject-matter is frequently concerned with white people living in the Orient. His novels include LIZA OF LAMBETH (1897); The Making of a Saint (1898); Orientalism (1899); The Hero (1901); Mrs. Craddock (1902); Merry-Go-Round (1904); OF HUMAN BONDAGE (1915), regarded as the best of his works; THE MOON AND SIXPENCE (1919); The Painted Veil (1925); British Agent (1928), based on the author's experiences as a secret agent for the British government during World War I; CAKES AND ALE (1930); First Person Singular (1931); The Narrow Corner (1932); Theater (1937); Christmas Holiday (1939); The Razor's Edge (1943); Then and Now (1946). On the last, see also under MACHIAVELLI. Among his plays, chiefly comedies and dramas of manners, the most popular and most financially successful of his works, are A Man of Honor (1903); Lady Frederick (1907); Penelope (1909); Jack Straw (1912); Mrs. Dot (1912); Caesar's Wife (1919); The Circle (1921); Our Betters (1923); The Letter (1927); Rain, a dramatization by John Colton and Randolph Clemence of Maugham's short story Miss Thompson; The Constant Wife (1927); The Sacred Flame (1928); The Breadwinner (1930); For Services Rendered (1932); Sheppey (1933). Collections of short stories are: The Trembling of a Leaf (1921); On a Chinese Screen (1922); The Casuarina Tree (1926); Ah King (1933); Cosmopolitans (1936); The Mixture as Before (1940). Andalusia (1927), The Gentleman in the Parlor (1930), and Don Fernando (1935) are travel books. The Summing Up (1938) is autobiographical, and The Hour Before the Dawn (1942) is a novel dealing with World War II.

Maugis. In Carolingian legend, the French form of the Italian MALAGIGI, one of Charlemagne's paladins, a magician and champion. The French romance of Maugis d'Aygremon relates that he was the son of Duke Bevis d'Aygremon, stolen in infancy by a female slave. As the slave rested under a white thorn, a lion and a leopard devoured her, and then killed each other in disputing over the infant. Oriande the fairy, attracted to the spot by the crying of the child, exclaimed, "By the powers above, the child is mal gist (badly nursed)" and ever after he was called Mal-gist or Mau-gis. When grown to manhood, he obtained the enchanted horse BAYARD and took from Anthenor, the Saracen, the sword Flamberge. Subsequently he gave both to his cousin Renaud (Rinaldo). His adventures also form a part of The Four Sons of Aymon. See AYMEN.

Maul. In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, a giant who spoils young pilgrims with sophistry. He attacks Mr. Greatheart with a club, but Greatheart pierces him under the fifth rib and then cuts off his head.

Maule, Matthew. In Hawthorne's HOUSE OF THE SEVEN GABLES, the man whom old Colonel Pyncheon once had executed for witchcraft in order to confiscate his property.

Mauley, Sir Edward. The real name of the "BLACK DWARF" in Scott's novel of that title. Because of sensitiveness over his physical deformity and cynical disillusionment at having been robbed of his bride by his best friend, he lives alone and acquires the reputation of being in league with the Devil. Gradually, however, he wins many friends through his wisely directed kindness to all who seek his help, and at last he comes out of his retirement and assumes his own name and station.

Maunciple's Tale, see MANCIPLE.

Maundy Thursday. The day before Good Friday is so called from the Latin dies mandati ("the day of Christ's great mandate"). After He had washed His disciples' feet, He said, "A new commandment give I unto you, that ye love one another" (St. John xiii. 34). In the monasteries it was the custom to wash the feet of as many poor people as there were monks, and for centuries in England the sovereign, as a token of humility, did the same.

Maupassant, Guy de (1850-1893). French novelist and short-story writer, influenced by FLAUBERT and the school of NATURALISM. He is best known for his numerous short stories, dealing chiefly with Norman peasant life, the Franco-Prussian War, the behavior of the petit-bourgeoisie, fashionable life in Paris, and the morbid psychological obsessions of the author's own later life. His characteristic stories are usually built around an actual situation or episode from life, either his own or that of someone else. They are distinguished by detachment on the part of the author, swift movement, realistic detail, and a dramatic denouement at the close, frequently producing a "surprise ending." See also O. HENRY. Among his best-known stories are: The Necklace, En Famille, The Rendezvous, and The Umbrella. His novels include: Une Vie (1883), concerning the frustrations of a Norman wife; Bel-Ami (1885), dealing with the career of an unscrupulous and ambitious journalist in Paris; PIERRE ET JEAN (1888); Fort comme la Mort (1889).

Maupassant held a number of official positions in the French government during much of his career. As a result of overwork he became insane near the end of his life.

Maupin, Mlle de, see MILLE DE MAUPIN.

Mauprat, Adrien de. In BULWER LYTTON's drama Richelieu (1838), a colonel and chevalier in the King's army, "the wildest gallant and bravest knight of France." He marries Julie, but the King accuses him of treason for so doing, and sends him to the Bastille. He is released by Cardinal RICHELIEU.

Mauriac, François (1885-). French poet, playwright, and novelist. His series of novels concerning Bordeaux and its countryside, in which—being a Catholic himself—he boldly criticized the petty meanness of old provincial Catholic families, was awarded the Grand Prix du Roman of the French Academy (1925). He is regarded as one of the best minds in France.

Maurois, André. Pseudonym of Émile Salomon Wilhelm Herzog (1885-). French biographer and novelist. Best known for The Silence of Colonel Bramble (1919) which had a great popular and critical success. Has visited the United States several times and lectured at universities. One of the foremost followers of Lytton Strachey in practicing "the new biography." Well known for his life of Shelley entitled Ariel (1923).

mausoleum. Originally the name of the tomb of Mausolus, King of Caria, to whom his wife Artemisia erected at Halicarnassus a splendid sepulchral monument (353 B.C.). Parts of this sepulcher, which was one of the seven wonders of the world, are now in the British Museum. The name is now applied to any sepulchral monument of great size or architectural quality.

The chief mausoleums are: that of Augustus; that of Hadrian, i.e., the castle of St. Angelo, at Rome; that erected in France to Henry II by Catherine de Medici; that of St. Peter the Martyr in the church of St. Eustatius, by G. Balduccio in the 14th century; and that erected to the memory of Louis XVI.

Mauthe dog. A ghostly black spaniel that for many years haunted Peel Castle, in the Isle of Man. It used to enter the guard-room as soon as candles were lighted, and leave it at daybreak. While this specter dog was present the soldiers forbore all oaths and profane talk. One day a drunken trooper entered the guard-house alone out of bravado, but lost his speech and died in three days. Scott refers to it in his LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL, vi stanza, 26, and again in a long note to ch. xv of PEVERIL OF THE PEAK.

mauve decade. Descriptive term applied to the period of the 1890's, especially in the U.S.; "pink trying to be purple." Thomas BEER wrote a social history of the period entitled The Mauve Decade (1926).

Mauves, Madame de. Heroine and title of a short story in A Passionate Pilgrim and Other Tales by Henry JAMES (1871). The story is a study of the marriage of a young and idealistic American girl and a worthless Frenchman.

Mavering, Dan. The hero of W. D. Howells' April Hopes.

mavournin, mavourneen. Irish (mo mhurnin) for "My darling." Erin mavournin = Ireland, my darling; Erin go bragh = Ireland for ever!

Land of my forefathers, Erin go bragh! . . .
Erin mavournin, Erin go bragh!
Campbell, Exile of Erin.

See also KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN.

Mawardi, al- (974?-1058). Arab jurist, author of Principles of Government.

mawworm. A hypocritical pretender to sanctity, a pious humbug, from the character of this name in Isaac Bickerstaffe's The Hypocrite (1769).

Max. Hero of Weber's opera, DER FREISCHÜTZ, a huntsman, and the best marksman in Germany.

Maxim, Sir Hiram Stevens (1840-1916). American-born inventor. Naturalized British subject (1881). Invented the Maxim machine gun and became a leading industrialist in Britain's munitions manufacture. His brother, Hudson Maxim (1853-1927), stayed in America, held numerous patents in connection with explosives, invented a smokeless powder called maximitite and a theory of poetry called trotempoetry.

Maximilian. Full name Ferdinand Maximilian Joseph (1832-1867). Brother of Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria. Built the beautiful château of Miramar at Trieste. Pressed by Napoleon III, he accepted the imperial crown of Mexico (1863). Upon U.S. insistence, France withdrew its armies from Mexico, making it impossible for Maximilian to resist JUAREZ' attack. Involved in great difficulties. Surrendered at Querétaro (1867), was tried by a Mexican court-martial, condemned and executed (June 19, 1867).

Maxtone Graham, Mrs. Joyce, née Anstruther. Pseudonym Jan Struther (1901-). English poet and novelist. Her book of sketches of family life, Mrs. Miniver, was a best seller and a hugely successful moving picture.

Maxwell, James Clerk (1831-1879). Scottish physicist. Noted for his work on electromagnetism.

Maxwell, William Babington (1866-1938). English novelist. Son of the popular Victorian novelist Mary Elizabeth Braddon (1837-1915). Maxwell's second book, The Ragged Messenger (1904) was a best seller; it was dramatized and filmed three times. The Guarded Flame (1906) consolidated his success. He lived to produce about 40 books. Cf. especially his autobiography, Time Gathered (1937).

May. The heroine of The Merchant's Tale in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales. See JANUARY AND MAY.

May.

May Day. The first day of May. Polydore Virgil says that the Roman youths used to go into the fields and spend the calends of May in dancing and singing in honor of Flora, goddess of fruits and flowers. The English consecrated May Day to Robin Hood and the Maid Marian, because the favorite outlaw died on that day, and villagers used to set up Maypoles around which to dance, elect a May Queen, and spend the day in archery, morris dancing, and other amusements.

Evil May Day, see under EVIL.

May, Phil (1864-1903). English caricaturist, noted for his studies of London characters, as the coster-girl, the street waif, etc. For many years member of the staff of Punch (from 1896).

Mayakovsky, Vladimir (1894-1930). Russian futurist poet, regarded by some as the poet of revolutionary Russia. He sang "the might of the collective 'Ivan,'" satirized the enemies of the Revolution, and tirelessly served the new order. His most characteristic long poem is A Cloud in Pants (1915). Being essentially a violent individualist, a primitive who hated all restraint, his loyalty to the State produced a dichotomy in his temperament that eventually drove him to commit suicide.

Mayerling. A hunting lodge near Vienna. Scene of the tragic deaths of Prince RUDOLF of Hapsburg and Marie Vetsera.

Mayeux. After about 1830 the stock name in French plays for a vain and licentious hunchback, who always has a wide command of slang and wit.

Mayfair. A fashionable district in London, east of Hyde Park, so called from an annual fair formerly (till 1708) held in May in and around Shepherd's Market. Michael ARLEN wrote a short story of that title (1925).

Mayflower. The name of the ship that took the PILGRIM FATHERS from Southampton to Massachusetts in 1620. It is sometimes used in allusion to the snobbery of Americans of good family whose ancestors came over in the Mayflower.

Maylie, Rose. In Dickens' OLIVER TWIST, a character who turns out to be Oliver's aunt. Before she marries Henry Maylie, she is Rose Fleming.

Maynard, Theodore (1890-). English poet, author, and lecturer. Naturalized American (1941). Catholic convert (1913). Edited The Book of Modern Catholic Verse (1926) and The Book of Modern Catholic Prose (1927). Wrote Exile and Other Poems (1928); The Odyssey of Francis Xavier (1936); The Story of American Catholicism (1941); Orestes Brownson (1943); etc.

Mayo, Katherine (1867-1940). American journalist. Best-known for her sensational study of child-marriage in India, entitled Mother India (1927). See MUKERJI.

Mayo, Robert and Andrew. The two brothers in Eugene O'Neill's play BEYOND THE HORIZON.

Mayor of Casterbridge, The. A novel by Thomas HARDY (1886). Michael Henchard, a young hay trusser, while intoxicated at a fair sells his wife and child at auction for five pounds to a man named Newson. Eighteen years afterward when Henchard has become the Mayor of Casterbridge, they reappear, and most of the novel deals with the problems and embitterments of his later life. The girl, Elizabeth Jane, who, he finally learns, is not his own daughter but Newson's, is claimed by Newson, and Mrs. Henchard dies.

mayor of the palace (maire du palais). The superintendent of the household of the king of the Franks and steward of the royal leudes (companies) before the accession of the CAROLINGIAN DYNASTY. The position became one of great influence, a "power behind the throne."

May Queen, The. A poem by Tennyson (1842). Alice, the heroine, says:

I sleep so sound all night, mother, that I shall never wake,
If you do not call me loud when the day begins to break:
But I must gather knots of flowers, and buds and gar-lands gay,
For I'm to be queen o' the May, mother, I'm to be queen o' the May.

She falls ill and pines away, but before she dies she speaks of the old sweetheart she once despised:

And say to Robin a kind word, and tell him not to fret;
There's many a worthier than I, would make him happy yet.
If I had lived—I cannot tell—I might have been his wife;
But all these things have ceased to be, with my desire of life.

Mazarin, Jules (1602-1661). French Cardinal and statesman of Italian birth. Succeeded Richelieu as prime minister (1642) and was retained by the queen regent Anne of Austria after the death of Louis XIII (1643-1661). Laid stage for Louis XIV's later successes. Amassed a great fortune. Founded (1642) the Bibliothèque Mazarine. See also under MARY, the four Marys.

Mazarin Bible, see BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Mazeppa, Ivan (1644-1709). The famous Cossack hetman, hero of Byron's poem Mazeppa (1819), was born of a noble Polish family in Podolia, became a page in the court of John Casimir, King of Poland, but intrigued with Theresia, the young wife of a Podolian count, who had the young page lashed naked to a wild horse, and turned adrift. The horse dropped dead in the Ukraine, where Mazeppa was released and cared for by Cossacks and in time became hetman and prince of the Ukraine under Peter the Great of Russia. Byron makes Mazeppa tell his tale to Charles XII of Sweden after the battle of Pultowa, in which he had deserted to Charles and fought against Russia. Mazeppa is the hero of a Russian drama Pultowa by PUSHKIN.

Mazikeen or Shedeem. A species of beings in Jewish mythology resembling the Arabian JINN, and said to be the agents of magic and enchantment. When Adam fell, says the Talmud, he was excommunicated for 130 years, during which time he begat demons and specters, for, it is written "Adam lived 130 years and begat children in his own image" (Gen. v. 3). (Rabbi Jeremiah ben Eliezar.)

And the Mazikeen shall not come nigh thy tents.—Ps. xci, 5 (Chaldee version).

swells out like the Mazikeen ass. The allusion is to a Jewish tradition that a servant, whose duty it was to rouse the neighborhood to midnight prayer, one night mounted a stray ass and neglected his duty. As he rode along the ass grew bigger and bigger, till at last it towered as high as the tallest edifice, where it left the man, and where next morning he was found.

Mazzini, Giuseppe (1805-1872). Italian patriot; proposed to unify Italy under a republican form of government. Refused to take seat in Italian parliament under a monarchy. Involved in revolutionary movements, captured (1870) but released.

Mc. See MAC.

Mead, Margaret (1901-). American anthropologist. Her major expeditions have each resulted in a book, notably Coming of Age in Samoa (1928), etc. Also lecturer in psychology at New York University and visiting lecturer in child study at Vassar College.

Meadows, Mr. In Fanny Burney's novel Cecilia, a young gallant, very much fêted by the ladies and ostensibly very bored with life.

Meal-Tub Plot. A pretended conspiracy against Protestants, fabricated by Thomas Dangerfield (d. 1685) in 1679, so called because he said that the papers relating to it were concealed in a meal-tub in the house of Mrs. Cellier, a Roman Catholic. She was tried for high treason and acquitted, while Dangerfield was convicted of libel, whipped, and pilloried.

Meander. The modern Menderes river in Asia Minor. It dried up when Phaëthon drove the sun chariot. Its proverbial windings are comparable to the labyrinth of Minos.

Measure for Measure. A comedy by Shakespeare (ca. 1604). The Duke of Vienna pretends to leave the city, deputing his authority to Angelo, while he assumes the disguise of a friar and stays to watch proceedings. Angelo almost immediately sentences CLAUDIO to death for seducing JULIET, but when Claudio's sister Isabel comes to plead for him, Angelo brazenly endeavors to seduce her. The "friar" persuades her to appear to consent to the plan but to send Angelo's deserted fiancée MARIANA to the rendezvous instead. Eventually the Duke assumes authority again and matters are straightened out. The plot of the play is founded on Whetstone's Promos and Cassandra (1582), which was taken from the 85th tale in Cinthio's Hecatomithi (1565).

Mecca. A long desired goal; the end of a pilgrimage; from Mecca in Arabia, the birthplace of Mahomet and the Holy City to which all pious Mohammedans make the HADJ or pilgrimage at least once in a lifetime.

Meck, Nadezhda Filaretovna von (1831-1894). Widow of a Russian railroad contractor, who helped TCHAIKOVSKY by getting him commissions for his work and (1877) by making him an annual allowance of £600. They never met but corresponded continuously, she being known as his "beloved friend." Cf. Catherine Drinker Bowen, Beloved Friend.

Medal, The. Title of a satirical poem by John DRYDEN (1682), aimed at the Earl of Shaftesbury and the Whigs whose recent triumph had been the occasion for the striking of a medal.

Medamothi. The island at which the fleet of PANTAGRUEL lands on the fourth day of their voyage, and where they buy many choice curiosities, such as the picture of a man's voice, an echo drawn to life, Plato's ideas, the atoms of Epicurus, a sample of Philomela's needlework, and other objects of virtu which could be obtained in no other portion of the globe (Rabelais, Pantagruel, iv. 3). The word is Greek, and has the same meaning as More's Utopia and Butler's Erewhon, i.e., "Nowhere."

Medea. In Greek legend, a sorceress, daughter of Aetes, King of Colchis. She marries JASON, the leader of the ARGONAUTS, whom she aids to obtain the golden fleece, and is the mother of Medus, whom the Greeks regard as the ancestor of the Medes. After being married ten years, Jason repudiates her for Glauce, and Medea, in revenge, sends the bride a poisoned robe, which kills both Glauce and her father. Medea then tears to pieces her two sons, and flees to Athens in a chariot drawn by dragons. The story has been dramatized in Greek, by Euripides; in Latin, by Seneca and by Ovid; in French, by Corneille (Médée, 1635), Longepierre (1695), and Legouvé (1849); in English, by Glover (1761) and Robinson JEFFERS (1947), starring Judith Anderson.

Medea's kettle or cauldron. A means of restoring lost youth. Medea cut an old ram to pieces, threw the pieces into her cauldron, and a young lamb came forth. Jason's father Aeson was then given back his youth. The daughters of PELIAS thought to restore their father to youth in the same way, but Medea refused to utter the magic words, and the old man ceased to live. See also ABSYRTUS.

Médecin malgré Lui, Le (The Physician in Spite of Himself). A comedy by MOLIÈRE (1666). The "enforced doctor" is SGANARELLE, a faggot-maker, who is called in by GÉRONTE to cure his daughter LUCINDE of dumbness.

Medes and Persians, laws of. Unalterable decisions; rules that cannot be modified. The allusion is to Dan. vi. 12.

Medici (Ital.) or Médicis (Fr.). Literally, "physicians" or "doctors." Name of an Italian family powerful in Florence and Tuscany especially from the 14th to the 16th century. Cosimo de' Medici, called Cosimo the Elder (1389-1464), for thirty years patron of literature and fine arts and often surnamed the "father of his country." Lorenzo de' Medici, known as Lorenzo the Magnificent or in Italian Il Magnifico (1449-1492), polished writer and poet; a tyrant; influential in causing Tuscan dialect to become speech of Italy. See also CATHERINE DE MÉDICIS.

medicine, father of. See under FATHER.

medicine show. A typically American type of entertainment in the early days designed to advertise patent medicines and cure-alls. Medicine shows were given from a traveling wagon. They featured freaks, song-and-dance "artists," and musical numbers. The actors were made up as Indian medicine men. Modern moving picture and radio advertising reflect this influence.

Medill, Joseph (1823-1899). Canadian-born American journalist. Bought interest in Chicago Tribune (1855); supported Lincoln for presidency and during his administration gained control of Tribune. His grandchildren, Joseph Medill McCormick, Robert Rutherford McCormick, Joseph Medill PATTERSON, and Eleanor Medill Patterson, inherited interest in the Tribune.

Medina (from Lat. medium, "middle, mean"). (1) In SPENSER'S FAËRIE QUEENE (II. ii.), the typification of "the golden mean." She is the stepsister of Perissa (excess) and Elissa (deficiency), who can never agree upon any subject.

(2) A city in Arabia, the second holy city of the Mohammedans; it was called "Yath-rib" before Mahomet fled thither from Mecca, but afterwards Medinat-al-Nabi ("the city of the prophet"), whence its present name.

Medmenham Abbey. A ruined Cistercian abbey near Marlow on the Thames. It became the meeting place of the Hell-fire Club, founded by Dashwood, Wilkes, and Bubb Dodington in the 18th century. Its convivialities became orgies and its ritual was a mockery of all religion. For an account of some of its procedures, cf. Johnstone, Chrysal, or the Adventures of a Guinea, volume 3, book II.

Medora. In Byron's poem THE CORSAIR, the beloved wife of Conrad, the corsair. When Conrad is taken captive by the pasha Seyd, Medora sits day after day expecting his return. When he does not come back, Medora dies.

Medoro. In Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, a Moorish youth of extraordinary beauty, but of humble race; page to Agramante. Angelica dresses his wounds, falls in love with him, marries him, and retires with him to Cathay, where, in right of his wife, he becomes king. This event is the cause of Orlando's madness.

Medrawd. In the Welsh Triads, the name given to MODRED.

Medusa. The chief of the GORGONS of Greek mythology. Legend says that she was a beautiful maiden, specially famous for her hair, but that she violated the temple of Athene, who thereupon transformed her hair into serpents and made her face so terrible that all who looked on it were turned to stone. PERSEUS, assisted by Athene (who lent him her shield wherein he looked only on the reflection of Medusa during his attack), struck off her head, and by its means rescued ANDROMEDA from the monster. Medusa was the mother by Poseidon of Chrysaor and PEGASUS.

Medwin, Thomas (1788-1869). British biographer of Shelley; associated with Shelley and Byron in Italy (1821). His Memoir of Shelley (1833) was later expanded into The Life of Shelley (2 vols.; 1847).

Meg Dods, see Dods, MEG.

Megissogwon ("the great Pearl-Feather"). In Longfellow's poem HIAWATHA, a magician, and the Manito of wealth. It was Megissogwon who sent the fiery fever on man, the white fog, and death. This great Pearl-Feather slays the father of Nokomis the grandmother of Hiawatha. Hiawatha all day long fights with the magician without effect. At nightfall the woodpecker tells him to strike at the tuft of hair on the magician's head, the only vulnerable place. Hiawatha accordingly discharges his three remaining arrows at the hair-tuft, and Megissogwon dies.

Meg Merrilies, see MERRILIES, MEG.

Meh Lady. A Negro dialect story of the old South by Thomas Nelson PAGE. Also see MARSE CHAN.

Meier-Graefe, Julius (1867-1935). German art critic. Founded four art magazines. Besides almost 50 books on art and travel he wrote one novel and one volume of short stories.

Meiklejohn, Alexander (1872-). Educator. President, Amherst College (1912-1924). Director, experimental college at the University of Wisconsin (1926-1933). Instructor, School for Social Studies in San Francisco (from 1933).

Meiklewham, Mr. Saunders. In Scott's ST. RONAN'S WELL, one of the Managing Committee of the Spa. He is known as "the man of law."

Meissonier, Jean Louis Ernest (1825-1891). French painter, noted for small meticulous genre pictures, often of military subjects. Hallebardier; Le Grand Fumeur; Campagne de France; Les Cuirassiers; etc.

Meister, Wilhelm, see WILHELM MEISTER.

Meistersingers. Burgher poets or minstrels of Germany, who attempted, in the 14th to 16th centuries, to revive the national minstrelsy of the MINNESINGERS, which had fallen into decay. Hans Sachs, the cobbler (1494-1576), was the most celebrated. The original corporation of meistersingers was called the Twelve Wise Masters.

Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg. An opera by Richard WAGNER (1868), in which he satirized his critics. The hand of the fair young Eva Pogner, daughter of the town goldsmith, is promised as the prize for a Nuremberg singing contest. The chief rivals are Beckmesser the town clerk, and a young nobleman, Walter or Walther von Stolzing, who is loved by the lady and has dreamed a beautiful song but is hampered by his ignorance of all the petty artificial rules of the song-fest. Walter's cause is championed by Hans Sachs, the cobbler, and with his aid Beckmesser is put to confusion. Walter sings his Preislied and scores a triumph.

Mejnoun and Leilah. A Persian love tale, the Romeo and Juliet or Pyramus and Thisbe of Eastern romance.

Mel, The great. Melchisedec Harrington, the tailor, father of EVAN HARRINGTON in Meredith's novel of that name.

Melaine. A narrative poem by N. P. Willis (Am., 1806-1867). The heroine, Melaine, learns just before her wedding that she has fallen in love with her own brother. The shock causes her death.

Melampus. In Greek legend, a seer who understood the language of birds and beasts. He was the first mortal to practice the art of healing. The introduction into Greece of the worship of Dionysus was ascribed to him.

Melancholy, The Anatomy of, see ANATOMY.

Melanchthon, Philip. Grecized form of German Schwarzer, wrongly interpreted as meaning "black earth" (1497-1560). German reformer and scholar. Friend and collaborator of LUTHER. His Loci Communes Rerum Theologicarum (1521) is the first major Protestant treatise on theological dogmatism. Drafted the Augsburg Confession (1530) and worked with persistent moderation for the restitution of Christian unity. Noted for his skill in dialectics and exegesis, and his great learning.

Melanchthon's Hellenized name is one instance among many. Oecolampadius corresponds to German Hausschein; Erasmus to Gheraerd; etc. This procedure was in vogue at the time of the re-awakening of interest in Greek at the beginning of the modern era. It has its counterpart in a wealth of Latinized names in the periods preceding and following.

Melba, Mme Nellie. Stage name of Helen Porter Mitchell (1861?-1931). Australian operatic soprano. Debut as Gilda in Rigoletto (1887). First appearance in New York (1893). Prima donna at Royal Opera, Covent Garden, London. Dame of the British Empire (1918).

Melchers, Julius Gari (1860-1932). American painter of genre pictures of Dutch peasant life, religious paintings, and murals.

Melchior. One of the three MAGI.

Melchizedek. Cf. Gen. xiv. 18. E. A. Robinson's poem Two Men.

Melchizedek, he praised the Lord,
And gave some wine to Abraham;
But who can tell what else he did
Must be more learned than I am.

Meleager. A hero of Greek legend, son of Oeneus of Calydon and Althaea, distinguished for throwing the javelin, for slaying the Calydonian boar, and as one of the ARGONAUTS. It was declared by the Fates that he would die as soon as a piece of wood then on the fire was burnt up, whereupon his mother snatched the log from the fire and extinguished it. After Meleager had slain his maternal uncles, his mother threw the brand on the fire again, and Meleager died.

Melema, Tito. In George Eliot's ROMOLA, the scapegrace husband of Romola.

[He] made almost every one fond of him for he was young, and clever, and beautiful, and his manners to all were gentle and kind. I believe when I first knew him, he never thought of anything cruel or base. But because he tried to slip away from everything that was unpleasant, and cared for nothing else so much as his own safety, he came at last to commit some of the basest deeds—such as make men infamous. He denied his father, and left him to misery; he betrayed every trust that was reposed in him, that he might keep himself safe and get rich and prosperous.—Epilogue.

Meliadus. Father of TRISTRAM in the Arthurian romances, and King of Lyonesse. He was drawn to a chase by the wiles of a fay who was in love with him, and from whose thralldom he was ultimately released by Merlin.

Meliboeus or Melibee. The central figure in Chaucer's prose Tale of Meliboeus, one of his CANTERBURY TALES, which is a translation of a French rendering of Albertano da Brescia's Latin Liber Consolationis et Concilii. Meliboeus is a wealthy young man, married to Prudens. One day, when he has gone "into the fields to play," enemies of his beat his wife and leave his daughter for dead. Meliboeus resolves upon vengeance, but his wife persuades him to call together his enemies, and he tells them he forgives them "to this effect and to this ende, that God of His endeles mercy wole at the tyme of oure deyinge forgive us oure giltes that we have trespassed to Him in this wreeched world."

Melicent. The heroine of Cabell's DOMINI originally published as The Soul of Melicent. She is the daughter of Count MANUEL, the hero of Figures of Earth, and appears in that romance as a child.

Melicertes. Son of Ino, a sea deity of Greek legend. See LEUCOTHEA. Athamas imagined his wife to be a lioness, and her two sons to be lion's cubs. In his frenzy he slew one of the boys, and drove the other, Melicertes, with his mother into the sea. The mother became a sea goddess, and the boy, under the name of Palaemon, the god of harbors.

Melincourt. A satirical novel by Thomas Love PEACOCK (1817).

Mélissande. (1) See PELLÉAS AND MÉLISANDE; (2) See MELUSINA; (3) See MÉLISANDE.

Melisendra. In medieval romance, the supposed daughter of Marsilio and Charlemagne, married to his nephew Don Gwyferos. She was taken captive by the Moors, and confined seven years in a dungeon before Gwyferos rescued her. Cf. Don Quixote II. ii. 7, where the story is played as a puppet-show.

Melissa. (1) The prophetess in Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, who lives in Merlin's cave. BRADAMANT gives her the enchanted ring to take to ROGERO, so, assuming the form of Atlantes, she goes to Alcina's island, and not only delivers Rogero, but disenchants all the forms metamorphosed in the island. In Book xix she assumes the form of RODOMONT, and persuades Agramant to break the league which was to settle the contest by single combat. A general battle ensues.

(2) In Spenser's FÆRIE QUEENE (VI. xii), Melissa is Pastorella's handmaid.

Mélissande. The heroine of Rostand's Far Away Princess (La Princesse Lointaine; 1895), based on a 13th century Provençal romance. Her beauty was far-famed.

Melkarth, in Greek Melicertes. Literally, "city king." Chief god of ancient Tyre, a variant of the Canaanite BAAL, later identified with HERCULES.

Mell, Mr. In Dickens' DAVID COPPERFIELD, a poor down-trodden second master at Salem House, assistant to Mr. CREAKLE. The fact that his mother lives in an almshouse brings upon him the sneers of STEERFORTH. Mr. Mell plays the flute with great pleasure.

Mellen, Grenville (1799-1841). American poet, story-teller, and journalist.

Mellichampe: a Legend of the Santee. The second novel in W. G. Simms' trilogy of the American Revolution (1836). The first was The Partisan, the third, KATHERINE WALTON.

Mellifluous Doctor. See under DOCTOR.

Melmoth, Sebastian. The name used by Oscar WILDE while the author was living in France following his release from prison. It was signed to both THE BALLAD OF READING GAOL and DE PROFUNDIS. Melmoth is the name of a man who sells his soul to the Devil in return for everlasting life in Melmoth the Wanderer, a famous novel of terror and mystery by Charles MATURIN, a relative of Wilde's mother, "Speranza."

Melnotte, Claude. Hero of BULWER LYTTON's comedy The Lady of Lyons (1838). Though only a gardener's son, he plays the rôle of Prince of Como with such success that he wins the fair Pauline Deschapelles. When she learns the truth she repudiates him, but he wins her back.

Melpomene. In Greek mythology, the Muse of tragedy. See MUSES.

Melting Pot, The. A drama by Israel ZANGWILL (1908). The hero, David Quixano, a young Russian Jew, is the composer of a symphony, America, which expresses his idealistic conception of his new country as a great crucible that will dissolve racial prejudices. He is in love with Vera Revendal, a Russian Gentile, but when her father comes over from Russia, he recognizes the officer responsible for the massacre of his father, mother, and sister at Kishenev and leaves her. The performance of his symphony America brings him back to his ideals and to the girl he loves.

Melun. In Shakespeare's KING JOHN, a French lord.

Melusina or Melisande. The most famous of the fées of French romance, looked upon by the houses of Lusignan, Rohan, Luxemburg, and Sassenay as their ancestor and founder. Having enclosed her father in a high mountain for offending her mother, she is condemned to become every Saturday a serpent from her waist downward. She marries Raymond, Count of Lusignan, and makes her husband vow never to visit her on a Saturday, but the Count hides himself on one of the forbidden days, and sees his wife's transformation. Melusina is now obliged to leave her husband, and is destined to wander about as a specter until the day of doom. In another version of the story, the Count immures her in the dungeon of his castle. See also UNDINE.

A sudden scream is called in French un cri de Mélusine, in allusion to the scream of despair uttered by Melusina when she was discovered by her husband; in Poitou, certain gingerbread cakes bearing the impress of a beautiful woman "bien coiffée," with a serpent's tail, made by confectioners for the May fair in the neighborhood of Lusignan, are still called Mélusines.

Melville, Herman (1819-1891). American novelist, known for his stories of adventures at sea and in the South Sea Islands, largely autobiographical, which were extremely popular in the early part of his career. These are TYPEE (1846); OMOO (1847); Mardi (1849); Redburn (1849); and WHITE-JACKET (1850). His most famous book is MOBY DICK (1851), considered one of the greatest novels in the history of American literature and the literature of the world. Melville was strongly influenced by HAWTHORNE, who was a neighbor of his for several years, and his later books were not liked by the public because of their pessimism and symbolism. His work at its best is marked by realism, rich and poetic prose, the use of allegory and symbolism, and an effort to express the philosophical and religious meanings the author felt he had found in the world. His remaining works include PIERRE (1852); Israel Potter (1855); Piazza Tales (1856), short stories; The Confidence Man (1857); Billy Budd, written just before the author's death and published in 1924; and the following books of poems: Clarel (1876), Battle-Pieces and Aspects of the War (1866), John Marr and Other Sailors (1888), and Timoleon (1891).

Melville, who is considered among the most important of American novelists, spent several years in his early life as a sailor on whaling ships and men-of-war in the U.S. navy and as a laborer or traveler in the South Sea islands. During the last 20 years of his life he was a customs inspector in New York City and allowed his writing to slip. He died in obscurity, and interest in him was not revived until the period following World War I. For a full analysis of Melville and his work, see American Renaissance, by F. O. Matthiessen.

Melville, Julia. In Sheridan's comedy THE RIVALS, a ward of Sir Anthony Absolute, in love with Faulkland, who saved her life when she was thrown into the water by the upsetting of a boat.

Melyhalt, Lady. In the old romances, a powerful subject of King ARTHUR, whose domains Galiot invades. She chooses Galiot as her lover.

memento mori (Lat., "remember you must die"). An emblem of mortality, such as a skull; something to put us in mind of the shortness and uncertainty of life.

I make as good use of it [Bardolph's face] as many a man doth of a death's head or a memento mori.—Shakespeare, Henry IV, iii, 3.

Memling, Hans (1430?-1495). Early Flemish painter, celebrated for his treatment of religious subjects. His best work is in the reliquary of St. Ursula in the hospital of St. John at Bruges.

Memnon. The Oriental or Ethiopian prince who, in the Trojan War, went to the assistance of his uncle PRIAM and was slain by ACHILLES. His mother Eos (the Dawn) was inconsolable for his death, and wept for him every morning.

The Greeks called the statue of Amenophis III, in Thebes, that of Memnon. When first struck by the rays of the rising sun, it is said to have produced a sound like the snapping asunder of a cord. Poetically, when Eos kissed her son at daybreak, the hero acknowledged the salutation with a musical murmur. Memnon is the title of a novel by VOLTAIRE, the object of which is to show the folly of aspiring to too much wisdom.

Mémoires d'Outre-Tombe. A volume of personal reminiscences by CHATEAUBRIAND (1849-1850), describing the author's youth, recounting his adventures, and presenting vivid character-portraits of outstanding personalities of his time.

Memoirs of a Cavalier. A historical romance by DEFOE (1724).

Memory.

the bard of memory, see under BARD.

Memory Woodfall. William Woodfall (1746-1803) who would attend a debate, and, without notes, report it accurately next morning.

Menalcas. Any shepherd or rustic. The name figures in the Eclogues of Virgil and the Idyls of Theocritus.

Menander (343?-291 B.C.). Athenian dramatist; author of more than 100 comedies, characterized by wit, ingenious plots, and great literary style, which survived only in fragmentary form and through adaptations by PLAUTUS and TERENCE.

Men and Women. A collection of poems by ROBERT BROWNING (1855), including FRA LIPPO LIPPI.

Mencia of Mosquera. Heroine of an episode in Le Sage's GIL BLAS. As a young girl she marries Don Alvaro de Mello. A few days after the marriage, Alvaro happens to quarrel with Don Andrea de Baesa and kill him. He is obliged to flee from Spain, leaving his bride behind, and his property is confiscated. Seven years later, having heard the news of his death, she marries the wealthy Marquis of Guardia. Alvaro, however, appears one day as an undergardener on the place. She flees with him, only to see him killed by robbers, and returns to the Marquis, only to find him dying.

Mencken, Henry Louis (1880-). American journalist, essayist, and literary critic, for a number of years associated with the Baltimore Sun. During the period of the 1920's he was famous for his violent and vitriolic attacks on the hypocrisy, stupidity, and bigotry of much of American life as he saw it at the time, especially the Puritan and Victorian traditions and the bourgeoisie, the latter being termed by him "boobs." See also LEWIS, SINCLAIR; SHAW, GEORGE BERNARD. He began as a contributor to the magazine THE SMART SET in 1908, becoming co-editor with George Jean NATHAN in 1914. In 1924 he and Nathan founded the AMERICAN MERCURY, which became famous for its "debunking" articles and its section entitled "Americana." Mencken was violently denounced by the nation's conservative elements, and during World War I, when he was a war correspondent with the German army, was accused of being in the pay of Kaiser Wilhelm II. He had a wide influence on the young American intellectuals of the 1920's, especially students in colleges. He retired in 1933 to devote himself to politics and religion, became a foe of the NEW DEAL, and quickly dropped out of the public eye. Critics credit Mencken for his skill at satire and the vigor and trenchancy of his attacks on the shams and stuffiness of his day, but call attention to his intolerance and frequent crudity and misinformation. He is considered to have been influenced by the writings of Thomas HUXLEY.

Collections of Mencken's essays, through which his views were best known, include A Book of Burlesques (1916); A Little Book in C Major (1916); In Defense of Women (1917); A Book of Prefaces (1917, 1924, 1928); Damn—A Book of Calumny (1917); THE AMERICAN LANGUAGE (1919, revised in 1936; two Supplements 1945, 1948); Prejudices (1919, 1920, 1922, 1924, 1926, 1927), his most popular series. Among other works are Ventures into Verse (1903), poems; The Artist (1912) and Heliogabalus (1920), plays; George Bernard Shaw, His Plays (1905); Philosophy of Friedrich Nietzsche (1908); Notes on Democracy (1926); James Branch Cabell (1927), a literary study; Menckemiana Schimpflexikon (Dictionary of Abuse; 1928), a collection of attacks and adverse criticism of the author, edited by Mencken himself; A Treatise on the Gods (1930); Making a President (1932); A Treatise on Right and Wrong (1934); and three autobiographical works—Happy Days, 1880-1892 (1940), Newspaper Days, 1897-1906 (1941), and Heathen Days, 1890-1936 (1943).

Mendelism. The theory of heredity promulgated by Gregor Johann Mendel (1822-1884), the Austrian scientist and Abbot of Brunn, showing that the characters of the parents of cross-bred offspring reappear in certain proportions in successive generations according to definite laws. Mendel's Law was discovered by him in 1865 through experiments with peas.

Mendelssohn, Felix. In full Jakob Ludwig Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy (1809-1847). German composer, conductor, and concert pianist; grandson of Moses MENDELSSOHN. First appearance as a concert pianist at the age of nine. Instrumental in re-introduction of BACH by performing (1829) his Passion According to St. Matthew for the first time after the composer's death. Conductor at the Gewandhaus in Leipzig (from 1835). Composer of 4 symphonies (among them the famous "Italian" in A major), chamber music, concert overtures, choral works and oratorios; concertos; numerous works for the piano, as his 8 books of Lieder ohne Worte (Songs without Words); etc.

Mendelssohn, Moses (1729-1786). German Jewish philosopher, known as "the German Socrates." Author of Abhandlung uber die Evidenz in den Metaphysischen Wissenschaften (1764), an essay which was awarded the Berlin Academy prize over one submitted by KANT; Jerusalem oder uber religiose Macht und Judentum (1783), a history of Judaism urging religious tolerance; and especially Phadon (1767), a comprehensive collection of evidence to support the belief in the immortality of the soul. He was a close friend of LESSING, whose Nathan der Weise is an idealized portrait of him. His daughter Dorothea (1763-1839) married Friedrich SCHLEGEL.

Mendès, Catulle (1841-1909). French man of letters; founder of the PARNASSIAN school of poetry, the beginning of which he described in Légende du Parnasse Contemporain (1884).

Mendicant Orders or Begging Friars. The orders of the Franciscans (Grey Friars), Augustines (Black Friars), Carmelites (White Friars), and Dominicans (Preaching Friars).

Menechmians. Persons exactly like each other; so called from the Menaechmi of Plautus, the basis of Shakespeare's COMEDY OF ERRORS, in which not only the two Dromios are exactly like each other, but Antipholus of Ephesus is the facsimile of his brother, Antipholus of Syracuse.

Menelaus. In Greek legend, son of Atreus, brother of AGAMEMNON, and husband of HELEN, through whose desertion of him was brought about the Trojan War. He was the King of Sparta or of Lacedaemon. See ILIAD.

Meng-tse. The fourth of the sacred books of China; so called from the name of its author (372?-287 B.C.), Latinized into Mencius. Confucius or Kung-fu-tse wrote the other three; viz., Ta-heo (School of Adults), Chong-yong (The Golden Mean), and Lun-yu (Book of Maxims).

mother of Meng. A Chinese expression, meaning "an admirable teacher." Meng's father died soon after the birth of the sage, and he was brought up by his mother.

Men in White. A play about the internal workings of a hospital by Sidney KINGSLEY (1933), awarded the Pulitzer prize for 1934.

Menken, Adah Isaacs (1835-1868). American actress of Jewish ancestry, famous for her extravagant personality and wild and fabulous adventures. She was associated at one time or another with a number of the leading literary figures of the day in both the U.S. and Europe, including Walt WHITMAN, Mark TWAIN, Bret HARTE, DICKENS, Charles READE, SWINBURNE, D. G. ROSSETTI, Théophile GAUTIER, and Alexandre DUMAS père. She wrote flamboyant romantic poetry on her life, in free verse compared to that of both Walt Whitman and the Bible.

Menninger, Karl Augustus (1893-). American psychiatrist. Founder of the Menninger Clinic; of great influence on psychiatric practice in America. Wrote The Human Mind (1930; revised, 1937); Man Against Himself (1938); Love Against Hate (1942); etc.

Mennonites. Followers of Simons Menno (1492-1559), a native of Friesland, who modified the fanatical views of the Anabaptists. The sect still survives, in the United States as well as in Holland and Germany.

Men of Harlech. Welsh national anthem. Anonymous. From the translation by John Oxenford, published with the Welsh version, and music (1873):

Men of Harlech, march to glory,
Victory is hov'ring o'er ye,
Bright-eyed freedom stands before ye,
Hear ye not her call?
At your sloth she seems to wonder.
Rend the sluggish bonds asunder,
Let the war-cry's deaf'ning thunder
Ev'ry foe appall.

Menpes, Mortimer (1859–1938). British painter and etcher. Edited The Menpes Series of Great Masters. Author of Whistler as I Knew Him (1904); etc.

mentor. A guide, a wise and faithful counsellor; so called from Mentor, in whose care ULYSSES left his son Telemachus when he embarked for the Trojan War.

Menuhin, Yehudi (1917–). American violin virtuoso. First concert appearance as a child prodigy in 1923. With his sister, the talented pianist Hephzibah Menuhin (1920–), in joint sonata recitals (from 1930). As mature artist on the concert stage (from 1937), regarded as one of the finest living violinists.

Men Without Women. A volume of short stories by Ernest Hemingway (1927).

Mephibosheth. In the Old Testament, the lame son of Jonathan to whom David showed great kindness for his dead father's sake.

Mephibosheth in Dryden's ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, Pt. ii, is meant for Samuel Pordage (d. 1691), a poetaster.

Mephistopheles. A manufactured name (possibly from three Greek words meaning "not loving the light") of a devil or familiar spirit which first appears in the late medieval FAUST legend. He is well known as the sneering, jeering, leering tempter in Goethe's Faust and in Gounod's opera of the same name and Boito's opera, Mefistofele. He is mentioned by Shakespeare (Merry Wives, i. 1) and Fletcher as Mephostophilus, and in Marlowe's Faustus as Mephostophilus.

Mercator, Gerhardus. Latin for Gerhard Krämer (1512–1594). Flemish geographer, especially remembered for the system of projection, first used in his map of 1568 and now known as Mercator's projection, in which the meridians are drawn as parallel lines so that only comparatively small areas can be made to appear in correct relative dimensions.

Mercedes. (1) In Dumas' COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, the Catalan sweetheart of Edmond Dantes.

(2) A drama (1883) by T. B. ALDRICH. The heroine, Mercedes, is a Spanish woman whose native town has been invaded by French soldiers. They are to be poisoned, and to allay their suspicions, she and her child drink the fatal wine with them.

Merchant of Venice, The. A comedy by Shakespeare (ca. 1595). The titular "merchant" is Antonio, from whom his young friend Bassanio, who is in love with Portia, borrows 3,000 ducats to carry on his suit. According to the terms of the will left by Portia's father, the lover who would win her hand and fortune must rightly choose the one of three caskets, of lead, gold and silver, that contains her picture. Bassanio chooses the leaden casket and is successful. In the meantime Antonio has met with ill fortune. He had borrowed the 3,000 ducats for Bassanio from Shylock, the Jew on these conditions: if the loan was repaid within three months, only the principal would be required; if not, the Jew should be at liberty to claim a pound of flesh from Antonio's body. Antonio's ships have not returned as he expected, and the Jew demands the forfeiture. Portia, in the disguise of a doctor of law, conducts the defense and saves Antonio by reminding the Jew that a pound of flesh gives him no drop of blood and that he must cut neither more nor less than an exact pound or his life will be forfeited.

The interwoven stories of this comedy are drawn from medieval legends the germs of which are found in the GESTA ROMANORUM. The tale of the bond is ch. xlviii, and that of the caskets is ch. xcix. Much of the plot is also given in the 14th century Il Pecorone of Ser Giovanni, but Shakespeare could not read Italian, and since there was no translation in his day it is more than doubtful whether he ever saw or was aware of it.

Mercier, Désiré Joseph (1851–1926). Belgian cardinal (from 1907). Professor of Thomist philosophy at Louvain (1882–1906). Archbishop of Malines and primate of Belgium (1906). Spokesman of Belgians during German occupation of Belgium in World War I. Visited U.S. (1919) to thank America for assistance to Belgium. Worked for unification of Anglican, Protestant Episcopal and Roman churches.

Merciless Parliament. See under PARLIAMENTS.

Mercury. The Roman equivalent of the Greek HERMES, son of Maia and Jupiter, to whom he acted as messenger. He was the god of science and commerce, the patron of travelers and also of rogues, vagabonds and thieves. Hence, the name of the god is used to denote both a messenger and a thief.

Mercury is represented as a young man with winged hat and winged sandals (talaria), bearing the CADUCEUS, and sometimes a purse.

Mercury fig (Lat. Ficus ad Mercurium). The first fig gathered off a fig-tree was by the Romans devoted to Mercury. The proverbial saying was applied generally to all first fruits or first works.

you cannot make a Mercury of every log. Pythagoras said: Non ex quovis ligno Mercurius fit. That is, "Not every mind will answer equally well to be trained into a scholar." The proper wood for a statue of Mercury was box.

Mercutio. In Shakespeare's ROMEO AND JULIET, kinsman of Prince Escalus, and Romeo's friend. He is an airy, sprightly, elegant young nobleman, so full of wit and fancy that Dryden says Shakespeare was obliged to kill him in the third act, lest the poet himself should have been killed by Mercutio.

Mercutio's wit, gaiety, and courage will always procure him friends that wish him a longer life; but his death is not precipitated—he has lived out the time allotted him in the construction of the play.—Dr. Johnson

The light and fanciful humor of Mercutio serves to enhance and illustrate the romantic and passionate character of Romeo.—Sir W. Scott, The Drama.

Mercy. In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, a young pilgrim who accompanies Christiana in her walk to Zion. When Mercy reaches the Wicket Gate, she swoons from fear of being refused admittance. Mr. Brisk proposes to her, but, after being told that she is poor, leaves her, and she afterwards marries Matthew, the eldest son of Christian.

Merdle, Mr. In Dickens' LITTLE DORRIT, a banker who is called the "Master Mind of the Age." He becomes insolvent and commits suicide. The great banker is "the greatest forger and greatest thief that ever cheated the gallows."

Meredith, Burgess (1908–). American actor. Started with Eva Le Gallienne's student repertory group (1930). Appeared in Maxwell Anderson's Winterset; High Tor (drama critics' award); Star-Wagon; etc. Moving-picture début in Winterset (1936). Radio actor (since 1937). Vice-President, Actors' Equity Association. His wife is Paulette Goddard.

Meredith, George (1828–1909). English novelist, poet, and essayist, known for his psychological studies of character and his treatment of social problems in his novels. The best-known of these are The Ordeal of Richard Feverel (see RICHARD FEVEREL) (1859); EVAN HARRINGTON (1860); SANDRA BELLONI (1864); RHODA FLEMING (1865); BEAUCHAMP'S CAREER (1876); THE EGOIST (1879); THE TRAGIC COMEDIANS (1880); DIANA OF THE CROSSWAYS (1885); LORD ORMONT AND HIS AMINTA (1894); THE AMAZING MARRIAGE (1895). Meredith's poetry is concentrated in meaning and exact in detail, considered in his time as obscure. It deals chiefly with nature subjects and includes the following volumes: Poems (1851); MODERN LOVE (1862); Poems and Lyrics of the Joy of Earth (1883); Ballads and Poems of Magic Life (1887); A Reading of Earth (1888); The Empty Purse, And Other Poems (1892); Odes, in Contribution to the Song of French History (1898); A Reading of Life, With Other Poems (1901). He contributed essays to various magazines of the time, and his lecture The Idea of Comedy and the Uses of the Comic Spirit (1877) was well known.

Meredith, Janice. Heroine of P. L. Ford's JANICE MEREDITH.

Meredith, Owen. A pseudonym adopted by Edward Robert, first Earl of Lytton (1831–1891), son of the novelist BULWER-LYTTON, the author of LUCILE (1860), etc. He took his pseudonym from the names of two of his ancestors, Owen Gwynned ap. Griffith, King of North Wales, and ap. Meredith ap. Tudor, great-grandfather of Henry VI of England. Once Meredith was termed "third among living poets." He won the qualified praise of the Brownings and George Meredith. Yet due to his prolixity, posterity remembers him but vaguely as a facile rhymester who drew a malicious parody by Swinburne and judged himself in the lines:

... Genius is master of man,
Genius does what it must, and talent does what it can.

Merezhkovsky, Dmitry Sergeyevich (1866–1941). Russian poet, novelist, and critic, known for his mystical religious preoccupations and his series of historical novels dealing with religion in the past. The best-known of these is Christ and Antichrist, a trilogy consisting of Julian the Apostate (1901), Leonardo da Vinci (1917), and Peter and Alexis (1906). He also wrote studies of such literary figures as MONTAIGNE, FLAUBERT, IBSEN, DOSTOYEVSKY, and TOLSTOY. Merezhkovsky was a violent opponent of the Russian revolution of 1917.

Mergenthaler, Ottmar (1854–1899). German-born American inventor of the first Linotype typesetting machine (patented 1884).

Mérimée, Prosper (1803–1870). French novelist, best known for his picturesque historical novels and his nouvelles, or long short-stories, dealing with fiery passions in plots set against exotic backgrounds, especially Spain. His works include La Chronique du Règne de Charles IX (1829), compared by some critics with the novels of Sir Walter Scott; Colomba (1840); CARMEN (1845); also La Vénus d'Isle; Le Vase Étrusque; and La Double Méprise. Early in his career he wrote Théâtre de Clara Gazul (1825), which included plays imitating the Spanish style. Mérimée was a student of archaeology, and held the position of Inspector-General of historical monuments in France. Later he also became a senator.

Merivale, Philip (1886–1946). English actor. Member of F. R. Benson's Shakespearean Company (1906). First visit to U.S. in Scarlet Pimpernel (1910). Played modern and many Shakespearean rôles. Author of The Wind

Over the Water; Knut at Roeskilde; The Peace of Ferrara.

Merle, Madame. A prominent character in Henry James' Portrait of a Lady.

Merlin. The historical Merlin was a Welsh or British bard, born towards the close of the 5th century, to whom a number of poems have been very doubtfully attributed. He is said to have become bard to King ARTHUR, and to have lost his reason and perished on the banks of the river after a terrible battle between the Britons and their Romanized compatriots about 570.

His story has been mingled with that of the enchanter Merlin of the Arthurian romances, which, however, proceeds on different lines. This Prince of Enchanters is the son of a damsel seduced by a fiend, but is baptized by Blaise and so rescued from the power of Satan. He becomes adept in necromancy, but is beguiled by the enchantress Nimue, who shuts him up in a rock, and later Vivien, the Lady of the Lake, entangles him in a thornbush by means of spells. There he still sleeps, though his voice may sometimes be heard.

He first appears in Nennius (as Ambrosius). GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH wrote the Vita Merlini (ca. 1145); this was worked upon by Wace and Robert de Boron, and formed the basis of the English prose romance Merlin, and of most of the Merlin episodes in the Arthurian cycle. He is prominent in Malory's Morte d'Arthur, in Spenser's Faerie Queene (III. iii), and Tennyson's Idylls of the King. Edwin Arlington ROBINSON made him the subject of a narrative poem (1917). C. S. LEWIS brings him to life in his fantastic novel, That Hideous Strength (1946).

the English Merlin. William Lilly (1602-1681), the astrologer, who published two tracts under the name of "Merlinus Anglicus" and was the most famous charlatan of his day.

mermaid. The popular stories of the mermaid, a fabulous marine creature half woman and half fish—allied to the SIREN of classical mythology—probably arose from sailors' accounts of the dugong, a cetacean whose head has a rude approach to the human outline, and the mother of which while suckling her young holds it to her breast with one flipper, as a woman holds her infant in her arm. If disturbed, she suddenly dives under water and tosses up her fishlike tail.

In Elizabethan plays the term is often used for a courtesan. Cf. Massinger's Old Law, iv. 1, Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors, iii, 2, etc.

the Mermaid Tavern. The famous meeting-place (in Bread Street, Cheapside) of the wits, literary men, and men-about-town in the early 17th century. Among those who met there at somewhat of an early club were Ben Jonson, Sir Walter RALEIGH, BEAUMONT, Fletcher, John SELDEN, and in all probability SHAKESPEARE.

What things have we seen Done at the Mermaid! Heard words that have been So nimble, and so full of subtle flame,
As if that everyone from whence they came
Had meant to put his whole wit in a jest
Beaumont, Lines to Ben Jonson

Merman, The Forsaken, see FORSAKEN MERMEN.

Merodach or Marduk. A god of Babylon identified with the BAAL of the Old Testament and Apocrypha.

Merope. (1) One of the Pleiades; dimmer than the rest, because, according to Greek legend, she married SISYPHUS, a mortal. She was the mother of GLAUCUS.

(2) In classic myth, the daughter of Oenopion, king of Chios. Her too-eager lover ORION was blinded for his treatment of her.

(3) In classic myth, the mother of Aepytus by Cresphontes, king of Messenia. Her royal husband was murdered by Polyphontes, who possessed himself of both throne and widow, but years later Aepytus returned under pretext of claiming a reward for having murdered Cresphontes' son and avenged his father's death. This legend is the subject of a drama by Euripides, now lost, and dramas in Italian by Maffei (1713) and Alfiero, in French by VOLTAIRE, and in English by Matthew ARNOLD.

Merops' son or a son of Merops. One who thinks he can set the world to rights, but can only set it on fire. The allusion is to PHAETON, son of Merops, who thought himself able to drive the car of Phoebus but, in the attempt, nearly set the world on fire.

Merovingian. Name of the first Frankish dynasty (428-751), succeeded by the Carolingians. Its first important member was Clovis.

Merrick, Leonard (1864-1939). English novelist and playwright. Began as an actor. His best-known novel is Conrad In Quest of His Youth (1903).

Merriam, Eve (1916-). American poet and writer of fiction. Broadcaster of poetry program Out of the Ivory Tower (1942); contributor to New Yorker; New Republic; etc.

Merrilies, Meg. One of Scott's most famous characters, a half-crazy sibyl, queen of the gipsies, who appears in GUY MANNERING. She is the nurse of the young Mannering heir before he is kidnaped and recognizes him when he returns as Harry Bertram. Subject of a poem by KEATS.

Merrill, Stuart Fitzrandolph (1863-1915). American-French poet, born near Whitman's birthplace on Long Island. Attended Columbia Law School. Became interested in Single Tax movement and supported the defendants in the Haymarket Riot in Chicago. For this his father disinherited him. Leaving the United States

(1892), he never returned, expressing hatred of his country and settling in Versailles (1913). Died of heart attack during first World War. His poems, all symbolistic and expressionistic, have the romantic dreaminess of the pre-Raphaelites. His best-known book is Une Voix dans la Foule (1909), which expresses pity for the suffering of man.

Merriman, Henry Seton. Pseudonym of Hugh Stowell Scott.

merry. The original meaning is pleasing, delightful; hence, giving pleasure; hence mirthful, joyous.

The old phrase Merrie England (Merry London, etc.) merely signified that these places were pleasant and delightful, not necessarily bubbling over with merriment; and so with the merry month of May.

Merry Andrew. A buffoon, jester, or attendant on a quack doctor at fairs. Said by Hearne (1735)—with no evidence—to derive from Andrew Borde (d. 1549), physician to Henry VIII, who to his vast learning added great eccentricity. Matthew PRIOR wrote a poem on Merry Andrew. Andrew is a common name in old plays for a man-servant, as Abigail is for a waiting-woman.

merry as a Grig (Greek), see GRIG.

Merry Monarch. Charles II of England.

Merry del Val, Marqués Alfonso de (1864–1943). Spanish diplomat and ambassador to Great Britain (1918–1931). His brother, Rafael Merry del Val (1865–1930) was a Roman Catholic prelate, created cardinal (1903) and secretary of the Holy Office (1914–1930).

Merrygreek, Matthew. In the first English comedy, RALPH ROISTER DOISTER by Nicholas Udall, the servant of Ralph Roister Doister.

Merry Mount. See under MORTON, THOMAS.

Merry Wives of Windsor. A comedy by Shakespeare (ca. 1600). The redoubtable Sir John FALSTAFF is shown making ardent love to Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page, and these “merry wives,” by comparing notes, contrive to make a pretty fool of him. Even Ford introduces himself to Falstaff under an assumed name, gets into his confidence concerning the progress of his love affair with Mrs. Ford, and helps along the sport. On one occasion, Falstaff is put into a basket, covered with dirty linen and tossed into the Thames to escape the return of the supposedly irate husband; on another, having hurried into the garments of Old Mother Pratt on Ford’s approach, he is beaten black and blue; and still later he is persuaded to disguise himself as Herne the Hunter, wearing a buck’s head, and is pinched, and burned by “fairies” who have no mercy on him. There is a subplot dealing with the love affair of Mrs. Page’s daughter, “sweet Anne Page.”

The overture to Nicolai’s opera, The Merry Wives of Windsor, is very popular.

Mertoun, Mordaunt. In Scott’s PIRATE, the son of the ex-pirate, Basil Mertoun. He marries Brenda Troil.

Meru. The “Olympus” of the Hindus; a fabulous mountain in the center of the world, 80,000 leagues high, the abode of Vishnu, and a perfect paradise.

Merveilleuse (Fr., “marvelous”). The sword of DOOLIN OF MAYENCE. It was so sharp that when placed edge downwards it would cut through a slab of wood without the use of force.

The term is also applied to the dress worn by the fops and ladies of the Directory period in France, who were noted for their extravagance and aping of classical Greek modes.

Merz, Charles (1893–). Editor of the New York Times, succeeding Dr. John H. Finley (November, 1938). Author of The Great American Bandwagon (1928).

Mesa Verde. The book for a native American opera by Christopher LA FARGE (1945), based on the history of a tribe of vanished pueblo Indians in the Southwest.

Meshach. In the Old Testament, one of three Hebrews cast into a fiery furnace. See SHADRACH.

Mesmer, Franz Anton (1734–1815). Austrian physician. Developed the theory of animal magnetism, later known as MESMERISM.

mesmerism. The theory and system of medical treatment developed by F. A. MESMER and called by him animal magnetism. It was based essentially on the observation that a living organism influences another and was named by analogy with electric phenomena then in the limelight of public interest. See also KING’S EVIL.

Mesopotamia (Gr., “the land between the rivers,” i.e., the Euphrates and Tigris). The territory bounded by Kurdistan on the N. and N.E., the Persian Gulf on the S. and S.E., Persia on the E., and Syria and the Arabian Desert on the W. After World War I—as a consequence of which it was freed from Turkish rule and constituted a separate kingdom—its name was changed to Irak or Iraq.

the true “Mesopotamia” ring. Something high-sounding and pleasing, but wholly past comprehension. The allusion is to the story of an old woman who told her pastor that she “found great support in that blessed word Mesopotamia.”

Message to Garcia, A. A famous inspirational essay by Elbert HUBBARD (1899), recounting Lieutenant Andrew S. Rowan’s heroic journey to meet the leader of the Cuban insurgents. Estimated to have reached a circulation of forty million copies.

Messala. In the historical novel BEN HUR by Lew Wallace, Ben Hur's false friend and lifelong enemy.

Messalina. Wife of the Emperor Claudius of Rome, executed by order of her husband in 48 A.D. Her name has become a byword for lasciviousness and incontinency. Catherine II of Russia (1729-1796) has sometimes been called the modern Messalina.

Messenger, Angela Marsden. The heroine of Besant's ALL SORTS AND CONDITIONS OF MEN.

Messer Marco Polo. The titular hero of a romance (1921) by Donn BYRNE, dealing with his prolonged adventures at the court of China. See also POLO, MARCO.

Messiah, The. (1) An oratorio by HANDEL (1749). The libretto was by Charles Jennens, nicknamed "Soliman the Magnificent."

(2) An epic poem in fifteen books by the German poet KLOPSTOCK, dealing with the life of Christ. The first three books were published in 1748 and the last in 1773.

messiah complex, see under COMPLEX.

Messidor. In the French revolutionary calendar, the harvest month.

Metamorphoses. A series of tales in Latin verse by OVID, chiefly mythological. They are written in hexameters, in fifteen books, beginning with the creation of the world, and ending with the deification of Caesar and the reign of Augustus.

metaphor. From Greek metaphora; literally, "a carrying over" and thus basically identical in meaning with Latin translatio, "transfer" or "translation." A metaphor is a figure of speech in which a subjective impression or a descriptive comparison is boldly presented as a bit of ulterior but factual truth. In a metaphor the writer would not say, "You remind me of a tomb in which my love is buried alive," nor, "You are like a coffin," but simply, "Thou art the grave where buried love doth live" (Shakespeare). When a metaphor is accepted as fact, it turns into an element of mythology. Metaphors are evidence of the human ability to visualize the universe as a coherent organism, to see one thing in another, as "the world in a grain of sand" or "heaven in a flower" (Blake).

In a mixed metaphor two or more logically incompatible identifications are brought together. The effect can be absurd as well as sublime. E.g.: "The British lion will never pull in its horns," or, "To take up arms against a sea of troubles."

metaphysical poets. Term generally applied to several English poets of the early 17th century whose poetry is marked by highly complex and greatly compressed meanings, most often concerned with concepts of religion, by complex and long-sustained conceits, by a frequent avoidance of smooth and regular meter in order to achieve dramatic and oratorical effects, and by unusual syntax and an unconventional type of imagery chosen from philosophy, religion and theology, and the arts, crafts, sciences, and ordinary daily life of the period in which the poets lived. These poets, among whom there is wide variation in individual style, represented a reaction against the tradition of the Elizabethan sonnet sequence of the late 16th century, the products of which had become feeble and over-conventionalized as the vogue died out, and a return in some ways to the cruder, more homely type of imagery in poetry of the middle of the 16th century, as well as to the intellectualism of the Middle Ages. The awakening interest in science in the early 17th century is also considered to have had an influence on metaphysical poetry, and its complex conceits, most popularly associated with the school, were paralleled and excelled in "fantastic" character in GONGORISM and MARINISM. Its use of imagery from the trades, professions, arts, and crafts was foreshadowed by practice in Italian and French poetry of the 16th century and by a critical recommendation in the DÉFENSE ET ILLUSTRATION DE LA LANGUE FRANÇAISE of Joachim du Bellay. The most famous of the metaphysical poets are John DONNE, George HERBERT, Thomas TRAHERNE, Richard CRASHAW, Henry VAUGHAN, Francis QUARLES, Andrew MARVELL, Abraham COWLEY, and John CLEVELAND. Donne is considered the greatest among these, and Cowley and Cleveland are regarded as the most culpable in the use of far-fetched conceits; Crashaw and Vaughan have been found to be less characteristic than the rest.

The poets in this loosely associated school were first called "metaphysical" by Samuel JOHNSON in his study of Cowley in his Lives of the English Poets (1779-1781), where he condemns them for their excessive use of "learning" in their poetry. The term had been implied, however, in the earlier condemnations of the poets by William DRUMMOND OF HAWTHORNDEN and John DRYDEN. In the 20th century interest in the metaphysical poets was revived, and their work was highly praised by such English and American critics as Sir H. J. C. Grierson, T. S. Eliot, I. A. Richards, William Empson, Allen Tate, John Crowe Ransom, and Cleanth Brooks; Eliot, Richards, and Brooks use metaphysical poetry, especially that of John Donne, as examples in their studies of poetic theory. A number of 20th-century poets came under the influence of the metaphysicals and revealed this influence varyingly in their own work; according to critics, they include ELIOT, Archibald MACLEISH, Louise BOGAN, Horace GREGORY, Elinor WYLIE, Léonie ADAMS, Ruth PITTER, Richard Eberhart, RANSOM, TATE, Hart CRANE, Wallace STEVENS, and R. P. BLACKMUR. In the 19th century, Gerard Manley HOPKINS is regarded as a poet outstandingly showing the influence of the metaphysicals, and the poetry of R. W. EMERSON, Jones VERY, and Emily DICKINSON has also been called metaphysical.

Metastasio. Original name Pietro Antonio Domenico Bonaventura Trapassi (1698–1782). Italian poet and dramatist. His works include lyrical dramas, oratorios, poems for cantatas, and operas.

metathesis. In linguistics, the transposition of single sounds or syllables within a word, as “ax” (aks) for “ask” in illiterate speech. Metathesis is a process by which many changes in a language take place, and a number of words in modern English are metathesized forms of the original A.S. or M.E. words. Thus bird was once A.S. brid; wasp, A.S. waeps; clasp, M.E. clapsen; etc. The r sound is particularly susceptible to transposition in this manner, as in fresh, from A.S. fersc, and thresh, from A.S. therscan.

Metchnikoff, Élie (1845–1916). Russian zoologist and bacteriologist. Second director (1895) of the institute founded in Paris by Louis PASTEUR. Nobel prize for physiology and medicine (1908, shared with Paul Ehrlich).

metempsychosis (Gr., from meta, “beyond,” and empsychoun, “to animate”). Transmigration of souls. The doctrine, originating in India and Egypt, that the human soul after death enters into another body, human or animal.

meter. Rhythm is the underlying repetitive beat existing in all life, for us notably in the beat of the human heart. It is the foundation of music and of verse. Meter is the measuring out of rhythm. Among the Greeks and Romans it was based on “quantity,” that is the succession of short and long syllables according to definite metrical patterns. English verse depends upon accent. The different meters are named for the number of their accents. A trimeter, for instance, is a line of three accents or beats. Modern poetry attempts closeness to casual speech, and hence meter, in free verse, has become either irregular or, in some cases, non-existent.

Methodism. The doctrines, etc., originally of a protestant denomination which grew from a loose religious association formed at Oxford University in 1729 by John and Charles WESLEY. The name began as a term of derision applied by the Oxford students to the members of the association because of their methodical habits of study. In course of time, the movement became widely evangelical and broke away from the Church of England. In America it is chiefly represented by the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Methuselah, old as. Very old indeed, almost incredibly old. He is the oldest man mentioned in the Bible, where we are told (Gen. v. 27) that he died at the age of 969.

Gelett BURGESS entitled one of his humorous volumes Maxims of Methuselah (1907). George Bernard SHAW has a drama entitled BACK TO METHUSELAH.

metonymy. The substitution of one noun for another closely associated with it, usually a part for the whole, or a single attribute for the noun, as “the kettle boils,” “the pen is mightier than the sword,” “he drank the cup.”

metric system. The decimal system of measures and weights based on the meter which is a unit of length arbitrarily fixed during the French Revolution as the “natural” unit of one forty-millionth of the circumference of the globe. The standard meter is the distance (at the melting point of ice) between two lines drawn on a bar of platinum kept in the pavillon de Breteuil near Sèvres, France.

Metternich, Prince Klemens Wenzel Nepomuk Lothar von (1773–1859). Austrian statesman. Lifelong reactionary. By skillful diplomacy kept Austria out of war between France and Russia (1812–1813) but finally joined alliance with Russia against France. The Congress of Vienna (1814–1815) saw the height of his power. Suppressed liberal ideas and revolutionary movements (1815–1830) especially through the Holy Alliance with Russia and Prussia. The “Age of Metternich” (1815–1848) is condemned by some as anti-liberal and obscurantistic. It is praised by others as marking the last stand of tradition and evolution against disorder and revolution.

meum and tuum. That which belongs to me and that which is another's. Meum is Latin for “what is mine,” and tuum is Latin for “what is thine.” If a man is said not to know the difference between meum and tuum, it is a polite way of saying he is a thief.

Mew, Charlotte (1870–1928). English poet. In 1922, Thomas Hardy, John Masefield, and Walter de la Mare procured for her a Civil List pension of 75 pounds per annum. In 1927 she became desperately ill and finally took her own life. Her work, says Louis Untermeyer, is like “a cameo cut in steel.” Within its range it is nearly of the first rank. The Farmer's Bride (1916); The Rambling Sailor (1929).

Mexico, conquest of. See under CONQUEST.

Mexitl or Mexitli. The principal god of the ancient Mexicans (whence the name of their country), to whom enormous sacrifices, running into many thousands of human beings, were offered at a time. Also called Huitzilo-pochtli.

Meyer, Kuno (1858–1919). German authority on Celtic philology. Professor of Celtic at the universities of Liverpool and Berlin. Co-founder and director of the Summer School of Irish Learning at Dublin (1903).

Meyerbeer, Jacob. Real name Jakob Liebmann Beer (1791–1864). Composer of German birth but generally considered of the French school. His chief operas are ROBERT LE DIABLE, LES HUGUENOTS, LE PROPHÈTE and L'AFRICAIN.

Meyrhofer, Paul. The hero of Sudermann's DAME CARE.

Meynell, Alice (1847–1922). English essayist and poet, a convert to the Roman Catholic religion, whose religious beliefs are reflected in her writings. Volumes of her poetry include Preludes (1875); Poems (1893); Later Poems (1901); Father of Women (1918); Last Poems (1923). Among her books of essays are The Rhythm of Life (1893); The Color of Life (1896); The Children (1896); The Spirit of Peace (1898); Ceres Runaway (1910); The Second Person Singular (1921). She and her husband, Wilfrid Meynell, editor of the magazine Merry England, befriended the poet Francis THOMPSON early in his career when he was living in London in poverty and loneliness. She was also a friend of D. G. ROSSETTI, John RUSKIN, Robert BROWNING, Coventry PATMORE, George MEREDITH, and other leading literary figures of her time, who gathered at the Meynell home. Her daughter, Viola Meynell, author of novels and short stories, wrote a Memoir on her mother (1929).

Meyrick, Hans. In George Eliot's DANIEL DERONDA, an artist friend of the hero.

Mezentius. A legendary king of the Tyrrhenians, noted for his cruelty and impiety, who put his subjects to death by tying a living man to a dead one. He was driven from his throne by his subjects, and fled to TURNUS, King of the Rutuli. When AENEAS arrived, he fought with Mezentius, and slew both him and his son Lausus.

Micah. One of the Minor Prophets of the Old Testament; also, the name of the book in which his prophecy is recorded.

Micah Clarke. A romance of 17th century England by A. CONAN DOYLE (1888), dealing with the MONMOUTH REBELLION.

Micawber, Mr. Wilkins. In Dickens' novel DAVID COPPERFIELD, a great maker of speeches, letter-writer, and projector of bubble schemes sure to lead to fortune but always ending in grief. Notwithstanding his ill success, he never desponds, but feels certain that something will "turn up" to make his fortune. Having failed in every adventure in the old country, he emigrates to Australia, where he becomes a magistrate. He is said to have been drawn from Dickens' father. Hence, a Micawber came to mean an incurable optimist.

Michael. A narrative poem by WORDSWORTH, telling the story of an honest, hard-working herdsman whose virtues are ill-rewarded by the failure of a nephew and the crime of his only son.

Michael, St. See under SAINTS.

Michael and His Lost Angel. A drama by Henry Arthur JONES (1896), portraying the struggle of the stern and upright young minister, Rev. Michael Faversham, to resist his love for Mrs. Lesdon, a wilful, lovable, irresistible woman who comes suddenly into his life and will not be put out. He sins and forces himself to make public confession, but finds he cannot forget her.

Michael Angelo, see MICHELANGELO.

Michaëlis, Karin (1872–). Danish novelist and short-story writer. Best-known for her novel The Dangerous Age (1911), which was widely sold abroad. Author of more than 50 books.

Michaelis, Ulrich. Titular hero of Moody's FAITH HEALER.

Michaelmas Day. September 29, the Festival of St. Michael (see under SAINTS) and All Angels. In England it is one of the quarter-days when rents are due and the day when magistrates are elected. It is customary there to eat goose on Michaelmas Day.

Michel or Cousin Michael. Generic name for a German.

Michelangelo. Full Italian name Michelangelo Buonarroti (1475–1564). One of the greatest painters and sculptors of all time. Also an architect and poet of the Italian Renaissance. Pope Julius II had him decorate the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel in Rome (1508–1512). He worked on the façade of San Lorenzo in Florence. He became architect of St. Peter's in Rome. For his friend, the Italian nobleman Tommaso Cavalieri, and for his adored Vittoria Colonna he wrote his sonnets and did allegorical drawings. From a single block of marble he carved his huge statue of David (Florence Academy). The tomb of Pope Julius II has his famous statue of Moses. For Popes Clement VII and Paul III he did a great fresco of The Last Judgment in the Sistine Chapel. He wrought many architectural works and made many plans. His work is renowned for its grandeur and extraordinary knowledge of anatomy. He also wrote lyrical and philosophical poems. Next to Leonardo da Vinci he is the greatest figure of the Renaissance.

the Michelangelo of battle scenes. Michelangelo Cerquozzi (1600-1660), a native of Rome, famous for his battle scenes and shipwrecks.

Michelangelo des bamboches. Peter van Laar (1613-1673), the Dutch painter.

Michelangelo of music. Christoph Willibald von Gluck (1714-1787), the German opera composer.

Michelangelo of sculptors. Pierre Puget (1622-1694), the French sculptor. Also, René Michael Slodtz (1705-1764).

Michelet, Jules (1798-1874). French historian, known for the vividness and penetration of his accounts of French history, his sympathy for the PROLETARIAT and the ideals of the Revolution of 1789, and his opposition to the Church, the crown, and the bourgeoisie. His great work is Histoire de France (1833-1843, 1847-1853, 1855-1867). Michelet came from a background of poverty and secured his education through his own efforts. He lost his position as professor in the Collège de France because of his attacks on the Jesuits, and later, when Napoleon III assumed power, he was also dismissed from his employment in the national archives. His writings attribute great influence to material and physical factors in historical events.

Mickey Mouse. A sprightly, self-confident, and quick-witted mouse, the world-famous hero of a series of animated cartoons by Walt DISNEY. His leading lady is usually Minnie Mouse.

Midas. A legendary king of Phrygia who requested of the gods that everything he touched might be turned to gold. His request was granted, but as his food became gold the moment he touched it, he prayed the gods to take their favor back. He was then ordered to bathe in the Pactolus, and the river ever after rolled over golden sands.

Another story about Midas tells that, when appointed a judge to musical contest between Apollo and Pan, he gave judgment in favor of the satyr; whereupon Apollo in contempt gave the king a pair of ass's ears. Midas hid them under his Phrygian cap, but his barber discovered them, and, not daring to mention the matter, dug a hole and relieved his mind by whispering in it, "Midas has ass's ears," then covering it up again. The rushes were ever after murmuring the secret to the winds.

Middle Ages. The period of European history characterized by a FEUDAL social and economic organization and the international dominance of the Roman Catholic Church, with a distinct culture and civilization of its own. It may be said to extend broadly from about 476 (the fall of the Roman Empire) to 1453 (the capture of Constantinople by the Turks). It varies a little with almost every nation; in France it is usually dated from Clovis to Louis XI (481 to 1461); in England, from the Heptarchy to the accession of Henry VII (409 to 1485). The earlier part of this time (to about 1200) is still sometimes referred to as the DARK AGES.

Middle Border, A Son of the. The title of Hamlin GARLAND's autobiography (1917), which deals with life in the Middle West. His Daughter of the Middle Border (1921), which treats of the life of his mother and wife and continues his own experiences, was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for biography in 1922.

Middle East. See under EAST.

Middle Kingdom. An old name for China.

Middlemarch: A Study of Provincial Life. A novel by George ELIOT (1872), with a double plot interest. The heroine, Dorothea Brooke, longs to devote herself to some great cause and for a time expects to find it in her marriage to Rev. Mr. Casaubon, a middle-aged scholar. Mr. Casaubon lives only eighteen months after their marriage, but this is a more than sufficient period to disillusion her completely. On his death he leaves her his estate with the express proviso that she is to forfeit it if she marries his young cousin Will Ladislaw, whom she had seen frequently in Rome. In the endeavor to find happiness without Ladislaw, whom she now comes to care for deeply, Dorothea throws herself into the support of the medical reforms advocated by the young Dr. Lydgate. Finally, however, she decides to give up her property and marry Ladislaw. The second plot has to do with the efforts and failure of Dr. Lydgate to live up to his early ideals. Handicapped by financial difficulties into which his marriage to the selfish and ambitious Rosamond Vincy had thrown him and by the criticism and opposition of his medical associates, he drifts gradually into cultivating a wealthy practice at the expense of his medical standards. There is a subplot dealing with the love affair of Rosamond's brother Fred Vincy and Mary Garth, the daughter of Caleb Garth, the builder.

Middlesex. The territory of the Middle Saxons—that is, between Essex, Sussex, and Wessex. In fiction it is best known as the scene of Thomas HARDY's novels. See also Wessex.

Middleton, Clara. The heroine of Meredith's novel THE EGOIST. Her father, Dr. Middleton, also plays a part in the story.

Middleton, George (1880-). American playwright. Married the daughter of Senator

La Follette (1911). His first play, The Cavalier, written with Paul Kester, was produced by Julia Marlowe (1902). Polly With a Past, written with Guy Bolton (1917), was a great success and established Ina Claire as a light comedienne. The Light of the World (1920) was the first play by an American to be accepted by a French state theater. These Things are Mine (1947) is his autobiography.

Middleton, Richard Barham (1882-1911). English poet and short-story writer, descended from Richard Harris Barham, author of the INGOLDSBY LEGENDS. His masters were Ernest Dowson, Swinburne, and Symons. He committed suicide in Brussels. He was "a poet born out of his time." His best work in prose is in his volume of short stories, The Ghost-Ship and Other Stories (1912).

Middleton, Sir John. In Jane Austen's novel SENSE AND SENSIBILITY, the great squire of the neighborhood in which the story is laid. He is fairly amiable and loves "collecting parties of young people to eat ham and chicken out of doors," but his wife is "reserved, cold and had nothing to say for herself beyond the most commonplace inquiry or remark."

Middleton, Thomas (1570?-1627). English playwright, known chiefly for his satirical and romantic comedies. Among his works are A Trick to Catch the Old One (1608); The Roaring Girl (1611), in collaboration with Thomas Dekker; A Fair Quarrel (1617), The Changeling (1623), and The Spanish Gypsy (1623), all written with William Rowley; A Game at Chess (1624), concerning politics, which brought the author into official investigation; A Chaste Maid in Cheapside (1630); The Mayor of Quinborough (1651); No Wit, No Help Like a Woman's (1657); Women Beware Women (1657). Middleton, whose plays were very popular in their day, also wrote verse, prose, and a large number of masques for performances on public occasions in London.

Middletown. A famous sociological study of a typical small city of the U.S. during the boom period of the 1920's, written by Robert S. and Helen M. Lynd, American social scientists, and published in 1929. Middletown in Transition (1937) is a sequel, presenting a supplementary picture of the same city in the depression era of the 1930's. The actual city in which the study was made was Muncie, Indiana.

Midgard (Literally, "the yard in the middle"). In Scandinavian mythology, the abode of the first pair from whom sprang the human race. It was made of the brow of YMR, and was joined to ASGARD by the rainbow bridge called BIFROST.

Midgard serpent. Also known as Midgardsorm ("the worm or serpent of Midgard"). In Norse mythology, with Fenris and Hel, offspring of Loki and the giantess Angerboda. Odin threw the serpent into the sea, where it encircles the earth. At Utgard, THOR almost managed to lift the serpent off the ground [341, 343]. When the twilight of the gods comes, the Midgard serpent will repair to the battlefield of Vigrid. There it will be killed by Thor, but its venom will be vomited over him and he will not survive.

burning the midnight oil. Sitting up late, especially when engaged in literary work.

Midrash. The rabbinical investigation into, and interpretation of, the Old Testament writings, which began when the Temple at Jerusalem was destroyed and was committed to writing in a large number of commentaries between the 2nd and 11th centuries A. D. The three ancient Midrashim (Mechilta, Sifre, and Sifra—first half of the 2nd century) contain both the HALACHAH and the HAGGADAH.

Midshipman Easy, Mr. Titular hero of a novel (1836) by Captain Frederick MARRYAT.

Midsummer Night's Dream. A drama by Shakespeare (ca. 1595). Plans are on foot for the wedding of THESEUS, Duke of Athens, and the Amazon queen, HIPPOLYTA, whom he has defeated in battle. Egeus, an Athenian, has promised his daughter Hermia to Demetrius, and although Hermia is in love with Lysander, the Duke orders her to obey her father. The two lovers escape to the forest, followed by Demetrius and by Helena, who is in love with Demetrius. Here they are found by OBERON, King of the fairies, his queen, Titania, with whom he is extremely disgruntled, and the merry PUCK. Puck has a magic love-juice that will make the one whose eyelids are anointed fall in love with the first object he sees upon awaking, and as he uses it somewhat indiscriminately, a strange comedy ensues, but eventually Demetrius abandons Hermia to Lysander and devotes himself to Helena. At the Duke's wedding feast, which celebrates three weddings in place of one, BOTTOM THE WEAVER and his group of players present as an interlude the play of PYRAMUS AND THISBE. Shakespeare's comedy is indebted to Chaucer's KNIGHT'S TALE for the Athenian setting, and to Ovid's METAMORPHOSES for the Pyramus and Thisbe interlude.

Mifflin, Roger. The bookseller of Christopher MORLEY's Parnassus on Wheels (1917) and The Haunted Bookshop (1919).

Miggs, Miss. In Dickens' BARNABY RUDGE, the handmaiden and "comforter" of Mrs. VARDEN, a tall, gaunt young woman, addicted to pattens, slender and shrewish, of a sharp and acid visage. She holds the male sex in utter contempt, but makes a secret exception in favor of Sim TAPPERTIT, who irreverently calls her "scraggy." Miss Miggs always sides with madam against master, pretending that she is a suffering martyr and he an inhuman Nero.

Miss Miggs, baffled in all her schemes . . . and cast upon a thankless, undeserving world, turned very sharp and sour . . . but the justices of the peace for Middlesex . . . selected her from 124 competitors to the office of turnkey for a county Bridewell, which she held till her decease, more than thirty years afterwards, remaining single all that time—Last Chapter.

Mignon. In Goethe's WILHELM MEISTER, a beautiful, dwarfish, fairy-like Italian girl, in love with Wilhelm, her protector. Full of fervor, full of love, she is overwhelmed by despair at finding her love is not returned, becomes insane, and dies. The opera Mignon by Thomas (1866) is based on her story.

Mihajlovic, Draza (1893?-1946). Following German conquest of Yugoslavia (1941) organized an army of guerrillas against German and Italian armies. General (1941) and commander of Free Yugoslavian army (1942). Charged by the later Russian-supported Tito government of Yugoslavia with collaboration with the Germans. Condemned to death and executed (July 17, 1946).

Mikado. See RULERS, TITLES OF.

Mikado, The. A GILBERT and SULLIVAN comic opera (1885). Nanki-Poo, the son of the Mikado, traveling in disguise, falls in love with Yum-Yum, the lovely ward of Ko-Ko. The latter, who is Lord High Executioner but never beheads anyone, is now informed by Pooh-Bah, Lord High Everything Else, that he will lose his office unless there is an execution within a month. Nanki-Poo agrees to be the victim if he may marry Yum-Yum. When the Mikado is told that his son, Nanki-Poo, has been executed, his wrath is fearful, but luckily Ko-Ko's report of the execution was a false one, so all is well.

Mike. A common name for an Irishman. See also PAT.

Milan Decree. A decree made by Napoleon, dated "Milan, Dec. 27th, 1807," declaring "the whole British Empire to be in a state of blockade, and forbidding all countries either from trading with Great Britain or from even using an article of British manufacture."

Milbanke, Anne (1792-1860). Wife of Lord BYRON; a beautiful, wealthy, and rigorously moral woman unsuited to a man of her husband's temperament. The two were separated a year after their marriage, following the birth of a daughter, Ada. It was rumored at the time that the separation was caused by Lady Byron's discovery of an incestuous relationship existing between the poet and his half-sister, Augusta LEIGH. The rumor added to Byron's scandalous reputation.

Milendo. The metropolis of LILLIPUT in Swift's Gulliver's Travels (see GULLIVER, LEMUEL), the wall of which is two and one-half feet in height, and at least eleven inches thick. The city is an exact square; two main streets divide it into four quarters, and the emperor's palace, Belfaborac, is in its center.

Mildmay, Frank, see FRANK MILD MAY.

Miles. In Henry James' THE TURN OF THE SCREW, the little boy of the two suspected children. When the governess first enters employment in the family, her suspicions are aroused by the fact that Miles has been expelled from school and will not confess to her the reason, beyond that it was for "telling things" to the other boys. Miles receives the particular attention of Peter QUINT.

Miles Gloriosus (Lat., "glorious soldier"). A Latin comedy by Plautus. The hero is Captain Pyropolinices, a character who furnished the basis for a long line of military braggarts in Continental and English drama. See also BOBADIL; COPPER CAPTAIN; PAROLLES.

Milesian Fables. A Greek collection of witty but obscene short stories by Antonius Diogenes, compiled by Aristides, of Miletus (2nd century B. C.), whence the name. They were translated into Latin by Sisenna about the time of the civil wars of Marius and Sulla, and were greedily read by the luxurious Sybarites, but are no longer extant. Similar stories, however, are still sometimes called Milesian Tales.

Milesians. (1) Properly, the inhabitants of Miletus; but the name has been given to the ancient Irish because of the legend that two sons of Milesius, a fabulous king of Spain, conquered the country and repeopled it after exterminating the Firbolgs then living there.

(2) An early school of Greek philosophers, of the period preceding PLATO, who tried to find a unifying principle for the universe in a basic "world-stuff" which maintained its identity throughout all physical change. Water, air, and the "infinite" were suggested. The school was made up of ANAXIMANDER, ANAXIMENES, and THALES.

Miles Standish, see COURTSHIP OF MILES STANDISH.

Milhaud, Darius (1892-). French polytonal composer. In U.S. as conductor and lecturer (1923, 1940). Author of a musical novel (1923) based on Francis JAMMES's La Brebis Égarée.

Milholland, Ramsey, see RAMSEY MILHOLLAND.

Milky Way. A great circle of stars entirely surrounding the heavens, apparently so crowded together that they look to the naked eye like a "way" or stream of faint "milky" light; the Galaxy or Via Lactea.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the galaxy—that Milky Way,
Thick, nightly, as a circling zone, thou seest
Powdered with stars

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii, 577, etc

Mill, John Stuart (1806–1873). English philosopher and economist, eldest son of James Mill (1773–1836), Scottish philosopher, historian and economist. At ten John Stuart Mill read Plato and Demosthenes with ease. Champion of utilitarian school of thought before the age of twenty. After a mental crisis, widened his philosophy, infusing idealism. Created impression with his System of Logic (1843). Applied economic doctrines to social conditions. His best-known treatises are On Liberty (1859); Thoughts on Parliamentary Reform (1859); Representative Government (1861); Utilitarianism (1863); etc. Voted with advanced Radical party and advocated women's suffrage.

Millais, Sir John Everett (1829–1896). English painter. Originated with Holman HUNT and D. G. ROSSETTI the Pre-Raphaelite movement (1848). Illustrated Trollope's works and Tennyson's poems. Deviated from Pre-Raphaelite manner. Painted Gladstone, Lord Beaconsfield, Wilkie Collins, Carlyle, John Bright, Irving, Tennyson, etc.

Millamant. In Congreve's comedy THE WAY OF THE WORLD (1700), a brilliant girl, who says she "loves to give pain because cruelty is a proof of power, and when one parts with one's cruelty, one parts with one's power." Beautiful, witty and full of caprice, she arouses the jealousy of women and the adoration of many men, but particularly of Edward MIRABELL.

Millay, Edna St. Vincent (1892–). American poet, one of the best known and financially most successful poets of her time. She became famous during the 1920's for her poems celebrating love and unfaithfulness and the right of women to as much freedom in matters of morals as men, presented with a flippancy and bravado that expressed the spirit of the period. Later she became interested in liberal causes, but her subject-matter changed little. In form her poetry is conventional and shows the influence of the Elizabethan and 17th-century lyricists. Her books of verse include RESCUENCE, AND OTHER POEMS (1917); A Few Figs from Thistles (1920); Second April (1921); The Harp Weaver, And Other Poems (1923), winner of the Pulitzer Prize in 1923; The Buck in the Snow (1928); Fatal Interview (1931); Wine from These Grapes (1934); Flowers of Evil (1936), translations of Baudelaire's FLEURS DU MAL; CONVERSATION AT MID- NIGHT (1937); Huntsman, What Quarry? (1939); Make Bright the Arrows (1940).

Edna St. Vincent Millay for a while early in her career lived in GREENWICH VILLAGE and wrote short stories under the name of Nancy Boyd. She also was associated with the PROVINCETOWN PLAYERS as an actress and playwright. Her verse plays are Two Slatterns and a King, Moral Interlude, and The Lamp and the Bell (1921); and The King's Henchman (1926), produced in 1927 and later presented in operatic form at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York City, with music by Deems TAYLOR. The Murder of Lidice (1942) is a radio play in verse.

Mill Boy of the Slashes. Henry Clay (1777–1852), American statesman and orator, was so called from the district in Virginia where he spent his boyhood.

Miller, Mrs. Alice nee Duer (1874–1942). American novelist, poet, and writer. The Charm School (1919) and Come Out of the Kitchen (1916) were successfully staged. Gowns By Roberta (1933) formed the basis of the musical comedy Roberta. The White Cliffs (1940), a long poem about England, was read over the radio by Lynn Fontanne and proved to be a runaway best seller. Her husband, Henry Wise Miller, published an autobiographical account of their life together entitled All Our Lives (1945).

Miller, Caroline (1903–). American novelist and short-story writer. Pulitzer prize (1944) for Lamb In His Bosom, a story of back-country life in Georgia before the Civil War.

Miller, Daisy, see DAISY MILLER.

Miller, Henry (1891–). American novelist and short-story writer, for a number of years a resident of France. His work, often compared to SURREALIST painting, is marked chiefly by iconoclasm, fantastic wit, and a semi-mystical emphasis on sex. Among his books are Tropic of Cancer (1935); Black Spring (1939); Scenario (1937), "a film with sound," based on The House of Incest, a surrealist novel by Anaïs Nin; Money, And How It Gets That Way (1938); Max and the White Phagocytes (1938), a collection of short stories; Tropic of Capricorn (1939); The Cosmological Eye (1939), a collection of stories, sketches, and essays; The World of Sex (1940); The Colossus of Maroussi (1941), on travels in Greece; The Wisdom of the Heart (1941), stories and essays. During World War II, Miller took refuge in the U.S. The result of a "lugubrious trip" across the country was The Air-conditioned Nightmare (1946).

Miller, Henry John (1860–1926). English-born American actor and theatrical manager. With Charles Frohman's Empire Theater stock company (ca. 1890-1896); opened Princess Theater, New York (1906); manager, director and star of the Henry Miller Theater, New York City (1918-1920). His son, Gilbert Miller, is a well-known manager.

Miller, Joaquin. In full Cincinnatus Hiner or Heine Miller (1841?-1913). American poet, famous in the latter half of the 19th century for his rhetorical poems of the West, in which he claimed to have lived with the Indians for a time and served variously as a pony-express rider, Indian fighter, horse-thief, etc. He was particularly popular among the English, who called him "the Byron of Oregon." Pacific Poems (1870) and Songs of the Sierras (1871) attracted the most attention. Other books are Specimens (1868); Joaquin et al (1869); Songs of the Sunlands (1873); Unwritten History: Life Among the Modocs (1874), a picturesque autobiography; The Ship in the Desert (1875); The Danites in the Sierras (1881); and several novels and plays as well as other volumes of verse. Miller's fame died quickly; he spent the latter part of his life traveling to the Orient, Alaska, South Africa, and Central America. Cf. Americans (1922), by Stuart P. SHERMAN.

Miller, Joc. A stale jest. A certain John Mottley compiled a book of facetiae in 1739, which he, without permission, entitled Joe Miller's jests, from Joseph Miller (1684-1738), a popular comedian of the day who could neither read nor write.

Millerin, Luise. Heroine of Schiller's drama Love and Intrigue (Kabale und Liebe), a poor musician's daughter loved by Ferdinand von Walther, son of a German prince. She is persuaded to give him up, writes a compromising letter which is allowed to fall into his hands, and steadfastly continues the deception.

millor of Sans Souci, the. One of the innumerable stories told about FREDERICK THE GREAT of Prussia. When the king had built his new residence of Sans Souci, he felt annoyed by the noise of a near-by mill. The miller refused to sell his property. When the king threatened to seize it, the miller took the matter to court. The judges upheld the miller's rights, and the king accepted the verdict because, even though absolute in his power, he considered himself subject to the laws of the state.

Miller of Trompington, see THE REEVE'S TALE, one of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales.

Miller's or Milleres Tale, see NICHOLAS.

Millet, Jean François (1814-1875). French genre and landscape painter of the BARBIZON SCHOOL. Most famous for The Angelus and The Man with the Hoe. The latter inspired Edwin MARKHAM's poem of that title.

Millikan, Robert Andrews (1868-). American physicist. Isolated the electron and measured its charge. Investigated cosmic rays, absorption of X rays, etc. Received Nobel prize in physics (1923). His books include The Electron (1917); Protons, Photons, Neutrons and Cosmic Rays (1935), etc. His Evolution of Sciences and Religion (1927) stamps him as an outstanding representative of the modern trend in science which concludes that purely quantitative thinking is confined to unnecessarily narrow limits.

Millin, Mrs. Sarah Gertrude, nee Liebson (1889-). South African novelist. Her most successful book is God's Stepchildren (1924).

Millis, Walter (1899-). American journalist. His first book to attract attention was The Martial Spirit (1931), a study of the Spanish-American War of 1898. The Road to War (1935) is an extremely critical account of the propaganda influences which preceded America's entry into the first World War.

Mill on the Floss, The. A novel by George ELIOT (1860). The principal characters are Maggie TULLIVER and her brother Tom, who grow up together at Dorlcote Mill, united by a strong bond in spite of their opposing temperaments. Maggie is loved by Philip Wakem, the deformed son of the lawyer responsible for the ruin of Maggie's father, but Tom's opposition makes their relationship impossible. Later she falls in love with Stephen Guest, the handsome and passionate fiancé of her cousin, Lucy Deane. They go off together on impulse, and although Maggie repents before it is too late, her return is misconstrued and her life is made desperately unhappy. Only death unites her with Tom; the two are drowned together in a great flood of the Floss.

Mills, Clark (1913-). American poet. Known for expert translations from the French. His own works include The Migrants (introduction by Jules ROMAINS), A Suite for France, The Circus.

Mills, Miss. In Dickens' DAVID COPPERFIELD, the bosom friend of DORA, supposed to have been blighted in early life in some love affair. She therefore looks on the happiness of others with a calm, supercilious benignity, and talks of herself as being "in the desert of Sahara."

Milne, Alan Alexander (1882-). English novelist and playwright. His first play was written on the western front in World War I. Famous for his poems and prose concerning Christopher Robin, his young son. His best plays are Mr. Pim Passes By (1919), The Dover Road (1923), and The Truth About Blayds (1923). His detective novel, The Red House Mystery (1921), is a minor classic.

Milo. An athlete of Crotona. It is said that he carried through the stadium at Olympia a heifer four years old, and ate the whole of it afterwards. When old he attempted to tear in two an oak tree, but the parts closed upon his hands, and while held fast he was devoured by wolves.

Miltiades (540?-489 B.C.). Athenian general at MARATHON.

Milton. A symbolic poem by William BLAKE (1804), in which the poet John MILTON returns to earth from Heaven and alters the message of his works which has encouraged erroneous beliefs among men. Eventually he enters the spirit of Blake himself and begins to preach redemption and forgiveness.

Milton, John (1608-1674). English poet and prose-writer, one of the best-known and most respected figures in English literature. Although he was trained at Cambridge University in the Anglican faith, he became a Puritan in religious and political belief, and his greatest works reflect his Puritan ideas. At its best, his poetry is marked by intense moral preoccupation, dramatic power, lofty eloquence, and an effective use of sonorous, dignified blank verse. His prose is rhetorical and polemical, in the style of the time in which he lived. Milton's poetic works include Comus (1634), a masque; Lycidas (1637), an elegy; L'Allegro and Il Penseroso (1632), pastoral poems; Paradise Lost (1667); Paradise Regained (1671); Samson Agonistes (1671). Among his prose works are Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce (1644); Areopagitica (1644); Eikonoklastes (1649); Defensio pro Populo Anglicano (1651).

Milton was appointed Latin secretary in 1649 by the Puritan government of England, and held this post until the Restoration, when he was arrested and fined, although not imprisoned. He became blind in 1652, and dictated his poetry to his daughters. He was married three times.

Mime of Mick, Nick, and the Maggies, The. In James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE, a play a performance of which is announced and prepared for in the dream of H. C. EARWICKER, the hero, but which never takes place. The performance is scheduled for the Feenichts Playhouse, representing PHOENIX PARK. In the language of the hypothetical program, the play has been "adopted from the Ballymooney Bloodriddon Murther by Bluechin Blackdillain (authorways 'Big Storey')"—an allusion to the unspecified crime committed by Earwicker in Phoenix Park—and contains as characters "Glugg," "The Floras," "Izod," "Chuff," "Ann," "Hump," "The Customers," "Saunderson," and "Kate." In the title, "Mick" is considered to represent St. Michael, "Nick," Nicholas of Cusa or the Devil ("Old Nick"), and "the Maggies," Earwicker's wife Maggie and daughter Isobel.

Mimi. Heroine of Puccini's opera, LA BOHÈME.

Mimir. The Scandinavian god of wisdom, a water-demon, and one of the most celebrated of the giants. The Vanir, with whom he was left as a hostage, cut off his head. Odin embalmed it by his magic art, pronounced over it mystic runes, and ever after consulted it on critical occasions. Mimir dwelt under the roof of YGGDRASIL, where was Mimir's Well (Mimisbrunnr), in which all wisdom lay concealed, and from which Mimir drank with the horn Giallar. Odin gave one of his eyes to be permitted to drink of its waters, and thereby became the wisest of the gods.

Minnigerode, Meade (1887-). American writer of historical novels and sidelights on history.

minor prophets. See under PROPHETS.

Minos. A legendary king and law-giver of Crete, made at death supreme judge of the lower world. All the dead appeared before him to give an account of their stewardship, and to receive the reward of their deeds. He was the husband of PASIPHAE and the owner of the labyrinth constructed by DAEDALUS. From his name we have the adjective Minoan, pertaining to Crete; the Minoan period is the Cretan bronze age, roughly about 2500-1200 B. C.

Minotaur. A mythical monster with the head of a bull and the body of a man, fabled to have been the offspring of PASIPHAE and a bull that was sent to her by POSEIDON. MINOS kept it in his labyrinth and fed it on human flesh, seven youths and seven maidens being sent as tribute from Athens every year for the purpose. THESEUS, with the aid of ARIADNE, slew this monster.

Minute Men. Militia organized in Massachusetts at the time of the American Revolution. A statue of the Minuteman by Daniel Chester FRENCH stands at Concord, Massachusetts.

Mjolnir or Mjolnir (i.e., lightning). The magic hammer of THOR. It was fashioned by the dwarfs, and Thor used it in peace to bless and in war to shatter. It would never miss whatever it was thrown at, always returned to the owner of its own accord, and became so small when not in use that it could be put into Thor's pocket.

Mirabeau, Comte de. Honoré Gabriel Victor Riquetti (1749-1791). French orator and revolutionary leader. Most important figure in first two years of French Revolution. Believed strongly in a limited, or constitutional, monarchy. President, Jacobin Club (1790), National Assembly (1791). Died a natural death.

Mirabell, Edward. In Congreve's comedy The Way of the World (1700), the hero, in love with MILLAMANT. He likes her, "with all her faults; nay, liked her for her faults, . . . which were so natural that (in his opinion) they became her."

Mirabella. In Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE, a scornful but beautiful lady. She is summoned to Cupid's judgment-hall and sentence is passed on her that she should "ride on a mangy jade, accompanied by a fool, till she had saved as many lovers as she had slain." Mirabella is also doomed to carry a leaky bottle which she is to fill with tears, and a torn wallet which she is to fill with repentance, but her tears and her repentance drop out as fast as they are put in, and are trampled under foot by Scorn.

Miraben. Literally, "sister Mira." Name of the Rajput Princess who gave up all worldly possessions to follow Krishna, the Hindu god. It became the Hindu name of Miss Madeleine Slade, daughter of the British admiral, Sir Edmond Slade, when she left England to join Mahatma Mohandas GANDHI (1925). Miss Slade left Gandhi again (1946) after an unfortunate love affair with another of her master's disciples.

Mirabilis Doctor. See under DOCTOR.

miracle plays or miracles. The name given to medieval dramatic presentations of the miracles of Christian saints. They developed from the earlier Biblical MYSTERY PLAYS and the term miracle is sometimes used to include both. The Miracle, a Geddes-Gest-Reinhardt production dealing with a miracle of the Virgin Mary, presented in New York in 1924, was an adaptation of this old form of drama. See also MORALITY PLAYS; INTERLUDE.

Miranda. (1) In Shakespeare's TEMPEST, daughter of Prospero, the exiled duke of Milan, and niece of Antonio, the usurping duke. She is brought up on a desert island, with Ariel, the fairy spirit, and Caliban the monster as her only companions. Ferdinand, son of the King of Naples, is shipwrecked on the island, falls in love with her, and marries her.

(2) A Boston blue stocking in Lowell's FABLE FOR CRITICS (1848), said to be a caricature of Margaret Fuller (1810-1850), one of the New England Transcendentalists. See also ZENOBI.

(4) In D. H. Lawrence's SONS AND LOVERS, a shy, quiet, dark, intense farm girl who is the first love of Paul MOREL. A tacit struggle for his complete love takes place between Miriam and Paul's mother. The girl's almost painful intensity of feeling at first fascinates and then irritates Paul, and, by turning to another love, he convinces himself that he is escaping from her. The character is considered to have been based on the girl in Lawrence's own life who first encouraged his writing and submitted several of his early poems to Ford Madox FORD, then editor of The English Review, who was very much impressed by them.

Miroir de L'Homme (Speculum Meditantis). A long didactic and allegorical work by John GOWER (ca. 1376-1379), written in Norman French. It concerns the conflict of the seven vices, and their offspring by the Devil, with the seven virtues, and their offspring by Reason, for the possession of the soul of man. It also contains a sermon on the corruptive influence of sin and how it may be overcome, an account of the life of the Virgin, and an analysis of the various "estates" of contemporary medieval society.

Mirouet, Ursule, see URSULE MIROUET.

Mirror for Magistrates, The. A work on the caprices of Fortune, presenting first-person accounts of the rise to power and decline of famous men, chiefly figures in English history. See FORTUNA; also FALLS OF PRINCES; MONK'S TALE. The first edition was published in 1554-1555, but was considered treasonable by Queen Mary. The second edition appeared in 1559, with nineteen tragedies by various authors, including George Ferrers, William Baldwin (the editor), and John SKELTON. The third edition (1563), which is the most famous, contained eight additional tragedies, among them Thomas Churchyard's JANE SHORE, and an 17-duction by Thomas SACKVILLE which is regarded by a number of critics as the most important example of English written between the death of Chaucer and the publication of Spenser's SHEPHERD'S CALENDAR. The Mirror for Magistrates became very popular, appearing in numerous new editions and imitations, and exerted a wide influence on the poetry of England in the second half of the 16th century.

Mirror of Knighthood. A famous romance of chivalry. It is one of the books in DON QUIXOTE'S library, and the curé says to the barber—

"In this same Mirror of Knighthood we meet with Rinaldo de Montalban and his companions, with the twelve peers of France, and Turpin the historian. These gentlemen we will condemn only to perpetual exile, as they contain something of the famous Boccaccio's invention, whence the Christian poet Ariosto borrowed the groundwork of his ingenious compositions; to whom I should pay little regard if he had not written in his own language [Italian]."—Cervantes, Don Quixote, I. i. 6.

Mirvan, Captain. In Fanny Burney's novel EVELINA, a sea captain, whose conversation is full of oaths and "unintelligible sea terms."

Misanthrope, The (Le Misanthrope). A comedy by MOLIÈRE (1666). The hero is ALCESTE.

Miscellany, Poetic, see TOTTEL'S MISCELLANY.

Misérables, Les. A romance by Victor HUGO (1862). The central figure is the convict Jean Valjean. For stealing bread for his sister's starving family, he was sentenced to the galleys, and by his numerous attempts to escape lengthened his term to nineteen years. Free at last, he becomes a beggar and is befriended by the Bishop of D——, but repays the Bishop's hospitality by stealing his silver. When he is brought back by the police, the charitable Bishop declares that the silver was a gift, and by this one act changes Jean Valjean's entire life. During the years that follow, the ex-convict prospers and even becomes mayor of his town under the name of M. Madeleine. He is, however, pursued by the detective Javert, a man with a ruthless sense of justice, and finally, when another man is mistakenly arrested in his place, he gives himself up and is sent back to the galleys. Again he escapes. One of his acts of kindness had been to befriend Fantine, an abandoned woman of the streets. She is now dead and he rescues her daughter, little Cosette, from the abusive Thenardiens, with whom she has been living and brings her up as his own child. In time she falls in love with and marries the brave and handsome young Marius. Les Misérables is painted on an enormous canvas with innumerable characters and episodes. Chief of the characters not mentioned above is Little Gavroche, an impish young street Arab, who helps defend the barricades and sings a brave defiance to the enemy as he goes to his death in the fray. Among the most famous chapters are the account of the battle of Waterloo and Jean Valjean's exciting flight through the Paris sewers.

Miserere. The fifty-first psalm is so called because its opening words are Miserere mei Deus (Have mercy upon me, O God). One of the evening services of Lent is called miserere, because this penitential psalm is sung, after which a sermon is delivered. The under side of a folding seat in choir-stalls is called a miserere, or, more properly, a misericord; when turned up it forms a ledge-seat sufficient to rest the aged in a kneeling position.

misericord. A medieval dagger with a needle-like blade. Used for the "mercy stroke," hence the name.

Mishe-Mokwa. The great bear slain by Mudjekeewis in Longfellow's HIAWATHA.

Mishe-Nahma. In Longfellow's HIAWATHA, the great sturgeon, "king of fishes," subdued by Hiawatha. With this labor, the "great teacher" teaches the Indians how to make oil for the winter. When Hiawatha throws his line for the sturgeon, that king of fishes first persuades a pike to swallow the bait and tries to break the line, but Hiawatha throws it back into the water. Next, a sun-fish is persuaded to try the bait, with the same result. Finally the sturgeon, in anger, swallows Hiawatha and his canoe also, but Hiawatha smites the heart of the sturgeon with his fist, and the king of fishes swims to the shore and dies. Then the sea-gulls open a rift in the dead body, out of which Hiawatha makes his escape.

"I have slain the Mishe-Nahma, Slain the king of fishes," said he.
Hiawatha, viii.

Mishna (Heb., "repetition or instruction"). The collection of moral precepts, traditions, etc., forming the basis of the TALMUD; the second or oral law. See also GEMARA. It is divided into six parts: (1) agriculture; (2) Sabbaths, fasts, and festivals; (3) marriage and divorce; (4) civil and penal laws; (5) sacrifices; (6) holy persons and things.

Misogonus. The third English comedy by Thomas Rychardes (1560). It is written in rhyming quatrains, and not in couplets like RALPH ROISTER DOISTER and GAMMER GURTON'S NEEDLE.

Misrule, King, Lord or Abbot of, see LORD OF MISRULE.

missing link. A popular term for the hypothetical being that is supposed, according to the theory of evolution, to bridge the gap between man and the anthropoid apes. HAECKEL held it to be Pithecanthropus erectus but scientists are not agreed, either on this or on the number of "missing links" there may be.

Missionary Ridge. A mountain on the border of Georgia and Tennessee, scene of the last phase of the battle of Chattanooga in the American Civil War (November 25, 1863). The Confederates were forced to withdraw.

Mississippi Bubble. The "South Sea scheme" of France (1717-1720), projected by John Law, a Scotchman. It was so called because the projector was to have the exclusive trade of Louisiana, on the banks of the Mississippi, on condition of his taking on himself the National Debt of France. The scheme was a notorious fiasco. See also SOUTH SEA BUBBLE.

Miss Lulu Bett. A novel by Zona GALE (1920), which in its dramatic version received the Pulitzer Prize as the best American play of 1921. It is a story of the much abused unattractive old-maid sister who is "given a home." She is expected to do all the work, take the worst of everything, and be properly grateful. When Lulu Bett, in a sudden flare of rebellion, runs off with a man and later returns alone, the Deacon family expect her to be more abject than ever, but to their utter bewilderment she has gained an independent outlook that makes it impossible for them to treat her as they did before.

Missouri.

I'm from Missouri. I must be shown; I will have to have proof; I will take nothing on faith. The origin of the phrase is obscure. It has been suggested that it started as a mannerism of a Missouri congressman.

Missouri Compromise. An act passed by the U.S. Congress in 1821 prohibiting slavery north of the Missouri boundary (36° 30') but admitting Missouri as a slave state.

mistletoe. In Norse mythology, when Baldur's life seemed threatened, all things were asked by FRIGGA to swear an oath that they would do no harm to the god of light and beauty. She passed by the mistletoe which seemed too insignificant. Loki induced blind Hodur to throw a mistletoe at Baldur in playful fun, and Baldur was killed. The Celtic druids sought the mistletoe as a cure-all. It had magic virtues when it grew on oak trees and was plucked on the sixth day of the moon.

Mistletoe, John. A book by Christopher MORLEY, written, as he puts it himself, "to celebrate (or deplore) his own fortieth birthday . . . an early example of what is now a universal passion, the autobiographies of young men."

Mistletoe Bough, The. The song so called is by Thomas Haynes Bayley, who died in 1839. The tale is this: Lord Lovel marries a young lady, a baron's daughter, and on the wedding night the bride proposes that the guests play "hide-and-seek." The bride hides in an old oak chest, and the lid, falling down, shuts her in. Lord Lovel seeks her that night and seeks her next day, but nowhere can he find her. Some years later the old oak chest is sold, and, on being opened, is found to contain the skeleton of the bride. See also GINEVRA.

Mistral, Frédéric (1830-1914). Famous Provençal poet. Best-known member of the FÉLIBRIGE. Shared Nobel prize for literature with José Echegaray y Eizaguirre (1904). Pastoral, lyric, and narrative poems in Provençal.

Mistral, Gabriela (1889-). Famous poet of Chile. Nobel prize for poetry (1945). Cf. Gabriela Mistral's Anthology (1942).

Mistress of the Adriatic. Venice.

Mistress of the Seas. Great Britain.

Mistress of the World. Rome.

Mistress Quickly. The wife of Pistol and hostess of the Boar's Head Tavern in Eastcheap in Shakespeare's Henry IV and Henry V. Also, a servant in The Merry Wives of Windsor.

Mitchell, John Ames (1845-1918). Famous American editor (and founder) of the humorous weekly Life (1883-1938). He also wrote fantastically imaginative novels, the best-known being The Last American (1889) and Amos Judd (1895).

Mitchell, Langdon Edwyn. Pseudonym John Philip Varley (1862-1935). American playwright and poet. Son of Silas Weir MITCHELL. Author of Becky Sharp (a dramatization of Thackeray's Vanity Fair); etc.

Mitchell, Margaret (1900-1949). American novelist, author of the best seller Gone With The Wind (1936), which took her 10 years to write. It sold as many as 50,000 copies in a single day—2 million copies by 1939. Translated into 16 languages. Pulitzer prize for fiction in 1937. The moving-picture version (1940) with Vivien Leigh and Clark Gable broke all records. Period is the Civil War.

Mitchell, Ruth Comfort (1882-). American poet and novelist. Her best work is in Narratives in Verse (1923).

Mitchell, Silas Weir (1829-1914). American physician, poet, and novelist. Specialized in, and wrote about, nervous disorders. Best-known for his novels Hugh Wynne, Free Quaker (1898); The Adventures of François (1899); The Autobiography of a Quack (1900); etc.

Mitchell, William (1879-1936). American army officer. In command of A.E.F. air forces (1917-1918). Court-martialed for criticism of alleged mismanagement of aviation service (1925) and sentenced to suspension from service. A prophet without honor, he spread a vast influence "like giant wings" over the army air service. Author of Winged Defense (1925); Skyways (1930); etc.

Mitchison, Mrs. Naomi Margaret, née Haldane (1897-). English novelist, sister of the famous biologist J. B. S. Haldane. Greatly interested in social problems and in politics, but her best work is in the historical novel, dealing mostly with ancient Greece and Rome. She has been called "the most interesting historical novelist now writing." The Conquered (1923); When the Bough Breaks (1924); etc.

Mite, Sir Matthew. In Samuel Foote's comedy, The Nabob (1772), a returned East Indian merchant, dissolute, dogmatical, ashamed of his former acquaintances, hating the aristocracy, yet longing to be acknowledged by them. He squanders his wealth on toadies, dresses his livery servants most gorgeously, and gives his chairmen the most costly exotics to wear in their coats. Sir Matthew is forever astonishing weak minds with his talk about rupees, lacs, jaghires, and so on.

Mitford, Mary Russell (1787-1855). English novelist and dramatist. Her magazine sketches of country life were collected as Our Village (5 vols., 1824-1832).

Mithra or Mithras. The god of light of the ancient Persians, one of their chief deities and the ruler of the universe; sometimes used as a synonym for the sun. The word means friend, and this deity is so called because he befriends man in this life, and protects him against evil spirits after death. He is represented as a young man with a Phrygian cap, a tunic, and a mantle on his left shoulder, in the act of plunging a sword into the neck of a bull. Cf. Thebais, i.

Mithridates. King of Pontus (120-63 B. C.), conquered by the Romans. To guard against being poisoned by his enemies, Mithridates had so accustomed his system to poison of various sorts that he found it impossible to end his life by this means even when he wished to do so. He was slain by a Gaul at his own orders. RACINE wrote a French tragedy on the subject, called Mithridate (1673). Nathaniel Lee brought out his Mithridates, King of Pontus in English about the same time (produced 1678).

Mitre Tavern. A place of resort in the time of Shakespeare. It was in Mitre Court, leading south of Cheapside, and was in existence from before 1475 till the Great Fire (1666), when it was destroyed and not rebuilt. There was another tavern of the same name in Fleet Street. Cf. Barrey's Ram Alley, v. 1611.

Mobtown. Baltimore, so called from its reputation for lawlessness. See also under CITY.

Moby Dick. A novel by Herman MELVILLE (1851). Moby Dick is a ferocious white whale, who was known to whalers of the period as Mocha Dick. He is pursued in a fury of revenge by Captain AHAH, whose leg he has bitten off, and under Melville's handling the chase takes on a significance beyond mere externals. Moby Dick becomes a symbol of the terrific forces of the natural universe, or of evil, and Captain Ahab, representing human will, is doomed to disaster, even though Moby Dick vanishes into the sea. See also PIP; QUEEQUEG; STARBUCK.

In World War II, the U.S. navy had an experimental rocket engine which was known as Moby Dick.

Mockbeggar. A novel by Everard Meynell, son of Alice MEYNELL.

modern. For modern Athens, modern Babylon, etc., see under ATHENS; BABYLON.

Modern Chivalry. A once widely popular satirical novel by Hugh Henry BRACKENRIDGE, published in parts between 1792 and 1805. It is a sort of American DON QUIXOTE in which the hero, Captain Farrago, and his man Teague leave western Pennsylvania to travel about and "observe human nature." Carl Van Doren in The American Novel says that as a description of manners in the early days of the Republic the book is unapproached by any other. It satirizes primarily the rule of political upstarts, of which the scallawag Teague is chief; in Part II, when Farrago becomes governor of a backwoods community, the settlers are persuaded to give the vote to beasts as well as men and to make use of a monkey clerk and a hound lawyer. But the book also satirized contemporary life in all phases and was frequently brought up to date in new revisions.

Modern Instance, A. A novel by W. D. HOWELLS (1881), dealing with the courtship, marriage and subsequent misfortunes of Bartley Hubbard and Marcia Gaylord. Marcia's Yankee father, Squire Gaylord, whose newspaper in Equity, Maine, young Hubbard runs for a time, distrusts him from the start and endeavors in vain to protect Marcia from unhappiness. Bartley Hubbard is what Hamlin Garland calls "the modern substitute for a villain"—good-natured but unprincipled, and above all things "smart."

Modernists and Fundamentalists. Names adopted into general usage in 1923 and 1924 for theological radicals and conservatives, respectively, in several of the Protestant churches. The issue of difference centered most conspicuously in the effort of the Presbyterian Fundamentalists to force the withdrawal of Dr. Harry Fosdick, a Baptist minister of liberal intellectual tendencies, from the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church in New York City. It was also marked by several heresy trials in various ecclesiastical bodies, by the efforts of William Jennings BRYAN to discredit the theory of evolution on the ground that it was not in accord with Biblical teaching, and by a widespread opposition on the part of the Fundamentalists to the principles of HIGHER CRITICISM. The Fundamentalists were so called because they wished to preserve the "fundamental" principles of Christianity from attack.

Modern Love. A series of fifty sixteen-line poems connected in subject-matter, by George MEREDITH (1862). They present the various thoughts and emotions of a married couple who perceive that their love for each other is dying, the husband occasionally speaking as "I." The sequence is considered to have been based on Meredith's own difficulties in his unfortunate first marriage with Mary Ellen NICOLLS.

Modern Painters. A critical treatise on landscape painting (1843) by John RUSKIN, which aimed to prove the superiority of contemporary artists, especially Turner, over the old masters. Its brilliant style and original ideas established Ruskin's reputation as an art critic.

Modern Temper, The. An important book by Joseph Wood KRUTCH (1929), a clear statement of the author's "cheerful acceptance in gallant despair of a pragmatic stoicism."

Modest Proposal, A. Full title, A Modest Proposal for Preventing the Children of Poor People from Being a Burden to their Parents or the Country. A savagely satirical pamphlet (1729) by Jonathan SWIFT, in which he suggests that the problem of starving children in Ireland be solved by using the children as food for the rich.

Modiste, Mlle. Operetta by Victor HERBERT (1905). Includes famous aria, Kiss Me Again.

Modo. The fiend mentioned in KING LEAR (iv. 1) as he who urges to murder. He is one of the five that possessed "Poor Tom." See MAHU.

Modred or Mordred. One of the knights of the ROUND TABLE in Arthurian romance, nephew and betrayer of King ARTHUR. He is represented as the treacherous knight. He revolts against the King, whose wife he has seduced, is mortally wounded in the battle of Camlan, in Cornwall, and is buried on the island of Avalon. The accounts of Modred vary considerably. In the older romances, his mother is King Arthur's half sister MORGAUSE (or sometimes Anne) and he is son as well as nephew of Arthur by unconscious incest, but Tennyson departs from this tradition in his Idylls of the King where his mother is Bellicent. According to the older versions Arthur is off fighting the Romans, but according to Tennyson, punishing Launcelot, when Modred, whom he has left in charge of the kingdom, raises his fatal revolt. Modred, who hates Launcelot, was at the bottom of the plot to expose his guilty relations with GUINEVERE. With twelve other knights he forced his way into the Queen's chamber when Launcelot was there. The name is spelled Mordred by MALORY in his Morte d'Arthur; Modred by Tennyson. In the Welsh MABINOGION Modred appears as Medrawd.

Mods. In Oxford, a contracted form of moderations. The three necessary examinations in Oxford are the Responsens, the Mods, and the Greats. No one can take a term examination till he has passed the Mods.

modus operandi (Lat.). The mode of operation; the way in which a thing is done or should be done.

modus vivendi (Lat., "way of living"). A mutual arrangement whereby persons not at the time being on friendly terms can be induced to live together in harmony. The term may be applied to individuals, to societies, or to peoples.

Moeller, Philip (1880-). American playwright. One of the founders (1914) and directors of the Washington Square Players and the New York Theater Guild. Madame Sand (1917); Molière (1919); etc.

Mogul.

the Mogul Empire. The Mohammedan-Tartar Empire in India, which began in 1526 with Baber, great-grandson of Timur, or TAMBURLAINE, and split up after the death of Aurungzebe in 1707, the power passing to the British and the Mahrattas. The Emperor was known as the Great or Grand Mogul; besides those mentioned, Akbar, Jahangir, and Shah Jehan are the most noteworthy.

Mogul cards. The best quality playing-cards were so called because the wrapper, or the "duty card" (cards are subject to excise duty), was decorated with a representation of the Great Mogul. Inferior cards were called "Harrys," "Highlanders," and "Merry Andrews" for a similar reason.

Mohammed, see MAHOMET.

Mohicans, Last of the, see LAST OF THE MOHICANS.

Mohocks. In 18th-century London, ruffians (often aristocrats) who committed outrages in the streets. The name is a variant of Mohawks. See also APACHE.

Mokanna. The "Veiled Prophet of Khorasan," chief figure in the first story told in Moore's LALLA ROOKH (1817). Mokanna is the name given to Hakem ben Haschem, from a silver gauze veil worn by him "to dim the lustre of his face," or rather to hide its extreme ugliness. See under VEILED.

Molesworth, Mary Louisa, née Stewart. Pseudonym Ennis Graham (1839-1921). Scottish writer noted for her children's books.

Moley, Raymond (1886-). American journalist, author, and university professor. Member of the "brain trust" advising President F. D. ROOSEVELT. Contributing editor, News-week (from 1937). Author of Lessons in American Citizenship (10 editions; 1917-1930); Tribunes of the People (1932); etc.

Molière. Pseudonym of Jean Baptiste Poquelin (1622-1673). French playwright, famous for his satirical comedies holding up to ridicule the follies and pretenses of social types and individuals of his day, and for his studies of character. He was influenced by the Roman comedies of TERENCE and PLAUTUS and the Italian Comedy of Masks. His works include Les Étourdis (1653); LES PRÉCIEUSES RIDICULES (The Ridiculous Misses; 1659); SGANARILLE (1660); L'ÉCOLE DES MARIS (The School for Husbands; 1661); L'ÉCOLE DES FEMMES (The School for Wives; 1662); TARTUFFE (1664), which was forbidden after its first performance and, revised, was finally presented again in 1669; LE MARIAGE FORCÉ (The Enforced Marriage; 1664); DON JUAN, OU LE FESTIN DE PIERRE (1665); L'AMOUR MÉDECIN (Love As a Doctor; 1664); LE MISANTHROPE (1666); LE MÉDECIN MALGRÉ LUI (Physician In Spite of Himself; 1666); L'AMPHITRYON (1668); L'AVARE (The Miser) (1668); GEORGES DANDIN (1668); MONSIEUR DE POURCEAUGNAC (1670); LE BOURGEOIS GENTILHOMME (The Bourgeois Gentleman; 1670); LES FOURBERIES DE SCAPIN (The Knaveries of Scapin; 1671); LES FEMMES SAVANTES (The Learned Ladies; 1672); LE MALADE IMAGINAIRE (The Imaginary Invalid; 1673).

Molière started his theatrical career by touring the French provinces with a small company of actors, for whom he wrote comedies. After his fame was established, he received a pension from King Louis XIV, although he was frequently attacked, especially by the clergy, for "indecentcy." He died of a hemorrhage while acting in the rôle of ARGAN in his last play, Le Malade imaginaire.

the Italian Molière. Carlo Goldoni (1707-1793).

the Spanish Molière. Leandro Fernandez Moratin (1760-1828).

Molinier, Olivier. In André Gide's THE COUNTERFEITERS, an adolescent youth, school friend of Bernard PROFITENDIEU and nephew of the narrator Edouard. His parents, Oscar and Pauline Molinier, Vincent, his elder brother, and George, his younger brother, are also characters in the novel.

Moll Flanders. A novel by Daniel DEFOE (1721) written in the form of an autobiography. The heroine is a woman of extraordinary beauty, born in Old Bailey. She is twelve years a harlot, five years a wife, twelve years a thief, and eight years a convict in Virginia; but ultimately she becomes rich, lives honestly, and dies a penitent in the reign of Charles II.

Mollison, James Allan (1905-). British aviator. Holder of numerous aviation records. Author of an autobiography, Death Cometh Soon or Late; etc. Wife was the late Amy Johnson, famous aviatrix.

Molloch, May, or The Maid of the Hairy Arms. An elf of folklore who mingles in ordinary sports, and will even direct the master of the house how to play dominoes or draughts. Like the White Lady of Avenel, May Molloch is a sort of BANSHEE.

Molly Maguires. An Irish secret society organized in 1843. Stout, active young Irishmen dressed up in women's clothes, blackened faces, and otherwise disguised themselves to surprise those employed to enforce the payment of rents. Their victims were ducked in bog-holes, and many were beaten most unmercifully.

A similar secret society in the mining districts of Pennsylvania was (about 1877) known by the same name. They figure in Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's The Valley of Fear (1915), a long Sherlock Holmes story.

Molly Mog. This celebrated beauty was an innkeeper's daughter, at Oakingham, Berks. She was the toast of the gay sparks of the first half of the 18th century, and died unmarried in 1766, at the age of sixty-seven. John GAY has a ballad on this Fair Maid of the Inn, in which the "swain" alluded to is Mr. Standen, of Arborfield, who died in 1730. It is said that Molly's sister Sally was the greater beauty. A portrait of Gay still hangs in the inn.

Molly Pitcher, see McCauley, Mary.

Molnár, Ferenc (1878-). Hungarian journalist, novelist, and playwright. Noted figure in Budapest society; war correspondent on German-Austrian front in World War I (1914-1918); came to U.S. (1940) as fugitive from Nazism. Author of the plays LILIOM (1909); The Guardsman (1910); The Play's the Thing (1925); No Greater Glory (1934); etc. His comedies are known for ingenious plots and uncommon themes, with dialogue that "lends to all his work an air of intimacy and familiarity."

Moloch. Any influence which demands from us the sacrifice of what we hold most dear. The allusion is to the god of the Ammonites, to whom children were "made to pass through the fire" in sacrifice (2 Kings, xxiii. 10). Milton says he was worshiped in Rabba, in Argob, and Basan, to the stream of utmost Arnon. (Paradise Lost, i. 392-398).

Molotov, Vyacheslav Mikhailovich. Sur-name originally Skryabin (1890-). Soviet Russian statesman. Commissar of foreign affairs (1939-1949). Signed Soviet-Nazi non-aggression pact (1939). President at Anglo-Soviet conference in Moscow (1941) and represented the U.S.S.R. at most of the important conferences between England, the United States, and the Soviet Union after the end of World War II.

Moltke, Count Helmuth von (1800-1891). Chief of Prussian general staff (1858-1888); reorganized Prussian army (1858-1863); created field marshal (1871). His nephew, Helmuth von Moltke (1848-1916), chief of general staff (from 1906) and director of German strategy at the outbreak of World War I, lost the first battle of the Marne (1914) and was succeeded by General von Falkenhayn.

moly. The mythical herb given, according to HOMER, by HERMES to ULYSSES as an antidote against the sorceries of CIRCE.

Black was the root, but milky white the flower,
Moly the name, to mortals hard to find.

Foote's Odyssey, x, 365.

That moly

That Hermes once to wise Ulysses gave.

Milton, Comus, 655.

Mommsen, Theodor (1817-1903). German classical scholar and historian. Active in politics as a liberal and opponent to Bismarck. Best-known as author of the famous History of Rome (1854-1856). Nobel prize for literature (1902).

Mommur. The capital of the empire of OBERON, king of the fairies. It is here he held his court.

Momus. The sleepy god of the Greeks, son of Nox (Night), who was always railing and carping. Being asked to pass judgment on the relative merits of Neptune, Vulcan, and Minerva, Momus railed at them all. He said the horns of a bull ought to have been placed in the shoulders, where they would have been of much greater force; as for man, he said Jupiter ought to have made him with a window in his breast, whereby his real thoughts might be revealed. Hence Byron's—

Were Momus' lattice in our breasts . . .
Wegeuer, iii. 1.

Hence also, a Momus is one who carps at everything.

Monaciello (Ital., "little monk"). A sort of incubus in Neapolitan folklore, described as a thick little man, dressed in a monk's garment and broad-brimmed hat. Those who will follow when he beckons will be led to a spot where a treasure is concealed. Sometimes, however, it is his pleasure to pull the bedclothes off, and sometimes to sit perched on a sleeper.

Mona Lisa. A famous portrait by Leonardo da VINCI also known as La Belle Joconde. Mona Lisa was the wife of Francesco de Giocondo. Many popular legends have grown up regarding her enigmatic smile, which is reputed to exercise an uncontrollable fascination over those who do not actively resist it. According to one story, the smile is a forced one, concealing some terrible torment.

Monarque, Le Grand. Louis XIV of France (b. 1638, reigned 1643-1715).

Monastery, The. A novel by Sir Walter SCOTT (1820). The hero is Halbert Glendinning, the heroine Lady Mary Avenel. Much of the plot concerns the effort of the Abbot of St. Mary's Monastery to secure a Bible which belonged to Lady Alice Avenel, but which the mysterious WHITE LADY of the Avenels exercises superhuman power to keep him from obtaining.

Moncada, Matthias de. In Scott's Surgeon's Daughter, a merchant, stern and relentless. He arrests his daughter Zilia the day after her confinement of a natural son.

Monck or Monk, George. 1st Duke of Albemarle (1608-1670). British general. Suppressed the insurrection of the Scottish Royalists for Cromwell (1652) and was made governor of Scotland (1654). Organized the Coldstream Guards (1660). General in Chief of land forces and joint commander of Navy. After the death of both Cromwells, helped restore monarchy and welcomed Charles II. Buried at Westminster Abbey.

Mondriaan, Pieter Cornelis (1872-1945). Dutch ultramodern painter, mostly living in Paris. Collaborated with van Tongerlow and van Doesburg in founding the Dutch "de Stijl" group.

Monet, Claude (1840-1926). French landscape painter, one of the leading figures of impressionism. Un Déjeuner sur l'Herbe, Gare Saint-Lazare and Camille are among his best-known canvases.

Monflathers, Miss. In Dickens' OLD CURIOSITY SHOP, mistress of a boarding and day establishment, to whom Mrs. Jarley sent Little Nell, to ask her to patronize the wax-work collection. Miss Monflathers received the child with frigid virtue, and said to her, "Don't you think you must be very wicked to be a wax-work child? Don't you know it is very naughty to be a wax child when you might have the proud consciousness of assisting, to the extent of your infant powers, the noble manufactures of your country?"

Mongrel Parliament. See under PARLIAMENTS.

Monime. The heroine of Racine's tragedy of Mithridate. See MITHRIDATES.

Monimia. The heroine of Thomas Otway's tragedy The Orphan (1610), sister of Chamont and ward of Lord Acasto. Monimia is in love with Acasto's son Castalio and privately marries him. Polydore, the brother of Castalio, also loves her, but his love is dishonorable. By treachery, Polydore obtains admission to Monimia's chamber, and passes the bridal night with her, Monimia supposing him to be her husband. When next day she discovers the deceit, she poisons herself. Polydore, learning that Monimia is his brother's wife, provokes a quarrel, runs on his brother's sword, and dies.

Moniplies, Richie. The honest self-willed Scotch servant of Lord Nigel Olifaunt of Glenvarlach in Scott's FORTUNES OF NIGEL.

monism. The philosophical doctrine that ultimate reality is one and uniform, not polar as in dualism, or varied as in pluralism.

Monitor. So the Romans called the nursery teacher. The Military Monitor was an officer to tell young soldiers of the faults committed against the service. The House Monitor was a slave to call the family of a morning, etc.

A shallow-draught ironclad warship with a flat deck, sharp stern, and one or more movable turrets, is so called. They were first used in the American Civil War and were so named by the inventor, Captain Ericsson, because they were to be "severe monitors" to the leaders of the Southern rebellion. The conflict between the original Monitor and the Merrimac decided the supremacy of iron war vessels over those of wood. The battle is an episode in The Long Roll (1911), a novel by Mary JOHNSTON.

Monk, The. A novel by Matthew G. LEWIS (1795) which enjoyed a great vogue and earned for its author the nickname of Monk Lewis. Ambrosio, the monkish hero, is abbot of the Capuchins of Madrid, and is called "the man of holiness" but Matilda overcomes his virtue. He goes on from bad to worse, until he is condemned to death by the Inquisition. He now bargains with Lucifer for release. He gains his bargain, it is true, but only to be dashed to pieces on a rock.

Monkbarns, The Laird of. See OLDBUCK, JONATHAN.

monkey puzzle. A Chilean evergreen tree of interlaced branches, introduced into England, and spoken of in English novels. (Title of novel by J. D. BERESFORD).

Monk Lewis. See THE MONK.

Monk's or Monkes Tale, The. One of Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES (1388). The subject is the uncertainty of fortune illustrated with seventeen examples:—

From Scripture: Lucifer, Adam, and Samson; Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, Holofernes (from the Book of Judith).

Greek and Roman History: Alexander the Great, Julius Caesar and Nero.

Other Histories: Croesus, Hugolin of Pisa, Pedro of Spain, Pierre de Lusignan (King of Cyprus), Visconti (Bernardo), Duke of Milan, and Zenobia.

From Mythology: Hercules.

This tale was based on Boccaccio's Decamerone Vivorum Illustrium. See also FALLS OF PRINCES; MIRROR FOR MAGISTRATES.

Monmouth, Duke of. James Scott (1649–1685). Known also as James Fitzroy and James Crofts, and as "The Protestant Duke." Natural son of Charles II, born in Holland during Charles' exile, and brought up a Protestant. Acknowledged by Charles and created Duke of Monmouth (1663). Commanded English forces sent to aid France in the Dutch war (1675) and to suppress the Scottish Covenanters (1675–1679). Exiled twice by Charles II, after whose death he returned to claim the British crown in place of James II (1685). Defeated at Sedgemoor and beheaded. See also BLOODY ASSIZES.

Monmouth, the Marquis of. A prominent character in Disraeli's CONINGSBY.

Monna Vanna. A drama by Maurice MAETERLINCK (1902), later made into an opera by Fievrier. The scene is laid in 15th century Pisa. Prinzivalle, at the head of a Florentine army, has laid siege to Pisa and promises relief only if Monna Vanna will spend a night in his tent. To save the city, Monna Vanna persuades her husband Guido Colonna, the commander of the Pisan forces, to agree. Prinzivalle, who has adored Vanna for years, does not harm her and himself returns with her to Pisa, but Guido refuses to believe them and is about to kill Prinzivalle by torture. Vanna then liberates Prinzivalle and escapes with him.

monodrama. A play designed to be acted by a single person.

Monro, Harold Edward (1879–1932). British poet and critic of Scottish descent. Established the magazine Poetry Review (1911) and The Poetry Book Shop (1912) in London.

Was of more influence as an appreciator of poetry than as a poet, although T. S. Eliot called his work "honest and bitter."

Monroe, Harriet (1861?-1936). American poet and editor. Chiefly known for establishing (1912) and editing to the time of her death Poetry: a Magazine of Verse, which exercised great influence in the years prior to World War I, and is still being published, open to every sort of experimental work. Author of Valeria and other Poems (1892); The Columbian Ode (1892); You and I (1914); etc.

Monroe, James (1758-1831). Fifth president of the United States (1817-1825) during the period known as the "era of good feeling." During his presidency Florida was acquired (1819); the MISSOURI COMPROMISE legislation was enacted (1820); the MONROE DOCTRINE was promulgated (1823); etc. He is represented in the American Hall of Fame. The capital of LIBERIA is named after him Monrovia.

Monroe Doctrine. The doctrine first promulgated by James MONROE in 1823, to the effect that the American states are never to entangle themselves in the broils of the Old World, nor to suffer it to interfere in the affairs of the New; and they are to regard any attempt on the part of nations of the Old World to plant their systems of government in any part of North America not at the time in European occupation as dangerous to American peace and safety.

Mons. The story of the "angels of Mons" is a fictional account of supernatural aid being brought to the English at the battle of Mons in World War I, written by Arthur MACHEN in The Bowmen, and Other Legends of the War (1915). It found full acceptance with many soldiers as well as civilians.

Monsieur. Philippe, Duke of Orleans and brother of Louis XIV was so called.

Monsieur Veto. Louis XVI of France (1754-1793).

Monsieur Beaucaire. A short story by Booth TARKINGTON (1900). The scene is laid in 18th-century Bath, and the hero is a cousin of Louis XV, Louis Philippe de Valois. Disguised as a barber, on adventure bent, he falls in love with Lady Mary Carlisle and forces his rival, the Duke of Winterset, whom he has caught cheating at cards, to present him as the Duke de Chateaurien. All goes well with his suit until Winterset announces that he is a mere barber, whereupon Lady Mary treats him with the utmost scorn. Shortly after, on an occasion of state, he is greeted as the Duke of Orleans, but her regret is of no avail.

Mons Meg. A large cannon on Edinburgh Castle, dating from the 15th century and supposedly cast at Mons in Flanders. Removed to the Tower of London (1745), but later restored to Edinburgh (1829).

Montagu, Lady Mary Wortley (1689-1762). English author, best known for her lively and amusing letters as collected in Turkish Letters (1763) and Letters and Works (1837). She also wrote Town Eclogues (1716) and Count Poems by a Lady of Quality (1716), quarreled notoriously with Alexander POPE, and introduced small-pox inoculation into England.

Montague. In Shakespeare's ROMEO AND JULIET the name of the feudal house of Verona to which Romeo belonged.

Loid and Lady Montague, Romeo's father and mother, play their part in keeping up the tragic enmity between the houses of Montague and Capulet.

Montague, Charles Edward (1867-1928). British journalist, novelist, and critic. On staff of Manchester Guardian as chief editorial writer and brilliant theater critic. His novels and short stories include A Hind Let Loose (1910); The Morning's War (1913); Rough Justice (1926); Right Off the Map (1927); etc. Fiery Particles (1923) are short stories.

Montaigne, Michel Eyquem de (1533-1595). French author, considered the ideal gentleman-scholar of the later Renaissance, famous for his Essays (1582, 1587, 1588), which are the earliest examples of the form of the personal essay and give an excellent picture of the author's temperate, skeptical, inquiring, peace-loving, nature-loving, humanistic personality. They were translated into English by John FLORIO (1603) and became very popular in England. SHAKESPEARE and FRANCIS BACON are considered to have been influenced by them. As a child, Montaigne was given a careful and complete education, which included travel, instruction in languages, and familiarization with music, by his father, who was an outstanding personality of his day. Montaigne himself studied law and was a magistrate for several years until he retired to devote his time to writing. He was twice elected Mayor of Bordeaux, where he lived (1581 and 1583).

Montalembert, Comte de. Charles Forbes (1810-1870). French journalist and politician. Cofounder with Lamennais of the journal L'Avenir (1830) in which he upheld the interests of the Roman Catholic Church and the clergy.

Montargis, the dog of. A famous dog of legend named Dragon. He belonged to Captain Aubrey de Montdidier, and is especially noted for his fight with the Chevalier Richard MACAIRE. The dog was called Montargis because the encounter was depicted over the chimney of the great hall in the castle of Montargis. It was in the forest of Bondi, close by this castle, where Aubrey was assassinated. Guilbert de Pixerecourt dramatized this tale in his play called Le Chien de Montargis (The Dog of Montargis; 1814).

Montauran, Marquis de. The hero of Balzac's novel THE CHOUANS, a leader of the Royalists.

Mont Cenis tunnel. A tunnel through a peak in the Alps connecting Turin in Italy with French Savoy. Completed in 1870.

Montcorbier, François de, see VILLON, FRANÇOIS.

Monte Cristo, Count of, see COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO.

Montesinos. A legendary hero, one of Charlemagne's paladins, who received some affront at the French court, and retired to La Mancha, in Spain. Here he lived in a cavern, some sixty feet deep, called "The Cavern of Montesinos." DON QUIXOTE in Cervantes' romance of that title, descends part of the way down this cavern, and falls into a trance, in which he sees Montesinos himself, Durandarte, and Belerma under the spell of Merlin, his own Dulcinea del Toboso enchanted into a country wench, and other visions, which he more than half believes to be realities.

Montespan, Madame de (1641-1707). One of the mistresses of Louis XIV. She and her husband, the Marquis de Montespan, appear in Bulwer Lytton's drama The Duchess de la Vallière (1836), and in Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's romance, The Refugees (1893).

Montesquieu, Baron de La Brède et de. Charles de Secondat (1689-1755). French lawyer, philosopher, and man of letters. Noted for his Lettres Persanes (1721) which criticized the society of his time. His L'Esprit des Lois (1748) analyzes the relation between human and natural law and has exerted a profound influence on later political thinking in Europe.

Montesquiou-Fezensac, Comte Robert de (1855-1921). French literary figure, associated with the movement of SYMBOLISM. He is reputed to have been the original on whom Proust's character of Baron de Charlus, Huysmans' Des Esseintes, and the Peacock in Rostand's Chantecler (see under CHANTICLEER) were based.

Montessori, Maria (1870-). Italian physician and educator. The first Montessori school for children was located in the slum districts of Rome (1907). The Montessori method endeavors to develop the child's initiative and emphasizes sense and muscle training by means of special materials.

Montez, Lola. Stage name of Marie Dolores Eliza Rosanna Gilbert (1818?-1861). British dancer who became famous as the mistress of King Louis I of Bavaria (1847-1848). She aroused the antagonism of the Jesuits and was forced to take up dancing again. She spent her last years (from 1856) in New York where she wrote on beauty and helped fallen women.

Montezuma. Emperor of the Aztecs in Mexico in the early 16th century. He is a prominent character in THE FAIR GOD, a historical romance by Lew Wallace. See also under CORTES.

Montgomery, Sir Bernard Law (1887-). British army captain in World War I. In World War II he became the commander of the British 8th army in Egypt (August 1942) which drove Rommel's forces from Africa. Commanded the Twenty-first Army Group in Northern France after D-day. On May 4, 1945, he signed the acceptance of German surrender in behalf of the Allied supreme commander-in-chief, General Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Montgomery, Ellen. The child heroine of Susan Warner's WIDE, WIDE WORLD.

Montgomery, Lucy Maud (1874-1942). Canadian writer for young people. Creator of Anne of Green Gables (1909).

Montherlant, Henry Millon de (1896-). French writer. Author of poems and novels on sports, bullfighting, etc. His Les Célibataires (1934) won the Grand Prix de Littérature of the French Academy. The four-volume novel Les Jeunes filles (1935-1939) was called by André Gide an eloquent offensive against women.

Montmartre. A Parisian district distinguished for its night life and for its literary and artistic associations. It overlooks the city from the north. Its name is thought to be derived from Mons Martyrum where the patron saint of France, St. Denis, and two companions were beheaded.

Mont-Saint-Michel and Chartres. An historical study by Henry Adams privately published in 1904 and given to the public in 1913. It contrasts the two great cathedrals of the Middle Ages, the ROMANESQUE Mont-Saint-Michel and the GOTHIC Chartres, and finds the Dynamo, the symbol of the machine, an integrating force in the industrial 20th century in the way that the Virgin of Chartres, the symbol of medieval Roman Catholicism, was the integrating force of the 13th century. This was one of the first works to celebrate the "medieval synthesis" and to contrast it with 20th-century disintegration. The ideas of T. S. ELIOT are considered to have received impetus from Mont-Saint-Michel and Chartres. Its subtitle is "A Study of Thirteenth-Century Unity" as that of THE EDUCATION OF HENRY ADAMS is "A Study of Twentieth-Century Multiplicity."

Monumental City. Baltimore. See under CITY.

Monvel, Louis Maurice Boutet de, see BOUTET DE MONVEL.

Moody, Dwight Lyman (1837-1899). American evangelist. With Ira D. Sankey made tours of Great Britain and the U.S. Founded Northfield Seminary for girls (1879); Mount Hermon School for boys (1881); and the Chicago Bible Institute (1889).

Moody, James (1744-1809). Colonial Tory.

Moody, William Vaughn (1869-1910). American poet and playwright, known for the idealism and mysticism of his dramas and lyrics. Among his works are The Masque of Judgment (1900), The Fire Bringer (1904), and The Death of Eve (1912), a trilogy of unproduced verse dramas; THE GREAT DIVIDE (1906, 1909) and THE FAITH HEALER (1909), his best-known plays; Poems and Plays (1912).

Mookse and the Gripes, The. In James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE, a fable recited during the course of the dream of Humphrey Chimpden EARWICKER and his family. The title is obviously a distortion and parody in dream-language of The Fox and the Grapes.

moon. In classical mythology, the moon was known as HECATE before she had risen and after she had set; as ASTARTE when crescent; as DIANA or CYNTHIA (she who "hunts the clouds") when in the open vault of heaven; as PHOEBE when looked upon as the sister of the sun (i.e., PHOEBUS); and was personified as SELENE or LUNA, the lover of the sleeping ENDYMION, i.e., moonlight on the fields.

The moon is called triform, because it presents itself to us either round, or waxing with horns towards the east, or waning with horns towards the west.

One legend connected with the moon was that there was treasured everything wasted on earth, such as misspent time and wealth, broken vows, unanswered prayers, fruitless tears, abortive attempts, unfulfilled desires and intentions, etc. In Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, Astolpho found on his visit to the moon (Bk. xviii and xxxiv. 70) that bribes were hung on gold and silver hooks; princes' favors were kept in bellows; wasted talent was kept in vases, each marked with the proper name, etc.; and in The Rape of the Lock (canto v) Pope tells us that when the Lock disappeared—

Some thought it mounted to the lunar sphere,
Since all things lost on earth are treasured there,
There heroes' wits are kept in pond'rous vases,
And beaux' in snuff-boxes and tweezer-cases.
There broken vows and death-bed alms are found
And lovers' hearts with ends of ribbon bound,
The courtier's promises, and sick man's prayers,
The smiles of harlots, and the tears of heirs
Cages for gnats, and chains to yoke a flea,
Dried butterflies, and tomes of casuistry.

Hence the phrase, the limbus of the moon.

I know no more about it than the man in the moon. I know nothing at all about the matter.

it's all moonshine. Bunkum; nonsense; it's a "tale told by an idiot." The light of the moon was formerly held to have very deleterious effects on mental stability.

once in a blue moon. See BLUE MOON.

the Island of the Moon. Madagascar is so named by the natives.

the man in the moon. Some say it is a man leaning on a fork, on which he is carrying a bundle of sticks picked up on a Sunday. The origin of this fable is from Numb. xv. 32-36. Some add a dog also; thus the prologue in Midsummer Night's Dream says, "This man with lantern, dog, and bush of thorns, presenteth moonshine"; The Testament of Cressid says "he stole the bush." Another tradition says that the man is Cain, with his dog and thorn bush, the thorn bush being emblematical of the thorns and briars of the fall, and the dog being the "foul fiend." Some poets make out the "man" to be Endymion, taken to the moon by Diana.

Now doth Cain with fork of thorns confine
On either hemisphere, touching the wave
Beneath the towers of Seville. Yesternight
The moon was round.

Dante, Inferno, xx. (1300).

Her gite was gray and full of spottis black,
And on her brest a chorle painted ful even,
Bering a bush of thornis on his back,
Which for his theft might clime so ner the heven.
Chaucer.

to aim or level at the moon. To be very ambitious; to aim in shooting at the moon.

to cry for the moon. To crave for what is wholly beyond one's reach. The allusion is to foolish children who want the moon for a plaything.

Moon and Sixpence, The. A novel by W. S. MAUGHAM (1919), based closely on the life of the French painter Paul GAUGUIN. It tells of Charles Strickland, a conventional London stock broker, who in middle life becomes interested in painting, changes completely in character, and deserts his wife, family, and business in order to live and paint in Tahiti, where he takes a native mistress and eventually dies of leprosy.

moon-calf. An inanimate, shapeless abortion formerly supposed to be produced prematurely by the cow owing to the malign influence of the moon. FLOYD DELL gave the name to a novel (1920), relating the adventures of the very young, very temperamental and introspective hero of the LOST GENERATION, Felix Fay, in Chicago. His story was continued in The Briary-Bush (1921).

Mooney, Thomas J. Zechariah (1885-1942). American labor leader. With Warren K. Billings (1894-), convicted of responsibility for a bomb explosion during the Preparedness Parade in San Francisco (July 22, 1916). Death sentence commuted to life imprisonment. Finally pardoned and released (January 7, 1939). The "Mooney Case" was for years a subject of agitation similar to the case of SACCO AND VANZETTI. Cf. the poem by William Ellery LEONARD, Tom Mooney.

moonshine, bottled. Social and benevolent schemes; also illicit liquor.

Moonstone, The. A famous mystery novel (1868), by Wilkie COLLINS.

Moor, Karl. The hero who turns brigand in Schiller's drama THE ROBBERS (1781).

Moore, Clement Clarke (1779-1863). American scholar and poet. Best-known for the ballad A Visit From St. Nicholas ("Twas the night before Christmas") (1822). Also compiled A Compendious Lexicon of the Hebrew Language (1809).

Moore, Frank Frankfort (1855-1931). Irish novelist. Best-known for The Jessamy Bride (1897), a best seller in its period.

Moore, George (1852-1933). Irish novelist and journalist, in the early years of his career a poet and student of painting in Paris where he was associated with the famous figures of IMPRESSIONISM in painting and SYMBOLISM in poetry. MANET was an intimate friend of his, and in his writing he was influenced by GAUTIER, BAUDELAIRE, VERLAINE, BALZAC, MALARMÉ, and ZOLA. At first, he could write only in the French language. Later, as a journalist in London, he became known for his realistic novels and his memoirs. Among his works are Flowers of Passion (1878) and Pagan Poems (1881), books of poetry; A Modern Lover (1883); A Mummer's Wife (1885); A Drama in Muslin (1886); Confessions of a Young Man (1888), autobiographical; Mike Fletcher (1889); ESTHER WATERS (1894), EVELYN INNES (1898), and Sister Teresa (1901), considered his best novels; Ave (1911), Salve (1912), and Vale (1914), constituting an autobiographical trilogy, Hail and Farewell; THE BROOK KERITH (1916); Memoirs of My Dead Life (1906), reminiscences; Héloise and Abélard (1921); Conversations in Ebury Street (1924), further reminiscences; Ulich and Soracha (1926); Aphrodite in Aulis (1930); A Flood (1930);

The Passing of the Essenes (1930), a drama. He also wrote plays and short stories, and essays on art criticism.

Moore, Marianne Craig (1887-). American poet and literary critic, editor of the magazine THE DIAL (1925-1929). Her poetry is of the type called objectivist (see OBJECTIVISM), presenting in each poem an object, scene, person, or bit of information precisely expressed and meticulously delineated. Her work is distinguished by wit, irony, intellectual appeal, and compact, individual metrical patterns. Her books include Poems (1921); Observations (1924); The Pangolin, and Other Verse (1936); What Are Years? (1941); etc.

Moore, Merrill (1903-). American psychiatrist and poet, early in his career a member of the group known as "Fugitives" and known for his large quantities of verse, all written in the sonnet form. His books include The Noise That Time Makes (1929); It Is a Good Deal Later Than You Think (1934); Six Sides to a Man (1935); M (1938), a volume of 1000 sonnets.

Moore, Thomas (1779-1852). Irish poet of the romantic period, known for his graceful lyrics and his Irish folk-songs, set to traditional tunes of great age, on which he worked for nearly twenty years and published in Irish Melodies (1807-1835). LALLA ROOKH (1817) and THE LOVES OF THE ANGELS (1822), narrative poetry with an Oriental setting, were also very popular. Additional writings by Moore include Poetical Works (1801), published under the pseudonym of Thomas Little; The Two-Penny Post Bag (1813), satires; The Epicurean (1827), a novel; pieces dealing with the adventures of the FUDGE FAMILY; a History of Ireland (1846); and several biographies, including one of Lord BYRON (1830), a close friend of Moore.

Moore came to be regarded as the national poet of Ireland, and he was, next to Byron, the most popular writer of verse in the English romantic period. Among his most famous single songs are The Harp That Once Through Tara's Halls, The Minstrel Boy, and Believe Me, If All Those Endearing Young Charms.

Moore, Thomas Sturge (1870-1944). English poet, man of letters, and wood engraver. His verse is severely classical in tone. Selected Poems (1934).

Moorehouse, John Ward. In Dos Passos' u.s.a., the son of a station agent in Wilmington, Delaware, who is serious, high-minded, and idealistic as a young man but, through advantageous marriages, fortunate "contacts," and ruthless ambition, rises to the position of successful advertising executive and public relations counselor. He directs Red Cross publicity during World War I and takes part in the morality plays or moralities. A type of early drama in which the characters are personifications of abstract qualities and the drama itself an allegory. The best-known English morality is EVERYMAN. The Devil and his attendant, The Vice, were prominent characters in most of the moralities. They were at the height of their vogue in the 15th and 16th centuries. See also MYSTERY PLAYS.

Peace Conference, engages in brief affairs with Eveline HUTCHINS and Eleanor STODDARD, and enables Richard Ellsworth SAVAGE to start on his own rise to power. Moorehouse represents "big business" in the novel.

Morand, Paul (1888–). French writer and diplomat. Attaché to the French Embassy in England (1913–1916). His best-known books available in English are the short-story collections, Open All Night (1922) and Closed All Night (1923).

moratorium (Lat. morari, "to delay"). A legal permission to defer for a stated time the payment of a bond, debt, or other obligation. This is done to enable the debtor to pull himself round by borrowing money, selling effects, or otherwise raising funds to satisfy obligations. The device was adopted in 1891 in South America during the panic caused by the Baring Brothers' default of some twenty millions sterling, and the word came into popular use during World War I, and afterwards in connection with the inability of Germany to pay to date the stated amount due as reparations under the TREATY OF VERSAILLES.

Moray, Captain Robert. The hero of Gilbert Parker's SEATS OF THE MIGHTY.

Mordecai. In the Old Testament, the uncle of ESTHER, a Jew who saved his people from the plots of Haman through his wise counsel to his niece when she became queen.

Mordred, Sir. The name given to MODRED in Malory's Morte d'Arthur and other of the old Arthurian romances.

More, Hannah (1745–1833). English author, reformer, and philanthropist, associated with leading 18th-century literary figures, including Edmund BURKE, Dr. JOHNSON, Horace WALPOLE, and Lady Mary Wortley MONTAGU. Her writings include Percy (1777) and The Fatal Falsehood (1779), tragedies; Village Politics and Repository Tracts, religious tracts on reforming the poor; Thoughts on the Importance of the Manners of the Great (1788); Coelebs in Search of a Wife (1809), a novel; and numerous letters.

More, Paul Elmer (1864–1937). American literary critic and scholar, associated with Irving BABBITT in the movement of HUMANISM. He was opposed to humanitarianism in art and to the literary movements that followed World War I and stressed morality and submission of the individual to society. His works include The Great Refusal (1894); A Century of Indian Epigrams (1898); Judgment of Socrates (1898); the SHELburne ESSAYS (1904–1935); Nietzsche (1912); Platonism (1917); The Religion of Plato (1921); Hellenistic Philosophies (1923); The Christ of the New Testament (1924); Christ, the Word (1927); The Demon of the Absolute (1928); The Catholic Faith (1931); Pages from an Oxford Diary (1937), autobiographical.

More was a professor of Sanskrit and the classics at Harvard, Bryn Mawr, and Princeton, and edited THE NATION from 1909 to 1914.

More, Sir Thomas (1478–1535). English statesman, humanist, poet, and author, a friend of ERASMUS, Colet, and other leading scholars of the time. He wrote in both Latin and English, his most famous work being UTOPIA (1516), written in Latin. His English works include a biography of PICO DELLA MIRANDOLA (1510); a History of Richard III (1543); Supplication of Souls (1529); and An Apology of Sir Thomas More (1533).

More held a number of important positions in the government of his time, being a member of Parliament, an envoy on several missions abroad, a court official, and ultimately Lord Chancellor, succeeding Cardinal WOLSEY in 1529. He was also a staunch Catholic, engaging in vigorous controversies with the Protestant heretics of the time, especially William TYNDALE, against whom he wrote a Dialogue in English in 1528. Although he had been a friend of King Henry VIII, he would not take an oath to the Act of Supremacy acknowledging the King to be chief authority over the English Church as against the Pope, and for this refusal was beheaded as a traitor.

Moreau, Frederic. The hero of Flaubert's SENTIMENTAL EDUCATION, a satire on the typical romantic hero of the early 19th century. He is an egotistical, ambitious, and sentimental young man who dabbles in the fashionable political movements of the time, which range from revolution to reaction, schemes to achieve entry into Parisian society, deserting his provincial family and friends, and from afar nourishes an unconsummated passion for Mme ARNOUX in the best romantic tradition, although he does not permit it to interfere with the love affairs into which physical desire and worldly ambition lead him. He is neither totally ambitious nor totally absurd, but rather an average upper middle-class young Frenchman of the 19th century who takes the conventions of his time seriously. He has been called a male counterpart, in some degree, of Emma BOVARY.

Morehouse, Ward (1897-). American journalist, playwright, and dramatic critic of N.Y. SUN. Wrote biography of George M. COHAN. See also MOOREHOUSE, JOHN WARD.

Morel, Charles. In Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, an ambitious and unscrupulous young violinist who is the son of JUPIEN and becomes the protégé and lover of BARON DE CHARLUS.

Morel, Paul. The hero of D. H. Lawrence's SONS AND LOVERS, considered to be autobiographical. Because of his fear and hatred of his father, Paul has come during childhood and early adolescence to feel an excessive dependence upon and emotional attachment to his mother, who responds in a similar fashion. The result is that in his first love affairs the youth is tortured by the feeling that he is betraying his mother by loving someone else, and she in her turn is jealous of the affection he extends to other women.

Moreland, Catherine. Heroine of Jane Austen's NORTHANGER ABBEY.

Morell, Rev. James. In Shaw's CANDIDA, the husband of Candida.

Morella. In Poe's tale so called, a woman fascinated with the mystical study of personality. When she dies in childbirth, her spirit, it is implied, passes into her new-born daughter.

Morgan, Charles (1894-). English novelist. Drama critic of London Times (since 1926). Winner of the Femina-Vie Heureuse Prize (1930) with Portrait in a Mirror; the Hawthornden Prize (1933) with The Fountain; the James Tait Black Memorial Award (1941) with The Voyage. George MOORE appointed him his literary executor. Has written essays under pseudonym "Menander."

Morgan, Harry. The hero of Ernest Hemingway's TO HAVE AND HAVE NOT, a native of Key West, Florida, who, in order to support his wife and family, participates in smuggling and other illegal activities, with fatal results.

Morgan, Sir Henry (1635?-1688). British buccaneer. Captured and sacked Porto Bello and ravaged the coast of Cuba, Maracaibo and Gibraltar (1669), Panama City (1671); etc. After the treaty between Spain and England, he was called back to England where he gained the favor of the King. He was appointed lieutenant governor of Jamaica and commander in chief. Cf. the poems, Morgan Sails the Caribbean (1934) by Berton Braley, and The Sack of Old Panama, by Dana Burnet.

Morgan, James. In Thackeray's novel PEN-DENNIS, the valet of Major Pendennis. After years of discreet service, he makes a shrewd and bold but futile attempt to blackmail his employer through his knowledge of the past history of Colonel ALTAMONT.

Morgan, John Pierpont (1837-1913). American banker and financier. Formed J. P. Morgan & Co. (1895). Financed government; reorganized railroads; formed United States Steel Corporation (1901). Collected art and rare books. Was president of the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York; a benefactor of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, the New York Public Library, etc. His son, John Pierpont Morgan (1867-1943), succeeded him as head of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., and acted as agent of Allied governments in floating large loans in the U.S. during World War I, etc.

Morgan, Thomas Hunt (1867-1945). American zoologist; discovered the existence of genes which determine heredity. Nobel prize (1933).

Morgan, Wallace (1873-1948). Well-known magazine illustrator, who, during World War I, was appointed official artist with the American Army and made many drawings for a historical record of the War. Member National Institute of Arts and Letters. Illustrated books by Joseph C. LINCOLN, etc.

Morgan, William (d. 1826). A mechanic of Batavia, New York, said to have been killed by Freemasons for revealing secrets of the order during a furious political issue. When a body, supposedly Morgan's, was found, a naively honest worker of Morgan's group doubted its identity in the presence of another leader, who then coined the famous phrase: "A good enough Morgan until after the election."

Morgana. An enchantress, identified with the Lady of the Lake in Orlando Furioso, and also with MORGANE LE FAX, the fairy sister of King Arthur.

Morgan, Fata, see FATA MORGANA.

morganatic marriage. A marriage between a man of high (usually royal) rank and a woman of inferior station, by virtue of which she does not acquire the husband's rank, and neither she nor the children of the marriage are entitled to inherit his title or possessions; often called a "left-handed marriage" because the custom is for the man to pledge his troth with his left hand instead of the right. An instance of a morganatic marriage in the British Royal Family is that of George, Duke of Cambridge (1819-1904), cousin of Queen Victoria and uncle of Queen Mary, who married morganatically in 1840. His children took the surname Fitz-George.

The word comes from the medieval Latin phrase matrimonium ad morganaticam, the last word representing the O.H. Ger. morgangeba, morning-gift. It meant that the children were entitled to nothing of the father's beyond his first, or "morning" gift, i.e., the privilege of being born.

Morgan le Fay. The fairy sister of King ARTHUR; one of the principal characters in Arthurian romance and in Celtic legend generally; also known as Morgane and (especially in ORLANDO FURIOSO) as Morgana. See FATA MORGANA.

In Malory's Morte d'Arthur, on one occasion Morgan le Fay steals her brother's sword Excalibur, with its scabbard, and sends them to Sir Accolon of Gaul, her paramour, that he may kill Arthur in mortal combat. If this villainy succeeds, Morgan intends to murder her husband, marry Sir Accolon, and "devise to make him king of Britain," but Sir Accolon, during the combat, drops the sword. Arthur, snatching it up, would have slain him had he not craved mercy and confessed the treasonable design. After this, Morgan steals the scabbard and throws it into the lake. Lastly, she tries to murder her brother by means of a poisoned robe, but Arthur tells the messenger to try it on, that he may see it, and when the messenger does so he drops down dead, "being burnt to a coal."

In ORLANDO FURIOSO Morgan le Fay is represented as living at the bottom of a lake, and dispensing her treasures to whom she likes; in ORLANDO INNAMORATO she first appears as "Lady Fortune," but subsequently assumes her witch-like attributes. In the romance of OGIER THE DANE, Morgan le Fay receives Ogier in the Isle of Avalon when he is over one hundred years old, restores him to youth, and becomes his bride.

Morgante Maggiore. A serio-comic romance in verse, by Luigi Pulci (1432-1484) of Florence (1485). The characters had appeared previously in many of the old romances; Morgante is a ferocious giant, converted by Orlando (the real hero) to Christianity. After performing the most wonderful feats he dies at last from the bite of a crab.

Pulci was actually the inventor of this species of poetry, although it is called by the French bernesque, from Berni, who greatly excelled in it.

Morgause or Margawse. In Arthurian romance, wife of King Lot. Their four sons are Gawain, Agravain, Gaheris, and Gareth, but Morgause has had another son by Arthur, named MODRED. This is the version of the legend given in Malory's MORTE d'ARTHUR, according to which Morgause is also Arthur's half-sister, although at the time of Modred's conception he was unaware of the relationship.

Morgenthau, Henry, Jr. (1891-). American diplomat, son of the German-born American diplomat Henry Morgenthau (1856-1946). Governor, Farm Credit Administration (1933); U.S. secretary of the treasury (1934-1945). Remembered also as author of the controversial "Morgenthau Plan" of German de-industrialization after World War II.

Morgiana. In the story of ALI BABA AND THE FORTY THIEVES in the Arabian Nights, the clever, faithful, female slave of Ali Baba, who pries into the forty jars, and discovers that every jar but one contains a man. She takes oil from the only one containing it, and, having made it boiling hot, pours enough into each jar to kill the thief concealed there. At last she kills the captain of the gang, and marries her master's son.

Morglay. The sword of Sir BEVIS OF HAMTOUN; also, a generic name for a sword.

Morgue la Faye. The form taken by the name MORGAN LE FAY in Ogier the Dane.

Morley, Mrs. The name under which Queen Anne corresponded with "Mrs. Freeman" (the Duchess of Marlborough).

Mormonism. The religious and social system of the Mormons, or Latter-day Saints. It is largely connected in the minds of most people with the practice of polygamy, which became part of the Mormon code in 1852, was very widely indulged in, but later became a diminishing—if not vanished—quantity. Hence the phrase a regular Mormon, for a flighty person who cannot keep to one wife or sweetheart.

The fraternity takes its name from The Book of Mormon, or Golden Bible, which is supposed to have been written on golden plates by the prophet Mormon at dictation by the angel Moroni. The early leaders were Joseph SMITH (1805-1844) and Brigham YOUNG (1801-1877), under whom the Mormons settled in Utah.

Morning Star of the Reformation. John Wyclif (1324-1384).

Morose. In Ben Jonson's Epicene or the Silent Woman (1609), a miserly old man, who hates to hear any voice but his own. His nephew, Sir Dauphine, wants to wring out of him a third of his property. He therefore gets a lad to impersonate "a silent woman," and the phenomenon so delights the old man that he consents to a marriage. No sooner is the ceremony over than the boy-wife assumes the character of a virago of loud and ceaseless tongue. Morose is half mad, and promises to give his nephew a third of his income if he will take this intolerable plague off his hands.

Morpheus. Ovid's name for the son of Sleep, and god of dreams; so called from Gr.

morphe, "form," because he gives these airy nothings their form and fashion. Hence the name of the narcotic, morphine or morphia.

Morphy, Paul Charles (1837-1884). American world's chess master (1857-1859). Mentally deranged in later life.

Morris, Gouverneur (1752-1816). American statesman and diplomat. Member of Continental Congress; assistant minister of finance; U.S. minister to France; etc. His diary edited by his great-granddaughter, A Diary of the French Revolution 1789-1793 (1939) is valuable as a historical source. His great-grandson, Gouverneur Morris (1876-), is a popular American writer, among whose best stories are The Footprint and Other Stories (1908); The Voice in the Rice (1910); Yellow Men and Gold (1921) etc.

Morris, Lloyd (1893-). American biographer and playwright. His best-known work is his biography of Hawthorne, The Rebellious Puritan (1927); his best play the comedy, The Damask Cheek (1943; with John Van Druten). A Threshold in the Sun (1943) is his autobiography.

Morris, Sir Lewis (1833-1907). Welsh lawyer and writer of English verse. Instrumental in establishing University of Wales (1893); author of The Epic of Hades (1876-1877); etc.

Morris, William (1834-1896). English art-lover, poet, and prose-writer, associated with the PRE-RAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD and the English Socialist movement. His best-known works of poetry, in which he was influenced by the Pre-Raphaelites and by CHAUCER and which deal chiefly with ancient Greek and Norse heroic legends, are The Defense of Guenevere, And Other Poems (1858); The Life and Death of Jason (1867); THE EARTHLY PARADISE (1868-1870); Sigurd the Volsung (1876); Three Northern Love Songs (1875). He also wrote prose romances, interspersed with lyrics, among which are The Dream of John Ball (1888) and News from Nowhere (1891), setting forth his Socialist ideas; The House of the Wolfings (1889); The Story of the Glittering Plain (1890); The Roots of the Mountains (1890); The Wood Beyond the World (1894); Child Christopher (1895); The Well at the World's End (1896); The Water of the Wondrous Isles (1897); The Story of the Sundering Flood (1898).

Morris was greatly interested in painting and architecture in the early part of his career, and in 1861, in order to improve the artistic taste of the Victorian middle class of the time, he helped to found Morris, Marshall, Faulkner & Co., a firm which manufactured furniture, carpets, tapestries, and the like. In 1891 he also founded the KELMSCOTT PRESS. As a Socialist, he helped to establish the Social Democrat Federation in 1883 and was one of its leaders until he left in a secessionist movement. He was disappointed in its policies and attitudes and returned to writing in 1889.

morris dance. A mumming dance, popular in England in the 15th century and later, in which the dancers usually represented characters from the Robin Hood stories. See MAID MARIAN. It was brought from Spain in the reign of Edward III, and was originally a military dance of the Moors, or Moriscos—hence its name.

Moschus (2nd century B.C.). Bucolic Greek poet.

Mose the Fireboy. The first "tough" character to attain popularity on the American stage. Mose made his appearance in a play by B. A. Baker called A Glance at New York (Am., 1848) at a time when the city's volunteer fire companies, with their rowdy social life and exciting rivalries, were very much to the fore. In the play he initiates an out-of-towner into all the mysteries of New York life, including a "ladies' bowling club" where the ladies smoke large cigars. This first play was so popular that Mose in his red shirt and plug hat, with his huge fire hose which he had plenty of opportunity to drag about the stage, became the hero of a whole series of comedies—New York as It Is, Mysteries and Miseries of New York, Mose in California, Mose in a Muss, Mose's Visit to Philadelphia, and finally Mose in China.

Moses. In the Old Testament (Exod. i–Deut. xxxiv), the hero under whose leadership the Israelites left Egypt and made their way through the wilderness to the Promised Land.

Because PHARAOH had decreed that all Hebrew boy babies should be killed, Moses' mother put him in a basket and left him in the bulrushes, where he was found and adopted by Pharaoh's daughter. Later he identified himself with his own people and because he killed an abusive Egyptian taskmaster, was forced to flee the country. He returned, called down on Pharaoh's recalcitrant head the Ten Plagues and led the Children of Israel out of Egypt, passing through the Red Sea on dry land. For forty years he led his discontented, rebellious followers through the wilderness and was mediator for them with Jehovah, to whom he talked on Mount Sinai on the occasion of his receiving the TEN COMMANDMENTS. Moses is spoken of in the Bible as the meekest of all men, but on one occasion he impulsively and vaingloriously struck a rock to bring water out of it instead of merely speaking, and for this sin was punished by being forbidden to enter the Promised Land. He was, however, given a glimpse of it from Mount Pisgah, where he died. George ELIOT wrote a poem, The Death of Moses.

the horns of Moses' face. Moses is conventionally represented with horns, owing to a blunder in translation. In Ex. xxxiv. 29, 30, where we are told that when Moses came down from Mount Sinai "the skin of his face shone," the Hebrew for this shining may be translated either as "sent forth beams" or "sent forth horns"; and the Vulgate took the latter as correct, rendering the passage—quod cornuta esset facies sua.

Moses' rod. The divining-rod is sometimes so called, after the rod with which Moses worked wonders before Pharaoh (Ex. ii. 2-5).

Moses, Robert (1888-). American state and municipal official. Won wide acclaim for excellent work as New York City park commissioner (from 1934).

Mosher, Thomas Bird (1852-1923). Maine publisher. Founded The Bibelet (1895), a little magazine of choice reprints of little-known literary masterpieces. Published a series of aesthetically printed and bound small volumes in exquisite good taste.

Mourning Becomes Electra. A trilogy of plays by Eugene O'NEILL, produced in 1931. The separate parts are entitled Homecoming, The Hunted, and The Haunted, and present an adaptation of the ELECTRA theme of classical literature in terms of a 19th-century New England family. The leading characters are: General Ezra Mannon, returning from the Civil War; Christine, his wife, a beautiful and sensual woman; their daughter Lavinia; Orin, their son; Adam Brant, Ezra's nephew; Peter Niles, a suitor of Lavinia; and Hazel Niles, Peter's sister, loved by Orin. The Mannon family correspond, respectively, to Agamemnon, Clytemnestra, Electra, and Orestes in the original legend. Christine, assisted by Brant, her lover, poisons her husband. Lavinia, in love with Brant herself, discovers the rôle of her mother in the crime and persuades Orin to join her in a plan of revenge. Orin as a result murders Brant, and Christine commits suicide in grief. Orin and Lavinia travel to the South Seas, but the consciousness of their guilt preys upon them, and on their return home Orin kills himself and Lavinia retires to the lonely Mannon house to imprison herself among recollections of her crime.

Mourt's Relation. A Relation or Journal of the Beginnings and Proceedings of the English Plantation Settled at Plymouth in New England, published in 1622 and known as Mourt's Relation from the name of the author of its preface. It consists chiefly of letters from various of the colonists to their friends and families in England, and includes a diary kept by William BRADFORD during the voyage of the Mayflower and the early settlement of Plymouth.

Mouse Tower, the. A medieval watch-tower on the Rhine, near Bingen, so called because of the tradition that Archbishop Hatto was there devoured by mice. The tower, however, was built by Bishop Siegfried, two hundred years after the death of Hatto, as a toll-house for collecting the duties upon all goods which passed by. The similarity of Maut (toll) and Maus (mouse) and the unpopularity of the toll gave rise to the tradition.

Moussorgsky. See MUSORGSKI.

moutons; revenons à nos. (Fr.). Literally, "let us come back to our sheep," a phrase used to express, "let us return to our subject." It is taken from the 14th century French comedy La Farce de Maître Pathelin, or L'Avocat Pathelin (line 1282), in which a woolen-draper charges a shepherd with ill-treating his sheep. In telling his story he keeps running away from his subject, and to throw discredit on the defendant's attorney (Pathelin), accuses him of stealing a piece of cloth. The judge must pull him up every moment with, "Mais, mon ami, revenons à nos moutons." The phrase is frequently quoted by RABELAIS.

His son Hugh dies in the trenches, his old aunt is killed by a bomb, and the likable young German tutor who had left his household is shot in Russia. Out of these and other experiences he endeavors to fashion a philosophy that can be trusted to stand the strain of war.

Mr. Dooley. See DUNNE, FINLEY PETER.

Mr. Fortune's Maggot. A novel by Sylvia Townsend WARNER (1927).

Mr. Gilfil's Love Story. A story by George ELIOT, one of her Scenes of Clerical Life (1857). It chronicles the love and short-lived marriage of Maynard Gilfil, a clergyman, and the young Italian, Caterina Sorti. Caterina has fallen passionately in love with Captain Anthony Wybrow and is jealous of his fiancée, Beatrice Asshur. Wybrow is found dead of heart failure by Caterina, who has come with a dagger to meet him, and the shock is so great that, although she recovers enough to give her affection to the faithful Maynard and marry him, she dies a year after the marriage.

Mr. Isaacs. A novel by F. Marion CRAWFORD (1882) concerning a Mohammedan with three wives and the love affair with the English Miss Westonhaugh that stirs him to other ideals. The scene is laid in India.

Mr. Polly, The History of. A novel by H. G. WELLS (1910). The hero is an imaginative, unsuccessful small tradesman who, on sudden impulse, vanishes while his house is on fire and roams about on whimsical adventure.

Mrs. For characters in fiction and drama, as Mrs. Grundy, Mrs. Gummidge, Mrs. Partington, etc., see also under surnames.

Mrs. Dalloway. A novel by Virginia WOOLF (1925), describing the events during the course of a day in the life of Clarissa Dalloway, an English society woman. Through means of passages written in modified "INTERIOR MONOLOGUE" form, we see portrayed the personalities of Mrs. Dalloway and the people with whom she comes in contact during her day.

Mrs. Miniver. A best-selling collection of essays and sketches dealing with everyday events in the life of Mrs. Miniver, a middle-class English woman, during the early years of World War II, written by Jan STRUTHER (1940). It was extremely popular in both Great Britain and the U.S. and was adapted as a successful American motion picture.

Mrs. Warren's Profession. A drama by SHAW (1898). In his George Bernard Shaw, G. K. Chesterton describes it thus: "The play of Mrs. Warren's Profession is concerned with a coarse mother and a cold daughter; the mother drives the ordinary and dirty trade of harlotry; the daughter does not know until the end the atrocious origin of all her own comfort and refinement. The daughter, when the discovery is made, freezes up into an iceberg of contempt . . . the mother explodes into pulverizing cynicism and practicality." See also under DALY, ARNOLD.

Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch. A novel of mingled humor and sentiment by Alice Hegan RICE (1901). The "Cabbage Patch" is a straggling group of huts and shanties along the railroad track in a Kentucky town. Here Mrs. Wiggs, the plucky widow of a drunkard, mother of Asia, Australia, Europa, and Jimmy and presiding genius of the Patch, finds ample scope for her talents. A slight love story is interwoven, and the irrepressible Wiggses pride themselves at last on the fact that it is in their cottage that their much admired Miss Lucy Olcott becomes reconciled to her lover, Robert Redding. In Lovey Mary (1903), a sequel, "Lovey Mary," who has been brought up in a Home, runs away with a child named Tommy to whom she has become attached. Luck brings her to the Cabbage Patch, where Mrs. Wiggs, resourceful as usual, finds a home for her with the shiftless Miss Hazy, and at the end of the tale the two children are befriended by the well-to-do Mr. and Mrs. Redding whose love story was told in Mrs. Wiggs. There was a successful dramatized version of Mrs. Wiggs in 1904.

Mr. Waddington of Wyck. A novel by May SINCLAIR (1921), an analytical study, not without humor, of a completely self-centered and conceited person.

MS. (pl. MSS.). Manuscript (from Lat. manuscriptum, "that which is written by hand"), applied to literary works either in hand-writing or typescript.

Much Ado About Nothing. A comedy by Shakespeare (ca. 1599). There are two main plots. One concerns the love affairs of Beatrice and Benedict, who fall in love as a result of the clever schemes of their friends, each one being told the other is pining away of unrequited passion. The other plot has to do with a conspiracy against Beatrice's gentle cousin, Hero, who is engaged to Claudio of Aragon. Hero's uncle, Don John, from hatred of her father, bribes Hero's waiting maid to impersonate her mistress and keep a rendezvous with him, and then invites Claudio to witness it. Claudio rejects his bride at the altar, but through the good offices of a kindly, understanding priest, the matter is finally cleared up. Many sources have been suggested for the plot, for similar tales were told by Bandello, Ariosto and Spenser, among others.

Muck, Karl (1859-1940). German orchestra conductor. Guest conductor in London (1899), Vienna (1903-1906), Boston (1906-1908), etc. Regular conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra (1912-1918).

Muckle-Mouth Meg. A humorous poem by Robert BROWNING about an English trespasser across the Scots border who is offered the choice of "Muckle-Mouth Meg" or the gallows. The fearsomely named female turns out to be a winsome girl. James Ballantine (1808-1877) wrote a ballad on the same subject, "Muckle-Mou'd Meg," though in his version the girl's mouth is in reality very large, but Wat Scott, the young man in this case, relents at her tears at the foot of the gibbet. "'Twas better to marry than hang"; and, apparently, all turned out well, for they "lo'ed ither muckle and lang."

muckrakers. Term applied to a group of authors and journalists in the early 1900's, from 1902 to about 1917, who took part in a movement exposing corruption in the business and politics of the U.S. at the time. Leading participants included Lincoln STEFFENS, Ida TARBELL, George CREEL, T. W. LAWSON, Ray STANNARD BAKER, Mark SULLIVAN, and Samuel Hopkins ADAMS. A number of magazines and newspapers were devoted to muckraking campaigns, among them being McClure's, Everybody's, Collier's, the Independent, Cosmopolitan, the New York World, and the Kansas City Star. THE JUNGLE is a famous muckraking novel. The term muckraker was first used by Theodore Roosevelt in a speech in 1906 attacking charges of corruption in the U.S., and referred to a character in PILGRIM'S PROGRESS who spends his time raking muck and never sees the crown above his head.

Mud Cat State. Mississippi. So called for large number of catfish in the Mississippi River.

Mudie, Charles Edward (1818-1890). English publisher. Founder of Mudie's Lending Library in London (1842).

Mudjekeewis. In Longfellow's poem HIAWATHA, the father of Hiawatha, and subsequently potentate of the winds. He gives all the winds but one to his children to rule; the one he reserves is the west wind, which he himself rules over. The dominion of the winds is given to Mudjekeewis because he once slew the great bear called the Mishe-Mokwa.

Thus was slain the Mishe-Mokwa . . .
"Honor be to Mudjekeewis!
Henceforth he shall be the west wind,
And hereafter, e'en for ever,
Shall he hold supreme dominion
Over all the winds of heaven."

Hiawatha, ii.

mufti. An Arabic word meaning an official expounder of the Koran and Mohammedan law; but used in English to denote civil, as distinguished from military or official costume.

Mugello. The giant that, according to medieval romance, was slain by Averardo de Medici, a commander under Charlemagne. The tale is interesting, for it is said that the Medici took the three balls of his mace, now the pawn-brokers' sign (see BALLS), for their device.

mugwump. An Algonquin word meaning a chief; in John Eliot's Indian Bible (1663) the word "centurion" in the Acts is rendered mugwump. It later came to be applied in the U.S. to independent members of the Republican party, who refused to follow the dictum of a caucus, and to all political independents whose party vote could not be relied on.

Muir, Edwin (1887-). Scottish poet and literary critic. His essays contributed to The Freeman under the editorship of Van Wyck Brooks were collected under the title Latitudes (1924). He is (with his wife, Willa Muir) one of the best known contemporary translators from the German. His book, The Structure of the Novel (1928), postulates that the contemporary realistic novel is comparatively a failure.

Muir, John (1838-1914). Scottish-born American naturalist. Worked principally in Yosemite Valley (1868-1874) and later in Nevada, Utah, and Alaska. Settled in California and campaigned for forest reserves and National Parks, like the Yosemite which was finally established by Congress (1840). Wrote The Mountains of California (1849); Our National Parks (1901); The Yosemite (1912); etc.

Mukerji, Dhan Gopal (1890-1936). East Indian-American novelist. Won the Newbery medal of the American Library Association for the best children's book with Gay-Neck (1927). Also wrote an answer to Katherine Mayo's Mother India, entitled A Son of Mother India Answers (1928), claiming that Miss Mayo exaggerated the situation in India.

Mulciber. Literally, "the softener." A Latin surname of VULCAN.

Mulford, Clarence Edward (1883-). American writer of western stories. Best-known for his Bar-20 stories concerning a character called Hopalong Cassidy.

Mulla's Bard. See under BARD.

Mullens, Priscilla. Heroine of Longfellow's The Courtship of Miles Standish.

Müller, Friedrich Max (1823-1900). German-born British philologist. Devoted himself to comparative study of religions; of very stimulating influence on Oriental studies. See also under BOWWOW THEORY.

Muller, Maud, see MAUD MULLER.

Mulligan, Malachi ("Buck"). In James Joyce's ULYSSES, a vigorous, sardonic, and ebullient Irish medical student, a friend of STEPHEN DEDALUS, with whom Stephen lives in an abandoned tower overlooking the harbor of Dublin. He is said to represent Oliver St. John GOGARTY.

Mulligan of Ballymulligan. An obstreperous Irishman in Thackeray's Christmas book, Mrs. Perkins' Ball. He attends the ball and dances a double shuffle jig, to the terror of his partner.

multum in parvo (Lat.). Literally, "much in little." Much information condensed into few words or into a small compass.

multure. A fee for grinding grain at a mill.

Mulvaney, Terence. One of Kipling's best-known characters, with his friends Stanley ORTHERIS and John LEAROYD forming a trio, "collectively . . . the worst men in the regiment so far as genial blackguardism goes." They made their first appearance in a short story entitled The Three Musketeers, included in PLAIN TALES FROM THE HILLS (1888) and thereafter were moving spirits of many an adventure. E. W. Gosse thus described the trio in The Century—

Mulvaney, the Irish giant, who has been the "grizzled, tender and very wise Ulysses" to successive generations of young and foolish recruits, is a great creation. He is the father of the craft of arms to his associates; he has served with various regiments from Bermuda to Halifax; he is "old in war, scarred, reckless, resourceful, and in his pious hours an unequalled soldier." Learyoyd, the second of these friends, is "six and a half feet of slow-moving, heavy-footed Yorkshireman, born on the wolds, bred in the dales, and educated chiefly among the carriers' carts at the back of York railway station." The third is Ortheris, a little man as sharp as a needle, "a fox-terrier of a cockney," an inveterate poacher and dog-stealer.

Mumbo Jumbo. The name given by Europeans (possibly from some lost native word) to a boggy or grotesque idol venerated by certain African tribes; hence, any object of blind and unreasoning worship. Vachel LINDSAY composed a poem entitled, The Congo, in which the chant "Mumbo Jumbo will hoodoo you!" is used as a striking refrain.

Mumford, Ethel, née Watts (1878?-1940). American writer. Best-known for her contributions, with Oliver Herford, to The Cynics' Calendar (1905-1910).

Mumford, Lewis (1895-). American social, literary, and art critic, author of several well-known studies of American life and accomplishment in the 19th and 20th centuries. These are The Story of Utopias (1922); Sticks and Stones (1924), on the reflection of the American spirit through architecture; The Golden Day (1926), a study of American literature of the first half of the 19th century; Herman Melville (1929), a psychological biography; The Brown Decades (1931), on art, engineering, and architecture in the U.S. in the latter part of the 19th century; Technics and Civilization (1934); The Culture of Cities (1938), on sociology and community planning; Faith for Living (1940); Green Memories (1947), a biography of his young son, Geddes, killed in World War II.

Münchhausen, Baron. A traveler who meets with the most marvelous adventures, the hero of a collection of burlesque stories by the German author Rudolf Erich Raspe, published in English in 1785. The original English title read Baron Münchhausen's Narrative of His Marvellous Travels and Campaigns in Russia. The name of the author was not definitely known until after his death. The incidents were compiled from various sources, including the adventures of an actual Hieronymus Karl Friedrich von Munchhausen (1720-1797), a German officer in the Russian army, noted for his marvelous stories, Bebel's Facetiae, Castiglione's Cortegiano, Bildermann's Utopia, etc. The book ran through numerous editions. It is unique in its field of high-spirited satire.

Mundy, Talbot (1879-1940). Anglo-American novelist who became deeply interested in East-Indian occult teachings. His romantic novels are popular, as Rung Ho (1914); etc.

Muni, Paul. Originally Paul Weisenfreund (1895-). Famous moving-picture actor who started as member of the Yiddish Art Theater in New York (1918-1925). Starred in I am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang; Life of Louis Pasteur (Motion Picture Academy award, 1936); The Good Earth; Life of Emile Zola, etc.

Munich Crisis. A European diplomatic crisis of September 1938, when war was threatened by the demand of Adolf HITLER for the incorporation into Germany of a group of Sudeten Germans living in a region which had been given to Czechoslovakia as part of its national territory by the Treaty of Versailles at the close of World War I. In an effort to prevent war, Neville CHAMBERLAIN Prime Minister of Great Britain, flew to confer with Hitler at BERCHTESGADEN and later made a peace treaty at Munich, Germany, which permitted the annexation of the Sudeten region to Germany in return for a pledge by Hitler that the independence of the remainder of Czechoslovakia would be respected. Chamberlain believed that "peace in our time" had been achieved, but Hitler's pledge was not kept. The Munich agreement indirectly strengthened Hitler for his later aggression against Poland (September 1939), which brought about World War II.

Munin, see HUGIN AND MUNIN.

Munkácsy, Mihály von. Real name Michael Lieb (1844-1900). Hungarian painter. His Christ Before Pilate (1882) became internationally famous.

Munkar and Nakir. Two black angels of Mohammedan mythology who interrogate the dead immediately after burial. The first two questions they ask are, "Who is your Lord?" and "Who is your prophet?" Their voices are like thunder, their aspects hideous. If the scrutiny is satisfactory the soul is gently drawn forth from the lips of the deceased, and the body is left to repose in peace; if not, the body is beaten about the head with clubs half iron and half flame, and the soul is wrenched forth by racking torments.

Munro, Cora. The heroine of Cooper's LAST OF THE MOHICANS. Her sister Alice and her father, the English commander of Fort William Henry, are also prominent characters.

Munro, Hector Hugh (1870-1916). Pseudonym Saki. Scottish writer of humorous short stories and novels, including Reginald, Beasts and Super-Beasts, and The Unbearable Bassington. His work has been praised as having the qualities of champagne, high spirits and fantastic humor. His first book was a serious work, The Rise of the Russian Empire (1900). Killed in World War I.

Munro, Neil (1864-1930). Scottish novelist and poet. All of his work Scottish in background. His best novels, John Splendid and Gillian, the Dreamer. Sir Hugh Walpole called him "one of Scotland's few great novelists." His newspaper work was all written under the pseudonym of "Mr. Incognito."

Munroe, Kirk (1850-1930). Popular American writer of boys' books. Editor of Harper's Young People. His most popular story is The Flamingo Feather (1887).

Munsey, Frank Andrew (1854-1925). American publisher of magazines and mortician of newspapers. He bought up and killed the New York Herald, Globe, Mail, and Sun. Among his successes were Munsey's Magazine and the Argosy All-Story Weekly. He left the bulk of his fortune to the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York.

Munson, Gorham (1896-). American critic and economist. Founded (1922) and edited (1922-1924) a little review called Secession, contributors to which included Waldo Frank, E. E. Cummings, etc. Joined the faculty of New School for Social Research (1927). Edited the social-credit review, New Democracy (1933-1939), and organized the American social-credit movement. Van Wyck Brooks has called him "the most important of younger American critics."

Münsterberg, Hugo (1863-1916). German-American psychologist. Taught at Harvard (1892-1895; 1897-1916) superintending the construction of a laboratory especially equipped for experimental psychology. His books on psychology are numerous.

Munthe, Axel Martin Fredrik (1857-1949). Swedish physician, psychiatrist, and writer. Famous for The Story of San Michele (1929) which sold over 200,000 copies in the U.S. The royalties Dr. Munthe used for his bird sanctuaries in Italy and Sweden.

Murasaki, Baroness. Full Japanese name Murasaki Shikibu (11th century). Japanese poet. Author of a great novel, translated into English by Arthur Waley as Genji Monogatari, or The Tale of Genji (2 vols., 1935).

Murat, Joachim (1767?-1815). French general who had risen from the ranks. Aided Naoleon in the coup d'état of 1799. He married Napoleon's sister and became marshal of France (1804). Commanded cavalry at Austerlitz (1805), Jena (1806), Eylau and Friedland (1807). Made king of Naples (1809), he became known as the "Dandy King." Joined Napoleon on his return from Elba but was captured and executed. Both his sons came to the United States.

Muratore, Lucien (1878-). French dramatic tenor. Member, Chicago Opera Co. (1913-1915). Married Lina CAVALIERI.

Murder in the Cathedral. A drama in verse by T. S. ELIOT (1935). It deals with the assassination of St. Thomas à Becket (see under SAINTS), and shows him choosing to obey the laws of God rather than of man, even though thereby he loses opportunity for worldly power and insures his murder by the party representing the English king. The conflicts between church and state at the time (1170) are portrayed in the drama, which is considered one of Eliot's best works and was produced on the British and American stage with some artistic success.

Murderers' Bible, see BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Murders in the Rue Morgue, The. A story by Edgar Allan POE, published in 1841 and collected in the Prose Tales of Edgar A. Poe (1843). It introduced the famous literary detective C. Auguste Dupin.

Murdstone, Edward. In Dickens' DAVID COPPERFIELD, David's stepfather, the second husband of Mrs. Copperfield. His character is "firmness," that is, an unbending self-will, which renders the young life of David intolerably wretched.

Jane Murdstone. Sister of Edward, as hard and heartless as her brother.

Murfree, Mary Noailles, see Charles Egbert CRADDOCK.

Murger, Henri (1822-1861). French writer. Best-known for his Scènes de la Vie Bohème (1847-1894), sketches of Bohemian life in Paris.

Murillo, Bartolomé Esteban (1617-1682). Spanish painter of the Andalusian school.

murrain. Plague. Used in Elizabethan invective, as, "a murrain on you!" The word is ultimately related to murder.

Murray, Gilbert (1866-). British classical scholar. Considered one of the most notable translators of Greek drama in the world. Also active in encouraging the return of the Greek drama to the English stage.

Murray, Lindley (1745-1826). Scottish-American grammarian, called the "Father of English Grammar." Grammar of the English Language (1795).

Murrieta, Joaquín (1832?-1853). A California desperado (1849-1853) who, because of some personal affront or wrong, swore vengeance to all Americans. He led a raiding and marauding gang of horsemen and has been presented in moving pictures in a sort of Robin Hood rôle.

Murry, John Middleton (1889-). English journalist and literary critic, husband of Katherine MANSFIELD and friend of D. H. LAWRENCE, Virginia Woolf, Henri GAUDIER, and other English and European figures of the artistic world in the period immediately preceding and following World War I. Murry's literary criticism emphasizes mystical, religious, and ethical values in literature and the lives of literary personalities. Among his studies are Fyodor Dostoyevsky (1916); The Evolution of an Intellectual (1919); Countries of the Mind (1922); Pencilings (1923); Discoveries (1924); To the Unknown God (1924); Keats and Shakespeare (1925); Jesus, Man of Genius (1927); Things to Come (1928); God (1929); Studies in Keats (1930); Son of Woman (1931), dealing with D. H. Lawrence. He also wrote poetry and fiction, edited the letters, papers, and journals of Katherine Mansfield after her death, and published a revealing Autobiography.

During his career, Murry served as editor of several LITTLE MAGAZINES, including Rhythm, later The Blue Review (1911), the Athenaeum (1919-1921), and The Adelphi (1923-1930). He tends to be generally known more through the opinions held of him by other writers than through his own work. It is said that his personality suggested the character of Denis Burlap in Aldous HUXLEY's POINT COUNTER POINT.

muscular Christianity. Healthy or strong-minded Christianity, which braces a man to fight the battle of life bravely and manfully. The term was applied to the teachings of Charles KINGSLEY—somewhat to his annoyance.

It is a school of which Mr. Kingsley is the ablest doctor; and its doctrine has been described fairly and cleverly as "muscular Christianity."—Edinburgh Review, Jan., 1858

Muses. In Greek mythology, the nine daughters of ZEUS and Mnemosyne; originally goddesses of memory only, but later identified with individual arts and sciences. The paintings of Herculaneum show all nine with their respective attributes.

(1) Calliope, the epic Muse. Her symbols are a tablet and stylus; sometimes a scroll.

(2) Clio, Muse of history. Her symbol is a scroll, or an open chest of books.

(3) Erato, Muse of love poetry. Her symbol is a lyre.

(4) Euterpe, Muse of lyric poetry, whose symbol is a flute.

(5) Melpomene, Muse of tragedy: a tragic mask, the club of Hercules, or a sword. She wears the cothurnus, and her head is wreathed with vine leaves.

(6) Polyhymnia, Muse of sacred poetry. She sits pensive, but has no attribute, because deity is not to be represented by any visible symbol.

(7) Terpsichore. Muse of choral song and dance. Her symbols are a lyre and the plectrum.

(8) Thalia. Muse of comedy and idyllic poetry. Her symbols are a comic mask, a shepherd's staff, or a wreath of ivy.

(9) Urania, Muse of astronomy. She carries a staff pointing to a globe.

the Tenth Muse. (1) Marie Lejars de Gournay (1566-1645); (2) Antoinette Deshoulières (1633-1694); (3) Madeleine de Scudéry (1607-1701); (4) Delphine Gay (1804-1855), all French women of letters; (5) Anne Bradstreet, the first American poetess. See under TENTH.

the Scian and the Teian Muse. Simonides and Anacreon.

Musidorus. See PYROCLES AND MUSIDORUS.

Musketeers, The Three, see THREE MUSKETEERS.

Muslim, see MOSLEM.

Musorgski or Moussorgsky, Modest Petrovich (1839-1881). Russian composer. His most notable work is the opera Boris Godunov. See also under PUSHKIN. It was revised by Rimsky-Korsakov; under the Soviets it was made available in the original version which has been eagerly performed. Musorgski was the instigator of the antiformalist movement and father of folk idiom in Russian music.

Muspelheim. In Scandinavian mythology, the abode of fire which at the beginning of time existed in the south. It was light, warm, and radiant, but was guarded by Surtr with a flaming sword. Sparks were collected therefrom to make the stars.

Musset, Alfred de (1810-1857). French poet and dramatist of the romantic period (see ROMANTICISM), associated with the group of poets led by Victor Hugo. His poetry is passionate in the manner of BYRON, dealing chiefly with the ecstasies and despairs of love, with strong emphasis on the individuality of the author. His plays consist of comedies of manners, called comédies-proverbes, because many of the titles were taken from proverbs popular at the time, and fanciful comedies in the style of Shakespeare. Musset's poetic works include Contes d'Espagne et d'Italie (1829); Premières poésies (1833); Poésies nouvelles (1836-1852); Namuna and Rolla (1833), narrative poems; a series of lyrics (1835) for which he is best known, including Nuit de mai, Nuit de décembre, Nuit d'août, Nuit d'octobre, and Souvenir. Among his plays are A quoi Revent les jeunes filles, Il Faut qu'une porte soit ouverte ou fermée; Un Caprice; Barberine; Lorenzaccio; On ne badine pas avec l'amour. La Confession d'un enfant du siècle (1836) is a romance in prose.

Musset was involved in a celebrated love affair with George SAND which ended disastrously and was responsible for the poet's turning to debauchery to forget his sorrows. The affair is reflected in his poetry and plays.

Mussolini, Benito (1883-1945). Fascist dictator of Italy. Began as socialist journalist; editor of Avanti (1912); etc. Led Fascists in march on Rome (1922). Summoned by King to form a ministry. Assured Fascist control of government; denounced Versailles Treaty; conquered Ethiopia (1933-1936); withdrew from League of Nations; aided Franco in Spanish war; became ally of Germany in World War II (1940). Died a miserable death by the hands of his own people, with his mistress, after the victory of the Allies.

Mussulman. A Mohammedan, a MOSLEM.

Mut (mother). In Egyptian mythology, the consort of AMMON. She is sometimes called Amaune.

Mutiny on the Bounty. A best-selling novel by Charles NORDHOFF and James NORMAN HALL (1932), based on the famous 18th-century mutiny on the H.M.S. BOUNTY. Together with the two other novels by the same authors which form a trilogy—Men Against the Sea (1934) and Pitcairn Island (1934)—it describes how the mate of the ship, Fletcher Christian, and a number of the crew rebel against the cruel Captain Bligh and set him adrift in an open boat with the loyal members of the crew. The mutineers have many adventures at sea following this act and eventually, with a group of Tahitian natives, reach Pitcairn Island and found a colony. Mutiny on the Bounty was dramatized as a successful American motion picture.

Mutsuhito (1852-1912). Japanese emperor, the 122nd in direct lineage. During his reign Japan was modernized and made her greatest industrial progress. The position of Japanese women was improved, a constitution was adopted (1889), and the Japanese secured a victory over China (1894) and Russia (1905).

Mute and Jute. In James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE, a pair of comic Irishmen. In the first section of the book they carry on an exuberant dialogue in dream-language which contains allusions to places in Ireland and events and characters in Irish history.

Mutt and Jeff. Two American comic-strip characters by "Bud" Fisher.

Mutual Admiration Society. Any club or informal group of friends who laud each other to the skies; sometimes used cynically of writers who sing each other's praises in print. The phrase comes from Oliver Wendell HOLMES' Autocrat of the Breakfast Table (1857-1858).

Mutual Friend, Our, see OUR MUTUAL FRIEND.

My Ántonia. A novel by Willa CATHER (1918), dealing with the life of Bohemian immigrant and native American settlers in the frontier farmlands of Nebraska. The heroine, Ántonia Shimerda, is forced to work as a servant on the farms of her neighbors after her father kills himself in despair at his failure to become a farmer. She has an unfortunate love affair and elopes with an Irish railway conductor, but returns home and eventually becomes the patient and strong wife of a Bohemian farmer, Anton Cuzak, the mother of a large family, and a typical woman of the pioneer West. The author says of her:

She lent herself to immemorial human attitudes which we recognize as universal and true. . . . She had only to stand in the orchard, to put her hand on a little crab tree and look up at the apples, to make you feel the goodness of planting and tending and harvesting at last. . . . She was a rich mine of life, like the founders of early races.

Mycerinus. An Egyptian king, son of CHEOPS. He is the hero of a poem by Matthew ARNOLD.

Myers, Frederic William Henry (1843-1901). English poet and essayist. One of the founders of the Society for Psychical Research (1882). Author of the remarkable poem Saint Paul (1867); etc.

Myers, Gustavus (1872-1942). American economic historian. Best-known for his History of the Great American Fortunes (1910), "a semi-classic of research."

My Friend's Book (Le Livre de mon ami). An autobiographical volume by Anatole FRANCE (1885). See also under PIERRE NOZIERE.

My Heart and My Flesh. Novel by Elizabeth Madox ROBERTS (1927).

My Heart's in the Highlands. A play by William SAROYAN (1939).

My Lady Nicotine. Tobacco. The phrase is the title of a book by J. M. BARRIE (1890).

My Last Duchess. A dramatic monologue by Robert BROWNING (1842). The speaker is the Renaissance Duke of Ferrara who, while negotiating a marriage with the daughter of a count, indicates to the count's agent a portrait of his former wife, his "last Duchess." As he speaks of her, there is the intimation that, because she did not properly appreciate the honor bestowed upon her by his marrying her, he arranged for her murder.

My Lost Youth. Title of a famous poem by LONGFELLOW.

My Mortal Enemy. Title of a novel by Willa CATHER (1926).

Mynheer Closh. A Dutchman. Closh or Claus is an abbreviation of Nicholaus, a common name in Holland.

My Novel, Or Varieties in English Life. A novel by BULWER LYTTON (1853), supposedly written by Pisistratus CAXTON.

My Old Kentucky Home. Song by Stephen FOSTER.

Myriel, Monseigneur Bienvenu. In Victor Hugo's LES MISÉRABLES, the charitable Bishop of D. who entertains the convict Jean VALJEAN. When Valjean repays his hospitality by making off with the silver plate and is caught, the Bishop sets him free. His act proves the turning point of Valjean's whole life.

Myrmidons. In classic mythology, a people of Thessaly who followed Achilles to the siege of Troy, and were distinguished for their savage brutality, rude behavior, and thirst for rapine. They were originally ants, turned into human beings by Zeus to populate the island of Oenone.

myrmidons of the law. Bailiffs, sheriffs' officers, and other law menials. Any rough fellow employed to annoy another is the employer's myrmidon.

Myron (5th century B.C.). Greek sculptor. His most celebrated work is the Discobolus or Discus Thrower, replicas of which are in the Vatican and the British Museum.

Myrrha. (1) The mother of ADONIS, in Greek legend. She is fabled to have had an unnatural love for her own father, and to have been changed into a myrtle tree.

(2) In BYRON's historic drama Sardanapalus (1819), an Ionian slave, and the beloved concubine of Sardanapalus, the Assyrian king. She rouses him from his indolence to resist Arbaces the Mede, who aspires to his throne, and when she finds his cause hopeless, induces him to mount a funeral pile, which she fires with her own hand. Then, springing into the flames, she perishes with the tyrant.

myrrhophores (Gr., "myrrh bearers"). The three Marys who went to see the sepulcher, bearing myrrh and spices. (Mark xvi. 1). In Christian art they are represented as carrying vases of myrrh in their hands.

Myshkin, Prince. The hero of Fyodor Dostoyevsky's THE IDIOT, a gentle, childlike, almost saintly man, an epileptic, who is innocent of the evils and consuming passions of the world in which he moves. He tries to promote charity, understanding, and love among the sinning and tortured persons with whom he comes in contact, but fails tragically, ultimately being reduced by the mental strain and shock of his experiences to the condition of a mumbling idiot. He is considered one of the foremost fictional spokesmen for the ideas by which Dostoyevsky hoped to save the Russia of his day. See also ALEXEY FYODOROVICH KARAMAZOV (Alyosha) under KARAMAZOV.

Mysteries, see MYSTERY PLAYS.

Mysteries of Paris, The. A romance by Eugène SUE (1842-1843), giving a many-sided picture of Parisian life.

Mysteries of Udolpho, The. A romance by Mrs. RADCLIFFE (1794), one of the first and perhaps the most famous novel of the so-called "terror school" of English romanticism. See GOTHIC NOVEL. The scene is laid in a grim medieval castle in the Apennines. The heroine, an English girl named Emily St. Aubyn, suffers exciting agonies from a long succession of supposedly supernatural horrors, until at last her lover, the Chevalier de Velancourt, breaks the spell.

Mysterious Stranger, The. A novel by Mark TWAIN (written, 1898; published posthumously, 1916). The scene is laid in 16th-century Austria and the story is told by Theodor Fischer, the center of a group of three friends to whom appears at times the "mysterious stranger." He calls himself Philip Traum but in reality is the nephew of Satan. He is considered a vehicle for much of Mark Twain's own philosophy.

Mystery of Marie Rogêt. A detective story by Edgar Allan Poe, suggested by the actual murder case of Mary Cecilia Rogers in New York.

mystery plays or mysteries. The name given to medieval dramatic presentations of Biblical stories. Beginning with a simple pageant of the Christmas or Easter story in the church itself, the dramas gradually assumed a secular aspect. At the height of their popularity, from the 13th to the 15th or 16th centuries, they were presented by members of the various trade guilds on movable stages, which sometimes, especially in France, had three stories, representing Heaven, Earth, and Hell. The English Mystery Plays have been preserved in four important cycles—the Townley, York, Chester, and Coventry plays, so called (with the exception of the first named, which were played at Wakefield) from the towns where they were enacted. Extraneous comic elements were frequently introduced, as in the case of the stubborn wife of Noah, who caused much merriment by refusing to enter the Ark. The line between the mysteries and the MIRACLE PLAYS which dealt with the miracles of Christian saints, is not always clearly drawn, and the mysteries are sometimes included in the term "miracle plays."

Mystery, meaning something beyond human comprehension, is (through French) from the Lat. mysterium and Gr. mustes, from muein, to close the eyes or lips. It is from this sense that the plays were called mysteries, though, as they were frequently presented by members of some single guild, or mystery in the sense of a trade or handicraft, even here the words were confused and opening made for many puns.

Mytyl. Girl, one of the two children who go in search of the BLUE BIRD in Maeterlinck's play of that name. The boy is Tytyl.

myxolydian mode. One of the four principal modes in ancient Greek music. See also DORIAN MODE; LYDIAN MODE; PHRYGIAN MODE. Myxo-Lydians, in several novels by Angela THIRKELL, are rude, grasping and ungrateful refugees.

N

Naaman. In the Old Testament, a leper, "captain of the host of the king of Syria and . . . a mighty man of valor," cured by the Hebrew prophet Elisha, of whose power he had heard through a captive Israelite maid. See RIMMON.

nabob. Corruption of the Hindu nawab, plural of naib, a deputy-governor under the Mogul Empire. These men acquired great wealth and lived in splendor; hence, rich as a nabob came to be applied in England to a merchant who had attained great wealth in the Indies, and returned to live in his native country.

Nabob, The (Le Nabab). A novel by ALPHONSE DAUDET (1877). The "Nabob," Jan-soulet, returns to Paris from Tunis with a fortune and becomes the prey of all varieties of schemers and parasites. He succeeds in buying his way into the French parliament. The character is said to have an original in François Bravay.

Naboth's vineyard. The possession of another coveted by one able to possess himself of it (1 Kings xxi). The Israelite king, AHAB, had Naboth put to death on a false charge in order to obtain a vineyard which Naboth refused to sell.

Nadab. In Dryden's ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, he is meant for Lord Howard of Es-crick, a profligate who laid claim to great piety. Nadab offered incense with strange fire, and was slain by the Lord (Lev. x. 2); and Lord Howard, while imprisoned in the Tower, is said to have mixed the consecrated wafer with a compound of roasted apples and sugar, called lamb's-wool.

And canting Nadab let obliuion damn,
Who made new porridge of the paschal lamb.
Absalom and Achitophel, Pt. i, 538-9.

Nadgett. In Dickens' MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT, a man employed by Montague Tigg, manager of the "Anglo-Bengalee Company," to make private inquiries. He is a dried-up, shriveled old man. Where he lives and how he lives, nobody knows, but he is always seen waiting for someone who never appears.

nadir. An Arabic word, signifying that point in the heavens which is directly opposite to the zenith, i.e., directly under our feet; hence, figuratively, the lowest depths of degradation.

The seventh century is the nadir of the human mind in Europe.—Hallam, Hist. Lit. in Midd. Ages, I, 1, 4.

Naglfar. The ship of the Scandinavian giants, in which they will embark on "the last day" to give battle to the gods. It is made of the nails of the dead (O.N. nagl, "nail," and fara, "to make"), and is piloted by Hrymir.

naiads. Nymphs of lakes, fountains, rivers, and streams in classical mythology.

You nymphs, call'd naiads, of the wand'ring brooks,
With your sedg'd crowns, and ever-harmless looks,
Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land
Answer your summons. Juno does command.

Shakespeare, Tempest, iv. 1.

Naidu, Sarojini (1879-). Hindu poet and reformer. Organized flood-relief work in India (1908); lectured in India and U.S. (1928-1929). First Indian woman president of the Indian National Congress (1925). Author of The Golden Threshold (1905), The Bird of Time (1912), and The Broken Wing (1915-1916), books of poetry translated into many languages of India.

Naila. Ballet, music by Leo Delibes.

nain rouge (Fr., "red dwarf"). A lutin or house spirit of Normandy, kind to fishermen. There is another called le petit homme rouge (the little red man).

Nairne, Caroline, née Oliphant. Baroness Nairne (1766-1845). Scottish song writer and poet. Her poems were posthumously published as Lays from Strathearn (1846). Most famous for the Jacobite song, Charlie is my Darling, the humorous ballad The Laird of Cockpen, and the sentimental song, Land o' the Leal.

Nala. In Hindu legend, a king of Nishadha, and husband of Damayanti, whose story is one of the best known in the MAHABHARATA. Damayanti, through enchantment, falls in love with Nala without ever having seen him. The gods want her for themselves, and employ the unsuspecting Nala as their advocate; she declares that none but Nala shall possess her, whereupon the four gods appear in Nala's shape and Damayanti is obliged to make her choice, which she does—correctly. Nala is then given many magic gifts by the gods. The wedding is celebrated, but later Nala loses his all by gambling, and becomes a wanderer, while Damayanti returns to her father's court. Many tribulations and adventures (in which magic performs a large part) befall the lovers before they are reunited.

Namby Pamby. Nickname of Ambrose PHILIPS.

Nameless City. Ancient Rome.

Namo. In Carolingian legend, the Duke of Bavaria and one of Charlemagne's famous paladins.

Nana. A novel by Zola, one of the ROUGON-MACQUART series.

Nancanou, Mrs. Aurora and Clothilde. A charming Creole mother and equally charming daughter in G. W. Cable's Grandissimes (1880).

Nancy. (1) In Dickens' OLIVER TWIST, a poor misguided girl, who loves the villain Bill SYKES. In spite of her surroundings, she still has some good feelings, and tries to prevent a burglary planned by FAGIN and his associates. Bill Sikes, in a fit of passion, strikes her twice upon the face with the butt-end of a pistol, and she falls dead at his feet.

(2) A leading character in Flotow's opera, MARTHA.

Nancy, Miss. An effeminate, foppish youth.

The celebrated actress, "Mrs." Anne Oldfield (see NARCISSA) was nicknamed "Miss Nancy."

Nanki-Poo. In Gilbert and Sullivan's comic opera THE MIKADO, the son of the Mikado.

Nankivell, Frank Arthur (1869-). Australian-born American cartoonist and painter. With Puck (1896). Experimented with animated motion pictures in color.

Nanna. Wife of BALDER in Scandinavian mythology. When the blind god HODER slew her husband, she threw herself upon his funeral pile and was burnt to death.

Nansen, Fridtjof (1861-1930). Norwegian arctic explorer and statesman. Famous for expeditions in his exploring vessel Fram. Searched for North Pole and explored north Atlantic Ocean. Chairman, Norwegian Association for League of Nations (1918). Awarded Nobel peace prize (1922). Represented Norway on Disarmament Committee, League of Nations (1927). Author of Eskimo Life (1891); In Night and Ice (1897); Through Siberia (1914); Russia and Peace (1923); etc.

To honor Nansen, the certificate provided by the "League of Nations Advisory Commission for Refugees" to White Russians and other persons who had lost their nationalities since World War I was named a Nansen Passport.

Nantes, Edict of. In 1598 Henry IV of France issued the Edict of Nantes in which he decreed qualified religious toleration and certain civil rights for the HUGUENOTS. This terminated the religious wars in France. Nearly a century later, in 1685, Louis XIV formally revoked the edict, declaring that all Protestant churches were to be destroyed and forbidding the Protestants to hold religious meetings, etc. The "Revocation of the Edict of Nantes" was followed by terrible persecutions and resulted in a mass exodus of French Huguenots, notably to England, Prussia, Switzerland, and the United States. In all these countries French names of prominent men and women often testify to the superior quality of the human material thus expelled by the "Sun King."

Naomi. In the Old Testament, the mother-in-law of RUTH.

Naphta, Leo. In Thomas Mann's THE MAGIC MOUNTAIN, a teacher of elementary Latin in the Davos school, near the sanatorium; also ill. He is a middle-class Austrian Jew who has become a convert to both the Roman Catholic Jesuit order and the revolutionary Socialism of Karl MARX. He is considered by some commentators to symbolize simultaneously within himself the principles of spiritualism and materialism, political revolution and reaction, and Catholicism, Communism, and Fascism. In the long debates he has with SETTEMBRINI, to whom he is an intellectual antithesis, he upholds mysticism and faith (as against empiricism and reason), philosophic absolutism, the doctrine of ORIGINAL SIN, and the principles of authority and discipline in political and intellectual organization.

Napier, John. Laird of Merchiston (1550-1617). Scottish mathematician, famous as the inventor of logarithms. Mirifici Logarithmorum Canonis Descriptio (1614).

Napoleon Bonaparte (1769-1821). Napoleon is introduced as a minor character in many of the historical romances that deal with the French Revolution and the period immediately following. He is prominent in Lever's TOM BURKE OF OURS and Conan Doyle's Uncle Bernac, and the central figure of Sardou's comedy MADAME SANS GÈNE and Shaw's Man of Destiny.

the Napoleon of oratory. W. E. Gladstone (1809-1898) was so called.

the Napoleon of Peace. Louis Philippe (1773-1850), King of France.

the Little Napoleon. Napoleon III.

Naraka. The Hell of Hindu mythology. It has twenty-eight divisions, in some of which the victims are mangled by ravens and owls; in others they are doomed to swallow cakes boiling hot, or walk over burning sands. Each division has its name; Rurava (fearful) is for liars and false witnesses; Rodha (obstruction) for those who plunder a town, kill a cow, or strangle a man; Sukara (swine) for drunkards and stealers of gold; etc.

Narcissa. (1) In Young's NIGHT THOUGHTS, a reference to Elizabeth Lee, Dr. Young's step-daughter.

(2) In Pope's Moral Essays, Narcissa stands for the celebrated actress, Anne Oldfield (1683-1730). When she died her remains lay in state attended by two noblemen. She was buried in Westminster Abbey in a very fine Brussels lace head-dress, a holland shift, with a tucker and double-ruffles of the same lace, new kid gloves, etc.

"Odious! In woolen? 'Twould a saint provoke!"

Were the last words that poor Narcissa spoke.
Moral Essays, i. 246.

In woolen is an allusion to a law enacted for the benefit of the wool-trade, that all shrouds were to be made of wool.

Narcisse. In G. W. Cable's DR. SEVIER, a Creole who wishes to be called Papillon, or Butterfly, because, says he gaily, "thass my natu'e. I gatheth honey eve'y day fum eve'y opening floweh, as the baod of Avon we-mawked."

narcissism. See under COMPLEX.

Narcissus. The son of Cephisus in Greek mythology, a beautiful youth who saw his reflection in a fountain, and thought it the presiding nymph of the place. He gradually pined away for love of this unattainable spirit. According to one version he jumped into the fountain, where he died. The nymphs came to take up the body that they might pay it funeral honors, but found only a flower, which they called by his name. Narcissus was beloved by Echo and his fate was a punishment from Nemesis for his cruel indifference to her passion.

Nardac. The highest title of honor in the realm of LILLIPUT in Swift's Gulliver's Travels (see GULLIVER, LEMUEL). Gulliver receives this distinction for carrying off the whole fleet of the Blefusudians (see BLEFUSCU).

Narrenschiff. A satire of the late Middle Ages by Sebastian BRANT, written in Swabian dialect, first published in 1494. It deals with the assembling of fools of all sorts from many countries and their transportation to the Land of Fools. It became very popular in Europe. Alexander BARCLAY translated it and adapted its theme in terms of the English life of his time under the title of The Ship of Fools, published in 1509.

Narváez, Pánfilo de (1480?-1528). Spanish soldier and adventurer. Sent to Mexico to arrest Cortes, who captured him and held him imprisoned for two years (1520-1522). Returned to Spain, he secured the governorship of Florida, from where he tried to reach Mexico with a fleet of small ships. Lost at sea in the Gulf of Mexico.

Nasby, Petroleum V. The pseudonym under which David Ross LOCKE published his humorous sketches. First created in 1861, the character of Nasby became immensely popular:

A type of the backwoods preacher, reformer, workman, postmaster and chronic office seeker, remarkable for his unswerving fidelity to the simple principles of personal and political selfishness. To him the luxuries of life are a place under the government, a glass of whisky, a clean shirt and a dollar bill. No writer ever achieved popularity more quickly. The letters were published in all the Northern papers. . . . and universally read by the Federal soldiers. —Cambridge History of American Literature, Ch. xix.

Nash, Beau. See under BEAU.

Nash, Ogden (1902-). American writer of light verse, known for his sophisticated whimsy and satire, dealing chiefly with the lives and interests of upper-middle-class residents of New York City and its environs. His verse, frequently published in THE NEW YORKER, is usually written in long, rambling, and ill-balanced couplets, with no attempt at meter and strained or over-simplified rhymes, in a burlesque of inferior "serious" poetry. Among his books are Free Wheeling (1931); Hard Lines (1931); Happy Days (1933); The Primrose Path (1935); The Bad Parent's Garden of Verse (1936); I'm a Stranger Here Myself (1938); The Face Is Familiar (1940); Good Intentions (1942).

Nash or Nashe, Thomas (1567-1601). English prose-writer and dramatist, known for his active participation in the various controversies—religious, literary, and political—of the Elizabethan period, in which he savagely attacked the Puritans, Gabriel HARVEY, and the abuses of the state. Nash's works include Anatomy of Absurdities (1589), attacking contemporary literature; A Countersuff Given to Martin Junior (1589); The Return of the Renowned Cavaliero Pasquil of England (1589), and The First Part of Pasquils Apology (1590), written under the pseudonym of "Pasquil" during the MARTIN MARPRELATE CONTROVERSY; A Wonderful, Strange, and Miraculous Astrological Prognostication (1591), defending Richard Harvey, an astrologer and brother of Gabriel; Pierce Penniless His Supplication to the Devil (1592); Strange News of the Intercepting Certain Letters (1593), attacking Gabriel Harvey, who is denounced further and satirized in Have with You to Saffron-Walden (1596); Christ's Tears Over Jerusalem (1593); The Terrors of the Night (1594); The Unfortunate Traveler, Or The Life of Jack Wilton (1594), a romance of adventure, regarded as an important precursor of the English novel; The Isle of Dogs (1597), a comedy which resulted in Nash's being imprisoned for a time for having attacked the state; Lenten Stuff (1599) and Summer's Last Will (1600), also plays. Nash was one of the "UNIVERSITY WITS" and an outstanding personality of his time.

Naso. The "surname" of OVID (Publius Ovidius Naso), the Roman poet, author of METAMORPHOSES. Naso means "nose"; hence HOLOFERNES' pun, "And why Naso, but for smelling out the odoriferous flowers of fancy." Shakespeare, Love's Labor's Lost, iv. 2.

Nason, Leonard Hastings (1895-). American novelist. Infantry sergeant in World War I in France; wounded twice; won Purple Heart and Silver Star. Author of entertaining stories of soldiers and sailors, as Chevrons (1926); The Top Kick (1928); Among the Trumpets (1932); Approach to Battle (1941); etc.

Nasr-ed-Din. In Turkish legend, a famous jester, sometimes called the Turkish Tyl EULENSPIEGEL and like Eulenspiegel the reputed hero of many pranks which have been collected in a jest-book and attributed to him. He is said to have died about 1410.

Nasser. The Arabian merchant whose fables were the delight of the Arabs. D'Herbelot tells us that when Mohammed read them the Old Testament stories they cried out with one voice that Nasser's tales were the best; upon which the Prophet gave his malediction on Nasser, and all who read him.

Nast, Thomas (1840-1902). German-born American political cartoonist. On the staff of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper (1855-1859) and staff artist of Harper's Weekly (1862-1886). His slashing cartoons of Boss Tweed's Tammany Tiger ring (1869-1872) as vultures were largely responsible for the Ring's collapse. U.S. consul to Guayaquil, Ecuador (1902). He issued Thomas Nast's Christmas Drawings for the Human Race (1890). Cf. Allan Franklin's The Trail of the Tiger: Being an Account of Tammany from 1789 (1928) for reproductions of some of the most effective of Nast's cartoons.

Nastasia. In Dostoyevsky's novel THE IDIOT, a beautiful and passionate girl in love with Prince MYSHKIN.

Nastrond. The worst place of torment in the ancient Scandinavian Hell, where serpents incessantly pour forth venom from the high walls, and where the murderer and the perjurer are doomed to live for ever. The word means, "the strand of the dead," na, a dead body, and strond, a strand.

Nat, Uncle. The central figure in Herne's drama SHORE ACRES.

Natchez, Les. A romance by CHATEAUBRIAND, written between 1797 and 1800 and based in part on the author's own experiences in America. The Frenchman René, hero of an earlier novel bearing his name, marries Celuta, a devoted Indian girl of the tribe of Natchez, by which René has been adopted after being driven by characteristic romantic disillusionment to seek escape among the American savages. Celuta is torn between love for her husband and traditional duty to her people when it appears that René has betrayed the tribe, although the true traitor is Ondouré. The novel ends tragically and violently for all concerned. See NOBLE SAVAGE.

Nathan. In the Old Testament (2 Sam. xii), a prophet who rebuked DAVID for his treachery toward URIAH by telling him the story of the rich man who took his poor neighbor's one ewe lamb, ending with the words, "Thou art the man."

Nathan, George Jean (1882-). Family name originally Naret. American author and literary and dramatic critic, associated with H. L. MENCKEN on the SMART SET (1908-1923) and co-founder with Mencken of THE AMERICAN MERCURY in 1924, acting as an editor until 1930. In the 1920's Nathan, a disciple of James HUNEKER, was virtually literary dictator of New York City, his essays and critical writings being marked by cynicism, an attitude of sophistication, a belief in "ART FOR ART'S SAKE," bitter and violent dislikes, and a variety of dilettante enthusiasms; he and Mencken constituted a pair of scornful commentators on the foibles of their day. Among his books are Europe After 8:15 (1914), written in collaboration with Mencken and W. H. Wright; Helio-gabalus (1920), a play, and The American Credo (1920), both written with Mencken; The World in Falseface (1923); The Eternal Mystery (1913); Mr. George Jean Nathan Presents (1917); The Popular Theater (1918); The Theater, The Drama, The Girls (1921); Materia Critica (1924); The Autobiography of an Attitude (1925); The New American Credo (1927); Art of the Night (1928); Testament of a Critic (1931); The Avon Flows (1937), a comedy combining portions of ROMEO AND JULIET, THE TAMING OF THE SHREW, and OTHELLO; The Morning After the First Night (1938); The Bachelor Life (1941); and a series of yearbooks of the drama. A number of his books are on the theater, and Nathan was among the first critics to see the worth of Eugene O'NEILL's plays.

Nathan, Raoul. An affected and eccentric dramatist who appears in several of the novels of Balzac's COMÉDIE HUMAINE. He indulges in numerous love affairs, notably one with Mme de Vandenesse.

Nathan, Robert (1894-). American author, known for his novelettes marked by whimsical, sentimental, or satirical fantasy. His works include Peter Kindred (1919); Autumn (1921); Youth Grows Old (1922), poems; The Puppet Master (1923); Jonah (1925), published in England as The Son of Amittai, a new version of the Biblical story of Jonah; The Fiddler in Barly (1926); The Woodcutter's House (1927); The Bishop's Wife (1928); There Is Another Heaven (1929); A Cedar Box (1929), poems; One More Spring (1933), presenting a solution for economic depression through Christian love; Road of Ages (1935), depicting Jews of all nations and classes in exile in the Gobi Desert; Journey of Tapiola (1938), dealing with the adventures of a dog, a rat, and a canary; Win- ter in April (1938); Portrait of Jennie (1940), concerned with a painter and a little girl from another world; They Went On Together (1941), dealing with war refugees. A number of these were best-sellers, and several were filmed, notably The Bishop's Wife.

Nathan the Wise. A drama by Gotthold Ephraim LESSING (1779). The scene is laid in Jerusalem at the time of the Crusades. More important than the plot is the character of the trader, Nathan, a Jew, who has come to look upon all religions as forms of one great truth. A Christian knight woos his adopted daughter Recha, and when the matter is brought to the notice of the Mohammedan Sultan Saladin all three faiths come into the closest of contacts. Nathan's philosophy is aptly illustrated by his story of the father who, possessing one valuable ring and three sons, had two others made exactly like it, so that each son should receive an equal inheritance.

Nathan is said to have a prototype in Moses MENDELSSOHN.

Nathaniel. One of the twelve disciples, of whom Jesus said, "Behold an Israelite indeed in whom is no guile." He was also known as Bartholomew.

Nathaniel, Sir. In Shakespeare's Love's Labor's Lost, the grotesque curate of Holofernes. Though grotesque, he is sharp, witty and sententious.

the nation of gentlemen. So George IV called the Scotch when, in 1822, he visited that country.

a nation of shopkeepers. This phrase, applied to Englishmen by Napoleon in contempt, comes from Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations (iv. 7), a book well known to the Emperor. He says—

To found a great empire for the sole purpose of raising up a people of customers, may at first sight appear a project fit only for a nation of shopkeepers.

a nation of poets and thinkers. So BULWER LYTTON calls Germany in his introduction to ERNEST MALTRAVERS.

the battle of the nations. See under BATTLE.

the hermit nation. See HERMIT.

Nation, Carry Amelia (1846-1911). American temperance agitator, notorious for her wrecking expeditions throughout Kansas. Frequently arrested, fined, and even shot at, but never dismayed.

Nation, The. An American weekly magazine dealing with news, politics, literature, and the arts, founded in 1865 and known for its consistently liberal policies. In the 19th century it crusaded for reforms in the tariff and the civil service system and against corrupt politics, as those of Boss Tweed (see also Thomas NAST), in the 20th century, especially under the editorship of Oswald Garrison VILLARD (1918-1933), it was sympathetic toward the U.S.S.R., upheld Negro rights, civil liberties, and the American trade-union movement, supported the reforms of the New Deal, and attacked FASCISM in Europe, continually warning of its symptoms in the U.S. During World War II, over the protests of Villard, then retired, it was one of the first liberal journals to come out for the entry of the U.S. into the war, although in the early 1930's it had opposed war. A number of leading American literary critics and authors of both the 19th and 20th centuries, as Mark and Carl van Doren, Ludwig Lewisohn, Joseph Wood Krutch, etc., were contributors to The Nation.

National Academy of Design. A society of painters, sculptors, and engravers, founded in 1828 in New York City. In 1906 it absorbed the Society of American Artists and affiliated itself with the Metropolitan Museum of Art and Columbia University. It awards annually various medals and prizes, exhibits the work of members, and offers free instruction in the arts.

National Academy of Sciences. Incorporated in 1863, with the approval of President Lincoln, to investigate, experiment and report on any subject within its field that the government or any department of the government should demand of it. It corresponds to the Royal Society in London, has 350 active members and 50 foreign associates.

national anthems. The national anthems or principal patriotic songs of the leading nations, either adopted by law or merely established by usage, are:

Austria: In the old Empire, Gott erhalte Franz den Kaiser, Unsern guten Kaiser Franz (God protect Franz the Kaiser, Our good Kaiser Franz); air by Haydn.

Belgium: The BRABANCONNE.

British Empire: God Save the King. Words and music have been attributed both to Dr. John Bull (d. 1628) and to Henry Carey, author of Sally in Our Alley; also RULE BRITANNIA.

Denmark: The Song of the Danebrög (see Danebrög); Kong Christian stod ved høien Mast, Rog og Damp (King Christian stood beside the lofty mast, In mist and smoke).

France: The MARSEILLAISE.

Germany: In the former German Empire, Deutschland Über Alles (Germany Over All), and Die Wacht am Rhein (The Watch—or Guard—on the Rhine).

Holland: Wien Neerlandsch bloed in de adern vloeit, Van vreemde smetten vrij . . . (Let him in whose veins flows the blood of the Netherlands, free from an alien's strain . . .)

Hungary: The Rakoczy March; Tied

vagyok, tied hazán! E siv e lélek! (Thine, I am, thine, my fatherland, heart and soul!).

Italy: Mercantini's Italy has awaked; Si scopron le tombe, si levano i morti (The tombs are opened, the dead are rising).

Norway: Ja, vi elsker det te Landet som det stiger frem (Yes, we love our country, just as it is).

Russia: In the days of the Empire, God protect the Tsar; the air by Lwoff is sung in England to—

God the All-terrible King who ordainest,
Great winds thy clarion, lightning thy sword.

Sweden: Du gamla du friska, du fjellhöga Nord, du tysta, du gladjerika sköna! (Thou ancient, free, and mountainous North! Thou silent, joyous, and beautiful North!)

Switzerland: Rufst du, mein Vaterland. Sieh uns mit Herz und Hand, All dir geweiht! (Thou call'st, my Fatherland! Behold us, heart and hand, all devoted to thee!)

The United States: THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER; America.

In Wales the chief patriotic song is March of the Men of Harlech; in Scotland, Scots wha hae wi' Wallace bled; and in Ireland, The Wearing o' the Green, A Nation Once Again, or Who Fears to Speak of 'Ninety-eight?

National Gallery. The British national art gallery on Trafalgar Square, London, founded in 1824. At the beginning of World War II, it had more than 1,200 paintings by English and Continental masters.

National Gallery of Art. The United States national museum, opened in 1941. Its building is the largest building made of marble in the world. It cost fifteen million dollars and houses the collection of paintings given with the building by Andrew Mellon, one-time Secretary of the Treasury, which is worth fifty million dollars. Another collection included, the Kress collection, is worth thirty millions.

National Institute of Arts and Letters. The parent body of the American Academy of Arts and Letters (see under ACADEMY) from which the members of the latter are chosen.

National Union for Social Justice. See COUGHLIN, Father CHARLES E.

native son. An American political phrase for a native-born candidate for office, much used in California.

Native Son. A novel by Richard WRIGHT (1940), dramatized and produced in 1941. It deals with Bigger THOMAS, a Negro raised in the Black Belt slums of Chicago, who is confused and divided in his mind with regard to his attitude toward the society in which he lives, because of his environment and the race prejudice he encounters. He becomes a chauffeur in a wealthy family and is patronized by his employer's daughter, whom, in the throes of mental torture and confusion, he accidentally kills. He goes into hiding, pursued by the police and a mob, and, after murdering his own sweetheart, is finally captured and sentenced to death.

Natoma. An opera by Victor HERBERT (1911). Natoma, the heroine, is an Indian maiden, and the characters are Spanish, Indian and American. The scene is laid in the California of 1820.

Nattier, Jean Marc (1685-1766). French portrait painter who painted the portraits of the principal figures in the court of Peter the Great of Russia (from 1715).

Nat Turner's Insurrection. An insurrection of Negro slaves in Virginia (1831). Its leader, the Negro Nat Turner, believed himself chosen by God to free his people. Some sixty white people were killed. The leading insurrectionists were hanged.

Natty Bumppo, see BUMPPPO, NATTY; also LEATHERSTOCKING.

naturalism. A movement in fiction in the 19th and 20th centuries, influenced by the new, mechanistic theories in biological and social science of the 19th century. It aims to portray human society and the lives of the men and women composing it as objectively and as "truthfully" as the subject-matter of science is studied and presented. Its chief characteristics are a selection of setting and subjects from the lower strata of society; an objective and detached method of narration on the part of the author; usually a large number of characters and a hero or heroine who represent the vices and weaknesses of a particular type or group, rather than the more conventional individual, and an idealized leading character involved in purely personal problems or adventures; a fullness and a meticulous accuracy of detail; scholarly care in documentation of the historical background; constant emphasis on the social environment of the characters and their subordinate relation to it; and a pervading, deterministic sense of the control over the actions and destinies of the characters exerted by impersonal social, economic, and biological forces, with the efforts of human free will shown as weak and ineffectual.

Naturalism arose in France, STENDHAL and BALZAC being considered important forerunners of the movement. Its chief leaders were FLAUBERT, the GONCOURT brothers, Alphonse DAUDET, MAUPASSANT, and—the most widely known, most characteristic, and most consciously naturalistic in his work—Émile ZOLA. In England, the novels of George GISSING, Thomas HARDY, and Samuel BUTLER (The Way of All Flesh) may be said to show certain affinities with naturalist writings. Somerset MAUGHAM's LIZA OF LAMBETH is in the tradition of Zola, and James JOYCE's ULYSSES makes use of a number of the principles of naturalism. In the U.S., Stephen CRANE and Frank NORRIS were the first genuine naturalists, although Edgar Watson HOWE and Joseph KIRKLAND in their realistic works were native forerunners of the movement. Other Americans writing to a greater or less degree in the tradition of naturalism include Harold FREDERIC, Jack LONDON, Hamlin GARLAND, Edgar Lee MASTERS (Spoon River Anthology), Theodore DREISER, Sherwood ANDERSON, William FAULKNER, Erskine CALDWELL, John DOS PASSOS, and James T. FARRELL. Farrell's STUDS LONIGAN was the outstanding American naturalist novel of the 1930's, with Dos PASSOS' U.S.A. a runner-up. In Europe, the work of GORKY, NEXO (Ditte), and HAMUN shows resemblances to naturalism in many respects.

Naturalism had an important influence on the technique of PROLETARIAN LITERATURE. See REALISM. See also DINERS MAGNY.

natural selection. Survival of the fittest. The principle that the evolution of species is the result of a constant selection of the fittest individual variants in the struggle for life in nature. It is the backbone of Charles Darwin's theory of evolution. Cf. On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection, or the Preservation of Favored Races in the Struggle for Life (1859). Later evolutionists have qualified its importance.

Nature. The first and one of the best-known works of Ralph Waldo EMERSON (1836). According to the Cambridge History of American Literature, "appearing the same year the Club was formed [it] may be fittingly considered the philosophical 'constitution' of TRANSCENDENTALISM."

Natwick, Mildred (1911-). Young American actress who first made her reputation acting the part of elderly ladies, once even appearing as the mother of Dame Sybil Thorn-dike in The Distaff Side. One of the original University Players, at West Falmouth, Mass., with James Stewart, Henry Fonda, etc. Has given brilliant performances in Noel COWARD's Blithe Spirit and in several motion pictures.

Nausicaä. In Homer's ODYSSEY, daughter of Alcinoüs, King of the Phaeacians, who conducts ULYSSES to the court of her father when he is shipwrecked on the coast. See also MACDOWELL, GERTY.

Nausithous. In Homer's Odyssey, the king of the Phaeacians, who took his people away from the neighborhood of the savage CYCLOPES to the island of Scheria. He was succeeded by his son Alcinoüs, under whose realm ULYSSES stayed with the Phaeacians.

Navigation, the Father of. See under FATHER.

nawab. See RULERS, TITLES OF; also NABOB.

Naxos. The largest island of the Cyclades group in the Aegean Sea. It is celebrated for its wine and appears in legend as Bacchus' favorite island. It was here that THESEUS deserted Ariadne whom Bacchus found, consoled, and married. The island figures prominently in the account of Acetes, the Tyrrhenian mariner, who alone among his fellows did not conspire to abduct Bacchus to Egypt and subsequently became a Bacchanal on Naxos.

Nazareth. The village where Jesus lived as a boy and young man and where He learned the trade of a carpenter.

can any good thing come out of Nazareth? (John i. 46). A general insinuation against any family or place of ill repute. A native of Nazareth is called a Nazarene. There is also a fanatical American religious sect called Nazarenes.

Nazarite. One separated or set apart to the Lord by a vow. They refrained from strong drink, and allowed their hair to grow. (Heb. nazar, to separate. Numb. vi. 1-21.)

Nazhivin, Ivan Fedorovich (1874-). Russian novelist. For a while influenced by Tolstoi. Fled to France after the Russian Revolution (1917). Wrote Rasputin (1929); The Dogs (1931); According to Thomas (1931); etc.

Nazimova, Alla (1879-1945). Russian-American actress. Début, in St. Petersburg (1904), in New York (1906), in Ibsen's Hedda Gabler. Successful in other Ibsen plays, in Chekhov's CHERRY ORCHARD, O'Neill's MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA, and movies.

nazism. See FASCISM.

Neaera. A name used by HORACE, VIRGIL, and Tibullus as a synonym of "sweetheart."

To sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
Or with the tangles of Neaera's hair.
Milton, Lycidas.

Neale, John Mason (1818-1866). English hymn writer; famous especially for Jerusalem the Golden, a translation of part of Bernard of Cluny's De Contemptu Mundi.

Neanderthal. A valley near Bonn, Germany, which gave its name to the Neanderthal Man, a type of prehistoric race of men, of whose skeleton a skull-cap and other bones were found there (1857). The Neanderthal Man indulged in the working of flints on one side only, known as the Mousterian industry, from Moustier in the Dordogne in France. The bones referred to were found in deposits of the Middle Pleistocene period. The Neanderthal Man is said to have come from northern Asia to Europe. He became extinct, and modern man is not his descendant.

Nearer, My God, to Thee. A hymn (1840) written by Sarah Flower Adams (1805–1848).

Nearing, Scott (1883–). American sociologist. Author of Poverty and Riches (1916); Education in Soviet Russia (1926); etc.

Nebo, Mount, modern Jebel Neba. A mountain near the north end of the Dead Sea. In the Old Testament God sent Moses "up to mount Nebo, to see the land, and die. . . . And Moses went up from the plains of Moab unto the mountain of Nebo, to the top of Pisgah, that is over against Jericho." Browning uses Pisgah-Sights as the title of a poem, in two parts, about a man viewing his whole life while in the article of death. Cecil Frances Alexander (1818–1895) wrote a poem, The Burial of Moses, beginning:

By Nebo's lonely mountain,
On this side Jordan's wave,
In a vale in the land of Moab,
There lies a lonely grave

Nebuchadnezzar. The greatest king of Assyria. His reign lasted forty-three years (604–561 B.C.). He restored his country to its former prosperity and importance, practically rebuilt Babylon, restored the temple of Bel, erected a new palace, embanked the Euphrates and probably built the celebrated Hanging Gardens. In the Old Testament narrative he besieges Jerusalem, is victorious and carries the Jews away captive into Babylon. His name became the center of many legends, and the story related in Daniel (iv. 29–33) that he was one day walking in the palace of the kingdom of Babylon and said, "Is not this great Babylon that I have built . . . by the might of my power, and for the honor of my majesty?" And "the same hour . . . he was driven from men, and did eat grass as oxen, and his body was wet with the dew of heaven, till his hairs were grown like eagles' feathers, and his nails like birds' claws," is probably an allusion to the suspension of his interest in public affairs, which lasted, as his inscription records, for four years. Nebuchadnezzar was the king who, according to the account in Daniel, put the three Hebrews, Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego into the fiery furnace for refusing to bow down to a golden image.

Necessity of Atheism, On the. A pamphlet supporting atheism, written by Percy Bysshe Shelley in 1811 and circulated among his fellow-students at Oxford University; for this he was expelled.

Neckan, The. A ballad by Matthew Arnold in which a water-spirit of that name marries a human bride whom he carries to his deep-sea home. She soon regrets that Neckan is not a Christian knight, so he comes to earth to be baptized into the Christian faith. A priest says to him, "Sooner shall my staff bud than Neckan go to heaven." The words are scarcely uttered when the staff breaks into buds. "Ah!" says Neckan, "there is mercy everywhere except in the heart of a monk."

Necker, Suzanne, née Curchod (1739–1794). Wife of the French financier and statesman Jacques Necker (1732–1804), famous before and at the time of the French Revolution as hostess to political and literary leaders. Her daughter was Madame de STAEL.

necking. "Necking" and "petting" were terms that came into vogue among young people in the early 1920's, about the time of F. Scott FITZGERALD's This Side of Paradise. They referred to pocket-flask-stimulated caressing that went on in parked cars or dark rooms.

neck-verse. The first verse of Ps. li. See MISERERE. "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to Thy loving-kindness: according unto the multitude of Thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions."

He [a treacherous Italian interpreter] by a fine cunny-catching corrupt translation, made us plainly to confesse, and cry Miserere, ere we had need of our necke-verse.—Nash, The Unfortunate Traveller (1594).

This verse was so called because it was the trial-verse of those who claimed BENEFIT OF CLERGY, and if they could read it, the ordinary of Newgate said, "Legit ut clericus," and the prisoner saved his neck, being only burnt in the hand and set at liberty.

If a clerk had been taken
For stealing of bacon,
For burglary, murder, or rape.
If he could but rehearse
(Well prompt) his neck-verse,
He never could fail to escape.

British Apollo (1710).

nectar (Gr.). The drink of the gods of classical mythology. Like their food, ambrosia, it conferred immortality.

Ned Bratts. Titular character of one of Robert Browning's Dramatic Idylls, in which the poet adapted an episode in John Bunyan's The Life and Death of Mr. Badman (1680).

Nedda. The heroine of Leoncavallo's opera I PAGLIACCI.

Ned McCobb's Daughter. An American comedy by Sidney HOWARD (1927).

Negri, Pola (1899–). Polish-born actress, starred in moving pictures in the U.S. (from 1923). First great success in Passion, concerning Mme DU BARRY.

Nehemiah. In the Old Testament, a Jew whom Artaxerxes, the Persian king, sent to assist with the rebuilding of Jerusalem after the Babylonian captivity; also the book of the Old Testament called by his name.

Nehru, Jawaharlal (1889–). English-educated Hindu leader, son of the Indian nationalist leader Pundit Motilal Nehru (1861–1931). Joined Gandhi's movement in 1919. Secretary of National Congress (1929–1939). Second only to Gandhi in influence throughout India. Three times president of the Indian National Congress, succeeding Gandhi as leader of the National Congress Party (1942). Author of The Unity of India (collected speeches; 1937–1940). Prime Minister of the Dominion of India (1947–).

Neibelungenlied, see NIBELUNGENLIED.

Neihardt, John Gneisenau (1881–). American poet of Pennsylvania German descent. Professor of poetry, University of Nebraska (from 1923); literary editor, St. Louis Post-Dispatch (from 1926). Chiefly known for his epic cycle of the West, five book-length narrative poems, The Song of Hugh Glass (1915); The Song of Three Friends (1919); The Song of the Indian Wars (1925); The Song of the Messiah (1936); The Song of Jed Smith (1941). They cover "the entire trans-Missouri country from 1882–1890." Neihardt was appointed Poet Laureate of Nebraska by the Nebraska legislature in 1921.

Neilson, William Allan (1869–1946). Professor of English, Harvard University (1906–1917). President, Smith College (1917–1939). Author of Essentials of Poetry (1912); A History of English Literature (1920). Editor, Complete Edition of Shakespeare's Works (1906–1942). Editor-in-chief, Webster's New International Dictionary, Second Edition (1934).

Nekayah. In Samuel Johnson's RASSELAS, sister of Rasselas, Prince of Abyssinia.

Nekhludov. The hero of Tolstoi's novel RESURRECTION.

Nell, Little, see LITTLE NELL.

Nellie Bly. Pseudonym of Elizabeth C. SEAMAN.

Nellie the Beautiful Cloak Model. A melodrama of the early 20th century by Owen Davis which, probably because of the obvious nature of its title, is frequently referred to as a type of the American melodramatic play.

Nell Trent, see LITTLE NELL.

Nelson, Horatio. Viscount Nelson (1758–1805). British naval hero. Won Battle of Trafalgar (1805) during which he was fatally wounded. His friendship with Emma Lady Hamilton was the subject of numerous books and plays, notably Lady Hamilton by Alexandre DUMAS, Divine Lady by Mrs. L. Adams BECK, etc.

Nelson, John Byron, Jr. (1912–). American golf champion.

Nelson, Starr (1910–). American woman poet. Author of Heavenly Body (1942). Contributor of poems to Saturday Review of Literature, Voices, etc.

Neluska. A savage in Meyerbeer's opera L'AFRICAIN.

Nemean. Pertaining to Nemea, the ancient name of a valley in Argolis, Greece, about ten miles southwest of Corinth.

the Nemean games. One of the four great national festivals of Greece, celebrated at Nemea every alternate year, the second and fourth of each Olympiad. Legend states that they were instituted in memory of Archemorus, who died from the bite of a serpent as the expedition of the Seven Against Thebes (see under SEVEN) was passing through the valley. The victor's reward was at first a crown of olive leaves, but subsequently a garland of ivy. Pindar has eleven odes in honor of victors.

the Nemean lion. A terrible lion which kept the people of the valley in constant alarm. The first of the twelve labors of HERCULES was to slay it. He could make no impression on the beast with his club, so he caught it in his arms and squeezed it to death. Hercules ever after wore the skin as a mantle.

Nemesis. The Greek goddess who allotted to men their exact share of good or bad fortune, and was responsible for seeing that everyone got his due and deserts; the personification of divine retribution. Hence, retributive justice generally, as the Nemesis of nations, the fate which, sooner or later, has overtaken every great nation of the ancient and modern world.

Nemo, Captain. The hero of Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea by Jules VERNE (1870).

Nemo, Little. A character invented by the cartoonist Winsor McKay about 1905 in his fantastic colored Sunday newspaper cartoons of the adventures of Little Nemo in Slumberland, with his vis-à-vis, the tough cigar-smoking character Flip. Nemo is a little boy who has wonderful dreams.

neo-classicism. The dominant literary convention of the late 17th century and the 18th century, especially in France and England, so called because the poets and critics writing in accordance with it believed they were reviving the virtues of the Roman and Greek classics, especially as exemplified in the works of VIRGIL and HORACE. Its principles, in accordance with the emphasis on reason and law in the philosophy of the time, were clarity, rationality, moderation, dignity, "DECORUM," and loftiness of purpose. Preferred subjects were Greek and Roman mythology and history, and the favored forms were the epigram, the epic poem (modeled on the Aeneid), and the verse tragedy. In poetic technique, clarity, balance, symmetry, and order were required, epitomized in the heroic couplet. The use of the EPITHET and the popularity of the satire, both personal and social, were notable in England.

Neo-classicism reached its highest development in France, where its leaders were CORNEILLE, RACINE, BOILEAU (the critical arbiter of the age), and BOSSUET; BRUNETIÈRE and NISARD continued to uphold neo-classical standards in the 19th century. The outstanding representatives of neo-classicism in England were DRYDEN, POPE, and JOHNSON. Boileau's L'Art poétique (1674) and Pope's Essay on Criticism (1711) are considered the best critical statements of neo-classicism. See also ROMANTICISM.

Neolithic Age (from Gr. neos, "new," lithos, "a stone"). The later Stone Age of Europe, the earlier being called the Paleolithic (Gr. palaos, "ancient"). Stone implements of the Neolithic age are polished, more highly finished, and more various than those of the Paleolithic, and are found in kitchen-middens and tombs with the remains of recent and extinct animals, and sometimes with bronze implements. Neolithic man knew something of agriculture, kept domestic animals, used boats, and caught fish.

neon. A rare atmospheric gas discovered by Sir William RAMSAY (1898). It has been widely used in gas-discharge lamps for advertising signs. It has also proved important in the investigation of isotopes.

Neoplatonism. A philosophical system, founded by Plotinus of Alexandria (204-270), "the last of the great philosophers of antiquity." Early Christian theology took over a great deal of his philosophy, which was exceptionally free from worldliness. Plotinus believed in an eternal world of glory which is a world of thought and imagination. In Rome Plotinus once conceived the idea of making Plato's Republic a reality by building a new city, to be called Platonopolis, in the Campagna. His works were edited by his friend and disciple Porphyry in six divisions of nine books each, called the Enneads. Hypatia of Alexandria was one of the most famous exponents of Neoplatonism. Cf. Charles KINGSLEY's novel, Hypatia.

Neoptolemus or Pyrrhus. Son of ACHILLES; called Pyrrhus from his yellow hair, and Neoptolemus because he was a new soldier, or one that came late to the siege of Troy. According to Virgil, it was this youth who slew the aged PRIAM. He married Hermione, daughter of HELEN and Menelaus. On his return home he was murdered by ORESTES at Delphi.

neo-Thomism. A 20th-century movement in philosophy to revive the Aristotelian system of St. Thomas Aquinas (see under SAINTS), especially in metaphysics and aesthetics. Mortimer J. ADLER was a leader of the movement in the U.S. and Jacques MARITAIN in France. Neo-Thomists disagreed as to whether Aquinas' Roman Catholic theology should also be adopted.

Nepenthe or Nepenthes (Gr. ne, "not" penthos, "grief"). An Egyptian drug mentioned in the Odyssey (iv. 228) that was fabled to drive away care and make persons forget their woes. Polydamna, wife of Thonis, king of Egypt, gave it to Helen, daughter of Jove and Leda.

Quaff, oh quaff this kind Nepenthe and forget thy lost Lenore.

Poe, The Raven.

Nepenthe is the name given to the isle of Capri in SOUTH WIND, novel by Norman DOUGLAS.

Nephelidia. A poem by A. C. SWINBURNE (1880) in which the poet parodies his own peculiar mannerisms—alliteration, assonance, onomatopoeia, anapestic meter, etc. The title means Cloudlets, and the poem itself is purposefully reduced to a pattern of sound alone.

Nephelo-Coccygia. See CLOUD-CUCKOO-LAND.

Nephtys. An Egyptian goddess, sister and wife of Set. Both she and Set are associated with the ritual of the dead.

Nepomuk, St. John of (1340?-1393). The patron saint of Bohemia. As confessor to the queen of King Wenceslaus IV he refused to reveal to the king what the queen had confessed, and the king caused him to be drowned in the river Moldau at Prague. Canonized in 1729.

nepotism. From Italian nepote, "nephew." Favoritism shown to relatives, especially as practiced by certain Popes. Alexander VI, who bestowed special favors upon his children, is a well-known case in point. Cf. also The Venetian Glass Nephew by Elinor WYLIE.

Neptune. The Roman god of the sea, corresponding to the Greek POSEIDON, hence used allusively for the sea itself. Neptune is represented as an elderly man of stately mien, bearded, carrying a trident, and sometimes astride a dolphin or a horse.

... great Neptune with this threeforkt mace,
That rules the Seas, and makes them rise or fall;
His dewy lockes did drop with brine apace,
Under his Diademe imperiall.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, IV. xi. 11.

Nereids. The sea-nymphs of Greek mythology, the fifty daughters of NEREUS and "grey-eyed" Doris. The best known are Amphitrite, Thetis, and Galatea.

Nereus. In classic mythology, father of the water nymphs, a very old prophetic god of great kindness. The scalp, chin, and breast of Nereus were covered with seaweed instead of hair.

By hoary Nereus' wrinkled lock.

Milton, Comus, 871.

Nerissa. In Shakespeare's MERCHANT OF VENICE, the clever confidential waiting-woman of Portia, the Venetian heiress. Nerissa is the counterfeit of her mistress with a fair share of the lady's elegance and wit. She marries Gratiano.

Nero. Any bloody-minded man, relentless tyrant, or evil-doer of extraordinary savagery; from the depraved and infamous Roman emperor, C. Claudius Nero (54-68 A.D.), who set fire to Rome to see, it is said, "what Troy looked like when it was in flames," and fiddled as he watched the conflagration. He is a prominent character in Sienkiewicz' Quo Vadis. Stephen PHILLIPS wrote a poetic drama entitled Nero.

Nero of the North. Christian II of Denmark (b. 1480, reigned 1534-1558, d. 1559).

Neroni, Signora Madeleine. In Trollope's Barchester Towers (see BARSETSHIRE), a vivid, unconventional coquette, a chronic invalid who from her couch, exercises a strange fascination over the entire prosaic world of Barchester.

Nerthus or Hertha. The name given by Tacitus to a German or Scandinavian goddess of fertility, or "Mother Earth," who was worshiped on an island. She roughly corresponds to the classical Cybele, and is probably confused with the Scandinavian god Njorthr or NIORD, the protector of sailors and fishermen. Nerthus and Njorthr alike mean "benefactor." SWINBURNE wrote a poem called Hertha:

Before ever land was,
Before ever the sea,
Or soft hair of the grass,
Or fair limbs of the tree,
Or the flesh-coloured fruit of my branches,
I was, and thy soul was in me.

Swinburne, Hertha.

Nesbit, Edith (1858-1924). English novelist and poet, who wrote as "E. Nesbit." She and her husband, Hubert Bland, were FABIAN Socialists. Author of unique stories of magic for children, introducing such "curious and unheard of fairies" as the PSAMMEAD, the Phoenix, and the Mouldiwarp. The Red House (1903) is an adult novel.

Nessus, shirt of. A source of misfortune from which there is no escape; a fatal present. The legend is that HERCULES ordered Nessus (the centaur) to carry his wife Dejanira across a river. The centaur attempted to carry her off, and Hercules shot him with a poisoned arrow. Nessus, in revenge, gave Dejanira his tunic, deceitfully telling her that it would preserve her husband's love, and she gave it to her husband, who was devoured by the poison still remaining in it from his own arrow as soon as he put it on. He was at once taken with mortal pains; Dejanira hanged herself from remorse, and the hero threw himself on a funeral pile, and was borne away to Olympus by the gods. See also HARMONIA.

Nestor. In Greek legend, king of Pylos, in Greece; the oldest and most experienced of the chieftains who went to the siege of Troy. Hence the name is frequently applied as an epithet to the oldest and wisest man of a class or company. Samuel Rogers, for instance, who lived to be 92, was called the Nestor of English poets. Shakespeare introduces Nestor in TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Nestor of the chemical revolution. A term applied by Lavoisier to Dr. Black. (1728-1799.)

Nestor of Europe. Leopold, king of Belgium (b. 1790, reigned 1831-1865).

Nestorians. Followers of Nestorius, patriarch of Constantinople (428-431). He maintained that Christ had two distinct natures, and that Mary was the mother of His human nature, which was the mere shell or husk of the divine. The sect spread in India and the Far East, and remains of the Nestorian Christians, their inscriptions, etc., are still found in China, but the greater part of their churches were destroyed by Timur (see TAMBURLAINE) about 1400.

Nets to Catch the Wind. Title of the first publicly published book of poems by Elinor WYLIE (1921), taken from John Webster's (1580?-1625) The Devil's Law Case:

Vain the ambitions of kings
Who seek by trophies and dead things
To leave a living name behind,
And weave but nets to catch the wind.

Neuha. Heroine of Byron's poem The Island, a native of one of the Society Islands. It was here that the mutineers of the H.M.S. Bounty landed. In the poem, when the vessel is sent to capture the mutineers, Neuha conducts her husband Torquil to a secret cave till all danger is over. "And Neuha led her Torquil by the hand" is quoted in PETER IBBETSON, by George DU MAURIER.

Neumann, Alfred (1895-). German novelist and dramatist. A "psychologist historian." Kleist prize in (1926) for The Devil, which gained for him an international audience. His play The Patriot (1928) was widely produced in Europe and America. Another Caesar (1934) and Gaudy Empire (1936) are parts of a historical trilogy of the nineteenth century. He lived in Florence, then in France.

Neumann, Robert (1897-). Austrian novelist. His first book, the novel Flood (1930), brought him immediate success. The novel Mammon (1932; in England, The Poison Tree, 1933), a superior study of the armament king Zaharoff, the oil magnate De-terding, etc., caused his books to be banned and burned in Germany. Fled to England.

Neuville, Christian de. The handsome but stupid lover of Roxane for whom Cyrano supplies the eloquence in Rostand's CYRANO DE BERGERAC.

never. There are numerous locutions to express this idea; as—

At the coming of the Coqueligrues (Rabelais: Pantagruel).

At the Latter Lammas.

On the Greek Calends.

In the reign of Queen Dick.

On St Tib's Eve.

In a month of five Sundays.

When two Fridays or three Sundays come together.

When Dover and Calais meet

When Dudman and Ramehead meet.

When the world grows honest.

When the Yellow River runs clear.

Never-Never Land. A sort of fairyland in Barrie's PETER PAN.

Never Too Late To Mend, It Is. A novel by Charles READE (1853), a study of the discovery of gold in Australia and the British convict system. The book is notable for the character of the Jew, Isaac Levi, one of the first serious attempts to portray the Jew in fiction in a favorable light.

Neville. One of the children in Virginia Woolf's THE WAVES, of a retiring, scholarly temperament, who grows up to be an Oxford don. He is paired with JINNY.

Neville, Miss. In Goldsmith's comedy SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER (1773), the friend and confidante of Miss HARDCASTLE, a handsome coquettish girl, destined by Mrs. Hardcastle for her son Tony LUMPKIN. But Tony does not care for her, and she dearly loves Mr. Hastings; so Hastings and Tony plot together to outwit madam, and of course win the day.

Neville, Richard. Earl of Warwick (1428-1471). Known as "the Kingmaker" in the Wars of the Roses. He is the subject of the novel The Last of the Barons (1843) by BULWER-LYTTON.

Nevins, Allan (1890-). Leading American historian. Editorial writer for New York Evening Post (1913-1923) and Nation (1913-1918); literary editor, New York Sun (1924-1925); etc. Editor, American Social History Recorded by British Travellers (1923). Professor of American history, Columbia University (from 1931). Grover Cleveland: A Study in Courage (Pulitzer prize; 1933); Hamilton's Fish: The Inner History of the Grant Administration (Pulitzer prize; 1937); The Life of John D. Rockefeller (1940); etc.

Nevinson, Henry Woodd (1856-1941). English journalist and war-correspondent. His three-volume autobiography was condensed as Fire of Life (1935) by R. Ellis Roberts, with a preface by John Masefield who said, "No better autobiography has been written in English in the last hundred years . . . [Nevinson] can reflect that he has been a friend to every generous cause that has stirred men's hearts in his time."

New Arabian Nights. A volume of fantastic stories by R. L. STEVENSON (1882).

Newcastle, Margaret Cavendish, Duchess of, see CAVENDISH, MARGARET.

Newcomes, The. Memoirs of a Most Respectable Family, Edited by Arthur Penden-nis, Esq. A novel by THACKERAY (1855). The plot is loose and complex, dealing with three generations of Newcomes. Chief in interest and one of the most famous characters of all fiction is the lovable Colonel Thomas New-come, a man of simple, unworldly tastes and the utmost honor. The Colonel's son, Clive, an artist, is in love with his cousin, Ethel New-come, who, however, desires a more ambitious marriage. In this project Ethel is urged on by her selfish, cold-blooded brother, Barnes New-come, but his true character is revealed to her when his mistreated wife, Lady Clara, elopes with her quondam lover, Jack Belsize, then Lord Highgate. Clive, despairing of winning Ethel, marries Rosey Mackenzie, with whom he finds he is mismated. When his father, through a bank failure, loses their combined resources, the family live in poverty and the Colonel finally becomes a brother at the Grey Friars to escape the bad temper of Clive's mother-in-law, Mrs. Mackenzie. Rosey dies in the course of time and Clive, who has fallen heir to some money, marries Ethel.

New Deal. Popular and journalistic designation for the governmental program of President Franklin D. ROOSEVELT, established in 1933 to promote economic recovery and social and economic reform. It was derived from the title of a book by Stuart CHASE, A New Deal (1932), suggesting a type of liberal reform which could be instituted under the existing government of the U.S.; the phrase was first a campaign slogan of the Democratic Party in the presidential election of 1932, when Roosevelt was overwhelmingly chosen to replace Herbert Hoover. The term New Deal was universally used in referring to the program, the President himself using it, and advocates and administrators of the various new reform policies were called New Dealers. See also HOPKINS, HARRY; WALLACE, HENRY A.

Among the agencies set up by the New Deal for the administration of its policies, widely known through the initial letters of their titles, were: AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION (A.A.A.); CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS (C.C.C.); National Recovery Administration (N.R.A.); Tennessee Valley Authority (T.V.A.); Works Progress Administration (W.P.A.). Under the New Deal, the 18th Amendment was repealed (see PROHIBITION), the Supreme Court was liberalized, the unemployed were given assistance in the form of work and home "RELIEF," and legislation was passed benefiting the farmer and labor, recognizing trade unions, reducing the number of weekly working hours and setting a minimum on wages, providing for unemployment and old-age insurance, and initiating public control of water-power and electricity. Rearmament was also carried on, and American neutrality in time of war was favored, although with the beginning of World War II this provision was altered to permit assistance to the nations fighting the Axis powers. During World War II, especially after the entrance of the U.S. into the conflict, a number of war agencies with wide powers, similar in organization to the emergency agencies of the depression era, were set up, including: Office of Production Management (O.P.M.), later War Production Board (W.P.B.); Office of Emergency Management (O.E.M.); Office of Price Administration (O.P.A.); Office of Civilian Defense (O.C.D.); Board of Economic Warfare (B.E.W.); Office of Facts and Figures (O.F.F.); Office of War Information (O.W.I.); etc.

Many conservatives of the 1930's regarded the New Deal as extremely radical. It is referred to in a number of works of fiction, as well as non-fiction, of the period.

Newdigate, Sir Roger (1719-1806). English antiquary. Founder of the Newdigate prize at Oxford (21 guineas) for English poetry.

New Directions. A LITTLE MAGAZINE in book form, a collection of American and European avant-garde verse, fiction, and criticism published annually, founded in 1936 under the editorship of James Laughlin. It particularly featured surrealist writings (see SURREALISM) and published the work of the outstanding poets and authors of the time.

Newell, Peter Sheaf Hersey (1862-1924). American cartoonist and illustrator. Worked for Harper's Weekly and Harper's Bazaar. Did popular picture books, Topsy and Turvys (1894); A Shadow Show (1896); Peter Newell's Pictures and Rhymes (1894); The Hole Book (1908); The Slant Book (1910). Also illustrated John Kendrick Bangs, Frank R. STOCKTON, Guy Wetmore CARRYL, Lewis CARROLL, Carolyn Wells, etc.

New England: Indian Summer. A work by Van Wyck BROOKS (1940), sequel to THE FLOWERING OF NEW ENGLAND. It gives an atmospheric and impressionistic picture of the authors and literary activity in New England in the years 1865-1915.

New England Nun, A. A short story by Mary E. Wilkins FREEMAN, contained in A New England Nun, And Other Stories (1891). It concerns Louisa Ellis and her fiancé Joe Dagget, who has been away for fourteen years of their fifteen-year engagement, acquiring a fortune in Australia. When he returns at last and the date of the wedding is set, Louisa is overcome with consternation at the thought of having to change the neat, orderly, spinsterish ways in which she has lived in peaceful solitude for fourteen years. When she discovers by accident that Joe has become fond of Lily Dyer, a younger woman who has acted as companion to his mother, with great relief she breaks the engagement and returns to her former existence, "like an uncloistered nun."

New England Primer, The. A series of quaint Biblical rhymes illustrated by wood cuts, used in early New England to teach children the alphabet and first processes of reading. The earliest edition was 1727.

New Found Land. A book of poems by Archibald MacLeish (1930). It contains fourteen poems, of which You, Andrew Marvell and Not Marble, Not the Gilded Monuments are among the best.

Newgate. Newgate Gaol was originally merely a few cells over the gate. The first great prison here was built in 1422, and the last in 1770-1783. For centuries it was the prison for London and for the County of Middlesex. It was demolished in 1902, and the Central Criminal Court (opened 1905) erected on its site. From its prominence, Newgate came to be applied as a general name for prisons.

the Newgate Calendar. A biographical record of the more notorious criminals confined at Newgate; begun in 1773 and continued at intervals for many years. The term is often used as a comprehensive expression embracing crime of every sort.

I also felt that I had committed every crime in the Newgate Calendar.—Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, Ch. xiv.

New Grub Street. A novel by George GISSING (1891), dealing in grimly realistic fashion with the struggles and compromises of the modern literary world. The hero is Edwin Reardon, a novelist whose valiant attempts to maintain the standards of his art in the face of financial pressure are opposed by an unsympathetic wife. In sharp contrast to Reardon is his friend Jasper Milvain, an essayist who adjusts himself easily to current materialistic ideals. In the background are poor scholars, authors and literary hacks of all sorts.

New Hampshire. Title poem of the first Pulitzer Prize volume of verse by Robert FROST (1923). In it he stated that, far from espousing any causes, he chose "to be a plain New Hampshire farmer." He won the Pulitzer prize twice again (1931 and 1937).

New Harmony. One of the various cooperative communities attempted in the U.S. in the 19th century, founded in Indiana by the Rappists (1814) and purchased by Robert OWEN (1825). Here Owen sought to put into practice his theories of communal ownership, but dissensions arose immediately. After ten secessions by ten different groups, the plan was abandoned in 1828. See also BROOK FARM; PANTISOCRACY.

New Home, Who'll Follow? Or Glimpses of Western Life, A. Title of a collection of sketches of the Michigan frontier (1839) written by Caroline Matilda Kirkland under the pen name of Mrs. Mary Clavers.

New Jerusalem. The paradise of Christians, in allusion to Rev. xxi.

Newland, Abraham, see ABRAHAM NEWLAND.

New Machiavelli, The. A novel by H. G. WELLS (1911) in the form of an autobiography written by Richard Remington. With an attractive, devoted wife and a brilliant political career before him, Remington leaves England to elope with Isabel Rivers, a "new woman" whose appeal he cannot resist.

Newman, Christopher. The hero of THE AMERICAN by Henry James.

Newman, Ernest (1868–). English music critic of Manchester Guardian, Sunday Times, etc. Author of The Life of Richard Wagner (4 vols.; 1933–1946); A Musical Critic's Holiday (1925); etc.

Newman, Frances (1888–1928). American novelist and short-story writer, encouraged by James Branch CABELL. Translator and editor, The Short Story's Mutations: From Petronius to Paul Morand (1924). Her first novel, The Hard-Boiled Virgin (1926), was banned in Boston. Dead Lovers are Faithful Lovers (1927) also caused a sensation. She went nearly blind and dictated her translation of Tales by Jules Laforgue (1928). She caught pneumonia and took her own life. She had great erudition and originality. Her letters were published in 1929.

Newman, John Henry (1801–1890). English churchman, lecturer, and author, famous as the leader of the OXFORD MOVEMENT. He took outstanding part in the theological controversies involved in the movement and in 1845, after resigning the position which he had held as Protestant vicar of St. Mary's, was converted to the Roman Catholic Church. In 1846 he was ordained a priest and in 1879 was made a cardinal. Throughout his career he continued to engage in bitter controversies, especially with the Protestant clergyman and novelist Charles KINGSLEY and with the Catholic Cardinal Manning. His most famous work, Apologia pro Vita Sua (1864), a history of his intellectual development and conversion to Catholicism, was written to refute charges made against him by Kingsley. Among his other works, those in prose being marked by a clear, quiet, and smoothly flowing style, are Loss and Gain (1848), a partially autobiographical novel dealing with the Oxford Movement; a collection of religious lyrics published with hymns of other authors in Lyra Apostolica (1836); Dream of Gerontius (1865), a mystic religious poem; Grammar of Assent (1870), analyzing religious belief; The Idea of a University Defined (1873), a collection of lectures which had an important influence on later theories of liberal arts education.

New Netherland. The early name of New York during the days when it was a Dutch colony.

Newnham College. A women's college opened at Cambridge, England, in 1876.

New Republic, The. An American weekly magazine "of opinion," founded in 1914 and known for its consistent liberal policies. It opposed ratification of the Treaty of Versailles at the close of World War I, was sympathetic toward the U.S.S.R., supported Negro rights, civil liberties, the American trade-union movement, and the reforms of the New Deal, and opposed Fascism. It also had a distinguished literary department, leading authors and critics of the 1920's and 1930's serving as contributors. Malcolm Cowley and Stark Young were among members of its editorial staff. Henry WALLACE, former vice-president of the U.S., was editor for a time. See also THE NATION.

New Republic, The. A satire on contemporary English society and ideas by William Hurrell MALLOCK (1877). In it many actual persons are disguised by other names, among them Ruskin, Jowett, Arnold, Pater, Huxley, Tyndall, etc.

Newsome, Chad. In Henry James' AMBASSADORS, the son whose lengthy sojourn in Paris caused his mother to send over Lambert Strether as an "ambassador" to bring about his return.

newsreel. In John Dos Passos' U.S.A., a device by which the rapidly changing events in the historical background of the novel are portrayed. It consists of newspaper headlines, advertising slogans, snatches of popular songs, excerpts from speeches, etc., selected to give a quick, impressionistic view of the particular period of time being presented at the moment, and inserted at appropriate locations in the text. See also CAMERA EYE.

Newton, Alfred Edward (1863-1940). Famous American bibliophile. Author of The Amenities of Book-Collecting and Kindred Affections (1918); etc. Authority on Dr. JOHNSON, whose silver tea-pot he owned, and first American president of the Johnson Society of Great Britain. His extensive library was sold at auction.

Newton and the Apple. See under APPLE.

New Way to Pay Old Debts. A drama by Philip MASSINGER (1633). Wellborn, the nephew of Sir Giles Overreach, having run through his fortune and gotten into debt, induces Lady Allworth, out of respect and gratitude to his father, to show him favor. This induces Sir Giles to suppose that his nephew is about to marry the wealthy dowager. Feeling convinced that he will then be able to swindle him of all the dowager's property, as he once ousted him out of his paternal estates, Sir Giles pays his nephew's debts, and supplies him liberally with ready money, to bring about the marriage as soon as possible. After he has paid Wellborn's debts, the overreaching old man is compelled, through the treachery of his clerk, to restore the estates also, for the deeds of conveyance are found to be only blank sheets of parchment, the writing having been erased by some chemical acids.

New Yorker, The. An American weekly magazine of comment, fiction, and light verse, founded in 1925 and noted for its whimsical, satirical, and sophisticated humor, of greater subtlety and originality than that current at the time of its first appearance. Although designed primarily to appeal to upper middle-class residents of Manhattan and the metropolitan area and to aspirants to that category, The New Yorker became known throughout the U.S. Among its features are book, theater, screen, art, and music reviews; discussions of fashion, sports, and places of entertainment; "The Talk of the Town" and "Notes and Comment," consisting of anecdotes and whimsical comment in the manner of a newspaper "COLUMN"; "Profiles," biographical sketches, chiefly of unusual or little-known personalities of the day; humorous drawings with single-line or no captions; and examples of unconscious humor selected from current books, magazine articles, and newspaper stories, recalling the "Americana" department of Mencken's American Mercury. Particularly outstanding is the brief fictional sketch, popularized and standardized by The New Yorker and considered to derive ultimately from CHEKHOV through James JOYCE and Katherine MANSFIELD, in which the character or personal drama of an individual, who is often petty and vicious or pathetic and commonplace, is implied through an ordinary incident in his life. Leading American short-story writers and poets appearing in The New Yorker, many of them regularly, have included Ogden NASH, E. B. WHITE, Dorothy PARKER, Elinor WYLIE, Conrad AIKEN, Kenneth FEARING, Horace GREGORY, Sally BENSON, Cornelia OTIS SKINNER, Robert BENCHLEY, James THURBER, Ruth MCKENNEY, Clarence DAY, Arthur KOBER, Irwin SHAW, James M. CAIN, John Cheever, Robert M. COATES, Kay BOYLE, Nancy HALE. Among its artists have been Peter ARNO, O. Soglow, William Steig, Helen Hokinson, Rea Irvin, and James Thurber. Anthologies of drawings, verse, short stories, and "Profiles" have been made from material published in The New Yorker, as well as collections of the work of individual authors.

New York Idea, The. A comedy by Langdon Mitchell (Am., 1906), the theme of which is expressed in the sentence, "Marry for whim and leave the rest to the divorce court—that's the New York idea of marriage." Cynthia Karslake, the heroine, finally gives up her second husband to return to her first.

New York Public Library. Founded by the consolidation of the Astor, Lenox and other libraries (1895). The New York Public Library Building at Fifth Avenue and 42nd Street is noted for its guardian lions (of a supercilious cast of countenance). The library has over three million volumes available to the public through an amazingly efficient call system. Numerous local branches.

New York University. Privately endowed, co-educational, non-sectarian. Chartered in 1831. Its sites are on Washington Heights (where the HALL OF FAME is located) and on Washington Square. Its enrollment in 1946-1947 was 59,466, the combined faculties numbering 3,200. It has extension courses and a summer school.

Nexö, Martin Andersen (1869-). Danish proletarian novelist, known for his dramatic and understanding portrayals of working-class life in his own country. His best-known works are PELLE THE CONQUEROR (1906-1910), divided into Boyhood, Apprenticeship, The Great Struggle, and Daybreak; and Ditte (1920), the story of a poor and suffering servant-girl. Other books are Days in the Sun (1929), an account of travels in Andalusia; In God's Land (1929); and Under the Open Sky: My Early Years (1938), an autobiography.

Nexö lived in the slum sections of Copenhagen as a boy, later working as a herd-boy and a shoemaker's apprentice among the people with whose lives his novels deal. He was associated in his later career with international literary organizations of Communist sponsorship, and is considered one of the outstanding proletarian novelists of the first half of the 20th century. See PROLETARIAN LITERATURE.

Ney, Michel (1769-1815). Famous marshal of Napoleon. Although created peer by Louis XVIII, he supported Napoleon after his return from Elba and commanded the Old Guard at Waterloo (June 18, 1815). After the Hundred Days he was condemned for treason and shot (December 7, 1815).

Niafer. In Cabell's FIGURES OF EARTH, the wife of Manuel. When Manuel and Niafer are lovers newly met, Grandfather Death demands one of them, and Manuel lets Niafer go. Afterwards he serves Misery in the shape of a human head made of clay for a term of years to win her back.

Nibelungenlied, Thc. A Middle High German poem, the greatest monument of early German literature, founded on old Scandinavian legends contained in the VOLSUNGA SAGA and the EDDA, and written in its present form by an anonymous South German of the early part of the 13th century.

Nibelung is a mythical king of a race of Scandinavian dwarfs dwelling in Nibelheim (i.e., the home of darkness, or mist). See NIFL-HEIM. These Nibelungs, or Nibelungers, are the possessors of the wonderful "Hoard" of gold and precious stones guarded by the dwarf ALBERICH; their name passes to later holders of the Hoard, Siegfried's following and the Burgundians being in turn called the Nibelungs.

SIEGFRIED the hero of the first part of the poem, becomes possessed of the Hoard, and gives it to KRIEMHILD as her marriage portion. After his murder Kriemhild carries it to Worms, where it is seized by HAGEN and GUNTHER. They bury it in the Rhine, intending later to enjoy it, but they are both slain for refusing to reveal its whereabouts, and the Hoard remains for ever in the keeping of the Rhine Maidens.

The first part of the Nibelungenlied relates the marriage of Gunther, king of Burgundy, with BRUNHILD; the marriage of Siegfried with Kriemhild, his murder by Hagen, the removal of the "Nibelungen Hoard" to Burgundy, and its seizure and burial in the Rhine by Gunther and Hagen. It contains nineteen lays, divided into 1188 four-line stanzas. The second part tells of the marriage of the widow Kriemhild with King ETZEL (Attila), the visit of the Burgundians to the court of the Hunnish king, and the death of all the principal characters, including Gunther, Hagen, and Kriemhild. This part contains twenty lays.

The Scandinavian version of the legend, the VOLSUNGA SAGA, gives the same story with variations in name and detail. For Wagner's use of this legendary material in his operas, see DER RING DES NIBELUNGEN.

Nibelungenring, Der, see RING DES NIBELUNGEN.

Niblo's Garden. A New York theater, opened as the Sans Souci in 1828 at Broadway and Prince Street by the restaurant owner and impresario William Niblo. For 60 years the testing ground of almost all the best actors on the American stage. It first produced the extravaganza The Black Crook.

Nicander (fl. 2nd century B.C.). Greek poet and grammarian.

Nicander, Karl August (1799-1839). Swedish poet. Won Swedish Academy award (1827). Made translations of SCHILLER; etc.

Nicene Creed. The creed formulated by the Council of Nicaea (325 A.D.) on the basis of older wordings, specially designed to combat the heresy of Arianus. The modern creeds of the Eastern, Roman, and Anglican Churches are variants of it.

Nice Wanton, A Pretty Interlude Called. AN INTERLUDE of the Elizabethan period, published in 1560. It is didactic and allegorical in nature, dealing with education, and is thought to have been modeled on the Dutch moral playlet Acolastus, by Gnapaeus, which was performed in Latin in 1528 and translated into English in 1540 by John Palsgrave. It presents Nice Wanton, a silly, pampered child who easily falls into temptation and meets a tragic fate. Then the audience is shown in contrast the child of disciplined upbringing and careful education, who spends his time with his books and never once yields to sin. Didactic interludes of this type were often performed for the direct edification of the students in schools such as ETON.

Nic Frog. See NICKNAMES OF NATIONALITIES.

Nicholas. One of the three principal characters of The Miller's Tale, one of Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES, a poor scholar, who boards with John, a rich old miserly carpenter. The poor scholar falls in love with Alison, his landlord's young wife, who joins him in duping the foolish old man. Nicholas tells John that such a rain would fall on the ensuing Monday as would drown everyone in "less than an hour"; and he persuades the old fool to provide three large tubs, one for himself, one for his wife, and the other for his lodger. In these tubs, says Nicholas, they will be saved; and when the flood abates, they will then be lords and masters of the whole earth. A few hours before the time of the "flood," the old carpenter goes to the top chamber of his house to repeat his pater noster. He falls asleep over his prayers, and is roused by the cry of "Water! water! Help! help!" Supposing the rain had come, he jumps into his tub, and is let down by Nicholas and Alison into the street. A crowd soon gathers, and the people are delighted at the joke and pronounce the old man an idiot and fool.

Nicholas, St., see under SAINTS.

Nicholas Nickleby. The title and chief character of a novel by Charles DICKENS (1838-1839). Nicholas Nickleby is the son of a poor country gentleman, and has to make his own way in the world. He first goes as usher to Mr. SQUEERS, schoolmaster at Dotheboys Hall, in Yorkshire, but leaves in disgust with the tyranny of Squeers and his wife, especially to a poor boy named SMIKE. SMike runs away from the school to follow Nicholas, and remains his humble follower till death. At Portsmouth, Nicholas joins the theatrical company of Mr. CRUMPLES, but leaves the profession for other adventures. He falls in with the brothers CHEERYBLE, who make him their clerk; in this post he rises to success as a merchant, and ultimately marries Madeline Bray. See also NICKLEBY; NOGGS, NEWMAN.

Nicholas of Cusa (1401-1464). Roman Catholic cardinal and philosopher, born in Cusa, the modern Kues near Trier, Germany, who anticipated Copernicus by holding that the earth revolved about the sun.

Nichols, Anne. American dramatist, whose Abie's Irish Rose established a new performance record, running in New York continuously from 1922 to 1927.

Nichols, Robert Malise Bowyer (1893-1944). English poet and dramatist. Held chair of English Literature at the Imperial University of Tokyo, Japan (1921-1924). He once said that a study of Goethe changed his whole development as a man and an artist. He was in opposition to recent theory and practice of poetry in England and the United States. His best-known poems are in Andours and Endurances (1917). His best-known play (with Maurice Browne) is Wings Over Europe (1929), in which a youthful scientist, Francis Lightfoot, discovers how to harness atomic energy.

Nicholson, Kenyon (1894-). American playwright. After spending one summer with upper New York State carnivals, wrote The Barker (1927) which featured Claudette Colbert and was a hit. His Sailor Beware (1933; with Charles Robinson) sold to the moving pictures for $80,000, and was made into a musical comedy, Nice Goin' (1939). Associated with the Bucks County Playhouse, New Hope, Pa.

Nicholson, Meredith (1866-1947). Famous Hoosier novelist. He wrote The Hoosiers (1900) for the National Studies in American Letters Series. His novels, The House of a Thousand Candles (1905) and Rosalind at Red Gate (1907) were dramatized by George MINDLETON. Envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Nicaragua (1938-1941).

Nicholson, Sir William (1872-). English painter and wood engraver. With James Pryde, his brother-in-law, designed well-known posters signed "Beggartaff Brothers."

Nicias. A comic character in Machiavelli's comedy La Mandragola (The Mandrake) whom MACAULAY considered superior to any of the great comic characters of MOLIERE.

Nick.

Nick, the Bear. A nickname given to Russia by the English PUNCH.

Old Nick. The Devil. The term was in use in the 17th century, and is perhaps connected with the German Nickel, a goblin.

Nick Carter, see CARTER, NICK.

Nick of the Woods. A historical novel by Robert Montgomery Bird (Am., 1837) dealing with the Kentucky frontier of 1782. It presents the white man who has sworn vengeance as only less bloodthirsty than the ferocious Indians. Bird wished to protest against Cooper's idealization of the American Indian as portrayed in UNCAS.

nicker or nix. In Scandinavian folklore, a water-wraith, or kelpie, inhabiting sea, lake, river, and waterfall. They are sometimes represented as half-child, half-horse, the hoofs being reversed, and sometimes as old men sitting on rocks wringing the water from their hair. The female nicker is a nixy.

Another tribe of water-fairies are the Nixies, who frequently assume the appearance of beautiful maidens.—Dyer, Folk-lore of Plants, ch. vii.

Nickleby, Nicholas. See NICHOLAS NICKLEBY.

Mrs. Nickleby. Mother of Nicholas, and a widow. She is an enormous talker, fond of telling long stories with no connection. Mrs. Nickleby is a weak, vain woman, who imagines an idiot neighbor is in love with her because he tosses cabbages and other articles over the garden wall.

"The original of 'Mrs. Nickleby,'" says John Forster "was the mother of Charles Dickens."—Life of Dickens, iii. 8.

Kate Nickleby. Sister of Nicholas; beautiful, pure-minded, and loving. Kate works hard to assist in the expenses of housekeeping, but shuns every attempt of Ralph and others to allure her from the path of virgin innocence. She ultimately marries Frank, the nephew of the CHEERYBLE brothers.

Ralph Nickleby, of Golden Square (London). Uncle to Nicholas and Kate, a hard, grasping money-broker, with no ambition but the love of saving, no spirit beyond the thirst of gold, and no principle except that of fleecing everyone who comes into his power. This villain is the father of SMKE, and ultimately hangs himself, because he loses money, and sees his schemes one after another burst into thin air.

nicknames of nationalities. Humorous personifications of nations and individual nationals in common use are Antonio or Tony (Italian); Brother Jonathan or Uncle Sam (American); Colin Tampon (Swiss); Jean or Johnny Crapaud, Jacques Bonhomme or Robert Macaire (French); Cousin Michael, Michel or Fritz (German); Ivan Ivanovitch (Russian); Jean Baptiste (Canadian); John Bull (English); Mynheer Cosh or Nic Frog (Dutch); Paddy (m), Biddy (f.) (Irish); Sawney (Scot); etc., etc.

Nickneven. A gigantic malignant hag of Scotch superstition. William DUNBAR has well described this spirit in his Flyting of Dunbar and Kennedy.

Nicodemus. In the New Testament (John iii. 1, 2), a Pharisee who came to visit Jesus by night. After the crucifixion he brought myrrh and aloes and helped JOSEPH OF ARIMATHAEA with the burial.

Nicodemused into nothing. To have one's prospects in life ruined by a silly name; according to the proverb, "Give a dog a bad name and hang him." It is from Sterne's TRISTRAM SHANDY (vol. i. 19):

How many Caesars and Pompeys . . . by mere inspiration of the names have been rendered worthy of them, and how many . . . might have done . . . well in the world . . . had they not been Nicodemused into nothing.

Nicolay, John George (1832-1901). German-born private secretary to Abraham Lincoln (1860-1865). Collaborator with John Hay in a Lincoln biography (1890) and in the edition of Lincoln's complete works.

Nicoll, Allardyce (1894-). English writer on the theatre, who succeeded George Pierce BAKER in the Harkness School of the Drama at Yale University. A History of Restoration Drama (1923), etc.

Nicolle, Charles Jean Henri (1866-1936). French physician and bacteriologist. Nobel prize for physiology and medicine (1928).

Nicolls, Mary Ellen. Daughter of Thomas Love PEACOCK and first wife of George MEREDITH. She was temperamental, and after ten years of disagreements and quarrels she and Meredith separated. His poetic sequence MODERN LOVE is said to deal with their unfortunate marital experience.

Nicolson, Harold George (1886-). Well-known English biographer who married Victoria SACKVILLE-WEST. A cosmopolitan, he has held various posts in the diplomatic service. Was on staffs of Evening Standard, Daily Express, and, as a columnist, Spectator. Member of Parliament for National Labour Party. A brilliant but hard-working biographer. Tennyson (1923); Curzon: The Last Phase (1934); Dwight Morrow (1935); Peacemaking 1919, (1939); etc.

Niddhögge. The monster serpent of Scandinavian mythology. He lies hid in Niflheim and for ever gnaws the roots of YGGDRASILL, and sucks the corpses of the dead.

Niebuhr, Reinhold (1892-). Professor of applied Christianity at Union Theological Seminary (from 1930). Son of a German-born Evangelical minister. His Gifford Lectures at the University of Edinburgh (1939) were published in book form as The Nature and Destiny of Man (1941-1943). Cf. also Discerning the Signs of the Times (1946).

Nielsen, Kay (1886-). Danish artist and illustrator living in California. He first illustrated a book of Old French Fairy Tales in 1913. In 1915 appeared his illustrations for East of the Sun and West of the Moon. In 1917 he put on a big stage production of the story of Aladdin in Copenhagen. In Hollywood he did the scenic production of Everyman.

Niemöller, Martin (1892-). Famous anti-Nazi Protestant minister. Became leader (1933) of opposition to state control of Lutheran Church. Imprisoned in concentration camp (1937). Had been submarine officer in World War I.

Nietzsche, Friedrich Wilhelm (1844-1900). German philosopher and poet. The uncompromising rigor of his ideal conception of man made him despise the rabble, defy Christianity, and postulate the demand for self-education and the training of a race of "supermen." His best-known work is Also Sprach Zarathustra (1883 ff.). His influence on the language as well as on the thought of German philosophers and poets of subsequent generations has been marked.

Nieuport, Édouard (1875-1911). French aviator and airplane builder. His biplanes were much used in World War I.

Nifheim. Literally, "mist-home." The region of endless cold and everlasting night of Scandinavian mythology, ruled over by HELA. It consisted of nine worlds, to which were consigned those who die of disease or old age. It existed "from the beginning" in the North, and in its middle was the well Hvergelmir, from which flowed twelve rivers.

Nigel, see FORTUNES OF NIGEL; SIR NIGEL.

Nigger, The. A drama by Edward SHEDDEN (1909). The hero, Philip Morrow, a proud, ambitious young Southerner with all the prejudices of his caste, learns that he has Negro blood in his own veins.

Nigger Heaven. A novel of Negro life in Harlem by Carl VAN VECHE (1926).

Nigger of the Narcissus, The. A sea story by Joseph CONRAD (1898), the tale of a long voyage from Bombay to London. James Wait, "the Nigger of the Narcissus," is dying of tuberculosis, and the violent emotions of this big St. Kitts Negro, who is in terror and revolt over his fate, react upon the entire crew. The Cockney Donkin takes advantage of the situation to stir up feeling against the officers of the ship. There is more atmosphere than plot in this tale.

Night At An Inn, A. A one-act drama of the supernatural by Lord DUNSANY (1916).

Night Before Christmas, The. The popular title by which Clement Clarke Moore's poem, A Visit from St. Nicholas, is known. It was published in 1823. For a quotation from this poem, see SANTA CLAUS.

nightingale. For the classic legend, see PHILOMELA. There is a passage in T. S. Eliot's The Wasteland which confuses the nightingale with the nightjar:

. . . yet there the nightingale
Filled all the desert with inviolable voice
And still she cried, and still the world pursues,
"Jug Jug" to dirty ears.

This is unfair. No nightingale ever cried "Jug Jug." The goatsucker does and nightjar is another name for it, not nightingale.

the Italian nightingale. Angelica Catalani (1782-1842).

the Swedish nightingale. The great operatic singer Jenny LIND (1821-1886). She was a native of Stockholm.

Nightingale, Florence (1820-1910). English nurse and hospital reformer, known as "The Lady with the Lamp." Organized nurses and hospitals in Crimean War and founded institution for training nurses (1860); first woman to receive Order of Merit (1907).

Nightmare Abbey. A novel by Thomas Love PEACOCK (1818), satirizing the leading figures and concepts of ROMANTICISM in England in the author's day. Among the characters, Mr. Flosky is considered to represent S. T. Coleridge, Mr. Cypress, Lord Byron, and Scythiop Gloury, Shelley.

nightmare of Europe. Napoleon Bonaparte (b. 1769, reigned 1804-1814, d. 1821).

Night Must Fall. A melodrama (1936) by the English writer and actor Emyln WILLIAMS.

Night Over Taos. A three-act play in free verse by Maxwell ANDERSON (1932). The theme is a clash of American frontiersmen with the Mexican patriarchy of Taos in 1847.

Night Thoughts on Life, Death and Immortality. A famous poem by Edward YOUNG, written in nine books in blank verse and published in 1742-1745. Its full title reads The Complaint; or, Night-Thoughts on Life, Death and Immortality, but the poem is commonly referred to simply as Night Thoughts. It presents the reflections of the poet late at night on "life, death, and immortality," a long soliloquy urging one Lorenzo to turn to virtue, and a vision of the Judgment Day and eternity thereafter, with a description of the magnificence of the starry heavens. The poem, which is said to contain several autobiographical allusions, was very popular in its day. It is one of the outstanding examples of the melancholy "GRAVEYARD SCHOOL" in 18th-century English literature. See also NARCISSA.

Nightwood. A novel by Djuna BARNES (1937). Republished in New Classics Series (1946) with an introduction by T. S. Eliot, in which he says, "To say that Nightwood will appeal primarily to readers of poetry does not mean that it is not a novel, but that it is so good a novel that only sensibilities trained on poetry can wholly appreciate it."

Nihilism (from Lat. nil, "nothing"). An extreme form of 19th-century revolutionism, indignantly disclaimed by Karl MARX, which took form in Russia in the 1850's, and was specially active in the 1870's and later, under Bakunin. It aimed at anarchy and the complete overthrow of law, order, and all existing institutions, with the idea of re-forming the world de novo. The following was the code of the Nihilists: (1) annihilate the idea of a God, or there can be no freedom; (2) annihilate the idea of right, which is only might; (3) annihilate civilization, property, marriage, morality, and justice; (4) let your own happiness be your only law.

The name was given to them by the novelist Turgenev in his FATHERS AND SONS. Dostoyevsky portrays Nihilism in THE POSSESSED and THE BROTHERS KARAMAZOV.

Nijinsky, Waslav (1890–). Polish-born Russian dancer. Début in Imperial Ballet, St. Petersburg (1907); début in Paris (1909) with Diaghilev's Ballet Russe. Particularly well-known for his dancing in L'Après-midi d'un faune, Schéhérazade; Spectre de la rose; etc. Later became insane and was confined in an asylum.

Nikitin, Ivan Savvich (1824–1861). Russian lyric poet, well-known for his poem The Volga Boatman.

Nile. The Egyptians used to say that the swelling of the Nile was caused by the tears of Isis. The feast of Isis was celebrated at the anniversary of the death of OSIRIS, when Isis was supposed to mourn for her husband.

The Battle of the Nile was fought in Abukir Bay, near Alexandria, Egypt (August 1, 1798). The British fleet under Nelson defeated the French fleet under Brueys. It caused the failure of Napoleon's expedition to Egypt. Nelson earned for himself the epithet of "the hero of the Nile."

Niles, Mrs. Blair, née Rice. American novelist and travel writer. First married to William BEEBE, with whom she went on many expeditions. After their divorce she married the architect Robert Niles, an explorer and photographer by avocation. On a trip with him she gathered material for Condemned to Devil's Island (1928), which was a great success, also as a moving picture.

Nilsson, Christine (1843–1921). Swedish operatic soprano and violinist.

nimini-pimini. Affected simplicity. Lady Emily, in General Burgoyne's The Heiress, III. ii. (1786), tells Miss Alscrip the way to acquire the paphian "Mimp" is to stand before a glass and keep pronouncing nimini-pimini—"The lips cannot fail to take the right plie." See also PRUNES.

Nimitz, Chester William (1885–). American admiral, commander in chief, U.S. Pacific Fleet (from December, 1941), replacing Admiral KIMMEL.

Nimrod. Any daring or outstanding hunter; from the "mighty hunter before the Lord" (Gen. x. 9). Pope says of him, he was "a mighty hunter, and his prey was man" (Windsor Forest, 62); so also Milton interprets the phrase (Paradise Lost, xii. 24, etc.).

Nimrod Wildfire, see WILDFIRE, COL. NIMROD.

Nina. In Conrad's ALMAYER'S FOLLY, the half-caste daughter of Almayer. She appears as a small child in AN OUTCAST OF THE ISLANDS.

Nina Leeds. Heroine of Eugene O'NEILL's STRANGE INTERLUDE.

nine. From the earliest times the number nine has been regarded as a mystical number of peculiar significance. Deucalion's ark, made by the advice of PROMETHEUS, was tossed about for nine days before it stranded on the top of Mount Parnassus. There were the nine MUSES, frequently referred to as merely "the Nine"—

Descend, ye Nine! Descend and sing
The breathing instruments inspire.
Pope, Ode on St. Cecilia's Day

There were nine Gallicenae or virgin priestesses of the ancient Gallic oracle; and Lars Porsena swore by the nine gods—

Lars Porsena of Clusium
By the nine gods he swore
That the great house of Tarquin
Should suffer wrong no more.
Macaulay, Lays of Ancient Rome (Horatius, i).

who were Juno, Minerva, and Tinia (the three chief), Vulcan, Mars, Saturn, Hercules, Sumanus, and Vedio; while the nine of the Sabines were Hercules, Romulus, Esculapius, Bacchus, Aeneas, Vesta, Santa, Fortuna, and Fides.

There were nine rivers of Hell, or, according to some accounts, the STYX encompassed the infernal regions in nine circles. Milton makes the gates of Hell "thrice three-fold; three folds are brass, three iron, three of adamant rock." They have nine folds, nine plates, and nine linings. (Paradise Lost, ii. 645.)

In the early Ptolemaic system of astronomy, there were nine spheres; hence Milton, in his Arcades, speaks of the "celestial syrens' harmony that sit upon the nine enfolded spheres." They are those of the Moon, Mercury, Venus, the Sun, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, and the Firmament, or that of the fixed stars, and the Crystalline Sphere. In Scandinavian mythology there were nine earths, HELL being the goddess of the ninth; there were nine worlds in NIFLHEIM, and ODIN's ring dropped eight other rings (nine rings of mystical import) every ninth night.

In folk-tale, nine appears many times. The ABRACADABRA was worn nine days, and then flung into a river; in order to see the fairies one is directed to put "nine grains of wheat on a four-leaved clover"; nine knots are made on black wool as a charm for a sprained ankle; if a servant finds nine green peas in a peascod, she lays it on the lintel of the kitchen door, and the first man that enters in is to be her cavalier; to see nine magpies is most unlucky; a cat has nine lives (see also CAT-O'-NINE-TAILS); and the nine of diamonds is known as the CURSE OF SCOTLAND.

There are nine orders of ANGELS: in heraldry, there are nine marks of cadency and nine different crowns recognized; and among ecclesiastical architects there are nine crosses, viz., altar crosses, processional crosses, roads on lofts, reliquary crosses, consecration crosses, marking crosses, pectoral crosses, spire crosses, and crosses pendent over altars.

a nine days' wonder. Something that causes a great sensation for a few days, and then passes into the limbo of things forgotten. An old proverb is: "A wonder lasts nine days, and then the puppy's eyes are open," alluding to dogs which, like cats, are born blind. As much as to say, the eyes of the public are blind in astonishment for nine days, but then their eyes are open, and they see too much to wonder any longer.

nine-tail bruise. Prison slang for the CAT-O'-NINE-TAILS.

nine tailors make a man. See TAILORS.

possession is nine points of the law. It is every advantage a person can have short of actual right. The "nine points of the law" have been given as—

(1) A good deal of money; (2) a good deal of patience; (3) a good cause; (4) a good lawyer; (5) a good counsel; (6) good witnesses; (7) a good jury; (8) a good judge; and (9) good luck.

to look nine ways. To squint.

1919. A novel by John Dos Passos, the second book in his trilogy U.S.A., published in 1932. It takes the characters introduced in THE 42ND PARALLEL, plus a few additions, through World War I to the armistice and presents a kaleidoscopic picture of the war years. It also contains brief biographical sketches of a number of outstanding personalities of the period, including Theodore ROOSEVELT, J. P. MORGAN, Randolph BOURNE, Joe Hill, John REED, Paxton HIBBEN, Woodrow WILSON, and the Unknown Soldier.

Nineteenth Amendment. The woman's suffrage amendment to the United States Constitution (August 26, 1920).

Ninety-Three (Quatre-vingt-treize.) A novel by Victor HUGO (1879), dealing with the France of 1793. Marat, Danton, and Robespierre are introduced. The principal characters are the Marquis de Lantenac, a Breton nobleman, his nephew Gauvain, who saves him from danger but loses his life in consequence, and Cimourdean, an ex-priest and ardent republican. Much of the plot is concerned with the safety of three little children who are in constant danger.

Nine Worthies. The nine persons considered in medieval times most worthy. They were Hector, son of Priam; Alexander the Great; Julius Caesar; Joshua, conqueror of Canaan, David, king of Israel; Judas Maccabeus; Arthur, king of Britain; Charlemagne; Godfrey of Bouillon. The list includes three Gentiles, three Jews, and three Christians.

Ninon de Lenclos, see LENCLOS, ANNE.

Ninus. Son of Belus, husband of SEMIRAMIS, and the reputed builder of Nineveh. It is at his tomb that the lovers meet in the PYRAMUS and THISBE travesty in Shakespeare's MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

Niobe. The personification of maternal sorrow. According to Grecian fable, Niobe, the daughter of TANTALUS and wife of AMPHION, King of Thebes, was the mother of twelve children, and taunted LATONA because she had only two—APOLLO and DIANA. Latona commanded her children to avenge the insult, and they caused all the sons and daughters of Niobe to die. Niobe was inconsolable, wept herself to death, and was changed into a stone, from which ran water, "like Niobe, all tears" (Hamlet, I. 2).

the Niobe of nations. So Byron styles Rome, the "lone mother of dead empires," in his CHILDE HAROLD.

Njord or Njorthr. The Scandinavian god of the sea, the protector of seafaring men, he who ruled the winds, calmed the seas, and warded off fire. He was one of the AESIR, and father, by his wife Skadhi, of FREY and FREYA. His home was Noatun, "the place of ships." The name means "benefactor."

Nipper, Susan. A character in Dickens' DOMBEY AND SON, generally called "Spitfire" from her snappish disposition. She is the nurse of Florence Dombey, to whom she is much attached. Susan Nipper marries Mr. Toots after he has gotten over his infatuation for Florence.

Nirvana (Sans., "a blowing out, or extinction"). Annihilation, or rather the final deliverance of the soul from transmigration. See BUDDHISM.

Nisan. The first month of the Jewish calendar. It corresponds to March-April.

Nisard, Désiré (1806–1888). French literary critic, known for his opposition to romanticism, his respect for tradition, and his championing of the neo-classical period of the 17th century (see NEO-CLASSICISM) as the period of the greatest achievement in French literature. His Histoire de la littérature française (1844–1861) is his best-known work.

Nisus and Euryalus. Two famous friends in Virgil's AENEID, young Trojans who accompany AENEAS from Troy and win great distinction in the war with TURNUS. They enter the enemy's camp at dead of night but are detected by the Rutulians. Euryalus is slain, and Nisus, trying to save his friend, perishes also.

Nitouche, Sainte. A French humorous adaptation of n'y touche, applied to one affecting great innocence.

This kiss upon your fan I press—
Ah! Sainte Nitouche, you don't refuse it!
Harrison Robertson, Two Triolets.

Niven, Frederick John (1878–1944). Scottish Canadian novelist. Traveler and mountaineer. Justice of the Peace (1914); Wild Honey (1927); and many other books.

nix, see NICKER.

Njal. Hero of the Icelandic saga BURNT NJAL, whose friendship for GUNNAR is shaken and almost destroyed by the feud raised between the two families by HALLGERDA, Gunnar's wife.

Njorthr. See NERTHUS; NIORD.

Noah. In the Old Testament (Gen. vi-ix), the builder of an Ark in which he and his family lived during the forty days and nights of the Deluge. All varieties of animals were also taken into the ark, two by two. The Ark finally came to rest on Mount Ararat, and Noah and his three sons, Shem, Ham and Japheth, with their families and the various birds and animals came out safely. According to the Biblical narrative, the rainbow was given Noah as a promise that the world should never again be destroyed by flood. See also DEUCALION'S FLOOD.

Noah's Ark. A name given by sailors to a white band of cloud spanning the sky like a rainbow and in shape something like the hull of a ship. If it extends east and west, expect dry weather; if it extends north and south, expect wet. A Noah's Ark is also a child's toy.

Noah's wife. According to legend she was unwilling to go into the ark, and the quarrel between the patriarch and his wife forms a prominent feature of Noah's Flood, in the Chester and Townley Mysteries. In the Koran, Noah's wife, known as Waila, tries to persuade the people that her husband is out of his mind.

Noah is a play by André OBÉY.

Noah an' Jonah an' Cap'n John Smith. Widely-known poem by Don MARQUIS.

Noah's Dove. Title poem of a volume of verse by Laura Benét, sister of Stephen Vincent and William Rose BENÉT.

Noailles, Comtesse Mathieu de (1876–1933). Roumanian-born French poet, known for the color and richness, Oriental exoticism, and ecstatic emotional abandon of her poetry, dealing chiefly with nature, love, and death. Her works include Le Coeur innombrable (1901); Les Ebouissements (1907); Les Forces éternelles (1920); L'Honneur de souffrir (1929).

Nobel prizes. International prizes established by the will of Alfred Bernard Nobel (1833–1896), the Swedish chemist and inventor of dynamite, etc., to encourage work in the cause of humanity. There are five prizes of large amounts given annually, as follows: (1) for the most noteworthy work in physics, (2) in chemistry, (3) in medicine or physiology, (4) in idealistic literature, and (5) in the furtherance of universal peace.

Well-known winners in other fields include Röntgen, Arrhenius, Pavlov, Koch, Metchnikov, Ehrlich, Marie Curie, Carrel, Michelson, Marconi, Bohr, Einstein, Millikan, Compton, Irene Joliot-Curie, Langmuir, Elihu Root, Woodrow Wilson, Frank B. Kellogg, Fridtjof Nansen, and others. (See under those names).

Noble, Umberto (1885–). Italian arctic explorer and aeronautical engineer. Flew across north pole with Amundsen and Ellsworth (1926); commanded expedition to north pole in dirigible Italia; rescued (1928) after wreck of dirigible; resigned as general in flying force (1929). Went to Russia where he spent five years supervising the construction of airships. Taught aeronautics in Chicago for three years. After the fall of Mussolini, returned to Rome and was put up as a candidate on the Communist ticket in the Italian elections for the Constituent Assembly.

noble. An English gold coin (6s 8d in silver), first minted by Edward III. A new issue was called the angel-noble, and later the angel, because it showed Michael and the dragon on its face. It was last coined by Charles I. It was presented to be "touched" to patients suffering from KING'S EVIL. The rose-noble or royal is a gold coin (10s in silver) first minted by Edward IV.

Noble Numbers. Title of a collection of religious poems by Robert HERRICK.

noble savage. The highly idealized, oversentimentalized primitive man admired in the late 18th century and the early romantic period (see ROMANTICISM) for his supposedly simpler, purer, and less inhibited emotional responses and superior intellect. He originated in the writings of J. J. ROUSSEAU and was the ancestor of the persistent convention of PRIMITIVISM in the art and literature of the 19th and 20th centuries. The characteristic concept of the noble savage is considered to be best portrayed in the novels of CHATEAUBRIAND, dealing with the American Indian—René, ATALA, and LES NATCHEZ. James Fenimore COOPER's Indian novels are also written in the convention of the noble savage.

noble science. (1) Fencing; (2) boxing.

Noctes Ambrosianae. A series of papers on literary and topical subjects, in the form of dialogues, contributed to Blackwood's Magazine (1822–1835). They were written principally by Professor John Wilson under the pseudonym, "Christopher North." The conversations were supposed to take place in the "blue parlor" of an inn in Edinburgh kept by one Ambrose, and hence were called Noctes Ambrosianae. The Ettrick Shepherd, under which name the poet, James HOGG, appears, and Timothy Tickler, who represents the Edinburgh lawyer, Robert Sym, take part with Christopher North in these famous conversations.

Nocturne. A novel by Frank SWINNERTON (1917). The chief characters are two sisters, Jenny and Emmy Blanchard, daughters of a good-for-nothing, paralytic old father to whom Emmy devotes her days. Jenny, who works in a millinery shop, has been passively accepting the attentions of Emmy's quondam suitor Alf, though she cares nothing for him and Emmy does. On the night in which the action of the story takes place, she gives up Alf to Jenny and then yields to the spell of a more romantic lover, Keith, knowing that in the morning he will sail away.

Nod, Land of. See under LAND.

Nodel. In the medieval beast-epic REYNARD THE FOX, the lion, representing the regal element of Germany; Isegrim, the wolf, represents the baronial element; and Reynard, the fox, the Church element.

Nodier, Charles (1780-1844). French poet and short-story writer of the early period of ROMANTICISM, known for his indolent, dilettantish nature, representative of one type of romantic man of letters, and for his tales, marked by sentiment, melancholy, mystery, fantasy, and terror, in the manner of HOFFMAN and the GOthic NOVEL. Among these are Jean Sbogar (1818); Smarra (1820); and Trilby (1822), considered the source of the title of Du Maurier's novel. Nodier was banished to Switzerland for a number of years during the Napoleonic period, for having opposed the Emperor. He was interested in nature study and philology, was a journalist in France during the period of the Bourbon Restoration, and in 1824 became librarian at the Bibliothèque de l'Arsenal (Arsenal Library). While serving in the latter capacity, he was the leader of a cénacle of romantic writers formerly associated with the journal La Muse française (1823-1824). He once defined romanticism as "la liberté régie par le goût" ("liberty ruled by taste" or "liberty ruled by desire").

noel. In English (also written nowell), a Christmas carol, or the shout of joy in a carol; in French noel, "Christmas Day." The word is Provençal nadal, from Lat. natalem, "natal."

Nowells, nowells, nowells!

Sing all we may

Because that Christ, the King,

Was born this blessed day.—Old Carol.

Noggs, Newman. In Dickens' NICHOLAS NICKLEBY, Ralph Nickleby's clerk. He is a tall man of middle age, with two goggle eyes, one of which is fixed, a rubicund nose, a cadaverous face, and a suit of clothes decidedly the worse for wear. He has the gift of distorting and cracking his finger-joints. This kind-hearted, dilapidated fellow "kept his hunter and hounds once," but ran through his fortune. He discovers a plot of old Ralph which he confides to the Cheeryble brothers who frustrate it and then provide for Newman.

Nogi, Maresuke (1849-1912). Japanese general. Captured Port Arthur in the Russo-Japanese War (1905). Defeated Kuropatkin at Mukden. He and his wife committed harakiri upon the death of Emperor Meiji (1912).

Nokomis. In Longfellow's HIAWATHA, mother of Wenonah, and grandmother of Hiawatha. Nokomis is the daughter of the Moon. While she is swinging one day, some of her companions, out of jealousy, cut the ropes, and she falls to earth in a meadow. The same night her first child, a daughter, is born, and is called Wenonah. Old Nokomis teaches Hiawatha the legends of her race when he is a mere boy.

Nolan, Philip. The chief figure in The Man Without a Country (1863) by Edward Everett Hale, also, as a historical personage, a horse-trader who was killed on the Mexican border (1801). In The Real Philip Nolan (1901), Hale explains that The Man Without a Country was not based on the historical Philip Nolan, but only his novel Philip Nolan's Friends (1876).

Nolan, the. An appellation of Giordano BRUNO, from his birthplace Nola in Italy. In James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE, Bruno is sometimes referred to under the title of "Messrs. Browne & Nolan," a Dublin advertising firm.

noli me tangere (Lat., "touch me not"). An allusion to Christ's words after his resurrection. Cf. John xx. 17.

Noll or Old Noll. Oliver CROMWELL was so called by the Royalists. Noll is a familiar form of Oliver.

Nolte, Vincent (1779-1853?). Merchant and traveler, born in Italy of German parents. In New Orleans during war of 1812; met, in the course of his travels, Napoleon, Queen Victoria, Audubon, Jackson, Cooper, Nicholas Biddle, etc. Wrote Fifty Years in Both Hemispheres, or, Reminiscences of the Life of a Former Merchant (translated from the German, 1854). His book inspired Hervey ALLEN's Anthony Adverse. He is, himself, a character in it.

nom de guerre is French for a "war name," but really means an assumed name. It was customary at one time for everyone who entered the French army to assume a name; this was especially the case in the times of chivalry, when knights were known by the device on their shields.

nom de plume. English-French for "pen name," or pseudonym, the name assumed by a writer, cartoonist, etc., who does not choose to give his own to the public; as Currer Bell (Charlotte Brontë), Fiona MacLeod (William Sharp), Henry Seton Merriman (Hugh Stowell Scott), etc. Occasionally, as in the case of Voltaire (François Marie Arouet) and Stendhal (Marie Henri Beyle), the assumed name quite replaces the true name.

no man's land. The strip of ground between the front-line trenches of opposing armies; a term coined in World War I.

nominalism. In Scholastic philosophy, the doctrine that universal terms, as animal, house, finger, etc., are names which correspond to no reality. Only individual animals, houses, etc. are real. Nominalism arose in the eleventh century with Abélard's teacher, Roscellinus, as its main protagonist. The doctrine was held down by the opposition of the realists whose argument that universals must have a corresponding reality tallied better with the theological doctrine of the trinity which the nominalists could not accept until Occam qualified the significance of their tenets as grammatical, not logical.

Nomura, Kichisaburo (1877–). Japanese ambassador to the United States (1940–1941), conducting the negotiations which were interrupted by the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor (December 7, 1941).

Nonconformists. In England, members of Protestant bodies who do not conform to the doctrines of the Church of England (also called Dissenters and Noncons.); especially the 2000 clergymen who, in 1662, left the Church rather than submit to the conditions of the Act of Uniformity—i.e., “unfeigned assent to all and everything contained in the Book of Common Prayer.”

nones. In the ancient Roman calendar, the ninth (Lat. nonus) day before the Ides; in the Roman Catholic Church, the office for the ninth hour after sunrise, or 3 p.m.

Nonne Prestes Tale. In Chaucer's Canterbury Tales. See CHANTICLEER.

No-Popery Riots. Those of Edinburgh and Glasgow, February 5, 1779. Those of London, occasioned by Lord George Gordon, occurred in 1780.

Nordau, Max Simon (1849–1923). Hungarian-German physician and author. Active Zionist leader favoring Herzl's plans for a Jewish national home in East Africa. Outstanding among his numerous works is DEGENERATION (1892–1893). The name Nordau (literally, “a northern meadow”) is a witty pseudonym for Sudfeld (literally, “a southern field”).

Nordhoff, Charles Bernard (1887–1947). American novelist, noted chiefly for his collaboration with James Norman Hall on the “Bounty” series of novels, beginning with MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY (1932).

Nordica, Lillian. Pseudonym of Lillian Norton (1859–1914). American operatic soprano. Popular in Wagnerian rôles, chiefly with Metropolitan Opera House, Hammerstein's Manhattan Opera Company, and on concert tours.

Norgem in Brickwall. A reference to this locality occurs in a poem by Rudyard Kipling, beginning “King Bess was Harry's Daughter.” It says she left her shoe “at Norgem in Brickwall.” In E. V. Lucas's Highways and Byways in Sussex it is stated that “Brickwall” is “The neighboring seat of the Frewens, the great family of Northiam, for many generations a noble old country mansion, partly Elizabethan and partly Stuart.” Coulson Kernahan says, “In a glass case in the hall at Brickwall the silk shoes which Queen Elizabeth left behind her at Norgem (now Northiam) are carefully preserved.”

Norma. In Bellini's opera of that name (1831) with a libretto by Romani, a Druidic priestess, secretly married to a Roman consul. When she discovers that he is planning to seduce a sister priestess, she gives herself up to vengeance but at the last minute shares the tragic fate she has brought upon him.

Norna of the Fitful Head. In Scott's novel THE PIRATE, a name given to Ulla Troil, who believes herself to be “something pre-eminently powerful, pre-eminently wicked,” a person of mysterious supernatural powers. She is the mother of Clement Cleveland, the Pirate, by her lover and seducer, Basil Mertoun (Vaughan).

Norns, the. The three giant goddesses who, in Scandinavian mythology, presided over the fates of both men and gods. Anciently there was only one Norn, Urdur (i.e., the power of fate), but later two others were added, and the three became known as Urdur (the Past), Verdandi (the Present), and Skuld (the Future), who determined the fate of men by carving runestaves and with them casting lots. They appeared at the cradle on the birth of a child, and dwelt at the root of YGGDRASIL beside the well Urdar, from which they daily sprinkled Yggdrasil to preserve it from decay. The Three Weird Sisters in MACBETH are probably connected with the Norns; see also FATE.

Norris, Frank. In full Benjamin Franklin Norris (1870–1902). American novelist and journalist, known for his naturalistic (see NATURALISM) novels of the U.S. of his day, in which he was strongly influenced by Émile ZOLA. His work is marked by emphasis on the physical, sordid, and violent, and by pessimism and determinism. His works include Yvernelle: A Tale of Feudal France (1892); McTEAGUE (1899); Blix (1899); Moran of the Lady Letty (1898); A Man's Woman (1900); THE OCTOPUS (1901), considered his best novel, which, together with THE PIT (1903) and the unwritten The Wolf, was planned as the first part of a trilogy, The Epic of the Wheat; The Responsibilities of a Novelist (1903); A Deal in Wheat (1903); The Joyous Miracle (1906); The Third Circle (1909); Vandover and the Brute (1914); Works (1928), ten volumes.

In his early youth, Norris studied art in Paris and wrote medieval romances in the manner of FROISSART; Yvernelle is one. Later he worked on the staff of The Wave, a magazine in San Francisco, and was a correspondent in Cuba for McClure's Magazine during the Spanish-American War.

Charles Gilman Norris (1881-1945). Brother of Frank Norris, became known as the author of novels dealing with various social problems of the 20th century, including education, women's rights, and birth control. Among these are Salt (1917); Brass (1921); Bread (1923); Pig Iron (1925); Zelda Marsh (1927); Seed (1930); Bricks Without Straw (1938).

Kathleen Thompson Norris (1880-). Wife of Charles G. Norris, wrote numerous sentimental domestic novels which sold widely and were extremely popular throughout the U.S. Mother (1911) was her first success. Certain People of Importance (1922) is her best novel.

Norris, George William (1861-1944). American statesman. Opposed U.S. entry into World War I. Was instrumental in securing passage of act creating Tennessee Valley Authority (1933). The first TVA-built dam was called the Norris Dam in his honor. Also initiated the Twentieth Amendment known as "the LAME DUCK ACT" (1933).

Norris, Mrs. or Aunt. A famous character in Jane Austen's MANSFIELD PARK, a great busybody and a constant trial to Fanny Price.

North, Christopher or Kit. The pseudonym of John Wilson (1785-1854), professor of moral philosophy, Edinburgh. He contributed to Blackwood's Magazine most of the NOCTES AMBROSIANAE.

North, Jessica Nelson (1894-). American poet. Associate editor of Poetry. John Reed prize (1927). Wrote critical articles on collections of Art Institute of Chicago. The Long Leash (poems; 1928); Morning in the Land (novel; 1941); etc.

North, Sterling (1906-). Younger brother of Jessica Nelson. Novelist and critic. Among his novels is Night Outlasts the Whippoorwill (1936). Has also written several juveniles. Literary editor, Chicago Daily News and New York Post.

North American Review, The. A quarterly review devoted to literature, criticism, and history, founded in Boston (1815) and edited by William Tudor. William Cullen Bryant's Thanatopsis and To a Waterfowl were first published in it. It later became a monthly, and among its editors were Charles Eliot Norton, James Russell Lowell, Henry Adams, and Henry Cabot Lodge. Emerson, Irving, Longfellow, Parkman, Howells, etc., contributed to it. Its next incarnation, in New York, saw it in the midst of contemporary social and political movements. After World War I it again became a quarterly.

Northanger Abbey. A novel by Jane Austen (1818). Visiting at Bath her friend Mrs. ALLEN, called by one critic "perhaps as good a portrayal of pure inanity as the history of literature can supply," the heroine, Catherine Morland, an attractive young girl under the spell of Mrs. Radcliffe's MYSTERIES OF UDOLPHO, falls in love with Henry Tilney, a young clergyman, and is made love to by the blustering young blackguard, John Thorpe. At the invitation of Henry's father, General Tilney, who believes her wealthy, she visits at Northanger Abbey, where, due to her romantic imagination, she sees mystery and horror on all sides. This situation gives Jane Austen ample opportunity for satire on the Radcliffe school of romantic mystery. Hearing that the report of Catherine's wealth is ill-founded, Henry's dictatorial father abruptly orders her to leave, but Henry follows and persuades her to marry him.

Northcliffe, Viscount, see HARMSWORTH, ALFRED CHARLES.

Northeast Passage. A way from the Atlantic to the Pacific and on to India from Europe eastward round the north extremity of Asia. Often attempted even in the 16th century. Hence Beaumont and Fletcher:

That everlasting cassock, that has worn
As many servants out as the North-east Passage
Has consumed sailors.

The Woman's Prize, ii. 2.

After the discovery of America, there was much talk of a Northwest Passage through to the East by way of the Atlantic, and explorers were constantly sailing up the bays and rivers of the American coast in hopes of finding such a passage.

Northern. For the Northern Herodotus, the Northern Semiramis, etc., see under HERODOTUS, SEMIRAMIS.

the Northern Bear. Russia has been so called.

the Northern Gate of the Sun. The sign of Cancer, or summer solstice; so called because it marks the northern tropic.

the Northern Lights. The AURORA BOREALIS.

[The old King goes] up with music
On cold starry nights
To sup with the Queen
Of the gay Northern Lights.

Alighting, The Fairies.

the Northern Wagoner. The genius presiding over the Great Bear, or CHARLES' WAIN, which contains seven large stars.

By this the northern wagoner has set
His sevenfold team behind the steadfast star [the pole-star]

Spenser, Faerie Queene, I, ii, 1.

Dryden calls the Great Bear the Northern Car, and similarly the crown in Ariadne has been called the Northern Crown.

North of Boston. Title of Robert Frost's first book of poems (1914).

(2) Title of a novel (1937) by Kenneth ROBERTS.

Northwest Territory. An American territory northwest of the Ohio River, comprising practically all the land owned as unsettled territory by the thirteen colonies at the time of the Declaration of Independence. It was ceded to the federal government by the various states laying claim to it and later organized into separate units. See WESTERN RESERVE.

Norton, Caroline Elizabeth Sarah (1808-1877). Well-known English author, principally remembered for her poetry. Said to have been George Meredith's model for the heroine of DIANA OF THE CROSSWAYS.

Norton, Charles Eliot (1827-1908). American author and educator. With E. L. Godkin and others founded The Nation (1865). Professor at Harvard (1873-1897).

Norton, Grace Fallow (1876-). American poet, Little Gray Songs From St. Joseph's (1912); The Sister of the Wind (1914); etc.

Norton, Thomas (1532-1584). English lawyer and poet. Staunch defender of anti-Catholicism. Translator of Calvin's Institutes (1559). With Thomas SACKVILLE, author of the first English tragedy (in blank verse), Gorboduc or Ferrex and Porrex (performed 1561; published 1565).

Norumbega. Early map-makers' name for a region and its chief city vaguely situated on the east coast of North America. On the map of Hieronimus da Verrazano (1592) it reads Aranbega, and coincides more or less with Nova Scotia. It was sought in vain in the region of the Penobscot River by Champlain in 1604. WHITTIER wrote a poem Norumbega dealing with the search for this fabulous city. The word Norumbega is possibly of Indian origin.

Norway, Nevil Shute. Pseudonym Nevil Shute (1899-). English novelist. Ordeal (1939); Pied Piper (1941); etc. Pied Piper became a successful moving picture.

Nostradamus, Michel (1503-1566). A French astrologer who published an annual Almanac, as well as the famous Centuries (1555), containing prophecies which, though the book suffered papal condemnation in 1781, still occasion controversy from time to time. His prophecies are couched in most ambiguous language, hence the saying as good a prophet as Nostradamus—i.e., so obscure that none can make out your meaning. Interest in the prophecies of Nostradamus was revived at the time of World War II.

Nostromo. A novel by Joseph CONRAD (1904), dealing with a South American revolution. The action is extremely involved and there are many characters. Due largely to the efforts of Charles Gould, head of the Gould concession silver mine in Sulaco, the Occidental Province has been kept free from revolutionary disturbances such as have kept the rest of the republic of Costaguana in a state of chaos. Gould, however, in his devotion to the building of an orderly and prosperous state, has been growing less considerate of his wife, Doña Emilia (who has been called "the most moving figure in all Conrad's books"). Finally revolution strikes the province. The cynical but genuinely patriotic young journalist Decoud dreams of a separate republic, but he is forced to flee, although something much like the secession he planned actually takes place after his death. "Nostromo," from whom the book takes its title, is the nickname of Capatez de Cargadores, a picturesque and powerful Italian who has become "the most reliable, the most useful, the most feared man in Sulaco." When the revolutionists attack Sulaco, he is entrusted with the silver treasure; afterwards it is believed to have been sunk at sea, and Nostromo gradually grows even more prosperous and powerful. At last he is shot by an old lighthouse keeper, the father of Gizelle, the girl he loves and has come to meet.

Notables. An assembly of nobles or notable men, in French history, selected by the king to form a parliament. They were convened in 1626 by Richelieu, and, not again till 1787 (160 years afterwards), when Louis XVI called them together with the view of relieving the nation of some of its pecuniary embarrassments. The last time they ever assembled was November 6, 1788.

Notes and Queries. An English weekly periodical for literary criticism and information; started by W. J. Thoms, in 1849. Its motto is the famous remark of Captain Cuttle, "When found, make a note of." The name came to be given occasionally to similar projects in other fields, as Notes and Queries on China and Japan, American Notes and Queries, etc.

Notes of a Son and Brother. An autobiographical account by Henry JAMES (1914), a sequel to A Small Boy and Others (1913). The period is the late 1850's to 1870.

Nothing to Wear. A well-known humorous poem by William Allen Butler (1857), relating the sad state of Miss Flora M'FLIMSEY who made three separate journeys to Paris, each spent in "one continuous round of shopping," and yet:

This same Miss M'Flimsey of Madison Square
The last time we met was in utter despair
Because she had nothing whatever to wear!

Notre Dame de Paris. A romance of medieval times by Victor HUGO (1831), centering about the life of the great Parisian cathedral. The principal characters are ESMERALDA, the gypsy dancer in love with Captain PHOEBUS, Claude FROLLO, the hypocritical archdeacon, whose evil passion for Esmeralda causes him to denounce her as a witch, and QUASIMODO, the "Hunchback of Notre Dame," a deformed bellringer, whose devotion saves Esmeralda for a time when she seeks protection from the mob in the belfry of the Cathedral. Esmeralda is finally executed, and Quasimodo throws Frolo from the heights of Notre Dame.

Nott, Henry Junius (1797-1837). Early American humorist of the Southwest. He wrote a picaresque work presumed to be from "the Knapsack of Thomas Singularity, Journeyman Printer." He may be compared with, but does not equal, Augustus Baldwin LONG-STREET.

Nouman, Sidi. Hero of The History of Sidi Nouman, one of the tales in the ARABIAN NIGHTS. He is an Arab who marries Amine, a very beautiful woman, who eats her rice with a bodkin. Sidi, wishing to know how his wife can support life and health without more food than she takes in his presence, watches her narrowly, and discovers that she is a ghoul, who goes by stealth every night and feasts on the fresh-buried dead. When Sidi makes this discovery, Amine changes him into a dog. After he is restored to his normal shape, he changes Amine into a mare, which every day he almost rides to death.

Nourmahal (Arab., "the light of the harem"). One of the ladies in the harem of the Caliph Haroun al Raschid, afterwards called Nourjehan (light of the world). The story of her love for Selim and how she regains his lost affections by means of a love-spell is told in Moore's LALLA ROOKH.

Nouvelle Héloïse, Julie ou la. A novel by Jean Jacques ROUSSEAU (1761). It is the story of a wife beset by her former lover.

Novalis. Pseudonym of Friedrich Leopold von Hardenberg (1772-1801). German romantic poet and novelist, known for his mystic, religious poems and his celebration of night and death in characteristic romantic symbolism. See ROMANTICISM. His best-known works are Hymns of Night, prose poems lamenting the death of Sophie von Kuhn; Heinrich von Ofterdingen (1799) and Die Lehrlinge zu Sais (The Disciples at Sais), both unfinished novels. Known in English chiefly through Henry Van Dyke's The Blue Flower.

Novarro, Ramon (1899-). Famous moving-picture actor, especially in the days of the "silent" film. Hero of The Prisoner of Zenda, Scaramouche, Ben Hur, The Student Prince, etc. In "sound": Ben Hur, Mata Hari, Laughing Boy, etc. Made La Virgen que Forjó una Patria for the Mexican government as a start in his efforts to build up the moving-picture industry of his native Mexico.

novelist's novelist. Term applied to an author generally admired by other writers, whose works they study in order to improve their own techniques. It has been applied notably to Gustave FLAUBERT, Henry JAMES, and James JOYCE.

novella (It.). A short prose narrative, generally with a structural center represented by a surprising event. Developed by Giovanni BOCCACCIO in the DECAMERON (1353, published 1471). The term occurs in Renaissance English before novel. See NOVELLE by Matteo Bandello.

Novelle. The German development of the Italian NOVELLA. Particularly cultivated in the romantic and post-romantic periods. Cf. E. K. Bennett, History of the German Novelle, Goethe to Thomas Mann (1934).

Novelle (It., Novellas). A collection of stories by Matteo Bandello (1554), translated both in French and English. It contains the sources of Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet, Much Ado About Nothing, and Twelfth Night.

Novello, Ivor. Originally Ivor Novello DAVIES (1893-). English actor, composer, and film star. Author of the song Keep the Home Fires Burning, and musical revues.

Novello, Vincent (1781-1861). English organist who composed sacred music and introduced to England unknown works of Haydn, Mozart, and Palestrina.

Novels by Eminent Hands. A series of parodies by THACKERAY. Among the authors parodied are FENIMORE COOPER, DISRAELI, LEVER, BULWER LYTTON, etc.

Novum Organum (Lat., "new instrument," from Gr. organon). A philosophical treatise by Francis BACON (1620), written in Latin. It presents Bacon's statement of his inductive method of interpreting nature and organizing knowledge, by which the results of experience are studied and a general conclusion regarding them is then reached; Bacon believed this was the opposite of the procedure of reasoning deductively from a given postulate by means of the SYLLOGISM, which was the universal practice among the scholastic philosophers of his day. The Novum Organum also contains an exposition of Bacon's famous concept of the four "Idols," or false images of the mind, which he saw hindering the attainment of true knowledge: (1) Idols of the Tribe (Idola Tribus), errors originating in human nature itself; (2) Idols of the Cave (Idola Specus), errors originating in the peculiar psychology of each individual; (3) Idols of the Market-Place (Idola Fori), errors and confusions of language originating in social and practical intercourse among men; (4) Idols of the Theater (Idola Theatri), errors originating in formal systems of philosophy, each of which presents a world of its own, like a stage-play.

Now It Can Be Told. Title of a book by Sir Philip GIBBS.

Nowowiejski, Feliks (1877-1946). Polish conductor and composer. Wrote the music for the national hymn of Poland. Paralyzed in a Nazi prison camp during World War II.

nth, or nth plus one, in University slang, means to the utmost degree. Thus, Cut to the nth means wholly unnoticed by a friend. The expression is taken from the index of a mathematical formula, where n stands for any number, and n + 1, one more than any number. Hence, n-dimensional, having an indefinite number of dimensions, n-tuple (on the analogy of quadruple, quintuple, etc.), having an indefinite number of duplications.

Nubbles, Kit. In Dickens' OLD CURIOSITY SHOP, the lad employed to wait on LITTLE NELL, and do all sorts of odd jobs at the "curiosity shop" for her grandfather. He generally begins his sentences with "Why then." When the "curiosity shop" is broken up by QUIFF, Kit takes service under Mr. Garland, Abel Cottage, Finchley.

Kit was a shock-headed, shambling, awkward lad with an uncommonly wide mouth, very red cheeks, a turned-up nose, and a most comical expression of face. He stopped short at the door on seeing a stranger, twirled in his hand an old round hat without a vestige of brim, resting himself now on one leg, and now on the other, and looking with a most extraordinary leer. He was evidently the comedy of little Nell's life.—Dickens, The Old Curiosity Shop, I.

Nucingen, Frédéric de. A shrewd promoter and financier who appears in many of the novels of Balzac's COMÉDIE HUMAINE, notably The Firm of Nucingen (La Maison Nucingen; 1838). Aside from his affair with Esther van Gobseck, his one passion is finance. This wealthy Alsatian Jew is so successful that his favor is sought on all hands and he is admitted into both the peerage and the Legion of Honor.

Madame de Nucingen. Wife of the above, known chiefly as one of the two selfish and ungrateful daughters of Père GORIOT and the mistress of Eugène de RASTIGNAC.

Augusta de Nucingen. Madame de Nucingen's daughter, who marries Eugène de RASTIGNAC.

Nugent, John Charles (1878-1947) and his son, Elliott Nugent (1900-). American actors and playwrights.

Numa Pompilius. The legendary second king of Rome (715-672 B.C.). The nymph Egeria favored him with secret interviews and taught the lessons of wisdom and law which he embodied in the institutions of his nation. These include the temple of Janus, the worship of Terminus, the vestal virgins, etc.

Numa Roumestan. A political novel by Alphonse DAUDET (1881), relating the rise to power of the titular hero, a Provençal of sufficient wit, ambition and impudence to win notable success in the field of politics. He is said to have been drawn from GAMBETTA.

number of the beast. 666; a mystical number of unknown meaning but referring to a certain man mentioned by St. John. It is also known as the Apocalyptic number.

Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast, for it is the number of a man; and his number is six hundred threescore and six —Rev. xiii. 18.

golden number. See under GOLDEN.

Numbers. The fourth book of the Old Testament, dealing with the passage of the Jews through the wilderness on their way to the Promised Land.

Nunc Dimittis. The Song of Simeon (Luke ii. 29), "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace," so called from the opening words of the Latin version, Nunc dimittis servum tuum, Domine.

Hence, to receive one's Nunc dimittis, to be given permission to go; to sing one's Nunc dimittis, to show great delight at departing.

Núñez Cabeza de Vaca, Álvar, see CABEZA DE VACA.

Nungesser, Charles (1892-1927). French military aviator in World War I, believed to have brought down 45 enemy planes. Lost in transatlantic flight.

Nunky. Slang for "Uncle" especially as meaning a pawnbroker; or for "Uncle Sam."

Nunky pays for all. The American Government (see SAM) has to "stand the racket."

Nuns Fret Not at Their Convent's Narrow Room. A sonnet by William WORDSWORTH (1806), celebrating the strict limits and the discipline of the sonnet form in developing the style of a poet.

Nun's Priest's or Nonne Prestes Tale. See CHANTICLEER.

Nurmi, Paavo (1897-). Finnish long distance runner. Olympic winner at Antwerp (1920); Paris (1924); Amsterdam (1928); etc.

Nut-Brown Maid, The. An English ballad (given in Percy's Reliques) dating probably from the late 15th century. It tells how the "Not-browne Mayd" is wooed and won by a knight who pretends to be a banished man. After describing the hardships she would have to undergo if she married him, and finding her love true to the test, he reveals himself to be an earl's son, with large hereditary estates in Westmorland.

Nutmeg State. Connecticut. See under STATES.

Nutter House and The Nutter Family, The. Title of a chapter in Thomas Bailey Aldrich's The Story of a Bad Boy (1870). The old Aldrich house at Portsmouth, N.H., the original of the Nutter house at Rivermouth, still stands, a wing in the rear being now used as a museum of Aldrich relics.

Nutting, Wallace (1861-1941). American clergyman and antiquarian; author of a series of illustrated books, Maine Beautiful; Vermont Beautiful, etc. Painter of water colors.

N.V.A. The National Variety Artists, a club for vaudeville performers. Formerly known as the National Vaudeville Artists.

Nydia. A blind flower girl, one of the leading characters in Bulwer Lytton's LAST DAYS OF POMPEII.

Nym. A corporal in the army under Captain Sir John FALSTAFF, introduced in Shakespeare's drama, The Merry Wives of Windsor and in Henry V, but not in Henry IV.

Nymphidia. A fairy poem by Michael DRAYTON (1627). It is a story told to the poet by Nymphidia, an attendant to Queen Mab. The description of the court, people, and events, all diminutive in scale, is a remarkable performance.

nympholepsy. The frenzy supposed to seize a person after bewitchment by a nymph. Swinburne has a poem called A Nympholept in Astrophel and Other Poems, containing the great lines:

I dare not sleep for delight of the perfect hour,
Lest God be wroth that his gift should be scorned of man.

O

Oak, Gabriel. A prominent character in Hardy's FAR FROM THE MADDING CROWD.

oakenshaw. An oak grove.

When winds were in the oakenshaws and all the cauldrons tolled.

A. E. Housman, The Oacles.

Oakhurst, John. In Bret HARTE's short stories, notably in The Luck of Roaring Camp and The Outcasts of Poker Flat, a California gambler who "had the melancholy air and intellectual abstraction of a Hamlet." He kills himself when snowbound and starving.

Oakley, Annie. Real name Phoebe Anne Oakley Mozee (1860-1926). Famous marks-woman who married the vaudeville actor Frank E. Butler. She became a member of Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show (1885-1902) and starred with rifle and pistol. Among her stunts was shooting holes in tossed-up playing-cards. Hence a punched theatrical pass or any other complimentary ticket came to be called an Annie Oakley. Annie Get Your Gun, a long-run musical comedy (1946-) by Irving BERLIN, starring Ethel Merman, was based on her career.

Oakley, Violet (1874-). American mural painter. Designed murals for the Church of the Angels, New York, for the state capitol at Harrisburg, Pa., etc.

Oaks, The. One of the "classic" English horse-races; it was for three-year-old fillies, and was run at Epsom on the Friday after the DERBY. It was named by the twelfth Earl of Derby, who established the race in 1779, from an estate of his near Epsom named "The Oaks."

Oates, Titus (1649-1705). English impostor fomenting agitation against an alleged Popish Plot whereby Roman Catholics were to be pledged to massacre Protestants, and burn London. Finally convicted for charges preferred against the Duke of York, imprisoned, but pardoned (1689) on accession of William and Mary.

Oath of the Tennis Court. An oath taken by the French National Assembly—after it had been prevented by the king from using its normal meeting place and had convened at the tennis court building (June 20, 1789)—never to disband till France had been given a constitution. As this negated the power of the king, the event is often considered the beginning of the French Revolution.

Oaths of Strassburg. Mutual oaths taken by Charles and Ludwig, grandsons of CHARLEMAGNE, at Strassburg in 842 A.D., in which each brother swore, in the presence of the other's army, to defend the other and not make an alliance against him with Lothair, the third brother, against whom both Charles and Ludwig were fighting for control of the Holy Roman Empire. Each brother swore in the dialect of Latin which the other's army was accustomed to speak in its respective part of the Empire, and the Oaths are historically important as the earliest existing specimens of the languages which later became French and German. The dialect spoken by Charles in his oath was the ancestor of modern German; that spoken by Ludwig, the ancestor of modern French.

oats, he has sown his wild. He has left off his gay habits and has become steady.

Obadiah. (1) A Minor Prophet of the Old Testament and the name of the book in which his prophecy is recorded.

(2) A slang name for a Quaker.

(3) A household servant in Sterne's novel TRISTRAM SHANDY. There is also an Obadiah in Fielding's TOM JONES.

obeahism. The belief in and practice of obeah, i.e., a kind of sorcery or witchcraft prevalent in West Africa and formerly in the West Indies. Obeah is a native word, and signifies something put into the ground to bring about sickness, death, or other disaster.

Oberholtzer, Ellis Paxson (1868-1936). American historian. Pupil of John Bach McMASTER, of whom he wrote a Memoir in 1933. His A History of the United States Since the Civil War (5 vols; 1917-1936) is not considered entirely unprejudiced, being unfair to the Mormons, the labor movement, etc. Also author of The Referendum in America (1893); Robert Morris, Patriot and Financier (1903); Jay Cooke, the Financier of the Civil War (2 vols.; 1907); Henry Clay (1909); etc.

Obermann. A much-heralded novel or psychological study by Etienne de SENANCOUR (1804) which exerted a great influence on the romantic movement of the 19th century. Written in the form of letters, in part describing the author's wanderings in the forest of Fontainebleau and in Switzerland, but in the main confessing his restlessness, disillusionment and torment of mind and soul, the book displays the analytical, introspective trend of 19th and 20th-century fiction.

Oberon. King of the Fairies, husband of Titania. Shakespeare introduces them in his MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM. The name is probably connected with ALBERICH, the king of the elves.

He first appears in the medieval French romance, HUON DE BORDEAUX, where he is a son of Julius Caesar and MORGAN LE FAY. He is only three feet high, but of angelic face, and is lord and king of Mommur. At his birth the fairies bestow their gifts; one gift is insight into men's thoughts, and another the power of transporting himself to any place instantaneously. In the fullness of time legions of angels convey his soul to Paradise.

In Midsummer Night's Dream, Oberon quarrels with his wife Titania about a "changeling" which Oberon wants for a page but Titania refuses to give up. Oberon, in revenge, anoints her eyes in sleep with the extract of "Love in Idleness," the effect of which was to make the sleeper in love with the first object beheld on waking. Titania happens to see a country bumpkin whom Puck has dressed up with an ass head. Oberon comes upon her while she is fondling the clown, and sprinkles on her an antidote. She is so ashamed of her folly that she readily consents to give up the boy to her spouse for his page. The magic extract is also used to good effect by Puck to straighten out the tangled love affairs of HERMIA and LYSANDER and of HELENA and DEMETRIUS.

Obey, André (1892-). French dramatist. NOAH, etc.

Obidicut. The fiend of lust, and one of the five which possess "poor Tom," in Shakespeare's KING LEAR. See HOBBIDANCE.

Obiter Dicta. Title of a book of essays (1884) by Augustine Birrell. An obiter dictum is an incidental and unbinding opinion given by a judge and hence any incidental comment.

objectivism. A term used to designate a type of 20th-century poetry in which material objects are selected, studied, and presented for their own particular value as objects, rather than for their capability in symbolizing an emotion or intellectual concept of the author. See also IMAGISM; SYMBOLISM. The work of William Carlos WILLIAMS, who first used the term, is considered the best example of objectivism; Marianne MOORE and Wallace STEVENS have also been called objectivist poets.

Oblonsky, Prince Stepan Arcadieivitch. A character in Tolstoi's ANNA KARÉNINA, better known as Stiva.

Oboler, Arch (1907-). American radio dramatist. His Alter Ego (1938) was declared best original radio drama of year.

Obregón, Álvaro (1880-1928). Mexican soldier and politician, commanding army during presidency of Carranza (1915-1920) and Huerta (1920). As president of Mexico (1920-1924), he put down Huerta's revolt (1923-1924). Re-elected (1928) but assassinated.

O'Brien, Edward J. (1890-1941). American editor and anthologist. Principally known for the annual American short-story anthology, The Best Short Stories (from 1915).

O'Brien, Fitz-James (1828-1862). American journalist and writer of remarkable short stories of the weird and uncanny, notably The Diamond Lens, The Wondersmith, and What Was It?

O'Brien, Frederick (1869-1932). Widely-traveled American writer, principally known for White Shadows in the South Seas (1919).

Obstinate. In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, an inhabitant of the City of Destruction, who advises Christian to return to his family, and not run on a wild-geese chase.

obverse. In coins, the side bearing the more important device. In U.S. coins, the side with the date. The opposite of reverse.

O Captain! My Captain! Title of a poem by Walt Whitman, published in Sequel to Drum-Taps (1865-1866) and Leaves of Grass (1867). It was written as a tribute to Lincoln, shortly after his assassination. Whitman himself preferred his Lincoln tribute When Lilacs Last in the Dooryard Bloom'd.

ocarina (Ital., literally, "little goose"). A terracotta wind-instrument with mouthpiece and holes for the fingers, which makes a whistling noise. Its shape is responsible for the name.

O'Casey, Sean (1884-). Irish playwright, associated with the Abbey Theater (see IRISH RENAISSANCE) and known for his plays dealing with Irish urban working-class life. See PROLETARIAN LITERATURE. These emphasize character rather than plot, and are usually performed as comedies, although often intended by the author as tragedies. His works include The Shadow of a Gunman (1923); Kathleen Listens In (1923); Juno and the Paycock (1924), winner of the British Hawthorn-den prize in 1926; Nannie's Night Out (1924); The Plough and the Stars (1926); The Silver Tassie (1928); WITHIN THE GATES (1933), which reflects the author's admiration for George Bernard SHAW; Windfalls (1937), stories, poems, plays; The Flying Wasp (1937), drama criticism; I Knock at the Door (1939) and Pictures in the Hallway (1942), autobiographical; The Star Turns Red (1940).

O'Casey was born and raised in the slums of Dublin, not learning to read until he was twelve years old. He worked as a laborer in his early youth, was for a time associated with the Irish Transport Workers Union, taking part in its strike of 1913, and helped organize the Irish Citizen Army during the Irish Revolution of 1916. The Story of the Citizen Army (1919) was his first work to be published.

Occam, William of, see Ockham.

Occasion. A lame old hag in Spenser's FAÉRIE QUEENE (II. iv), mother of Furor, and symbolical of the cause of anger. She is quite bald behind, but Sir GUYON seizes her by the forelock, throws her to the ground, and ultimately vanquishes her.

to improve the occasion. To draw a moral lesson from, or otherwise make good use of, some event which has occurred.

Occleve or Hoccleve, Thomas (1370?-1450?). English poet, a late contemporary of CHAUCER, best known for his De Regimine Principum (written ca. 1412), a political treatise on the duties of a ruler, addressed to the Prince of Wales; it was a translation into English of a Latin work by Aegidius. Occleve also wrote La Male Règle (1406), an autobiographical poem, and other minor works.

Occonestoga. A young Indian who betrays his people in Simms' novel THE YEMASSEE.

Occurrence at Owl Creek Bridge, An. A famous short story by Ambrose BIERCE (1891), describing the execution by hanging of Peyton Farquhar, a Southern plantation owner and civilian during the American Civil War, who has been apprehended while trying to obstruct the building of a Union railroad at Owl Creek Bridge. The hanging takes place at the bridge, and when the trap is pulled and Farquhar falls into the water, he has the delusion, during the last few seconds of his life, that he is swimming underwater and escaping back to his wife and family. The story is considered remarkable for its time in its depiction of the sensations and psychological states of a dying man.

Oceana. A philosophical treatise on the principles of government by James Harrington (1656). See COMMONWEALTHS, IDEAL.

ocean greyhound. A swift steamship.

Oceanus. In classic mythology, a TITAN, the god of the salt river which the ancients believed flowed round the earth and father of all river gods and water sprites.

Ochiltree, Edie. One of Scott's most famous characters, a king's bedesman or blue-gown in THE ANTIQUARY. Edie is a garrulous, kind-hearted, wandering beggar, who assures Mr. Lovel that the supposed ruins of a Roman camp are no such thing. The old bedesman delights "to daunder down the burnsidles and green shaws."

Ochs, Adolph Simon (1858-1935). American publisher of the New York Times (1896-1935) as well as the Philadelphia Times (1902-1912), Philadelphia Public Ledger (1902-1912), and other newspapers.

Ochs von Lerchenau, Baron. In Richard Strauss' opera Der Rosenkavalier, a coarse, jovial, amorous country gentleman, who plans to bestow the "favor" of his old name upon the merchant's daughter Sophie Faninal, in return for her considerable dowry. He is considered one of the most vivid caricatures in all opera.

Ockham or Occam, William of (1300?-1349?). English scholastic philosopher, known as Doctor Invincibilis. Disputed the temporal power of the Pope and, in his Dialectics, anticipated the modern idea of civil rule being independent from the church. His nominalistic thesis, that universals are abstractions devoid of concrete reality, practically concluded the scholastic controversy and prepared the way for the philosophy of Francis Bacon.

Ockham's razor. Entia non sunt multiplicanda (Lat., "entities are not to be multiplied"). With this axiom, which means that all unnecessary facts or constituents in the subject being analyzed are to be eliminated, William of OCKHAM dissected every question as with a razor.

Ocnus, rope of. Profitless labor. Ocnus in Roman fable was always twisting a rope, but an ass ate it as fast as it was twisted.

O'Connell, Daniel (1775-1847). Irish leader, often called the Liberator. As M.P. (elected, 1828), he took his seat only after the Catholic Emancipation (1829). Lord Mayor of Dublin (1841). His leadership was challenged by the Young-Ireland revolutionaries (1845). He died at Genoa on his way to Rome.

O'Connor, Norreys Jephson (1885-). American poet, author of Songs of the Celtic Past (1918); etc.

Octavia (died 11 B. C.). Half-sister of Emperor Augustus and wife of Marc Antony until he divorced her (32 B. C.) when Cleopatra had come into his life. She appears in Antony and Cleopatra by Shakespeare, and in All for Love by Dryden.

octavo. A book composed of sheets folded so that each leaf is one-eighth of a given size of paper.

Octopus, The. A novel by Frank NORRIS (1901), the first of a trilogy planned to deal with American wheat. The production of wheat in California is the subject of this novel, and the "Octopus" is the Pacific and Southwestern Railroad, a symbol of organized trade strangling the country that feeds it. The Octopus was followed by THE PIT.

Octoroon or Life in Louisiana, The. An American drama by Dion BOUCICAULT (1859), based on a novel by M. Reid called The Quadroon. It concerns the fortunes of the octoroon Zoë, sold away from the man she loves to become the property of one she despises.

odalisque. In the harem of a Sultan, a female slave or concubine. The word is of Turkish origin and means literally "chambermaid."

ode. A type of lyric, of no set form, originally intended to be set to music. See PINDARIC VERSE. The ode was widely favored among English poets of the 17th, 18th, and early 19th centuries, appearing in the work of such figures as MILTON, DRYDEN, COLLINS, COLERIDGE, WORDSWORTH, SHELLEY, and KEATS.

Ode in Time of Hesitation, An. Title of a poem by William Vaughn MOODY. The subtitle of the poem is, After seeing at Boston the statue of Robert Gould Shaw, killed while storming Fort Wagner, July 18, 1863, at the head of the first enlisted Negro regiment, the Fifty-fourth Massachusetts. It is one of the finest odes in American poetry. Written during the Spanish-American War, it is a tribute to Shaw and a plea for the United States (bemused by talk of "MANIFEST DESTINY") to "let the island men go free." Moody was strongly against the annexation of the Philippines by the U.S.

Ode on Intimations of Immortality from Recollections of Early Childhood. A famous poem by William WORDSWORTH (1836), based on the Platonic doctrine of recollection, which asserts that the process usually called learning is actually only a recollection to the adult mind of knowledge lost by each individual at birth; a statement occurs in PLATO's dialogue Phaedo. Wordsworth's poem celebrates the child which, "trailing clouds of glory," still retains in infancy memories of the celestial abode from which it has come. Although the mature man has forgotten this knowledge, we are told, he can regain it by heeding his intuition and remembering his own childhood.

Ode Recited at the Commemoration of the Living and Dead Soldiers of Harvard University. By James Russell LOWELL. Privately printed (1865), published in The Cathedral (1877). Also known as the Commemoration Ode. An irregular Pindaric ode, one of the finest in American poetry.

Oderic. In Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, the false knight who, under pretense of escorting ISABELLA, sold her as a slave.

Ode to a Nightingale. A poem by John KEATS (1819), considered one of the poet's greatest compositions. It expresses the emotions of the poet as he listens to the song of a nightingale—his visions of sensuous beauty and his melancholy as he feels the imminence of death.

Perhaps the self-same song that found a path Through the sad heart of Ruth, when, sick for home,
She stood in tears amid the alien corn;
The same that oft-times hath Charmed magic casements, opening on the foam
Of perilous seas, in faery lands forlorn.

Ode to the West Wind. One of the best-known poems of Percy Bysshe SHELLEY (1820), written in TERZA RIMA. In it, the poet addresses the strong wind of Autumn—"tameless, and swift, and proud"—and identifies himself with its force.

Scatter, as from an unextinguished hearth
Ashes and sparks, my words among mankind!
Be through my lips to unawakened earth
The trumpet of a prophecy! O Wind,
If Winter comes, can Spring be far behind?

odeon or odeum. In classical antiquity, a building devoted to poetic and musical contests (hence the name, from ode). The first was built at Athens in the reign of Pericles. Afterwards it was used for public meetings. There were odeons in most Greek cities and in Rome. They were small roofed theaters. Opposite the Luxembourg Gardens in Paris is a theater called L'Odeon, built in 1728.

Odets, Clifford (1906–). American playwright, known in the 1930's as an outstanding proletarian author. See PROLETARIAN LITERATURE. His plays, most of which deal with the frustrations and minor tragedies of middle and lower middle-class people living in New York City during the depression era, and which were compared by enthusiastic critics of the time to the plays of CHEKHOV, are marked by striking dialogue semi-colloquial and semi-journalistic in character. These plays include WAITING FOR LEFTY (1935), Odets' best-known work; AWAKE AND SING (1935), considered the author's best work; Till the Day I Die (1935), concerned with the Communist underground movement in NAZI Germany; Paradise Lost (1935), depicting decline in a middle-class family; Golden Boy (1937), dealing with a violinist of Italian parentage who becomes a prize-fighter in order to make money; Rocket to the Moon (1938), showing a middle-aged Bronx dentist in the throes of a love affair; Night Music (1940); Clash by Night (1942); etc.

Odets was at first an actor with the Theater Guild (see LITTLE THEATER) and in 1931 was one of the founders of the Group Theater, which later produced his best-known plays. A number of critics of the 1930's regarded him as the most promising playwright of the time and a possible successor to Eugene O'NEILL. They expressed disappointment, however, in respect to his later works.

Odin. The Scandinavian name of the god called by the Anglo-Saxons Woden, the supreme god of the later Scandinavian pantheon, he having supplanted THOR.

Odin was god of wisdom, poetry, war, and agriculture, and on this latter account Wednesday (Woden's day) was considered to be specially favorable for sowing. He was god of the dead also, and presided over the banquets of those slain in battle. See VALHALLA. He became the All-wise by drinking from MIMIR's fountain, but purchased the distinction at the cost of one eye, and is usually represented as a one-eyed man wearing a hat and carrying a staff. His remaining eye is the Sun.

The father of Odin was Bor. His brothers are Vili and Ve. His wife is Frigga. His sons are Thor and Balder. His mansion is Gladsheim. His court as war-god is Valhalla. His two black ravens are Hugin (thought) and Munin (memory). His steed is Sleipnir. His ships are Skidbladnir and Naglfar. His spear is Gungnir, which never fails to hit the mark aimed at. His ring is called Draupnir, which every ninth night drops eight other rings of equal value. His throne is Hlidskjalf. His wolves are Geri and Freki. He will be ultimately swallowed up by the Fenris wolf at Ragnarok.

the promise of Odin. The most binding of all oaths to a Norseman. In making it the hand was passed through a massive silver ring kept for the purpose, or through a sacrificial stone, like that called the "Circle of Stennis."

I will bind myself to you . . . by the promise of Odin, the most sacred of our northern rites.—Scott, The Pirate, ch. xxii.

Odin's tree. The gallows.

odium theologicum (Lat.). The bitter hatred of rival theologians. No wars are so sanguinary as holy wars; no persecutions so relentless as religious persecutions; no hatred is so bitter as theological hatred.

Odle, Mrs. Alan, see RICHARDSON, DOROTHY M.

Odo, Duke. The hero of Edith Wharton's VALLEY OF DECISION.

odor of sanctity. In the Middle Ages it was held that a sweet and delightful odor was given off by the bodies of saintly persons at their death, and also when their bodies, if "translated," were disinterred; hence the phrase, he died in the odor of sanctity, i.e., he died a saint.

O'Donnell, Peadar (1896–). Irish novelist, militant in Sinn Fein and Irish Republican Army. Taught in Aran Islands, off Galway. Knows Gaelic well. The Way It Was with Them (1927), etc.

Odrovir or Odhrevir. The "poet's mead" of the Scandinavian gods. It was made of Kvasir's blood mixed with honey, and all who partook of it became poets. Kvasir was the wisest of all men, and could answer any question put to him. He was fashioned out of the saliva spat into a jar by the AESIR and VANIR on their conclusion of peace, and was slain by the dwarfs Fjalar and Galar.

ODTAA. Title of a novel by John Masefield (1926). It means "life is simply one damned thing after another," a pronouncement which has been variously ascribed to Frank Ward O'Malley and Elbert HUBBARD.

Odyssey. The epic poem attributed to the Greek poet Homer which records the adventures of Odysseus (Ulysses) on his long journey from Troy. The word is an adjective formed out of the hero's name, and means the things or adventures of Ulysses. Any long journey may be referred to as an odyssey. A brief summary of the epic follows:

Book I. The poem opens in the island of CALYPSO, with a complaint against Neptune and Calypso for preventing the return of Odysseus to Ithaca.

II. TELEMACHUS, the son of Odysseus, starts in search of his father, accompanied by Pallas Athene in the guise of MENTOR.

III. He goes to Pylos, to consult old NESTOR, and

IV. is sent by him to Sparta, where he is told by MENELAUS that Odysseus is detained in the island of Calypso.

V. In the meantime, Odysseus leaves the island, and, being shipwrecked, is cast on the shore of Phaeacia,

VI. where NAUSICAA, the king's daughter, finds him asleep, and

VII. takes him to the court of her father ALKINOUS, who

VIII. entertains him hospitably.

IX. At a banquet, Odysseus relates his adventures since he started from Troy. Tells about the Lotus-eaters and the Cyclops, with his adventures in the cave of Polyphemus. He tells how

X. the wind-god gave him the winds in a bag. In the island of CIRCE, he says, his crew were changed to swine, but HERMES gave him a herb called moly, which disenchanted them.

XI. He tells the king how he descended into HADES;

XII. gives an account of the sirens; of SCYLLA and CHARYBDIS; and of his being cast on the island of Calypso.

XIII. Alcinous gives Odysseus a ship which conveys him to Ithaca, where he assumes the disguise of a beggar, XIV. and is lodged in the house of EUMAEUS, a faithful old domestic.

XV. Telemachus, having returned to Ithaca, is lodged in the same house,

XVI. and becomes known to his father.

XVII. Odysseus goes to his palace, is recognized by his dog Argus; but XVIII. the beggar Irus insults him, and Odysseus breaks his jaw-bone.

XIX. While bathing, the returned monarch is recognized by a scar on his leg;

XX. and when he enters his palace, becomes an eye-witness to the disorders of the court, and to the way in which

XXI. PENELOPE is annoyed by suitors. To excuse herself, Penelope tells her suitors he only shall be her husband, who can bend Odysseus' bow. None can do so but the stranger, who bends it with ease. Concealment is no longer possible or desirable.

XXII. He falls on the suitors hip and thigh;
 XXIII. is recognized by his wife;
 XXIV. visits his old father LAERTES; and the poem ends.

The 20th-century Irish novelist James JOYCE adapted the Odyssey as the framework of his famous novel ULYSSES, presenting the epic characters in contemporary Irish metamorphoses of his day.

Oedipus. In classic myth, the son of Laius, King of Thebes, and Jocasta, his wife. In order to evade the prediction of an oracle that this child would slay his father, he was left to die on Mount Cithaeron. A Corinthian shepherd found the babe with his feet bound together (hence his name Oedipus or "swollen feet") and he grew to maturity as the adopted son of Polybus, King of Corinth. Again an oracle predicted that he would slay his own father and defile his mother. Thinking Polybus his true father, he set out from Corinth and on his journey met, quarreled with and killed a stranger, who was really Laius. He next solved the famous riddle of the SPHINX and became in consequence King of Thebes, unwittingly marrying Jocasta, his own mother. Later a terrible plague ravaged Thebes, and the oracle declared that only the banishment of the murderer of Laius would bring it to an end. The truth came out at last through the seer Tiresias; Jocasta took her own life, and Oedipus put out his eyes and roamed about the earth in misery, attended only by his daughter, the faithful ANTIGONE.

This legend is the basis of a famous trilogy by Sophocles, Oedipus Tyrannus, Oedipus at Colonus and Antigone; also of tragedies by CORNEILLE (1659) and VOLTAIRE (1718), both entitled Oedipe, and of many other tragedies. For the story of the two sons of Oedipus, Eteocles and Polynices, whom he left as rulers of Thebes, see Seven Against Thebes under THEBES.

Oedipus complex. See under COMPLEX.

Oemler, Mrs. Marie, née Conway (1879-1932). American novelist and short-story writer, born in Georgia. Her Slippy McGee (1917) is an appealing and very popular novel about a crook. Her most ambitious book, The Holy Lover (1927), is about John Wesley.

Oenone. In classic myth a nymph of Mount Ida, who had the gift of prophecy, and told her husband Paris that his voyage to Greece would involve him and his country (Troy) in ruin. According to the legend, Paris came back to her beseeching her to heal his severe wounds, but she refused, and changed her mind too late. When the dead body of old Priam's son was laid at her feet, she stabbed herself. This story forms the subject of Tennyson's Oenone and The Death of Oenone and William Morris' Death of Paris (Earthly Paradise III).

Oenopian. In classic myth, father of MEROPE, to whom the giant ORION made advances. Oenopian, unwilling to give his daughter to him, put out the giant's eyes in a drunken fit.

Oenslager, Donald Mitchell (1902-). American stage designer, Associate Professor of Drama, Yale University. Author of Scenery Then and Now.

O'Faoláin, Séan (1900-). Irish teacher, novelist, and biographer of De Valera. Charter Member, Irish Royal Academy of Letters. Began writing in Gaelic. A Nest of Simple Folk (1933); King of the Beggars: A Life of Daniel O'Connell (1938); etc.

Offitt. In John Hay's THE BREAD-WINNERS, a labor organizer shown as a villain.

offset process. A process in printing where the impression is first made on a cylinder with a rubber surface, and then transferred to the paper, instead of being made directly upon the paper.

Of Human Bondage. A novel by W. Somerset MAUGHAM (1916), semi-autobiographical in content and regarded as the author's best work. It deals with the childhood, adolescence, and early youth of Philip CAREY and his efforts to "find" himself. An orphan raised by an elderly aunt and uncle, Philip is lonely, shy, and sensitive, very much aware of his inferior social position and his club foot, a congenital infirmity. After a period of misery at school, he succeeds in going to Paris to study painting, for which he believes he has a vocation, and comes in contact with a group of art students, painters, writers, and the like—typical BOHEMIANS of early 20th-century Paris. He is impressed by their iconoclasm and their free and careless, if often impecunious and sordid, lives, but he is unable to emulate them. When his art teacher frankly tells him that his work shows "industry and intelligence" but no talent, he decides to give up painting completely rather than become a second-rate artist. He returns to London, where he has an unhappy love affair with Mildred, a petty, selfish, and vulgar little Cockney waitress. After further misfortunes, he at last enters a London hospital to study medicine and is offered passage as a ship's doctor to the Orient. See also PRICE, FANNY. In 1946 Mr. Maugham presented the sixteen leather-bound exercise books making up the manuscript of Of Human Bondage to the Library of Congress "as a way of showing his appreciation to this country, for the hospitality with which he was received here during the war."

O'Flaherty, Liam (1896–). Irish novelist, known for his novels of 20th-century Irish life, especially during the Irish Revolution of 1916. Among his works are Thy Neighbor's Wife (1924); Black Soul (1924); The Informer (1925), his best-known novel, later produced as a highly praised American motion picture; Mr. Gilhooley (1926); The Life of Tim Healy (1927), biography; The Assassin (1928); A Tourist's Guide to Ireland (1929); The House of Gold (1929); The Return of the Brute (1929); Two Years (1930); The Puritan (1931); I Went to Russia (1931), travel; Skerrett (1932); The Martyr (1933); Hollywood Cemetery (1935); Famine (1937); Shame the Devil (1934), autobiography. Collections of short stories include: Spring Sowing (1926); The Tent (1926); The Fairy Goose (1927); Red Barbara (1928); The Mountain Tavern (1929); The Wild Swan (1932).

O'Flaherty took active part in the Irish Revolution, organizing a regiment of ex-soldiers to fight against the English. After the conclusion of World War I, he vagabonded around the world, working at odd jobs in numerous countries, including the U.S. See also O'CASEY, SEAN; PROLETARIAN LITERATURE.

Of Mice and Men. A novelette by John STEINBECK (1937), dramatized for the theater in 1938 and later for the screen. It deals with the friendship between two migrant laborers in California—Lennie Small, a giant half-wit of tremendous strength, who likes to caress soft things, and George Milton, who acts as Lennie's protector and directs him in feats of strength. The two dream of owning a farm of their own one day. The daughter-in-law of the owner of the farm on which the two are working is a nymphomaniac and decides to try to seduce Lennie. When in response he attempts to stroke her "soft" hair, she becomes frightened and tries to escape, Lennie accidentally breaks her neck with his huge hands. In order to save his friend from an angry lynch mob, George shoots Lennie.

Ofterdingen, Heinrich von, see HEINRICH VON OFTERDINGEN.

Of Thee I Sing. A musical comedy with book by George S. KAUFMAN, Morrie Ryskind, and Ira Gershwin, and music by George GERSHWIN, produced in 1931. It satirizes American party politics, showing a presidential campaign conducted on a platform of Love, with John P. Wintergreen, the party candidate, to choose a bride in an Atlantic City beauty contest if he is successful. It won the Pulitzer prize in 1932.

Of Time and the River: A Legend of Man's Hunger in His Youth. A partially autobiographical novel by Thomas WOLFE (1935), a sequel to LOOK HOMEWARD, ANGEL. In it, Eugene GANT, the hero, continues the pilgrimage of passionate discovery through the world that he began in adolescence in the earlier book. He spends two years as a graduate student at Harvard University, there meeting various scholars, eccentrics, and aesthetes, returns home for the dramatic and terrible death of his father, and takes a job as a teacher of literature in New York City, at the "School for Utility Cultures" (New York University). There he meets more odd characters, has further passionate love affairs, and becomes acquainted with the life of the suburban, socially élite classes. Eventually he goes to Europe, touring France with two girls and a former Harvard friend, Starwick (also drawn from life) whom he discovers to be a homosexual. When he is exhausted financially—and, to some extent, emotionally—Eugene returns to the U.S., ready for more adventures.

Og. King of Bashan; according to rabbinical mythology, an antediluvian giant, saved from the flood by climbing on the roof of the ark. After the passage of the Red Sea, Moses first conquered Sihon, and then advanced against the giant Og (whose bedstead, made of iron, was above fifteen feet long and nearly seven feet broad, Deut. iii. 11). The legend says that Og plucked up a mountain to hurl at the Israelites, but he got so entangled with his burden that Moses was able to kill him without much difficulty.

In Dryden's ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, Og stands for Thomas SHADWELL, who was very large and fat. See also MACFLECKNOE.

Ogden, Charles Kay (1889–). British educator; inventor of BASIC ENGLISH. Co-author with I. A. Richards of The Meaning of Meaning (1923). Author of The System of Basic English (1934).

Ogham or Ogam. The traditional alphabet of the ancient British and Irish peoples, used in writing on wood or stone, supposedly invented by one Oghma.

Ogier the Dane. One of the great heroes of medieval romance; a paladin of Charlemagne, and son of Geoffrey, King of Denmark, of which (as Holger Danske) he is still the national hero. Fairies attended at his birth, and bestowed upon him divers gifts. Among these fairies was MORGAN LE FAY, who, when the knight is a hundred years old, puts him on a ship for Avalon, "hard by the Terrestrial Paradise." On reaching the island he enters the castle, where he finds a horse sitting at a banquet-table. The horse, who was once a mighty prince, conducts him to Morgan le Fay, who gives him a ring which removes all infirmities and restores him to ripe manhood, and a crown which makes him forget his country and past life, and introduces him to King Arthur. Two hundred years roll on, and France is invaded by the Paynims. Morgan le Fay now sends Ogier to defend "le bon pays de France," and when he has routed the invaders she takes him back to Avalon, where he remains until the time for him to reappear on the earth. In a pack of French cards, Ogier the Dane is knave of spades. His exploits are related in the chansons de geste; he is introduced by Ariosto in ORLANDO FURIOSO, and by William MORRIS in his Earthly Paradise (August).

Oldbuck, Jonathan. In Scott's ANTIQUARY, the Laird of Monkbarrow, an "antiquary" devoted to the study and accumulation of old coins and medals, etc. He is sarcastic, irritable, and a woman-hater, but kind-hearted and a great humorist. The author said a certain George Constable (1719-1803) was the original of Jonathan Oldbuck.

An excellent temper, with a slight degree of sub-acid humour; learning, wit, and drollery, the more poignant that they were a little marked by the peculiarities of an old bachelor; a soundness of thought, rendered more forcible by an occasional quaintness of expression.—these were the qualities in which the creature of my imagination resembled my benevolent and excellent old friend.—Sir Walter Scott.

Oldcastle, Sir John (1377?-1417). A historical character, better known as Lord Cobham, the original of Shakespeare's famous FALSTAFF. A play called Sir John Oldcastle, now ascribed to Anthony Munday, was printed in 1600 as Shakespeare's work, and in the 1600 quarto edition of 1 and 2 Henry IV, there are indications that the name Oldcastle was originally used but later changed to Falstaff.

Old Chester. The scene of most of the novels and short stories of Margaret DELAND, notably the two volumes of short stories, Old Chester Tales (1898) and Around Old Chester (1915) and the novels, THE AWAKENING OF HELENA RICHIE, THE IRON WOMAN and An Old Chester Secret (1920). Mrs. Deland's Old Chester is said to be in many respects a counterpart of Manchester, Pa., where she was born, now a part of Pittsburgh.

Old Contemptibles. The German Kaiser jeered at the small Expeditionary Force England sent to France in 1914 as a "contemptible little army." In typically British fashion the name was immediately adopted.

Old Curiosity Shop, The. A novel by Charles DICKENS (1841). The heroine, Nell Trent, better known as LITTLE NELL, lives with her grandfather, an old man who keeps a "curiosity shop." He adores her, but loses what little he has by gambling, and they roam about the country as beggars until finally Little Nell dies. The book relates also the adventures of a boy named Kit NUBBLES, employed for a time in the curiosity shop. Later, the hunchback, Daniel QUILP, contrives to have him convicted of theft and sentenced to transportation, but he is saved from this fate by the good offices of a girl-of-all-work, nicknamed "the MARCHIONESS."

Oldenburg Horn. A horn long in the possession of the reigning princes of the House of Oldenburg, but now in the collection of the King of Denmark. According to tradition, Count Otto of Oldenburg, in 967, was offered drink in this silver-gilt horn by a "wild woman," at the Osenborg. As he did not like the look of the liquor, he threw it away, and rode off with the horn.

Oldfield, Anne (1683-1730). English eighteenth-century actress. Most successful in The Fair Penitent by Rowe and The Provok'd Husband by Colley Cibber. Pope called her "Narcissa" in his Moral Essays. She liked comedy better than tragedy, and would often say, "I hate to have a Page dragging my Tail about. Why do they not give Porter these parts? She can put on a better Tragedy Face than I can." Buried in Westminster Abbey under Congreve's monument.

Oldfield, Claude Houghton. Pseudonym Claude Houghton (1889-). English poet and novelist, best-known for I Am Jonathan Scrivener (1934). Metaphysical yet witty.

Old Man's Comforts And How He Gained Them, The. A poem by Robert SOUTHEY (1799), best-known through the parody of it written by Lewis Carroll in his FATHER WILLIAM.

"You are old, Father William," the young man cried,
"And life must be hastening away;
You are cheerful, and love to converse upon death,
Now tell me the reason, I pray."
"I am cheerful, young man," Father William replied,
"Let the cause thy attention engage;
In the days of my youth I remembered my God!
And He hath not forgotten my age!"
Southey, The Old Man's Comforts.

Old Mortality. A novel by Sir Walter SCOTT (1816), a story of the struggle between the Covenanters and the Cavaliers under Claverhouse in 1670-1671. "Old Mortality," who tells the story to the supposed author, Jedediah CLEISHBOTHAM, is an eccentric itinerant whose whole life is given over to cleaning the moss from old gravestones, cutting new inscriptions and erecting new stones for the fallen Covenanters. The original of this character was Robert Paterson (1715-1801).

Old Oaken Bucket, The. An old and popular song by Samuel Woodworth (Am., 1784-1842).

The old oaken bucket, the moss-covered bucket,
The iron-bound bucket that hung in the well.

Old Wives' Tale, The. A novel by Arnold BENNETT (1908). The central figures are two sisters, Constance and Sophia, who come together in their old age, both wives and finally widows. Constance has lived quietly in her native town of Bursley, one of Bennett's FIVE TOWNS, while Sophia has prospered by keeping boarders in Paris. The book gives a realistic picture of middle-class English life. For the allusion of the title, see above under OLD.

Old Woman of Berkeley. A ballad by SOUTHEY, based on an old legend, concerning a woman whose life has been very wicked. On her death-bed she sends for her son who is a monk, and for her daughter who is a nun, and bids them put her in a strong stone coffin, and to fasten the coffin to the ground with strong bands of iron. Fifty priests and fifty choristers are to pray and sing over her for three days, and the bell is to toll without ceasing. The first night passes without much disturbance. The second night, the candles burn blue, and dreadful yells are heard outside the church. But the third night the Devil breaks into the church and carries off the old woman on his black horse.

Olympian odes. See EPINICIA.

Olympian Zeus or Jove. A statue by PHIDIAS, one of the seven wonders of the world. Pausanias (vii. 2) says when the sculptor placed it in the temple at Olympia (433 B. C.), he prayed the god to indicate whether or not he was satisfied with it, and immediately a thunderbolt fell on the floor of the temple without doing the slightest harm.

It was a chryselephantine statue, i.e., made of ivory and gold, and though seated on a throne, was sixty feet in height. The left hand rested on a scepter, and the right palm held a statue of Victory in solid gold. The robes were of gold, and so were the four lions which supported the footstool. The throne was of cedar, embellished with ebony, ivory, gold, and precious stones.

It was removed to Constantinople in the 5th century A. D., and was lost in the great fire of 475.

Olympic games. The greatest of the four sacred festivals of the ancient Greeks, held at Olympia every fourth year, in the month of July. The festival commenced with sacrifices and included racing, wrestling, and all kinds of contests, ending on the fifth day with processions, sacrifices, and banquets to the victors—who were garlanded with olive leaves. In 1895 an international committee met in Paris in the interests of establishing modern Olympic games to which various countries should send contestants. The first games of the new series were held at Athens in 1896, and after that date they occurred every four years with the exception of the duration of World War I and II.

Olympus. The home of the gods of ancient Greece, where Zeus held his court, a mountain about 9800 ft. high on the confines of Macedonia and Thessaly. It is used for any pantheon, as "Odin, Thor, Balder, and the rest of the Northern Olympus."

om. Among the Brahmans, the mystic equivalent for the name of the Deity. It was adopted by modern occultists to denote absolute goodness and truth or the spiritual essence.

om mani padme hum (Om, the jewel, is in the lotus: amen). The mystic formula of the Tibetans and northern Buddhists used as a charm and for many religious purposes. They are the first words taught to a child and the last uttered on the death-bed of the pious. The lotus symbolizes universal being, and the jewel the individuality of the utterer.

O'Mahony, John (1816-1877). Irish political leader. Helped organize Irish Republican brotherhood (1858). Headed American Fenians (1858-1866 and 1872-1877).

O'Malley, Grace. See PRANKQUEAN.

Omár Kháyyám. The 11th-century Persian astronomer-poet of Nishapur. He wrote ten works, the chief of which is The Rubáiyát. This was translated by Edward FITZGERALD (1859) in a free rather than a literal version.

omega. The last letter of the Greek alphabet. See ALPHA.

Omega Workshops. A communal art enterprise organized by Roger FRY in the early 20th century, based on the experiments of William MORRIS. For a time, Wyndham LEWIS participated in the undertaking.

Omnium, Palliser Plantagenet, Duke of. One of Trollope's best known characters. He first appears in Can You Forgive Her (1864) and subsequently plays a leading rôle in the four PARLIAMENTARY NOVELS, Phineas Finn (1869), Phineas Redux (1874), The Prime Minister (1876) and The Duke's Children (1880). Although his talents and his high sense of honor and devotion to his country bring him the premiership, the Duke is too typically the shy, proud and reserved English gentleman to win the cordial sympathy that is given to the magnetic young Irishman, Phineas Finn, of the same Parliamentary novels. Lady Glencora, the Duke's wife, is like him, typically English. Trollope said of them—

I think that Plantagenet Palliser, Duke of Omnium, is a perfect gentleman. If he be not, then I am unable to describe a gentleman. She is by no means a perfect lady; but if she be not all over a woman, then am I not able to describe a woman. I do not think it probable that my name will remain among those who in the next century will be known as the writers of English prose fiction; but if it does, that permanence of success will probably rest on the character of Plantagenet Palliser, Lady Glencora and the Rev. Mr. Crawley.—Trollope, Autobiography, 313.

Omnibus Bill. A congressional bill dealing with a number of different subjects. The famous Omnibus Bill of American history was the Compromise of 1850.

Omoo. A romance of the South Seas by Herman MELVILLE (1847) completing the adventures of the voyage recorded in TYPEE. Omoo is Polynesian for "rover." The scene is laid largely in Tahiti; and sailors, natives, beach-combers and missionaries are portrayed in lively manner. The book occasioned much criticism because of its treatment of missionaries.

O'More, Rory. Name of three famous Irish rebel chiefs of the 16th and 17th centuries, appearing often in Irish poetry.

Omphale. In classic myth the masculine but attractive Queen of Lydia, to whom HERCULES was bound a slave for three years. He fell in love with her, and led an effeminate life spinning wool, while Omphale wore the lion's skin and was lady paramount. Le Rouet d'Omphale (Omphale's Spinning-Wheel), is the name of a well-known tone-poem by the composer Camille SAINT-SAËNS.

On American Taxation. A famous speech by Edmund BURKE, delivered in the English Parliament on April 19, 1774, urging that the duty on tea imported into the American colonies be repealed. It was not successful.

On Borrowed Time. An American comedy by Paul Osborn, based on a novel (1937) by Lawrence Watkin.

Once in a Lifetime. An American comedy (1930) by George S. KAUFMAN and Moss HART.

On Conciliation with the American Colonies. A speech by Edmund BURKE, delivered to the English Parliament in March 1775 in an effort to prevent disaffection between Great Britain and the colonies in America by granting them autonomy.

on dit (Fr., "they say"). A rumor, a report, a bit of gossip; as, "There is an on dit that he is trying to get a divorce."

Ondt and the Gracehoper, The. In James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE, a fable told by Shaun, or Kevin EARWICKER, obviously named for the fable of The Ant and the Grasshopper. It is interpreted as an allegory for the conflict between the practical and artistic ways of life.

O'Neale or O'Neill, Margaret (1796-1879). Known as Peggy. Second wife of John Henry Eaton (1790-1856), daughter of a Washington innkeeper. When Eaton became Andrew Jackson's Secretary of War, Mrs. Eaton was not accepted socially by the cabinet member's wives, and Eaton was forced to resign (1831). Cf. That Awful Mrs. Eaton, a play by Stephen Vincent Benét and John Farrar, and The Patience of John Morland, a ROMAN À CLEF by Mary Dillon.

Onegin, Evgeni B. (1883-1919). Russian composer of operas, ballets, choral works, and songs. Eugen Onegin is an opera by TCHAIKOVSKY, based on a story by PUSHKIN.

One-Hoss Shay, The. A famous poem by O. W. HOLMES (1858), actually titled The Deacon's Masterpiece. The deacon constructed his shay without a "weakest spot," and it lasted a hundred years, but:

You see, of course, if you're not a dunce
How it went to pieces all at once,
All at once and nothing first,
Just as bubbles do when they burst,
End of the wonderful one-hoss shay,
Logic is logic. That's all I say.

Oneida Community. A perfectionist religious society established (1847) in New York State by John Humphrey NOYES, an experiment in practical communism which developed a good school system and metal manufactures. The polygamy, polyandry, and other unconventional practices of the colony aroused the self-righteousness of the general public, and caused its abandonment in 1879. It was later reorganized as a business corporation (1881).

O'Neill, Danny. Hero of a series of novels by James T. FARRELL including A World I Never Made (1936); No Star Is Lost (1938); Father and Son (1940); etc. At the outset, he is brought up in a lower-middle-class Irish Catholic background in Chicago similar to that of Studs LONIGAN, his father being a driver for an express company. He goes to live with more well-to-do relatives, however, and is shown as a quiet little boy with a precocious knowledge of baseball. He grows up to be a sensitive young man, becoming a student at the University of Chicago and rebelling against the life accepted by Studs Lonigan. Danny, who is considered to be based on the author himself, also appears briefly in the Lonigan series, pointed out by representative characters of those novels as a horrible example of non-Catholic education.

O'Neill, Eugene Gladstone (1888-). American playwright, famous for his technical experiments and innovations in the theater, his powerful pessimism, and his grim and moving psychological studies of men and women in the America of his time, sometimes with mystical and religious overtones. His works, which show the influence of classic Greek drama, STRINDBERG, and, possibly, the plays of the Irish nationalist theater (see IRISH RENAISSANCE), include Provincetown Plays (1916); The Long Voyage Home (1917); Ile (1918); The Moon of the Caribbees (1918); BEYOND THE HORIZON (1920), winner of the 1920 Pulitzer prize; THE EMPEROR JONES (1921); The Straw (1921); THE HAIRY APE (1922); ANNA CHRISTIE (1922), awarded the Pulitzer prize and a gold medal from the National Institute of Arts and Letters; ALL GOP'S CHILLUN GOT WINGS (1924); Desire Under the Elms (1924); Marco Millions (1924); THE GREAT GOD BROWN (1925); LAZARUS LAUGHED (1926); Dynamo (1928); STRANGE INTERLUDE (1928), winner of the 1928 Pulitzer prize; MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA (1931); Ah! Wilderness (1932); Days Without End (1933); The Iceman Cometh (1946). His plays show a development from realism in his earlier compositions, which many critics consider his best, to symbolism in his later works, drawn from the classic Greek, Elizabethan, and expressionistic (see EXPRESSIONISM) traditions. His subject-matter is usually life on the sea or the waterfront, or decadence and violence in New England.

O'Neill, whose father, James O'Neill was a well-known American actor, best known for his MONTE CRISTO, spent his early youth in restless wandering, working at odd jobs about the country and taking several voyages at sea, which provided him with much material for his plays. He studied in the famous HARVARD 47 Workshop course in playwriting and joined the PROVINCETOWN PLAYERS soon after the organization was founded. His work first attracted attention in productions at the Provincetown Playhouse in GREENWICH VILLAGE. He was one of the founders of the Theater Guild. (See LITTLE THEATER.) He was awarded the Nobel prize for literature in 1936, and is considered by many critics to be the greatest of American dramatists. After the production of Days Without End in 1933, he retired to seclusion to write a new cycle of plays on a single theme.

O'Neill, Rose Cecil (1874-1944). American illustrator and author; widely known as the original designer of the kewpies (from Cupids) which made a great commercial success for her as pictures and dolls, etc. Rose O'Neill is less well known for her remarkable poetry, as in The Master-Mistress (1922), her paintings and strange drawings, her novels Garda (1929) and The Goblin Woman (1930). She lived near Westport, Connecticut, in what she called Carabas Castle, and held salons. Once wife of Harry Leon WILSON.

Oneiza. In Southey's THALABA THE DESTROYER, the bride of Thalaba. She dies on the wedding night.

One of Ours. A novel by Willa CATHER (1922). It is the story of Claude Wheeler, a boy who grows up on a Western farm, goes to a Western university and later serves his country overseas in World War I. It was awarded the Pulitzer prize.

one-step. An American ballroom dance, adapted from the turkey-trot, with turns and draw-steps.

Onions, Oliver. Also George Oliver (1873-). English novelist; married to the novelist Berta Ruck. A typical Yorkshireman. Clemence Dane called him "a lone wolf of literature." A grim realist and remarkable writer on the supernatural. Whom God Hath Sundered (a trilogy; 1926); Collected Ghost Stories (1935); etc.

Only, the (Ger. der Einzige). A name given to the German writer, Johann Paul Friedrich Richter (1763-1825).

Only the Dead Know Brooklyn. A prose sketch in soliloquy form by Thomas Wolfe, celebrating the streets, neighborhoods, and local points of interest of Brooklyn. It is written in the supposed dialect of the borough itself.

Only Yesterday. An informal history of the U.S. (1931) in the 1920's, with a sequel, Since Yesterday (1940), for the following decade by Frederick Lewis Allen. Both volumes are valuable source books for the social historian.

onomatopoeia. Primarily the forming of words to suggest by their sound the object or idea presented (see BOWWOW THEORY), as buzz, hiss, clack, bang, twitter. In poetry, it is used as a device to give by the combination of sounds an effect consonant with the meaning, as Milton's:

Fountains, and ye that warble as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs, warbling tune His praise.

Dryden's Alexander's Feast, Tennyson's Lotus Eaters, and Swinburne's Garden of Proserpine are noteworthy examples of the use of onomatopoeia.

On the Banks of the Wabash Far Away. A popular song in the U.S. at the time of the Spanish-American War. See DREISER, THEODORE.

Onward, Christian Soldiers. A hymn written by Sabine Baring-Gould (1834-1924) and set to music by Sir Arthur Sullivan.

Oom Paul, see KRUGER, JOHANNES PAULUS.

Opal Whiteley, The Story of. An imaginative narrative said to be the production of the child Opal Whiteley, published in the Atlantic Monthly (1920) and later in book form. There was a great deal of discussion regarding its authenticity. See also ASHFORD, DAISY.

open.

Open Door. The principle of equal opportunity to all nations in the matter of foreign trade.

Open, Sesame! See SESAME.

open shop. See SHOP.

Open Boat and Other Tales of Adventure, The. Eight short stories by Stephen Crane (published in book form, 1898). They give, for the most part, Crane's own experiences as a war correspondent.

opéra bouffe (Fr.). Farcical comic opera.

Operation Crossroads. The code name given by the military to the atom bomb experiments conducted by the Navy in the Pacific in the summer of 1946. The operations were designed to show whether navies would stand up under atom bombs.

Ophelia. In Shakespeare's HAMLET, the young, beautiful daughter of POLONIUS, Lord Chamberlain to the King of Denmark. Hamlet falls in love with her, but, finding marriage inconsistent with his plans for vengeance, he simulates madness. Ophelia is so wounded by his strange behavior to her that her intellect gives way.

Ophir. The country, in southeastern Arabia, which was the source of the treasure of King Solomon. Cf. 1. Kings x. 11.

Ophiuchus. A northern constellation south of Hercules, shown on old astronomical charts as a man grasping the Serpent. Also known as "the Serpent-bearer" or "Serpentarius."

Opie, John (1761-1807). English portrait and historical painter, known as "The Cornish Wonder." Did portraits of Dr. Johnson, Burke, Southey, William and Mary Godwin, etc. His second wife Amelia Opie, née Alderson (1769-1853), a novelist and poet, based her novel Adeline Mowbray (1804) upon the life-story of Mary Wollstonecraft and became a Quaker and friend of Elizabeth Fry.

O Pioneers! A novel by Willa CATHER (1913), dealing with Swedish settlers in Nebraska. On the death of her father, John Bergson, Alexandra Bergson takes over the care of her family and the management of the farm. The other Bergsons are weak or dull, but Alexandra, energetic and courageous, succeeds in building up a prosperous farm. Her hopes for the future of her younger brother, Emil, are blasted when Emil is killed by a jealous husband of the community, but eventually her loneliness comes to an end with her marriage to Carl Linstrum, who shares her superior qualities.

Opp, Julie (1871-1921). 2nd wife of William FAVERSHAM; supporting roles.

Oppenheim, Edward Phillips (1866-1946). Author of 100 novels of adventure and political intrigue, besides many short stories and plays. A daily output of 5,000 words, dictated simultaneously into two dictaphones.

Oppenheim, James (1882-1932). American free verse poet and fiction writer. His best poems are collected in The Sea (1924). His stories of Dr. Rast are his best prose and a reflection of his early experiences as a social worker. In his later years he was exceedingly interested in psychoanalysis. Cf. Horace Gregory's remarkable poem "13 (For J. O.)," in Poems 1930-40, The Meek Shall Disinherit the Earth.

Opper, Frederick Burr (1857-1937). American cartoonist and illustrator. On staffs of Frank Leslie's Magazine, Puck, and New York Journal. Created Happy Hooligan, the mule Maud, Alphonse and Gaston, and other comic-strip characters. Illustrated Short Sixes by Henry Cuyler BUNNER; Bill Nye's Comic History of the United States; and produced Puck's Oppor Book (1888), Happy Hooligan Home Again and Maud the Matchless (30 color comics each; 1907); etc.

oppidan. At Eton, a student who is not a colleger but boards in the town or in the house of an assistant master. The word means "townsman." The Oppidan is a suppressed novel by Shane LESLIE.

opportunism. A policy of expediency, of seizing the opportunity regardless of abstract or logical principles. The famous opportunists of French history were the followers of GAMBETTA (1838-1882).

Ops. In classic myth, a goddess of plenty, identified with RHEA.

Optic, Oliver. The pen name of William Taylor ADAMS, a prolific writer for boys, author of the Amy and Navy series, Starry Flag series, etc.

optimism. The doctrine that "whatever is, is right," that everything which happens is for the best. It was originally set forth by LEIBNITZ from the postulate of the omnipotence of God, and is cleverly travestied by Voltaire in his CANDIDE, ou L'OPTIMISME, where Dr. Pangloss continually harps on the maxim that "all is for the best in this best of all possible worlds."

oracle (Lat. oraculum, from orare, "to speak, to pray"). The answer of a god or inspired priest to an inquiry respecting the future; the deity giving responses; the place where the deity could be consulted, etc.; hence, a person whose utterances are regarded as profoundly wise, an infallible, dogmatical person—

I am Sir Oracle,
And when I ope my lips let no dog bark.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, i, 1.

In ancient Greece oracles were extremely numerous, and very expensive to those who consulted them. The most famous were the—

Oracle of APOLLO, at Delphi, the priestess of which was called the Pythoress; at Delos, and at Claros.

Oracle of DIANA, at Colchis; of ESCULAPIUS, at Epidaurus, and another in Rome

Oracle of HERCULES, at Athens, and another at Gades.

Oracle of JUPITER, at Dodona (the most noted), another at Ammon, in Libya; another at Crete.

Oracle of MARS, in Thrace; MINERVA, in Mycenae; PAN, in Arcadia.

Oracle of Triphonius, in Boeotia, where only men made the responses.

Oracle of VENUS, at Paphos, another at Aphaca, and many others.

In most of the temples women, sitting on a tripod, made the responses, many of which were either ambiguous or so obscure as to be misleading; to this day, our word oracular is still used of obscure as well as of authoritative pronouncements.

The difficulty of "making head or tail" of oracles is well illustrated by the following classic examples:

When Croesus consulted the Delphic oracle respecting a projected war, he received for answer, "Croesus Halyn penetrans magnam, pervertet opum vim" (When Croesus passes over the river Halys, he will overthrow the strength of an empire) Croesus supposed the oracle meant he would overthrow the enemy's empire, but it was his own that he destroyed.

Pyrrhus, being about to make war against Rome, was told by the oracle, "Aio te, Acacide, Romanos vincere posse" (I say, Pyrrhus, that you the Romans can conquer), which may mean either You, Pyrrhus, can overthrow the Romans, or Pyrrhus, the Romans can overthrow you.

Another prince, consulting the oracle on a similar occasion, received for answer, "Ibis redibis nunquam per bella peribis" (You shall go shall return never you shall perish by the war), the interpretation of which depends on the position of the comma; it may be You shall return, You shall never perish in the war, or You shall return never, you shall perish in the war, which latter was the fact.

Philip of Macedon sent to ask the oracle of Delphi if his Persian expedition would prove successful, and received for answer—

The ready victim crowned for death

Before the altar stands

Philip took it for granted that the "ready victim" was the King of Persia, but it was Philip himself

When the Greeks sent to Delphi to know if they would succeed against the Persians, they were told—

Seed-time and harvest, weeping sires shall tell

How thousands fought at Salamis and fell

But whether the Greeks or the Persians were to be the weeping sires," no indication was given, nor whether the thousands "about to fall" were to be Greeks or Persians.

the Oracle of the Church. St. Bernard of Clairvaux (1091-1153).

the oracle of the Holy Bottle. The oracle to which Rabelais (Pantagruel, Bks. iv and v) sends Panurge and a large party to obtain an answer to a question which had been put to sibyl and poet, monk and fool, philosopher and witch, judge and "sort," viz. "whether Panurge shall marry or not?" The oracle is situated at BACBUC, "near Cathay in Upper Egypt," where the "bottle" is kept in an alabaster fount in a magnificent temple. When the party arrives at the sacred spot, the priestess throws something into the fount, whereupon the water begins to bubble, and the word "Drink" issues from the "bottle." So the whole party sets to drinking Falernian wine, and, being inspired with drink, raves with prophetic madness; and so the romance ends. The story has been interpreted as a satire on the Church. The celibacy of the clergy was for long a moot point, and the "Holy Bottle" or cup to the laity was one of the moving causes of the schisms between the Church and its dissenting factions.

to work the oracle. To induce another to favor some plan or to join in some project, generally by maneuvering behind the scenes. Also—in slang—to raise money.

Orage, Alfred Richard (1873-1934). English journalist and psychologist. Lectured on theosophy; founded the Leeds Art Club. Through a large anonymous donation was able to buy the New Age and make it a weekly of the Socialist masses. He attracted to it many distinguished contributors, as Shaw, Wells, Belloc, Chesterton, Havelock Ellis, Arnold Bennett, Katherine Mansfield, Richard Aldington, J. C. Squire, etc. When the founding of the New Statesman produced a rival in the field, Orage gave up the New Age and became a follower of Ouspensky and the Russian occultist Gurdjieff, of whose FONTAINEBLEAU colony he became a member. Orage was a remarkably clear expositor of a broad economic philosophy.

orange girls. In the Restoration Theaters, the girls who sold refreshments to the spectators were so called. Nell Gwyn (1650-1687) began her career as one of them.

Orangemen. A name given by Roman Catholics to the Ulster Protestants of Ireland, on account of their allegiance to William III of the House of Orange.

Orator Hunt. Henry Hunt (1773-1835), a violent orator who presided over the meeting in St. Peter's Field, Manchester, at the time of the "Peterloo" massacre (1819). Yeomen and soldiers charged upon the reform meeting, and the news of this outrage so aroused the poet SHELLEY in Italy that he wrote The Masque of Anarchy. Orator Hunt was sentenced to two years' imprisonment. Later he became an M.P. (1830-1833), and published his memoirs in 1820.

Orators, The: An English Study. A combined verse and prose work by W. H. AUDEN (1932), in which revolution and the collapse of the British social system of the poet's day are prophesied by means of symbols taken from such characteristic events in English middle-class life as the public school ceremony, the weekend house-party, and the Sunday church service. Outstanding sections of the book are Address for a Prize-Day, a parody on the speeches delivered at commemoration exercises at English boys' schools, and Journal of an Airman, a collection of diagrams, plans, memoranda, and day-by-day records compiled by an aviator at war, symbolizing the revolutionary, in reference to his campaign against "the enemy," or the English middle class itself.

Orbilian stick, the. A cane or birch rod. Orbilus was the schoolmaster who taught HORACE, and Horace calls him Plagosus (the flogger). (Ep. ii. 71.)

Orc. In Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, a great sea monster that devours men and women. ROGERO, on the back of his winged steed Hippogriff, rescues the fair Angelica from the Orc by means of a burnished shield whose brightness is fatal to man and beast. See also PERSEUS AND ANDROMEDA.

Orcades. Poetic name for the Orkney Islands.

Orcus. A Latin name for HADES, the abode of the dead.

Orcutt, William Dana (1870-). American author and book designer. Associated with the Plimpton Press. Designer of Humanistic and Laurentian types. Author of many books, including Desk Reference Book (1926); Master Makers of the Book (1928); Dagger and Jewels—The Gorgeous Adventures of Benvenuto Cellini (1931); Escape to Laughter (1942); etc.

Orczy, Baroness Emmuska (1865-1947). English novelist and playwright, principally known for The Scarlet Pimpernel (1905), dramatized in collaboration with her husband (1905), and filmed by Leslie Howard, James Mason, and other actors.

ordeal (A.S. ordel, related to adoelan, "to deal, allot, judge"). The ancient Anglo-Saxon and Teutonic practice of referring disputed questions of criminality to supernatural decision, by subjecting the suspected person to physical tests by fire, boiling water, battle, etc.; hence, figuratively, an experience testing endurance, patience, courage, etc.

This method of "trial" was based on the belief that God would defend the right, even by miracle if needful. All ordeals, except the ordeal of battle, were abolished in England by law in the early 13th century.

In ordeal of battle the accused person was obliged to fight anyone who charged him with guilt. This ordeal was allowed only to persons of rank.

Ordeal of fire was also for persons of rank only. The accused had to hold in his hand a piece of red-hot iron, or to walk blindfold and barefoot among nine red-hot ploughshares laid at unequal distances. If he escaped uninjured he was accounted innocent, aliter non. This might be performed by deputy.

Ordeal of hot water was for the common people. The accused was required to plunge his arm up to the elbow in boiling water, and was pronounced guilty if the skin was injured in the experiment.

Ordeal of cold water was also for the common people. The accused, being bound, was tossed into a river; if he sank he was acquitted, but if he floats he was accounted guilty. This ordeal remained in use for the trial of witches to comparatively recent times.

In the ordeal of the bier, a person suspected of murder was required to touch the corpse; if he was guilty, the "blood of the dead body would start forth afresh."

In that of the cross, plaintiff and defendant had to stand with their arms crossed over their breasts, and he who could endure the longest won the suit.

The ordeal of the Eucharist was for priests. It was supposed that the elements would choke him, if taken by a guilty man.

Ordeal of Richard Feverel, The. See RICHARD FEVEREL.

orders. In classical architecture, a column with its entablature viewed as a unit fully characteristic of a given style. It is customary to distinguish five orders (three Greek: Doric, Ionic, Corinthian; and two Roman: Tuscan, Composite). The distinctive features of an order affect all its constituent parts: the base, shaft, and capital of the columns as well as the architrave, frieze, and cornice of the entablature.

Oread, pl. Oreads or Oreades (from Gr. oros, "a mountain"). Nymphs of the mountains.

The Ocean-nymphs and Hamadryades,
Oreads and Naiads, with long weedy locks,
Offered to do her bidding through the seas,
Under the earth, and in the hollow rocks.
Shelley, The Witch of Atlas, xxii

O'Reagan, Teague. In Hugh Henry Brackenridge's MODERN CHIVALRY, a Sancho Panza character, servant to Captain John Farrago.

Oregon Trail, The. Originally The California and Oregon Trail. A book by Francis PARKMAN (1849). The account of an actual trip taken by the author and his cousin, Quincy Adams Shaw, in 1846.

O'Reilly, John Boyle (1844-1890). Irish born American writer. His novel Moondyne (1870) about Australian convict life was based on his own experiences. As a result of his Fenian activities, he had been deported to Australia (1868) but succeeded in escaping to America (1869). On editorial staff of Boston Pilot (from 1870), proprietor and editor (1876-1890). Wrote Songs from Southern Seas (1873); Songs, Legends, and Ballads (1878); etc.

O'Reilly, Persse. In James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE, the author, hero, or singer of The Ballad of Persse O'Reilly, which is spiritedly delivered in the tavern of H. C. EARWICKER and deals with Earwicker's secret crime in PHOENIX PARK. Persse O'Reilly is derived from Fr. pierce-oreille, meaning earwig; hence this is another incarnation of Earwicker himself. The name is also believed to contain an allusion to two Irish patriots who were victims of the Easter-Day Massacre during the Revolution of 1916—Pearse and O'Rahilly.

O'Reilly, Private Miles. An Irish private in the Union army during the Civil War, a character created by C. G. Halpine (Am., 1829-1868), whose adventures amused a host of contemporary readers.

O'Rell, Max. Pseudonym of Paul Blouet.

Orenburgsky, Sergey Gusev (1867-). Russian novelist who wrote The Land of the Fathers (1905) and The Land of the Children (1928), showing on a large scale the life of the middle-class Russian intelligentsia and the effect of the Revolution upon it.

Orestes. In classic myth, the son of AGAMEMNON and CLYTEMNESTRA. When Clytemnestra and her paramour Aegisthus murdered Agamemnon, his sister ELECTRA saved the young Orestes by sending him to Phocis, where he became the fast friend of PYLADES. In course of time he returned to avenge his father's death by killing Aegisthus and Clytemnestra. For the crime of matricide he was seized with madness and pursued from one land to another by the Furies. AESCHYLUS constructed about this legend his great trilogy of the Agamemnon, Choephoroi and Eumenides, SOPHOCLES dealt with it in his Electra, and EURIPIDES in a drama also entitled Electra. In more modern times it forms the subject matter of a tragedy by Alfieri, of VOLTAIRE's Oreste (1750) and of HOFMANNSTHAL's Elektra (Ger., 1874); and an opera, Elektra, by Richard STRAUSS, based on the last-named play. See also MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA.

Orfeo and Heurodis. The tale of ORPHEUS and EURYDICE, with the Gothic machinery of elves or fairies. It exists in a number of ballad versions. Sometimes Eurydice is also called Lady Isabel.

Orgoglio (Ital., "Arrogant Pride, or Man of Sin"). In Spenser's FAERIE QUEENE (I, vii and viii), a hideous giant as tall as three men, son of Earth and Wind. Finding the Red Cross Knight at the fountain of Idleness, he beats him with a club and makes him his slave. Una, hearing of these mischances, tells King Arthur, who liberates the knight and slays the giant.

He typifies the tyrannical power of the Church of Rome; in slaying him Arthur first cut off his left arm—i.e., Bohemia was first cut off from the Church of Rome; then the giant's right leg—i.e., England, after which Orgoglio fell to earth, and was easily dispatched.

Orgon. In Molière's TARTUFFE, brother-in-law of Tartuffe. His credulity and faith in Tartuffe, like that of his mother, can scarcely be shaken even by the evidence of his senses. He hopes against hope, and fights every inch of ground in defense of the religious hypocrite.

Oriana. The beloved of Amadis of Gaul, who called himself Beltenebros when he retired to the Poor Rock. (Amadis de Gaul, ii. 6.)

The name is also given to the nursling of a lioness, with whom Esplandian, son of Oriana and Amadis, fell in love, and for whom he underwent all his perils and exploits. She is represented as the fairest, gentlest and most faithful of womankind.

Queen Elizabeth is sometimes called the peerless Oriana, especially in the madrigals entitled the Triumphs of Oriana (1601). Ben Jonson called Anne, queen of James I, Oriana. Mrs. Brooks ATKINSON is named Oriana.

oriflamme (Fr., "flame of gold"). The ancient banner of the kings of France, first used as a national banner in 1119. It was a crimson flag cut into three "vandykes" to represent "tongues of fire," with a silken tassel between each, and was carried on a gilt staff (un glaive tout doré où est attaché une bannière vermeille). This celebrated standard was the banner of St. Denis, but when the Counts of Vexin became possessed of the abbey, it passed into their hands. In 1082 Philippe I united Vexin to the crown, and the sacred Oriflamme fell to the king. It was carried to the field after the battle of Agincourt, in 1415. The romance writers say that "mescreans" (infidels) were blinded by merely looking on it. In the Roman de Garin the Saracens cry, "If we only set eyes on it we are all dead men," and FROISSART records that it was no sooner unfurled at Rosbecq than the fog cleared away from the French, leaving their enemies in misty darkness.

In the 15th century the Oriflamme was succeeded by the blue standard powdered with fleurs-de-lis, and the last heard of the original Oriflamme is a mention in the inventory of the Abbey of St. Denis dated 1534.

Origen (185?-?254 A.D.). One of the Greek Fathers of the Church. Many works on the Old Testament, etc.

Origin of Species, The. A famous scientific treatise by Charles DARWIN (1859), in which he first promulgated his theory of evolution. The full title is The Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection.

Original Sin. In Roman Catholicism, that corruption which is born with us, and is the inheritance of all the offspring of Adam. As Adam was the federal head of his race, when Adam fell the taint and penalty of his disobedience passed to all his posterity.

Orillo. One of the magicians in Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO (Bk. viii). His life depends—literally—upon a single hair, but he is able, when his head is cut off, to put it on again. Astolpho encountered him, cut off his head, and fled with it. Orillo mounted and gave chase, but meanwhile Astolpho cut the hair from the head, and as soon as that was severed the head died, and the magician's body fell lifeless.

Orinda the Matchless, or the Matchless Orinda. Mrs. Katherine PHILIPS, the poetess and letter-writer. She first adopted the signature "Orinda" in her correspondence with Sir Charles Cotterell, and afterwards used it for general purposes. Her praises were sung by COWLEY, DRYDEN, and others.

Orion. In classic mythology, a giant of great beauty, and a famous hunter, who cleared the island of Chios of wild beasts. While in the island, Orion fell in love with MEROPE, daughter of King Oenopion, but one day, in a drunken fit, he offered her violence. The King put out the giant's eyes and drove him from the island. Orion was told if he would travel eastwards, and expose his sockets to the rising sun, he would recover his sight. Guided by the sound of a Cyclops' hammer, he reached Lemnos, where VULCAN gave him a blacksmith as guide to the abode of the sun. In due time his sight returned to him, and at death he was made a constellation. The lion's skin was an emblem of the wild beasts which he slew in Chios, and the club was the instrument he employed for the purpose.

O'Riordan, Conal Holmes O'Connell (1874-1948). Irish novelist and playwright. Succeeded John Millington SYNGE as director of the Abbey Theatre in 1909. Got Synge's suppressed play, The Playboy of the Western World (1907), produced again. Katherine Mansfield praised his novel Adam of Dublin (1920). He wrote other novels and plays, from 1891 to 1920 under the pseudonym of Norreys Connell.

Oriskany. A village in Oneida County, N.Y., site of one of the bloodiest battles of the American Revolution (August 6, 1777). The Americans under General Herkimer, on their way to the relief of Fort Stanwix and about 800 strong, defeated a British and Indian detachment of about equal strength. General Herkimer was fatally wounded. The battle took place in a wild thunderstorm. On both sides every third man was killed.

Orithyia. In classic mythology, the nymph whom the north wind Boreas loved. She bore him two sons, Zetes and Calais, who became famous as winged warriors in the company of the ARGONAUTS.

Orlando. The hero of Shakespeare's AS YOU LIKE IT, the younger son of Sir Rowland de Boys, in love with ROSALIND.

Orlando. The Italian form of ROLAND, one of the great heroes of medieval romance, and the most celebrated of CHARLEMAGNE's paladins. Under the French form of Roland he is the hero of the so-called CHRONICLE OF TURPIN and the CHANSON DE ROLAND.

As Orlando, he is the hero of a celebrated trilogy of Italian poems written in mock heroic vein. The three poems are: (1) Morgante Maggiore. A poem by Luigi Pulci (1488), in which Orlando converts the huge MORGANTE MAGGIORE and is the hero of numerous adventures with giants and magicians.

(2) Orlando Innamorato (Orlando In Love). A romance in verse by BOIARDO (1495), telling the love of Orlando for the fair Angelica. Boiardo supposes Charlemagne to be warring against the Saracens in France, under the walls of Paris. He represents the city as besieged by two infidel hosts—one under AGRAMANT, Emperor of Africa, and the other under Gradasso, King of Sericana. His hero, Orlando, he supposes (though married at the time to Aldabella) to be in love with Angelica, a fascinating coquette from Cathay who makes her appearance to sow discord in the Christian army. Boiardo died in 1494, not having finished the work, and Ariosto wrote his Orlando Furioso as a sequel to it.

(3) Orlando Furioso (Orlando Mad). An epic poem in forty-five cantos, by ARIOSTO (1515–1533). Orlando's madness is caused by the faithlessness of Angelica. In Paris Rinaldo falls in love with her, and, to prevent mischief, the king places the coquette under the charge of NAMO. But she contrives to escape her keeper, and flees to the island of Ebuda, where Rogero finds her exposed to a sea-monster, and liberates her. In the meantime, Orlando goes in search of his lady and is decoyed into the enchanted castle of Atlantes, but is liberated by Angelica, who again succeeds in effecting her escape to Paris. Here she arrives just after a great battle between the Christians and pagans, and, finding MEDORA, a Moor, wounded, takes care of him, falls in love with him, and elopes with him to Cathay. When Orlando finds himself jilted, he is driven mad with jealousy and rage, or rather, his wits are taken from him for three months and deposited in the moon. ASTOLPHO goes to the moon in Elijah's chariot, and St. John gives him the lost wits in an urn. On reaching France, Astolpho binds the madman, holds the urn to his nose, and the hero is himself again. After this, the siege of Paris by Agramant is continued, and the Christians are wholly successful. The true hero of Ariosto's romance is ROGERO, and not Orlando. In the pagan army are two heroes—Rodomont, called the Mars of Africa, and Rogero. The latter becomes a Christian convert, and the poem ends with a combat between these two, and the overthrow of Rodomont. The concluding lines are:

Then at full stretch he [Rogero] raised his arm above
The furious Rodomont, and the weapon drove Thrice in his gaping throat—so ends the strife,
And leaves secure Rogero's fame and life.

About 1589 a play (printed 1594) by Robert GREENE entitled The History of Orlando Furioso was produced in England. In this version, Orlando marries Angelica. Rhodes' farce BOMBASTES FURIOSO is a burlesque of Ariosto's romance.

Orlando's ivory horn. Olifant, once the property of Alexander the Great. Its bray could be heard for twenty miles.

Orlando's horse. Brigliadoro ("golden bridle").

Orlando's sword. Durindana or Durandana, which once belonged to Hector.

Orlando; a Biography. A remarkable novel by Virginia WOLF (1928).

Orleans, The Maid of. JOAN OF ARC.

Orley Farm. A novel (1862) by Anthony TROLLOPE.

orlop. The lowest deck of a vessel.

Battered chain-gangs of the orlop.
Kipling, The Galley-Slave.

Ormont, Lord. See LORD ORMONT AND HIS AMINTA.

Orosius, Paulus. Spanish priest of the 5th century. Author of a vast medieval textbook of universal history.

Ormulum. A Middle English religious and didactic poem, written in Northeast Midland dialect (ca. 1200). It consists of paraphrases of the gospels and homilies based on them, and was only one-eighth completed although it is almost 10,000 lines in length. Metrically, it is in iambic lines of fifteen syllables. Its unique feature is its orthography, in which the author tried to indicate pronunciation by means of special signs and called attention to a short vowel by doubling the consonant that followed it, as wordess for "wordes." The title Ormulum is interpreted as a diminutive form of the author's name, Orm.

Ormuzd or Ahura Mazda. The principle or angel of light and good, and creator of all things, according to the Magian system. He is in perpetual conflict with AHRIMAN, but in the end will triumph. The Latin form of the name is Oromasdes.

Ornithology, Father of. See under FATHER.

Oromasdes. The same as ORMUZD.

Oroonoko, Prince. The hero of a novel by Mrs. Aphra BEHN which was dramatized by Thomas Southern (1695) under the title Prince Oroonoko. Prince Oroonoko was a real character, the grandson of an African king, and the novelist became acquainted with him in Surinam in the West Indies where he had been sold as a slave. Here, in the literary account, Oroonoko meets IMOINDA, his wife, from whom he has been separated, and whom he had believed dead. He heads an uprising of the slaves, whereupon the governor tries to seduce Imoinda. The result is that Imoinda kills herself, and Oroonoko slays first the governor and then himself. This is the ending of the drama; the novel ends in a different but equally tragic manner.

Orozco, José Clemente (1883-1949). Mexican painter, identified with modernist school. Associated with RIVERA, etc. Did mural paintings in Mexico City.

Orpen, Sir William Newenham Montague (1878-1931). British painter, appointed official artist by British Government in World War I.

Orphan Angel, The. A novel by Elinor WYLIE (1926) concerning the hypothetical story of Shelley in America after his rescue from drowning in the Gulf of Spezzia. Highly imaginative, and emphasizing Elinor Wylie's preoccupation with the character of the poet Shelley.

Orpheus. A Thracian poet of Greek legend, son of APOLLO and CALLIOPE, who could move even inanimate things by his music. When his wife Eurydice died, he went into the infernal regions, and so charmed PLUTO that she was released on the condition that Orpheus would not look back until they reached the earth. He was just about to place his foot on the earth when he turned round, and Eurydice vanished from him in an instant.

Orpheus' self may . . . hear
Such strains as would have won the ear
Of Pluto to have quite set free
His half-regained Eurydice.
Milton, L'Allegro, 145-50.

The prolonged grief of Orpheus at his second loss so enraged the Thracian women that in one of their Bacchanalian orgies they tore him to pieces. The fragments of his body were collected by the Muses and buried at the foot of Mount Olympus, but his head had been thrown into the river Hebrus, whither it was carried into the sea, and so to Lesbos, where it was separately interred. This story is the subject of GLUCK's opera Orpheus and Eurydice (Orfeo; 1762), the libretto of which is by Calzabigi. BROWNING wrote a poem Eurydice to Orpheus.

Orpheus of highwaymen. So John GAY has been called on account of his Beggar's Opera (1728).

Orpheus of the 18th century. Handel (1685-1759).

Orpheus of the Green Isle. Furlough O'Carolan (1670-1738).

Orpheus C. Kerr Papers. A series of humorous sketches by Robert Henry Newell which were published in daily newspapers during the Civil War and after (Am., 1862-1868). Orpheus C. Kerr was an insistent "officer-seeker," and the sketches have to do with the affairs of a Mackerel Brigade.

Orphic. Connected with Orpheus, the mysteries associated with his name, or the doctrines ascribed to him, similar to his music in magic power. Thus, Shelley says,

Language is a perpetual Orphic song,
Which rules with Daedal harmony a throng
Of thoughts and forms, which else senseless and shapeless were.
Prometheus Unbound, IV, i, 415.

orrery. A movable model of the solar system. A planetarium.

In Queen Mab's chariot I ventured on the sea;
'Twas like a mammoth hazel-nut, with matchless orrery
Asparkle on its ceiling—
William Rose Benét, Munchausen

Orsay, Count Alfred Guillaume Gabriel d' (1801-1852). French society leader; friend of Lady Blessington in London.

Orsini, Felice (1819-1858). Italian revolutionist. Known for his attempted assassination of Napoleon III (January 14, 1858). Executed at Paris.

Orsino. In Shakespeare's TWELFTH NIGHT, the Duke of Illyria, in love with OLIVIA. He marries VIOLA.

Orson. Twin brother of Valentine in the old romance, VALENTINE AND ORSON. The twins are born in a wood near Orleans, and Orson (Fr. ourson, "a little bear") is carried off by a bear, which suckles him with her cubs. When he grows up he becomes the terror of France, and is called the Wild Man of the Forest. He is reclaimed by Valentine, overthrows the Green Knight, and marries Fezon, the daughter of Duke Savary of Aquitaine.

Ortega y Gasset, José (1883-). Spanish essayist and philosopher. Founder of numerous periodicals. In voluntary exile though not a leftist. In America his best-known book is The Revolt of the Masses (1932; La Rebelión de las Masas, 1930).

Ortheris, Stanley. A Cockney soldier who appears in many of Kipling's stories with his pals, Terence MULVANEY and Jock LEAROYD. He is especially prominent in Garm—a Hostage, The Madness of Private Ortheris and His Private Honour.

Ortiz, Roberto M. (1886-1942). President of Argentina (1938-1942). In temporary retirement (1940 ff.).

Orton, Arthur (1834-1898). English impostor. Impersonated eldest son of widow of Sir James Tichborne, who had been lost at sea, and convinced Lady Tichborne and others. Brought action against the 12th Baronet and after a trial of 290 days, during which his case collapsed, was committed for perjury (1895).

Orville, Lord. In Fanny Burney's EVELINA, the amiable and devoted lover of Evelina, whom she ultimately marries. He is represented as "handsome, gallant, polite, and ardent—he dressed handsomely."

Osbaldistone, Rashleigh. In Scott's Rob Roy, a pretended scholar who turns out to be a perfidious villain. He is killed by Rob Roy.

Frank Osbaldistone. His brother, who loves and marries Di Vernon.

Osborn, Henry Fairfield (1857-1935). American paleontologist and archaeologist. Curator of vertebrate paleontology, American Museum of Natural History (from 1891). Author of The Age of Mammals (1910); Men of the Old Stone Age (1915); Origin and Evolution of Life (1917); Evolution and Religion in Education (1926); etc.

Osborne, Mr. In Thackeray's VANITY FAIR, a hard, money-loving, purse-proud, wealthy London merchant, whose only gospel is that "according to Mammon."

Captain George Osborne. Son of the merchant, selfish, vain, extravagant, and self-indulgent. He has been engaged to Amelia Sedley while her father was in prosperity, and Captain Dobbin induces him to marry her after the father has become a bankrupt. Happily, George falls on the field of Waterloo, or one would never vouch for his conjugal fidelity.

Osborne, Thomas (d. 1767). English bookseller, responsible for getting Samuel Richardson to write in a series of letters the novel Pamela (1740). Pope satirized him in the Dunciad and Dr. Johnson beat him for his impertinence.

Osborne, Thomas Mott (1859-1926). American prison reformer. Founded Mutual Welfare League under which prisoners of Sing Sing exercised self-government. Warden of Sing Sing Prison (1914-1916). Author of Within Prison Walls (1914).

Osbourne, Lloyd (1868-1947). Step-son of Robert Louis Stevenson with whom Stevenson wrote The Wrong Box (1889); The Wrecker (1892); and The Ebb Tide (1894). Author, with his sister Isobel Strong, of Memories of Vailima (1902).

O'Shanter, Tam, see TAM O'SHANTER.

Osiris. One of the chief gods of Egyptian mythology; he is judge of the dead, ruler of the kingdom of ghosts, the Creator, the god of the Nile, and the constant foe of his brother (or son) SET, the principle of evil. He was the husband of Isis, and represents the setting sun. See RA. He was slain, but came to life again and was revenged by HORUS and Thoth.

The name means many-eyed. Osiris was usually depicted as a mummy wearing the crown of Upper Egypt, but sometimes also as an ox.

Oslerize. To regard a man as of little use or force him into retirement after he has passed the prime of life. The word was derived from a remark of the distinguished physician Dr. (later Sir) William Osler (1849-1919) in his address on leaving Johns Hopkins University for England. In this address, which was seized upon by the press and greatly distorted, he referred to "the comparative uselessness of men over forty years of age" and said that if their discoveries were subtracted from the sum of human achievement, it would make little difference to progress.

Osmond, Gilbert. In Henry James' Portrait of a Lady, the dilettante whom Isabel Archer marries.

Osric. In Shakespeare's HAMLET, a court fop, contemptible for his affectation and finical dandyism. He is made umpire by Claudius, when LAERTES and Hamlet fight their duel.

Ossa. See under PELION.

Ossian (Oisín). The legendary Gaelic bard and warrior of about the end of the 3rd century, son of Finn (FINGAL), and reputed author of a group of poems published 1760-1763 by James MACPHERSON, who professed that he had translated them from MSS. collected in the Highlands. A great controversy as to the authenticity of the supposed originals was aroused. It was soon generally agreed that Macpherson, although compiling from ancient sources, was the principal author of the poems as published.

Ostade, Adriaen van (1610-1685). Dutch genre painter and etcher.

Ostend Manifesto. A declaration made in 1854 by the Ministers of the United States in England, France, and Spain, "that Cuba must belong to the United States." It occasioned great discussion.

Ostenso, Martha (1900-). Norwegian-born American author of the prize-winning novel Wild Geese (1925), and other novels and poems.

ostracism (from Gr. ostrakon, "an earthen vessel"). Black-balling, boycotting, expelling; exclusion from society of common privileges, etc. The word arose from the ancient Greek custom of banishing one whose power was a danger to the state, the voting for which was done by the people recording their votes on tiles or potsherds.

ostrich policy. A short-sighted policy of shutting one's eyes in time of danger, from the habit attributed to the ostrich of hiding its head in the sand when threatened by an enemy.

Ostrog Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

O'Sullivan, Seumas, see STARKEY, JAMES SULLIVAN.

O'Sullivan, Vincent (1872-). American poet and playwright.

Oswald. In Shakespeare's KING LEAR, steward to Goneril, daughter of King Lear.

O tempora! O mores! (Lat., from Cicero's Pro Rege Deiotaro, xi, 31). Alas! how times have changed for the worse! Alas! how the morals of the people have degenerated!

Othello. A tragedy by SHAKESPEARE (1604). Othello, a Moor, is commander of the Venetian army and elopes with DESDEMONA. Her father Brabantio accuses him of necromancy, but Desdemona refutes the charge. The Moor, being then sent to drive the Turks from Cyprus, wins a signal victory. On his return, IAGO, Othello's "ancient" (i.e., ensign or lieutenant), plays upon his jealousy and persuades him that Desdemona has been false to him with Cassio. He therefore murders her, and, after learning how he has been duped by Iago, slays himself. This tragedy had its source in a tale in Cinthio's Hecatommithi (1565). There is an opera, Otello, by VERDI (1887) founded on Shakespeare's play.

Othello's occupation's gone (iii. 3). A phrase sometimes used when one is "laid on the shelf," no longer "the observed of all observers."

The fiery openness of Othello, magnanimous, guileless, and credulous, boundless in his confidence, ardent in his affection, inflexible in his resolution, and obdurate in his revenge . . . The gradual progress which Iago makes in the Moor's conviction, and the circumstances which he employs to inflame him, are so artfully natural . . . that we cannot but pity him. —Dr. Johnson.

Other Wise Man, The. A story by Henry Van Dyke. See under MAGI.

Otis, Harrison Gray (1837–1917). American army officer and journalist. Editor of Los Angeles Times (from 1882); etc.

Otis, Isabel. The heroine of Gertrude Atherton's Ancestors.

Otis, James. Pseudonym of J. O. Kaler (1848–1912). Author of many stories for boys, the best-known being Toby Tyler, or Ten Weeks with a Circus (1881).

otium cum dignitate (Lat., "leisure with dignity"). Retirement after a person has given up business and has saved enough to live upon in comfort. The words were taken as a motto by CICERO.

Otnit. Hero of a story in the medieval HELDENBUCH (Book of Heroes), a legendary emperor of Lombardy, who gains the daughter of a powerful heathen ruler for wife, through the help of ALBERICH the dwarf.

Otranto, Castle of, see CASTLE OF OTRANTO.

O'Trigger, Sir Lucius. In Sheridan's comedy THE RIVALS, a fortune-hunting Irishman, ready to fight everyone, on any matter, at any time.

ottava Rima. A stanza of eight ten-syllabled lines, rhyming a b a b a b c c, used by

KEATS in his Isabella, by BYRON in Don Juan, etc. It was originally Italian and was employed by TASSO (the lines were eleven-syllabled), ARIOSTO, and many others. The following example is from Don Juan:

When Nero perished by the justest doom
Which ever the destroyer yet destroy'd,
Amidst the roar of liberated Rome
Of nations freed, and the world overjoy'd,
Some hands unseen strew'd flowers upon his tomb;
Perhaps the weakness of a heart not void
Of feeling for some kindness done, when power
Had left the wretch an uncorrupted hour.

Ottenberg, Fred. The lover of Thea Kronborg in Willa Cather's SONG OF THE LARK.

Otterbourne, The Ballad of. An early English ballad included in PERCY's Reliques. It relates how the Scots, returning from a raid, attacked the castle of Otterburn in Northumberland (August 19, 1388). Earl Douglas, the Scots' leader, was slain, but his men won the day and Lord Percy, the English leader, was taken prisoner.

Otway, Thomas (1652–1685). English dramatist of the Restoration period, known for his tragedies. His works include Don Carlos (1676), written in rhymed verse; The Orphan (1680) and VENICE PRESERVED (1682), both written in blank verse; Alcibiades (1675); Titus and Berenice (1677), adapted from RACINE; The Cheats of Scapin (1677), adapted from MOLIÈRE; Friendship in Fashion (1678); The Soldier's Fortune (1681); The Atheist (1684). Otway was an actor for a while, although he was unsuccessful. He died in poverty.

Ouida. The pseudonym of Louise de la RAMÉE. The pseudonym is baby talk for Louise.

Our American Cousin. A comedy by TOM TAYLOR (1858). The titular hero, Asa Trenchard, who was at first the principal character of this popular play, was gradually superseded in interest by the English swell Lord DUNDREARY who served as entertaining contrast to the "American cousin."

Oumansky, Constantine Alexandrovich (1902–1945). Russian ambassador to United States (1939–1941).

Our Mutual Friend. A novel by CHARLES DICKENS (1864). The "mutual friend" is JOHN HARMON, friend of Mr. BOFFIN and of the WILFERS. Old John Harmon has cursed his son and sent him adrift as a boy of fourteen, but he leaves him a fortune on condition of his marrying Bella Wilfer. As young Harmon has never met Bella, has not been home for fourteen years, and is reported to have been murdered, he returns under the assumed name of John Rokesmith and acts as secretary to Mr. Boffin, the "golden dustman" who is to have the Harmon money if the conditions laid down in the will are not fulfilled. John and Bella fall in love, marry, and live for a time on John's earnings. Finally Boffin turns over the fortune, and John Rokesmith becomes again John Harmon.

Oursler, Charles Fulton (1893-). American journalist and author. Editor, Liberty Magazine under Bernarr MacFadden.

Our Town. A play by Thornton WILDER (1938), winner of the Pulitzer prize in 1938. It presents a picture of life in a typical New England town, Grover's Corners, New Hampshire, by means of a novel technique. A ubiquitous Stage Manager, a familiar garrulous Yankee character, sits at the side of the stage and talks intimately to the audience as the play unfolds, describing the action and the characters. Act I is entitled "Daily Life," and shows the citizens of the town engaged in their customary pursuits, while Professor Willard and Editor Webb of the local newspaper comment on them objectively. In Act II, "Love and Marriage," Emily, daughter of Editor Webb, and George, son of Dr. Gibbs, fall in love and marry. In Act III, "Death," Emily dies in childbirth and is buried, and the ancient dead in the cemetery speak of their peace and their perception of eternal harmony in the universe.

outcaste. See CASTE.

Outcast of the Islands, An. A novel by Joseph CONRAD (1896). The scene is laid in Sambir, a settlement in the Dutch East Indies. The story has to do with two protégés of Captain LINGARD, the powerful "Rajah Laut" of the district—Almayer, whom he sets up as a trader in Sambir, and Willems, whom, after his dishonesty as a clerk in Macassar, he brings to the same lonely settlement. Willems falls in love with Aïssa, daughter of the scheming, one-eyed native Babalatchi, who hides her until Willems treacherously agrees to pilot Abdullah, a native trader, to the settlement. Once there, his wealth and shrewdness enable him to throttle Almayer's trade. Lingard, when he discovers Willems' treachery, imprisons him in the jungle, and at the moment when his escape seems probable, he is shot by Aïssa with his own revolver. Almayer's later history is told in ALMAYER'S FOLLY.

Outcasts of Poker Flat, The. A story by Bret HARTE (1869), reprinted in The Luck of Roaring Camp and Other Sketches (1870).

Outcault, Richard Felton (1863-1928). American cartoonist, originator of comic strips, as The Yellow Kid and Buster Brown.

Outis (Gr., "nobody"). The name assumed by ODYSSEUS in the case of POLYPHEMUS. When the monster roars with pain from the loss of his eye, his brother giants ask from a distance who is hurting him. "Nobody," thunders out Polyphemus, and his companions go their way.

Outlook, The. An American weekly (1893-1935), superseding The Christian Union (1870-1893) and edited first by Henry Ward Beecher and then by Lyman Abbott. It had among its contributors Theodore Roosevelt, Jacob Riis, the famous Negro educator Booker T. Washington, Hamilton Wright Mabie, and others. The American poet Harold Trowbridge Pulsifer was president of the Outlook Company and managing editor of The Outlook from 1923 to 1928, when it was merged with the Independent.

Out of the Cradle Endlessly Rocking. A poem by Walt Whitman first published as A Word Out of the Sea in Leaves of Grass (1860). Whitman gave it its present title in 1871.

Outre-Mer: A Pilgrimage Beyond the Sea. The first prose work of Henry W. LONGFELLOW (1834-1835), modeled after Irving's Sketch Book.

Overbury, Sir Thomas (1581-1613). English prose-writer, one of the early 17th-century CHARACTER WRITERS. A series of Characters by him, faintly mocking and satiric, was published in 1614 with A Wife, a poem. Overbury was made a prisoner in the Tower of London and killed by slow poison for having opposed the marriage of a friend, Lord Rochester, who was one of the favorites of King James I.

Overland Monthly, The. A California magazine (1868-1875, 1883-1933) edited during its first two-and-a-half years by Bret Harte, and carrying upon its cover a picture of the California grizzly. Bret Harte contributed to it The Luck of Roaring Camp, Plain Language from Truthful James, etc. The Overland published such early California writers as Ina Coolbrith, Charles Warren Stoddard, Edward Rowland Sill, and others. Ambrose Bierce with his usual wit called its later incarnation "the warmed-Overland Monthly." Yet good writers contributed to it also in its later phase: George Sterling, Gertrude Atherton, Edwin Markham, Jack London, and others.

Overreach, Sir Giles. An avaricious schemer, the principal character in Massinger's drama A New Way to Pay Old Debts.

Over Soul, The. An essay by Ralph Waldo EMERSON (1841), in which the author describes his concept of the Oversoul, or a pantheistic unity of the universe which is present in the soul of each individual man and is made known by means of divine revelation, which is generally interpreted as expression of individual genius.

Over the Hill to the Poorhouse. Title of the best-known poem of Will CARLETON.

Over There. Popular American song of World War I, composed by George M. COHAN.

Ovid. In full Publius Ovidius Naso (43 B.C.–17 A.D.). Latin poet in the Augustan age. He wrote Metamorphoses, poetic fables based on the principal classical legends, and is considered the model of elegiac poetry. His Amoies, Heroides, and Ars Amatoria or Ars Amoris, were widely known in the Middle Ages, influencing the convention of COURTLY LOVE and the English poet CHAUCER, among others.

the French Ovid. Du Bellay (ca. 1525–1560); also called “the Father of Grace and Elegance.”

Owain. The hero of a 12th-century legend, The Descent of Owain, written by Henry of Saltrey, an English Benedictine monk. Owain (the name is a form of Welsh Owen) is an Irish knight of Stephen's court who, by way of penance for a wicked life, enters and passes through St. Patrick's PURGATORY.

Owen, Anne. See PHILIPS, KATHERINE.

Owen, Robert (1771–1858). Welsh pioneer in cooperative industry. His several “Owenite” communities founded in Great Britain and the U.S., including one at NEW HARMONY, Indiana (1825–1828), were all unsuccessful. He spent his fortune on social schemes, devoted all his energies to the propagation of his social doctrines, and toward the end of his life took up spiritualism. His son, Robert Dale Owen (1801–1877), edited the New Harmony Gazette, became a member of the U.S. House of Representatives (1843–1847), was U.S. minister to Italy (1855–1858), and worked for the emancipation of slaves.

Owen, Ruth, née Bryan, see ROHDE, RUTH BRYAN.

Owen, Wilfred (1893–1918). English poet, considered the best of the poets who wrote in and about World War I. See WAR IN LITERATURE. Although he enlisted voluntarily, received the Military Cross for bravery in action, and was killed while leading the Artists' Rifles in battle, he hated war fiercely. His poetry expresses savagely the cruelty and horror he saw about him at the battlefield, and shows interesting experiments in form and technique, in which he was encouraged by Siegfried Sassoon, whom he met in an army hospital. His most characteristic poem is DULCE ET DECORUM EST. W. H. AUDEN is considered to have been influenced in form to some degree by Wilfred Owen.

Owl and the Nightingale, The. A Middle English allegorical and didactic debate, in which an owl, considered to represent the clergy, and a nightingale, interpreted as symbolizing the feudal knightly estate, argue, each attacking the other's way of life and defending his own. It is believed that this is an allegorical attack on the medieval nobility, and several contemporary references have been found. There is disagreement among scholars as to the date of composition of The Owl and the Nightingale, but it was probably written in the late 12th century or early 13th century. Some think the author was one Nicholas of Guildford, to whom the birds decide to refer their controversy for judgment.

Owlglass, Owlyglass or Howleglass, Tyfl. See EULENSPIEGEL, TYL.

Oxenham, John (d. 1575). Sailed with Sir Francis Drake. Was captured by the Spaniards during an expedition of his own and hanged at Lima, Peru. Charles Kingsley introduces him in his novel, Westward Ho! (1855).

Oxenham, John. Pseudonym of William Arthur Dunkerley (1861?–1941). English poet and novelist. The Vision Splendid (1917).

Oxford, Edward de Vere, Earl of (1550–1604). English courtier and poet, one of the favorites of Queen ELIZABETH, regarded as typical of the group of courtly lyric poets of the time which included Sir Philip SUDNEY, Fulke GREVILLE, and Sir Walter RALEIGH. He was known among his contemporaries as somewhat of a fop and introduced Italian styles of dress among the English courtiers, he is considered to be the object of satire in Gabriel HARVEY's Speculum Tuscanismi, dealing with Italianate young Englishmen. Oxford was a patron of a number of Elizabethan actors and writers, John LYLY having served as his secretary and dedicated Euphues and His England (1580) to him. Since Oxford, as a nobleman, could not publish his verse as such, scholars have found themselves obliged to search out his poems from among the contributions to the poetic miscellanies (see TOTTEL'S MISCELLANY) of the time. It is believed by some that several of the poems included in A Hundred Sundry Flowers (1573) were written by Oxford, and that he was also the editor of the collection. He was one of the jury at the treason trial of Lord Essex, and served as Lord Great Chamberlain at the coronation of James I. A certain school of critics contends that he wrote Shakespeare's plays. See also BACON, FRANCIS.

Oxford Movement, the. (1) A High Church movement which originated at Oxford in 1833 under the leadership of Pusey, J. H. NEWMAN (afterwards a cardinal in the Roman Catholic Church), and Keble. It was strongly opposed to anything in the way of LATITUDINARIANISM, and sought to bring back into the service of the Church much of the ritual, ornaments, etc., that had been dispensed with at the time of the Reformation. See TRACTS FOR THE TIMES.

(2) An American evangelist, Frank Nathan Daniel Buchman (1878-), evolved a religion called A First Century Christian Fellowship when directing Christian work at Pennsylvania State College (1909-1915), organized the "Oxford Group Movement" at Oxford, England (1921), and started a campaign in many countries which had to do with what he called "Moral Rearmament" (1939). His cult, often called "Buchmanism" or, in brief, "the Oxford Movement," is in no way related to the original Oxford Movement. The cult specializes in luxurious living and public confession of sexual misdoing.

oxymoron (Gr., "pointedly foolish"). A seeming contradiction for effect; for example, the use of a noun with a qualifying adjective that seems to imply a contrary meaning, as "strenuous idleness," "wise folly," etc.

Oz, The Land of. The setting for the Wonderful Wizard of Oz (1900) and other fantastic stories by Lyman Frank BAUM. A mythical kingdom extremely popular with American children. Elaborately filmed in 1939.

Ozark State. Nickname for Missouri.

Ozenfant, Amédée (1886-). French Cubist painter. Collaborated with Le CORBUSIER in writing several books on cubism and modern painting.

Ozymandias. A famous poem by Shelley, first published by Leigh Hunt in his Examiner (January, 1818). It is an ironic poem on the vanity and futility of a tyrant's power.

P

P.

The Four P's. A "merry interlude" by John HEYWOOD, published in 1569. The four principal characters are "a Palmer, a Pardoner, a Potcary (apothecary), and a Pedlar." See under FOUR.

the five P's. William Oxberry (1784-1824) was so called, because he was Printer, Poet, Publisher, Publican, and Plaver.

p, pp, ppp. In musical notation, p stands for piano; pp for pianissimo or piu piano; and ppp for pianississimo. In the same way, f stands for forte; ff for fortissimo; and fff for fortississimo.

Paassen, Pierre van (1895-). Dutch-born American journalist in Canada and the U.S. His best-selling book is Days of Our Years (1939). A fighting journalist and writer. He is that rara avis, a Gentle Zionist. Author of Earth Could Be Fair (1946).

Pach, Walter (1883-). American artist and art critic. Translator of The History of Art by Élie Faure, in 5 vols. Has lectured and written on art extensively.

Pachmann, Vladimir de (1848-1933). Eccentric Russian pianist; known for his interpretations of Chopin whose works he edited. Toured Russia, Europe, and America. Received Beethoven Medal of London Philharmonic (1916).

pacifism. The doctrine professed by those people who, on moral or religious grounds, refuse to participate in activities of organized violence, especially war. During World War I English and American pacifists, among whom a number of well-known writers, artists, and other intellectuals were included, were harshly treated, being fined, imprisoned, and in general socially ostracized by their former friends. William Jennings BRYAN, Woodrow WILSON (at the beginning of his presidential career), Bertrand RUSSELL, and Randolph BOURNE were pacifists at this time. In the twenty years following World War I pacifism grew to be a comparatively influential international movement, especially among youth, and was supported by numerous religious and political organizations, both conservative and radical. Its culmination occurred about the middle of the 1930's, in the annual anti-war "strikes" held at a number of American schools, colleges, and universities, in the Oxford Oath, originating at Oxford University in England, by which students swore not to fight in any war waged by their national governments under any circumstances, and in the passage of legislation by the U.S. Congress to insure American neutrality in time of war. President Franklin D. ROOSEVELT was for a while identified with a speech in which the words "I hate war" occurred. With the rearmament of Germany, however, under Adolf HITLER, the avowed military ambitions of Fascist Italy and Nazi Germany (see FASCISM; NAZISM), and the outbreak of the Spanish Civil War (1936), pacifism began to lose its popularity. An important factor in this change was the new stand of the U.S.S.R. and the national COMMUNIST PARTIES, which had formerly encouraged the pacifist movement but now condemned only an "imperialist war" and advocated the formation of a POPULAR FRONT against Fascism. With the beginning of World War II, pacifism had lost its former influence, although legislation whose passage had been secured in England and the U.S. during the period of the movement's power permitted pacifists who could prove a bona fide basis for their beliefs—usually an acceptable religious creed—to become "CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS" and live together in camps at their own expense, exempt from military service but not permitted their former freedom until the end of the war. The QUAKERS have been outstanding among traditional religious pacifists.

pack. See under COVEY.

Packlemerton, Jasper. A personage in Dickens' OLD CURIOSITY SHOP, one of the chief figures in Mrs. JARLEY's wax-work exhibition.

"Jasper courted and married fourteen wives, and destroyed them all by tickling the soles of their feet when they were asleep. On being brought to the scaffold and asked if he was sorry for what he had done, he replied he was only sorry for having let them off so easy. Let this," said Mrs. Jarley, "be a warning to all young ladies to be particular in the character of the gentlemen of their choice. Observe, his fingers are curled, as if in the act of tickling, and there is a wink in his eyes."—The Old Curiosity Shop, xxviii.

Pacolet. A dwarf in the romance of VALENTINE AND ORSON. He is in the service of Lady Clerimond, and has a winged horse which carries off Valentine, Orson, and Clerimond from the dungeon of Ferragus to King Pepin's palace; afterwards it bears Valentine to the palace of Alexander, Emperor of Constantinople, his father. Hence, a very swift horse, that will carry the rider anywhere, is called a horse of Pacolet.

I fear neither shot nor arrow, nor any horse how swift soever he may be, not though he could outstrip the Pegasus of Perseus or of Pacolet, being assured that I can make good my escape.—Rabelais, Gargantua, Bk. ii, 24.

Steele's familiar spirit in the TATLER was named Pacolet after this dwarf.

Pact of Paris. Also known as the Kellogg-Briand Pact. A treaty signed (1928) by fifteen nations in an attempt to outlaw war. Another forty-five nations agreed to the provision, in Article I, that the contracting parties of the treaty "condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies, and renounce it as 'an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.'

Pactolus. A small river of Lydia in Asia Minor, a tributary of the Hermus. The fact that it carried gold was explained by the story of Midas whose ability—given him by Bacchus—to turn everything he touched into gold proved fatal when it affected also his food, and was mercifully transferred to the waters of the river. By the time of Augustus the Pactolus had ceased to produce gold.

Paddington, Harry. In THE BEGGAR'S OPERA by John GAY, one of Macheath's gang of thieves. PEACHUM describes him as a "poor, petty-larceny rascal, without the least genius. That fellow," he says, "though he were to live for six months, would never come to the gal-lows with credit."

paddy, paddywhack. An Irishman; from Patrick (Ir. Padraig). In slang both terms are used for a loss of temper, a rage on a small scale; the latter also denotes the gristle in roast meat, or a spanking.

Paderewski, Ignace (1860-1941). Polish pianist, composer, and statesman. Interpreter of Schumann, Chopin, Liszt, Rubinstein, etc. Abandoned music to work for Polish national independence during World War I. Took part in the Peace Conference at Versailles and was elected premier of the new Polish Republic (1919), holding office for 10 months. Resumed public performances in 1922.

Padishah. See under RULERS, TITLES OF.

paean. From Paian, in Greek mythology, the physician of the gods or, specifically, Apollo. Hence a paean is a hymn of praise, joy, triumph, etc.; originally as an invocation of Apollo.

Paganini, Nicolò (1782-1840). Italian violinist, unrivaled in virtuosity. Also composed concertos and sonatas for violin, now merely considered brilliant show-pieces. The brilliant Variations on a Theme of Paganini, by Sergei RACHMANINOFF, are also the basis of a ballet, Paganini.

Page, Curtis Hidden (1870-1946). American educator and poet. Author of A History of Japanese Poetry (1923). Translator of Molière and Anatole France.

Page, Mr. In Shakespeare's MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR, a gentleman living at Windsor. When Sir John FALSTAFF makes love to Mrs. Page, Page himself assumes the name of Brook, to outwit the knight. Sir John tells the supposed Brook his whole "course of wooing," and how nicely he is bamboozling the husband.

Mrs. Page. Wife of Mr. Page, of Windsor. When Sir John Falstaff makes love to her, she joins with Mrs. Ford to dupe him and punish him.

Anne Page. Daughter of the above, in love with Fenton. SLENDER calls her "the sweet Anne Page."

William Page. Anne's brother, a school-boy.

Page, Thomas Nelson (1853-1922). American novelist and short story writer of the South, a member of the school of LOCAL COLOR, best known for his two short stories MARSE CHAN and MEH LADY in the volume In Ole Virginia (1887). He is also the author of Red Rock (1898) and Two Little Confederates (1888). Many of his stories are in Negro dialect.

Page, Walter Hines (1855-1918). American journalist and diplomat. Partner in Doubleday, Page & Co., publishers (from 1899). Founder and editor of The World's Work (1900-1913). U.S. ambassador to Great Britain during World War I (1913-1918). Cf. The Life and Letters of Walter H. Page (3 vols., 1922-1925), edited by Burton J. Hendrick.

Paget, Violet. Pseudonym Vernon Lee (1856-1935). English novelist and writer on art. Her more than 40 books include fiction, plays, books on psychology, musicology, travel, and art criticism, and controversial books on sociology and politics. Her half-brother was Eugene LEE-HAMILTON.

Pagliacci, I (The Players). An opera by LEONCAVALLO (1892). The characters are traveling players: Nedda, the wife of Canio, the showman; Tonio, a member of the company; and Silvio, a villager who has long been in love with Nedda.

Pain, Barry Eric Odell (1865-1928). English humorist. Popular at the beginning of the century, especially for Eliza (1900), a comedy of manners. Also author of parodies and ghost stories.

Paine, Albert Bigelow (1861-1937). American biographer, chiefly known for his gossipy and uncritical Mark Twain, a Biography (1921). Children's editor of the New York Herald; also on editorial staff of St. Nicholas Magazine (1899-1909).

Paine, Ralph Delahaye (1871-1925). American war correspondent and writer of books for boys. He appears in Wounds in the Rain by Stephen Crane as "William B. Perkins."

Paine, Thomas (1737-1809). English pamphleteer and political radical, famous for his activities in behalf of the colonies during the American Revolution, as well as in France during the French Revolution. He consistently urged revolt and independence instead of reform, and tried to promote a world revolution. Among his works are The Case of the Officers of Excise (1772), a plea for higher wages to excisemen, of whom he had been one; COMMON SENSE (1776); THE AMERICAN CRISIS (1776-1783), a series of pamphlets supporting the American Revolution; Public Good (1780); Dissertations on Government (1786), an attack on monetary inflation in the American colonies; THE RIGHTS OF MAN (1791-1792); THE AGE OF REASON (1794-1795), for which he was denounced as an atheist. Paine lived a turbulent career, beginning in a variety of humble occupations. He held several official positions in the colonies during the Revolution but made enemies and subsequently lost favor. In England, he was tried for treason and banished. In France, he was made an honorary citizen by the Republican government and was a delegate to the Convention, until the more radical government of the REIGN OF TERROR came into power and imprisoned him as an enemy Englishman. He died ultimately in the U.S. amid poverty and calumny, denounced as a radical, a drunkard, and an atheist and was denied burial in consecrated ground. His remains were lost after being taken to England for reburial. In later years he came to be regarded as an American patriot and an important crusader for democratic rights. Citizen Tom Paine, a semi-fictional account of his life by Howard FAST, was withdrawn from libraries of New York City public schools in 1946.

Painlevé, Paul (1863-1933). French mathematician and premier of France (1917, 1925). Author of books about higher mathematics.

Painted Veils. A novel by James Gibbons HUNEKER (1920), concerning artists, critics, and Bohemians in New York.

Painter, William (1540?-1594). English schoolmaster and author of the early Elizabethan period, known for The Palace of Pleasure (1566-1567), a collection of prose tales from Herodotus, Plutarch, Tacitus, Livy, Cinthio, and other classic and Italian sources, especially Boccaccio's DECAMERON and Bandello's Novelle (1554). The Palace of Pleasure supplied the leading poets and playwrights of the day with plots. Shakespeare's ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL and TIMON OF ATHENS were derived from Painter's collection, and an early version of ROMEO AND JULIET is contained in it. Painter was for a while Clerk of Ordnance in the Tower of London.

Pair of Blue Eyes, A. A novel by Thomas HARDY (1873). Elfride Swancourt, the daughter of a rector, is loved by Stephen Smith and starts to elope with him but changes her mind and returns. Later she loves and is loved by Henry Knight, but Mrs. Jethway, a spying neighbor, writes Knight of Elfride's former experience, and the lovers quarrel. Sometime later the two men, each intending to be reconciled with Elfride, meet on a train but arrive only in time for her funeral. She has married, but loving Knight, has pined away and died.

Pakistan. See under Mohammed Ali JINNAH.

Palace of Art, The. An allegorical poem by TENNYSON (1830). Its object is to show that love of art will not alone suffice to make man happy.

Palace of Pleasure, The. See under PAINTER, WILLIAM.

paladin. Properly, an officer of, or one connected with, the palace; usually confined in romance to the Twelve Peers of Charlemagne's court, and hence applied to any renowned hero or knight-errant.

The most noted of Charlemagne's paladins were ORLANDO or Roland (Orlando the Italian, Roland the French form), the favorite nephew of Charlemagne; RINALDO (Renald) of Montalban, Orlando's cousin; NAMO (Nami), Duke of Bavaria; SALOMON (SOLOMON), King of Brittany; ASTOLPHO of England; Archbishop TURPIN; FLORISMART; MALAGIGI (Maugis), the magician; GANELON (Gan), the traitor; and OGIER THE DANE. The converted Saracen FIERABRAS (Ferumbras) was also prominent. Lists of the twelve paladins vary greatly.

Palamedes. (1) In Greek legend, one of the heroes who fought against Troy. He was the reputed inventor of lighthouses, scales and measures, the discus, dice, etc., and was said to have added four letters to the original alphabet of Cadmus. It was he who detected the assumed madness of ULYSSES by putting the infant TELEMACHUS in the way of the plow the supposed madman was driving; in revenge the latter achieves his death. The phrase, he is quite a Palamedes, meaning "an ingenious person," is an allusion to this hero.

(2) In Arthurian romance, Sir Palamedes is a Saracen knight who is overcome in single combat by TRISTRAM. Both love Iseult, the wife of King Mark, and after the lady has been given up by the Saracen, Tristram converts him to the Christian faith, and stands as his godfather at the font.

TASSO introduces a Palamedes of Lombardy in his JERUSALEM DELIVERED (III. ii). He joins the Crusaders with his brothers, Achilles and Sforza, and is shot by CLORINDA with an arrow.

Palamon and Arcite. Two young Theban knights of romance whose story (borrowed from Boccaccio's Le Teseide) is told by Chaucer in his KNIGHT'S TALE, by Fletcher and (probably) Shakespeare in The Two Noble Kinsmen (1634), and elsewhere. Both are in love with Emilia, sister-in-law to the Duke of Athens, in whose hands they are prisoners. In time they secure their liberty, and the Duke appoints a tournament, promising Emilia to the victor. Arcite prays to Mars to grant him victory; Palamon prays to Venus to grant him Emilia. Arcite wins the victory, but, being thrown from his horse, is killed. Palamon, though not the winner, therefore wins the prize for which he prayed and fought.

palanquin or palankeen. A large box with wooden shutters, carried by four bearers by means of projecting poles, used in China and East India as a conveyance.

Palatine, The. A ballad by WHITTIER, versifying the New England legend of a ship of that name that was lured on to the rocks of Block Island by false lights, plundered and sent to sea again in flames with its passengers aboard. The story seems to have some basis in the hasty forced landing near that spot of a load of emigrants from the German Palatinate in 1720. According to legend, a phantom burning ship periodically visits the island. This story suggested R. H. DANA's poem The Buccaneer.

Pale, the English. The name given in the 15th century to that part of Ireland which had been colonized in the 12th century by Henry II, viz., the districts of Cork, Dublin, Drogheda, Waterford, and Wexford. It was only in these districts that the English law prevailed, hence the phrases, within the pale and outside the pale. They are often used figuratively of the social conventions. One of Kipling's most successful stories is entitled Beyond the Pale.

the Jewish pale of settlement. Under the Czarist rule the Jews of Russia were restricted to fifteen governments or districts of Western Russia.

palefaces. So the American Indians called the European settlers.

Pale Horse, The. Death.

And I looked, and behold a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him.

Rev. vi. 8.

Palemon and Lavinia. A poetic version of Boaz and Ruth told by THOMSON in the Seasons: Autumn (1730). Palemon is also the name of the hero in Falconer's narrative poem The Shipwreck (1756).

Palestrina. Full name Giovanni Pierluigi da Palestrina (1525?-1594). Italian composer of church music in polyphonic style, considered the "absolute ideal of perfection" in music composed in the medieval church modes. Among his works are masses, motets, madrigals, and hymns.

Paley, William (1743-1805). English theologian and philosopher. His most original essay is Horae Paulinae (1790), but his View of the Evidences of Christianity (1794) is probably his best-known work.

Palgrave, Francis Turner (1824-1897). English poet and critic; best-known for his anthology The Golden Treasury of the Best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language (1861; second series, 1897), which has been re-issued in many editions. He was a friend of TENNYSON.

palimpsest. A parchment or tablet which has been used several times, the earlier writing having been erased; also called a codex rescriptus. By the use of chemicals, etc., it is often possible to recover the obliterated original text.

palindrome (Gr. palin dromo, "to run back again"). A word or line which reads backwards and forwards alike, as Madam, I'm Adam, also Roma tibi subito motibus ibit amor. They have also been called Sotadics, from their reputed inventor, Sotades, a scurrilous Greek poet of the 3rd century B. C.

Probably the longest palindrome in English is Dog as a devil deified Deified lived as a god;

and others well known are

Lewd did I live, evil did I dwell, and Napoleon's famous reputed saying,

Able was I ere I saw Elba.

The following Greek palindrome is very celebrated:

NIΨONANOMHMATAMHMONANOΨIN,
i.e., "wash my transgressions, not only my face."

palingenesis. A new birth; more especially, METEMPSYCHOSIS.

palinode or palinody. A recantation, from the name of the poem in which the Greek poet Stesichorus (608-552 B. C.) expressed his regret for his former bitter satire against HELEN OF TROY and presented a form of the legend allowing for a more favorable interpretation of her character. According to tradition, Stesichorus had been struck blind for his original calumny. Chaucer's Legend of Good Women is a palinode.

Palinurus. The pilot of AENEAS. Palinurus, sleeping at the helm, fell into the sea and was drowned. The name is employed as a generic word for a steersman or pilot, and sometimes for a chief minister.

Palisades, The. A steep mass of basalt or trap-rock rising up from the west bank of the Hudson River to a height of almost 500 feet and extending north along the New Jersey side of the river for about eighteen miles.

Palissy, Bernard (ca. 1510-1589). French potter, noted for a distinctive type of rustic pottery; also, author of a book on ceramics.

Palladian style. Georgian designs of architecture. Andrea Palladio (1518-1580) was a sixteenth-century Italian architect, who adapted Roman principles, designing in Venice, among other structures, the church of San Giorgio Maggiore and the palaces on the Grand Canal. Inigo JONES introduced the classicism of Palladio into England in the seventeenth century and Sir John VANBRUGH developed from it in the eighteenth century the English baroque style of architecture.

Palladino, Eusapia (1854-1918). Spiritualistic medium of Italian birth who practiced deceptions upon many noted scientists. She was exposed by Prof. Hugo Munsterberg of Harvard during her séances in the U.S. (1909-1910).

Palladium. Something that affords effectual protection and safety. The Palladium was a colossal wooden statue of Pallas in the city of Troy, said to have fallen from heaven. It was believed that so long as this statue remained within the city, Troy would be safe, but if ever it were removed, the city would fall into the hands of the enemy. The statue was carried away by the Greeks, and the city burnt by them to the ground.

The Scotch had a similar tradition attached to the great stone of Scone, near Perth. Edward I removed it to Westminster, and it is still framed in the Coronation Chair of England.

Pallas. A name of MINERVA, sometimes called Pallas Athene.

Pallen, Condé Benoist (1858-1929). American editor and poet; managing editor, The Catholic Encyclopedia (1907-1914). Author of The Philosophy of Literature (1897); Death of Sir Launcelot and Other Poems (1902); Ghost House (1928); etc.

pallet. A small bed or one of straw. Related to French paille, "straw."

On your midnight pallet lying,
Listen, and undo the door.

A. E. Housman, A Shropshire Lad XI.

Pallet. In Smollett's novel of PEREGRINE PICKLE, a painter, "without any reverence for the courtesies of life."

Palliser, Plantagenet. See OMNIUM, DUKE OF.

Pall Mall. This fine thoroughfare in the West End of London has been so called since the early 18th century because it is the place where formerly the game of Palle-malle (Ital. palla, "ball," maglia, "mallet") was played.

palm.

Palm Sunday. The Sunday next before Easter. So called in memory of Christ's triumphant entry into Jerusalem, when the multitude strewed the way with palm branches and leaves. (John xii.)

Sad Palm Sunday. March 29th, 1463, the day of the Battle of Towton, the most fatal of all the battles in the War of the Roses. It is said that over 37,000 Englishmen were slain.

palmy days. Prosperous or happy days, as those were to a victorious gladiator when he went to receive the palm branch as the reward of his prowess.

to bear the palm. To be the best. The allusion is to the Roman custom of giving the victorious gladiator a branch of the palm tree.

to palm off. To pass off fraudulently. The allusion is to jugglers, who conceal in the palm of their hand what they pretend to dispose of in some other way.

palmer. A pilgrim to the Holy Land who was privileged to carry a palm staff, and who spent all his days in visiting holy shrines, living on charity. At the dedication of palmer, prayers and psalms were said over them as they lay prostrate before the altar; they were sprinkled with holy water, and then received the consecrated palm branch, sign of their office.

Palmer, Albert Marshman (1838-1905). American theatrical producer who encouraged many new American playwrights and founded the Actors' Fund of America (1882).

Palmer, Frederick (1873-). American war correspondent in the Greek War (1897); the Russo-Japanese War (1904-1905); the Balkan War (1912); World War I (1914-1916). Among his numerous books are Going to War in Greece (1897); America in France (1918); The Man With a Country (1935); etc. Also known as a novelist.

Palmer, George Herbert (1842-1933). American philosopher and educator associated with Harvard University. The principal value of his work lies in its criticism of human conduct. Author of The Life of Alice Freeman Palmer (1908) (biography of his wife); The Problem of Freedom (1911); Autobiography of a Philosopher (1930); etc.

Palmer, John Leslie. See under BEEDING, FRANCIS.

Palmerin. The hero of a number of 16th-century Spanish romances of chivalry on the lines of Amadis of Gaul. The most famous are Palmerin of Oliva, and Palmerin of England. SOUTHEY published an abridged translation of the latter.

Palmerston, 3rd Viscount. Henry John Temple (1784-1865). English statesman. Disciple of Pitt. Prime minister (1855-1865, except from 1858 to 1859). Opposed construction of Suez Canal. Supported policy of neutrality in American Civil War, but intervened successfully in a considerable number of threatening and actual international conflicts in favor of the status quo or the restitution of liberal order. Cf. Palmerston (1926), by Philip Guedalla.

Palmetto State. South Carolina. See under STATES.

Palmyra. The Biblical Tadmor, a city east of Syria. After the revolt of its queen ZENOBIA, it was destroyed by the Emperor Aurelian (273 A. D.). Cf. I Kings ix. 18.

palsgrave. A count palatine. Cf. German Pfalzgraf.

Paltock, Robert (1697-1767). English lawyer and author, principally known for the extraordinary fantastic romance, The Life and Adventures of Peter Wilkins, a Cornish Man (1751), which describes a country of flying women.

Pamela or Virtue Rewarded. A famous novel by Samuel RICHARDSON (1740) of great significance in the early development of the English novel. The heroine is Pamela Andrews, a simple, unsophisticated country girl, the daughter of two aged parents, and maid-servant of a rich young squire, called B, who tries to seduce her. She resists every temptation, and at length marries the young squire and reforms him. Pamela is very modest, bears her affliction with much meekness, and is a model of maidenly prudence and rectitude. The story is told in a series of letters which Pamela sends to her parents.

Sir Philip SIDNEY had used the name Pamela for one of the heroines in his ARCADIA.

Pamina and Tamino. In Mozart's opera THE MAGIC FLUTE (Ger. Die Zauberflöte; 1790), the two lovers who were guided by "the magic flute" through all worldly dangers to the knowledge of divine truth or the mysteries of Isis.

Pan (Gr., "all, everything"). The god of pastures, forests, flocks, and herds of Greek mythology; also, the personification of deity displayed in creation and pervading all things. He is represented with the lower part of a goat, and the upper part of a man.

Legend has it that at the time of the Crucifixion, just when the veil of the Temple was rent in twain, a cry swept across the ocean in the hearing of many, "Great Pan is Dead," and that at the same time the responses of the oracles ceased for ever. The Dead Pan, a poem by Elizabeth Barrett Browning (1844), is founded on this legend. Pan is also the subject of her poem A Musical Instrument, of Robert Browning's Pan and Luna, and E. C. Steadman's Pan in Wall Street (Am., 1869). See also PETER PAN.

pan-. This prefix came to be widely used in the 19th and 20th centuries, in various compounds implying cooperation of the several units of a race, religion or geographical division. Thus we have:

Pan-Americanism. The movement for political cooperation among the various states of North and South America.

Pan-Germanism. A movement to incorporate the German populations of Austria in Germany and to extend German influence generally. It reached a height before World War I, and was continued by Adolf HITLER.

Pan-Islamism. A movement for the greater cooperation of all Mohammedan peoples, with the goal of ultimate freedom from Western domination. The abolition of the Caliphate in 1923 gave the movement a severe setback.

Pan-Slavism. A movement for the political union of all Slavic peoples and originally for their incorporation into the Russian Empire.

Pan-Turanism. A movement for the cooperation and final political union of all Turkish or Tartar races, with the motto "Turkey for the Turks."

Pan, Uncle. Pandarus, in Christopher MORLEY's The Trojan Horse (1937) is so called.

Panacea (Gr., "all-healing"). In Greek myth, the daughter of Aesculapius, god of medicine. Her name was later applied to any universal cure, for, figuratively, medicine that cures is the daughter or child of the healing art.

In the Middle Ages, the search for the panacea was one of the alchemists' self-imposed tasks. Fable tells of many panaceas, such as the Promethean unguent, which rendered the body invulnerable; Aladdin's ring; the balsam of FIERABRAS; and Prince Ahmed's apple (see under APPLE).
